THE new volume of the new and enlarged edition of The Collected Writings of de Quincey (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black) contains a second instalment of Historical Essays and Researches. The more notable are: that in which he contests the tradition (embalmed by one more English poet besides those to whom the editor refers) that the Pagan oracles were struck silent at the birth of Christ; his marvellous paradox about the Essenes, which the editor treats too gently; the series on post-classical Greece, including the story of the revolution and Mure's travels; and, finally, "The Revolt of the Tartars." With regard to this last, the editor has been able to make a new contribution as to its sources. In addition to the Jesuit translation from the Chinese, to which de Quincey himself alludes, Prof. Masson has discovered that a German traveller, Benjamin Bergmann, published a "Versuch zur Geschichte der Kalmüknenflucht der Wolga" (Riga, 1804-5), which was translated into French in 1825. From these two works de Quincey took the general outline and many details; but none the less the entire narrative must be regarded as a splendid effort of historical imagination, akin to "The Spanish Nun." De Quincey's quotations from Wordsworth are so numerous that it is worth while to record one not placed within inverted commas. In the essay on "Ceylon" (p. 439) he describes a certain Pilamé Tilawé, the prime minister of Kandy, as "a noticeable man with large gray eyes."

THE present year will deserve to be remembered for its profusion of de Quincey literature, which certainly seems to show that those critics are wrong who have been anticipating his speedy oblivion. More probably is he destined to a rejuvenescence similar to that of Charles Lamb. Apart from the "definitive edition" of Prof. Masson, and the Uncollected Writings brought together by James Hogg (Sonnenschein), we have received within the last few days a new edition of Dr. Japp's well-known Life (John Hogg), and also a volume of essays entitled The Wider Hope (Fisher Unwin), which opens with De Quincey's paper on "The Supposed Scriptural Expression for Eternity." Concerning the new edition of the Life, it is enough to say that, while "many excrescences have been retrenched," several new letters and reminiscences have been added, and that it is published at a cheap price. The portrait of De Quincey in his old age is interesting; and so also are the view of Greenhays and the facsimile of his press corrections. But we could have spared the other two illustrations.

THE new volume in Messrs. Macmillan's cheap edition of the Collected Works of Charles Kingsley is Glaucus: or, The Wonders of the Sea, which—we are not surprised to find—has been far more popular than the historical and scientific essays that have immediately preceded it in this series. Since 1859, when the coloured illustrations first appeared in the fourth edition, it has been reprinted no less than seven times. Certainly, the plates (of the letterpress, we mean) now show signs of wear.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE proposal, mentioned in the ACADEMY of last week, to hold an Oriental Congress at Oxford in 1892, has not met with universal acceptance. The protesters against the proceedings of the Stockholm-Christiania congress, who base their claim upon the statutes adopted at the original meeting in Paris in 1873, held a meeting in London on Tuesday last, under powers entrusted to them by the French founders, at which a resolution was passed to hold the ninth International Congress of Orientalists in London in September, 1891, under the honorary presidency of Sir Henry Rawlinson. The secretaries are Dr. Leitner and Prof. R. K. Douglas; and a representative English committee has been formed. We are informed that about 300 scholars from twenty-two countries have given their support to this proposal.

CANON BELLESHEIM, of Aachen—whose History of the Catholic Church in Scotland has been translated into English—will publish in the course of the present year a History of the Catholic Church in Ireland, from the Introduction of Christianity to the Present Time, in three volumes, based on researches in the Vatican and other Roman libraries, the British Museum, &c. Volume I., covering the period between A.D. 432 and 1509, will appear in the middle of the present month. Herr Franz Kirchheim, of Mainz, is the publisher.

MR. DAVID NUTT has in preparation yet another series, to be called "The Pearl Series of Select Old English Texts." It will consist of the best specimens of pre-Tudor literature, edited by Mr. Gollancz, of Christ's College, Cambridge. Translations will accompany the texts; and illustrations, facsimiled from old MSS., will be added where possible. The first volume of the series "The Pearl," probably the most beautiful of Middle English poems, and formerly edited by Dr. R. Morris, will be ready for publication before the end of the year. Subsequent volumes will be chosen from the following:—Old English Lyrics; The Wanderer's Lament and other poems; Gynwulf's "Christ"; Miracle Plays; The Legend of the Phoenix, &c.

MR. OSWALD CRAWFORD's forthcoming work, Round the Calendar in Portugal, will be profusely illustrated by Miss Dorothy Tennant, Mr. Tristram Ellis, Miss Woodward, Miss Winifred Thomson, Mr. Ambrose Lee, and the author.

THE second volume of Prof. Mahaffy's Greek Literature: Prose Authors, being now out of print, a third edition, revised and augmented, will be issued immediately by Messrs. Macmillan in two parts.

London Pictures, by the Rev. R. Lovett, is a new departure on the part of the Religious Tract Society, being a spring volume in their well-known "Pen and Pencil" Series. The author—whose books on Norway, Ireland, and Holland have been so well received—has concentrated his strength on buildings and features in the history of London, in which readers generally take the keenest interest.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN has in the press Four Great Teachers, being lectures on Ruskin, Carlyle, Emerson, and Browning, by Mr. Joseph Forster.

MRS. ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS and the Rev. Herbert D. Ward have collaborated in a novel which Mr. William Heinemann will publish this day. It is entitled The Master of the Magicians, and deals with court life in Babylon six hundred years before Christ. The prophet Daniel is the hero; and the royal personages, the life and customs of the time, the conflict between polytheism and the Jewish religion, make up the elements of a love story.

WE learn that the sale of The Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff in the United States has already reached upwards of seventy thousand copies. Messrs. Cassell & Co. have just issued in this country a translation of the work by Miss Mathilde Blind.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & Co. will publish next week the first part of Volume II. of Mr. Henry Dunning Macleod's Theory of Credit.

THE following new volumes of verse are announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock:—The Proving of Geunad: a Mythological Romance, by Landred Lewis; Loztara: a Poem, by Lidia Walters; and Songs of Siluria, by M. E. and J. S.

"WALKS IN THE GRAND DUCHY OF LUXEMBURG"—a district little known to continental travellers—will form a new illustrated section in the forthcoming issue of Mr. Percy Lindley's Walks in the Ardennes. New Holidays in Essex, an illustrated handbook to some of the less known country and coast-districts of Essex, will also be ready early in May.

MISS ELSA D'ESTERRE KEELING's latest book, In Thoughtland and in Dreamland, will be the new volume in Baron Tauchnitz's Library.

THE Bookworm for May will contain an article on "Mr. Gladstone as a Bookworm."

AT the next meeting of the Elizabethan Literary Society, to be held at Toynbee Hall on Wednesday next, May 7, at 8 p.m., Prof. Edward Dowden, of Dublin, will read a paper on "John Donne: his Verse and Prose."

A SILVER salver was presented on Monday, April 28, to Mr. E. Gilbert Highton, secretary of the Royal Society of Literature, by a number of the fellows, in recognition of his valuable services and as a mark of the esteem in which he is personally held.

ON Monday next, May 5, Messrs. Sotheby will sell an exceptionally choice collection of books, described as "the property of an English amateur, resident at Paris, lately deceased." The majority belong to that class of illustrated French works of the last century, of which an unusual number have lately come into the English market. Among English books we may mention the tallest copy known of the fourth folio of Shakspeare, besides a few other scarce Shaksperiana; two exceedingly rare specimens of Wynkyn de Worde's press; first editions of Spenser, Ben Jonson, Bacon, Milton, Waller, Swift, Locke, Sterne, Fielding, Cowper, Burns, Byron, Lamb, Dickens, and Tennyson—several of the later one with autograph MSS. and letters inserted. A special curiosity is the original of the contract of marriage between Mary Stuart and Francis II.

MESSRS. ISAAC PITMAN & SONS announce that they have opened an office at 3 East Fourteenth-street, New York; under the management of Mr. Clarence A. Pitman. Mr. Isaac Pitman, the inventor of phonography, still presides over the Phonetic Institute at Bath, where he has resided uninterruptedly for more than half a century. He is in his seventy-eighth year, yet he supervises a correspondence of 30,000 letters a year, besides editing the Phonetic Journal and compiling the numerous books which he annually publishes.

THE German Goethe Society will hold its annual meeting at Weimar on May 30 and 31.

EARL SPENCER has accepted the office of honorary chairman of the "George Bullen" Testimonial Fund Committee, of which Lord Charles Brudenell-Bruce is already the vice-chairman. Subscriptions may be sent to the hon. treasurer, Mr. B. F. Stevens, 4 Trafalgar Square; or to the care of Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie & Co., Pall Mall East.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. E. A. FREEMAN proposes to deliver a course of four lectures this term at Oxford upon "The National Growth of England, France, Germany, and Italy."

DR. SALMON, provost of Trinity College, Dublin, is preparing a cheaper edition of his standard work on the Infallibility of the Church.

THE third volume of Cicero's Correspondence, edited by Prof. Tyrrell, is now just ready for publication. Mr. Louis Purser's name will appear on the title page as joint editor. The work forms one of the Dublin University Press series.

PROF. J. P. MAHAFFY has finished a continuation of his recent work on Greek Life and Thought, dealing with the period from Polybius to Plutarch. It will probably be published early in the autumn.

THE Ilchester lectures for the promotion of Slavonic studies at Oxford will be given this year by Prof. Maxime Kovalevsky, of Moscow, who has taken as his subject "Modern Custom and Ancient Law in Russia." The course will consist of six lectures, and will be delivered at the Taylorian Institution on Wednesdays and Fridays, beginning on May 16.

THE Warden of Merton, the Hon. G. C. Brodrick, will repeat the course of three lectures on "The Place of Oxford University in English History," which he recently gave at the Royal Institution, for the benefit of the Association for the Education of Women in Oxford.

THE Prendergast studentship at Cambridge, for the encouragement of research in Greek, has just been awarded, for the first time, to Mr. O. A. M. Pond, of St. John's College; and Mr. W. Loring, of King's College, has been elected to the Craven studentship, which is now a travelling studentship in classics and comparative philology.

As some difficulty was felt at Cambridge, on financial grounds, in accepting the late Mr. E. S. Newall's gift of his telescope to the University, Mr. H. F. Newall, of Trinity College (a son of the donor) has offered his services as observer without salary for a term of five years.

FIVE performances of Gluck's opera "Orpheus and Euridice" will be given in English at the Theatre Royal, Cambridge, on Tuesday, May 13, at 8 p.m., and on the following days of the week, under the direction of Prof. Stanford. There will be a complete chorus and orchestra of eighty performers.

ABOUT one-half of the total sum asked for (£1400) has already been promised, in reply to the appeal for subscriptions from old members of the Oxford Union, to be expended on minor structural alterations and a general redecoration of the building.

AT the annual graduation ceremony of the University of Glasgow, held last week, the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred upon Prof. Kirkpatrick, of Edinburgh; Prof. Palmer, of Dublin; and Dr. Henry Sweet.

WE hear that the distinguished scholar Dr. Wilhelm Wollner of Leipzig, who is at present staying in England, has offered himself as a candidate for the vacant German lectureship at the Yorkshire College, Leeds.

THE following appointments have been made at Firth College, Sheffield: Mr. W. H. Appleton, of University College, Oxford, to be professor of history; and Mr. W. C. F. Anderson, of Oriel College, Oxford, to be professor of classics.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE DEATH OF PUCK.

I.

I FEAR that Puck is dead—it is so long Since men last saw him—dead with all the rest
 Of that sweet elfin crew that made their nest
 In hollow huts, where hazels sing their song;
 Dead and for ever, like the antique throng
 The elves replaced; the Dryad that you guessed
 Behind the leaves; the Naiad weed-bedressed;
 The leaf-eared Faun that loved to lead you wrong.
 Tell me, thou hopping Robin, hast thou met
 A little man, no bigger than thyself, Whom they call Puck, where woodland bells are wet?
 Tell me thou Wood-Mouse, has thou seen an elf
 Whom they call Puck, and is he seated yet,
 Capped with a snail-shell on his mushroom shelf?

II.

The Robin gave three hops, and chirped, and said:
 "Yes, I knew Puck, and loved him; though
 I trow
 He mimicked oft my whistle chuckling low;
 Yes, I knew cousin Puck; but he is dead.
 We found him lying on his mushroom bed—
 The Wren and I—half-covered up with snow,
 As we were hopping where the berries grow.
 We think he died of cold. Ay, Puck is fled."
 And then the Wood-Mouse said: "We made the Mole,
 The old, blind Mole, dig deep beneath the moss
 And four big Dormice placed him in the hole.
 The Squirrel made with sticks a little cross;
 Puck was a Christian elf, and had a soul;
 And all we velvet jackets mourn his loss."

EUGENE LEE-HAMILTON.

OBITUARY.

WILLIAM BLADES.

THE small band of exact bibliographers has suffered a grievous loss in the death of Mr. William Blades, the great scholar-printer of our generation, which took place at his residence at Sutton, on Sunday last, April 27. He was born at Clapham in 1824, and was thus in the sixty-fifth year of his age.

His name will always be associated with that of England's first printer, whose life and works he had studied with extraordinary minuteness. His first publication was, we believe, a reprint of Caxton's Governayle of Helthe, with introduction and notes (1858). His principal work—The Life and Typography of Caxton, with Evidence of his Connexion with Colard Mansion of Bruges—appeared in two handsome quarto volumes in 1861-63. Later came a Catalogue of Books from Caxton's Press (1865); How to tell a Caxton (1870); and, finally, The Biography and Typography of Caxton, with full collations of each work, plates, and facsimiles (1877). Space fails us to record all of Mr. Blades's other publications, many of which were privately printed; but it would be unpardonable to omit altogether that delightful little volume, The Enemies of Books (first edition, 1881), in which the personal character of the author was largely revealed. Mr. Blades was an enthusiastic supporter of the Library Association, before which he read several papers last year. These may be found printed in the annual volume of The Library (Elliot Stock); but it was Mr. Blades's intention to re-issue them (with additions and illustrative documents) in a series of "Bibliographical Miscellanies." So far as we know, only one of this series has appeared—"Signatures"—which was noticed in the ACADEMY of March 1,

We have also to record the death of Mr. Edwin Waugh, the Lancashire dialect poet, at the age of 72.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for May opens with an essay by Professor H. Ryle on "the Element of Compilation in the Structure of the Hebrew Scriptures." Prof. Margoliouth concludes his Reply to criticism on the subject of his reconstruction of the text of Ecclesiasticus, and Profs. Driver and Cheyne follow with brief notes. The brilliancy of the Reply is unmistakable, and there is a great improvement in the tone. The appended notes consist of explanations indicating a willingness to meet the new criticism half way, and to recognise the sound results which may certainly be hoped for. Archdeacon Farrar writes on "Fasting" in Holy Scripture; Principal Dykes on John vii. 30-36, 40-52; and Prof. Bruce on Heb. ix. 15-28.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- HAUSMANN, Mémoires du Baron. T. 1^{er} Avant l'Hôtel de Ville. Paris: Victor-Havard. 7 fr. 50 c.
 LEBON, André. Etudes sur l'Allemagne politique. Paris: Plon. 8 fr. 50 c.
 LEBON, Louis. Russes et Slaves: études politiques et littéraires. Paris: Hachette. 8 fr. 50 c.
 LECOUVE, E. Fleurs d'hiver—Fruits d'hiver. Histoire de ma maison. Paris: Ollendorff. 8 fr. 50 c.
 LÉVY-BRUEL, L. L'Allemagne depuis Leibniz: essai sur le développement de la conscience nationale en Allemagne (1700-1848). Paris: Hachette. 8 fr. 50 c.
 MARCHEL, E. L'hetman Maxime: scènes de la vie en Ukraine. Paris: Hennuyer. 8 fr. 50 c.
 MAUPASSANT, Guy de. L'inutile beauté. Paris: Victor-Havard. 8 fr. 50 c.
 PATROZ, P. Esquisses d'une histoire de la peinture au Musée du Louvre. Paris: Alcan. 5 fr.
 SARTORIUS FRHR. v. WALTESHAUSEN, A. Der moderne Socialismus in den Vereinigten Staaten v. Amerika. Berlin: Bahr. 8 M.
 SCHREIBER, Th. Die hellenistischen Reliefbilder. 4. Lfg. Leipzig: Engelmann. 20 M.
 WITTLERSHÖFER, O. Untersuchungen üb. das Kapital, seine Natur u. Funktion. Tübingen: Laupp. 5 M.
 WORMFALL, A. De corinthiacis tabellis scilabus. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- CHRONIKEN, Basler. 4. Bd. Bearb. v. A. Bernoulli. Leipzig: Hirzel. 12 M.
 GILLER, L. Oesterreichische Gesetze. Mit Erläuterungen aus der Rechtsprechung. 2. Abth. Verwaltungsgesetze. 8 Bd. Wien: Perles. 12 M.
 HOFF, L. Die Kenntnis Germaniens im Altertum bis zum 2. Jahrh. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 MORGA, A. de. Sucesos de las Islas Filipinas. Obra publicada en México el año de 1809, nuevamente sacada á luz y anotada por José Rizal y precedida de un prólogo del Prof. Fernando Blumentritt. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 12 M.
 PETERSOU, G., et D. et D. O. STURDZA. Actes et documents relatifs à l'histoire de la régénération de la Roumanie. T. 2 et 3. Wien: Gerold. 25 fr.
 PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 49. Bd. Westfalen u. Rheinland im 16. Jahrh. Von J. Hansen. 2. Bd. Leipzig: Hirzel. 18 M.
 ROUGE, Le Comte A. de. Le Marquis de Véro et ses amis, 1768-1858. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
 THOUVENEL, L. La Grâce du roi Othon: correspondance de M. Thouvenel avec sa famille et ses amis. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ANDREWSO, N. Die Schichten v. Cap Tschanda. Wien: Holder. 3 M.
 MAREZELLE, E. v. Annulaten d. Beringsmeeres. Wien: Holder. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 STÜTZ, B. Neuer Beitrag zur Kenntnis palaeozoischer Seesterne. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 12 M.
 WOLF, R. Handbuch der Astronomie. ihrer Geschichte u. Literatur. 1. Halbbd. Zürich: Schulthess. 8 M.
 YOKOYAMA, M. Versteinerungen aus der japanischen Kreide. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 16 M.
 ZIMMERMANN, A. Beiträge zur Morphologie u. Physiologie der Pfanzenselle. 1. Hft. Tübingen: Laupp. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BEHRENS, A. Die Endung der 3. Person Pluralis d. altfranzösischen Verboms. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 30 Pf.
 GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 8. Bd. 4. Lfg. Reich-Beiten. Bearb. v. M. Heyne. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M.

- HULTEN, W. L. van. Alto-friedische Grammatik. Leeuwarden: Meijer. 8 M. 50 Pf.
 KELLER, H. A. v. Verzeichnis altdentscher Handschriften. Hrsg. v. E. Sievers. Tübingen: Laupp. 5 M.
 NAGIBWAKI, D. In quaestiones Sapphicas observationes. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
 OSTHOFF, H., u. K. BRUGMANN. Morphologische Untersuchungen auf dem Gebiete der indogermanischen Sprachen. 5. Thl. Leipzig: Hirzel. 7 M.
 OTTEN, G. The language of the Rushworth Gospels to the Gospel of St. Matthew. Part I. Vowels. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
 STUDERN, Bonner. Aufsätze aus der Alterthumswissenschaft, B. Kekule zur Erinnerung an seine Lehrthätigkeit in Bonn gewidmet v. seinen Schülern. Berlin: Spemann. 20 M.
 VOOR, P. De Lucian libellorum pristino ordine quaestiones. Particula I. Cassel: Rühn. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 WEISBACH, F. H. Die Achämenideninschriften zweiter Art. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 30 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IRISH ITEMS.

London: April 26, 1890.

I am glad that Mr. O'Grady, by repeating in to-day's ACADEMY (p. 286) his translation of ethra (in the Lismore copy of the Life of Senán,* l. 2227) by "boats," has given me the opportunity of stating that in the Bodleian copy of that Life, Laud 610, fo. 3b, 1, the corresponding word is ena (leg. éna). He will hardly deny that éna means "birds," that the correspondence supports my conjecture that ethra is here the Irish reflex of W. adar "birds," and that to express the speed of Senán's monster the phrase "no birds could catch it" is not only more vivid, but more probable than "no boats could get at it."

I will now briefly notice his other criticisms of my edition of the Lives of Saints in the Book of Lismore, as well as his conjectural emendations of the texts therein printed. Criticisms and emendations are thirteen in number:

1. In p. 214 of the Lismore Lives I rendered nocinged innte by "entered it" (a more literal version would be "stept into it," namely, the sea, fairge). Mr. O'Grady "corrects" this into "progressed therein." He thus ignores the distinction between innte (= O.I. inte) "in eam," and indi "in ea" (see the Grammatica Celtica, p. 627, and Windisch's Irische Grammatik, § 204f.). Similar disregard of elementary grammar is displayed in Mélusine, t. iv., fol. 166, where he renders the comparative of equality (O'Don. Gr. 120), méithir fri by "bigger than," and in the ACADEMY, No. 882, p. 221, where he renders the phrase co dú (at the place, where) by "towards the place," and thus confounds the prep. co "usque ad," with the apocopated Mid. Irish co "at" = the Old Irish ocu, occo "apud, juxta": see ML. 18b. 4, 53b. 15, and Bezzenger's Beiträge, xvi. 61, note.

2. That the airrtir of ll. 2217 and 2221 is a scribal error for airther "front," is a probable conjecture (compare ll. 305, 1638); but it should, I think, have been given as such, and not assumed as self-evident.

3. The Lismore Life of St. Patrick, l. 365, has cenn sluag "head of hosts." Mr. O'Grady says that "the right reading is cen sluag," meaning, doubtless, cen shluag "without the host." But the corresponding words in the Lebar Brecc, p. 29, col. 1, are cend sluag. So Rawl. B. 512, fo. 18a, 1 (= Trip. Life, p. 154) has cenn sluag. And, lastly, the Paris MS. (Celt. et B. 1, fo. 75a. 2) has cend sluag. Four good MSS. are against him, and no change is needed.

* See Lives of Saints from The Book of Lismore Oxford, 1890, p. 67).

† Eihar, pl. n. ethair, is generally used to denote a ferry-boat, the slowest of all vessels (see Cormac's Glossary, s.v. ethair).

‡ The distinction has disappeared in Modern and in Late Middle Irish. Hence, no doubt, Mr. O'Grady's error.

4. In the Life of Columcille, l. 799, occurs the phrase a ben imthasi. Here Mr. O'Grady renders ben imtha by "pellex," according to the gloss which I quoted from the St. Gall Priscian, and refers to the patriarchal morals of Felim. But he has not rendered the whole phrase, which, if he beright, would mean "her pellex," and suggest the ethics of Sappho rather than those of the patriarchs. Unless "her pellex" can be twisted to mean "the pellex of her husband," the explanation given by Mr. O'Grady is impossible. He adds that iomthach means "jealous." It may be so. But in the Saltair na Rann, 3175, imthach is an epithet for Potiphar's wife, and certainly means "adulterous."

5. fo a choim, ll. 2025-27, 2393-96, 4310, "under his clothes." I gratefully accept this correction. Coimm, "clothing, covering, shelter," from Kombi, is the Irish reflex of the Greek κόμβος.

6. cuill, l. 2402, "of holly," "is," says Mr. O'Grady, "a slip of the pen doubtless." He omits, however, to say that this slip is corrected in p. 410 of my book, and that coll (from coslo = Eng. hazel) is rightly rendered in the preface, p. xcv.

7. cáin in maighe "the smooth part of the plain." Not knowing the meaning of this cáin, I did not attempt to translate it. Mr. O'Grady's version is supported by the examples which he quotes; and I may add that in the Highlands caoin still means "the exterior surface (the right side) of cloth." The cáin "plate," which he quotes, may be cognate with the German Schiene.

8. As to téit . . . i slíab daidche, l. 3565, Mr. O'Grady substantially adopts the version which I gave in p. 351, viz., "he goes . . . to a mountain at night." But the context shows that this is wrong. After Brenainn had slept on that night (in adaigh-sin), he heard an angel's voice ordering him to rise. He accordingly gets up, goes alone to a mountain daidche, and thence beholds the ocean all around him, and an island therein, with a train of angels soaring from it (féagas ind aicén . . . uadh for ceoh leth, 7 is annsin atconnuic an indsi . . . co timirecht na n-aingel di). Brenainn was a man, not a cat, and could hardly have seen all this by night. So in the Táin bó Dartada (Ir. Texts, p. 190), two fairies, male and female, appear at night to Eocho, and advise him as to his escort on an expedition into foreign districts, daidchi. "To-morrow morning" (amarach maitin), says the female fairy, "I will provide you with fifty steeds and fifty horsemen." She leaves him, and on the morrow (arnamarach), according to one version, on the morrow morning (matuin iarnamarach), according to another, he gets up and starts for Cruachan, with the fairy's steeds and horsemen. I, therefore, cleave to my rendering (p. 411) of daidche by "early," and regard P. O'Connell's daiche i. moiche as a corrupt spelling of daidche,* and not, as Mr. O'Grady thinks, of daithe.

9. S. Brenainn's people are at sea, and there was no earth near them (ní raibhi talam 'na farrad, 3767), and they bury a smith, cen rochtain cu talmáin, l. 3770. I rendered this by "without reaching the land." Mr. O'Grady by "without [his] reaching the earth [bottom]." Here Mr. O'Grady is probably right, though, unless this be an instance, I have never found talam meaning "in a maris." For the bottom of the sea one has usually ichtar or grinnell.

10. The common salutation Dia do betha is rendered by Mr. O'Grady "All hail to thee." My version, "God thy life," is certainly bad English, but comes nearer, I think, to the original, which I take to mean "With God [be] thy life!" i.e., "Mayst thou live with God!" Dia may here be an old instrumental used to signify accompaniment, and representing a prehistoric devd.

11. comhlud, l. 3923, was and is obscure to me, and I accordingly left it untranslated. Mr. O'Grady transforms it into comhallud, which of course means "fulfilment." But the corresponding word in L. B. 66b. 11 is cordus, which certainly does not mean "fulfilment," and the scribe, who correctly writes comhallud in l. 3940, would hardly have written the same word comhlud just before. It is all very well to compare the vulgar English praps for perhaps. But, so far as I remember, such a syncope is unknown to the scribes of the Book of Lismore, the greater part of which I have read and copied.

12. in oibel teoir, l. 3942, I regarded as a scribal error for in t-oibellteoir, and, relying upon O'Donovan, I rendered these words, p. 263, by "the wonder-worker." Mr. O'Grady quotes this version, but omits to mention the fact that in the corrigenda, p. 411, I say that "I greatly doubt the correctness of this rendering," and that in p. 397 I say that it seems to mean "one who quasi perscintillam seu breviter elucidat." Compare a similar suppressio veri above, at No. 6. As to his reading aibell teoir—and version, "scintilla theoriae vitae"—I shall perhaps believe in them when he produces from a respectable MS. a clear instance of teoir used as the genitive sg. of a substantive, and meaning not "contemplative," but "contemplative life." For the present it will suffice to say that in reading in O'Davoren's Glossary, Egerton 88, fo. 79b., col. 1, aibellteoir and not "aibell teoir," I followed O'Curry, who in knowledge of Irish and Irish palaeography was at least equal to Mr. O'Grady.

13. Lastly, Mr. O'Grady asserts that "MacCarthy Riach's scribe" (there are, by-the-by, at least three such scribes) was "Angus O Callannan, not O Callaid." It may be so; but how does Mr. O'Grady know? The MS. (fo. 92a) has only Aonghus O Call, with a dash across the ll. My extension of this contraction (printed as usual in italics) was taken from the National MSS. of Ireland, part iii., p. xv. Perhaps the name intended is O Callada, which occurs in the Four Masters, A.D. 1168. But O Callaid—of. callaid = callidus, W. call, Corn. cal (gl. astutus)—is quite a possible name.

I have thus gone through Mr. O'Grady's thirteen criticisms and conjectures. It will have been seen that, in my judgment, he is right in only four cases, those namely, numbered 2, 5, 7, and 9. But I hope he will continue his remarks; for he is now the only native Irish scholar from whom Celtologists can learn anything, and his misses are often as instructive as his hits.

Meanwhile, let me take the opportunity of correcting some errors and omissions in my book which he seems not to have noticed. In the Preface, p. xxii., l. 26, read verso. P. liii., l. 9 from bottom, dele of vowel-stems. P. lx., l. 8, read méidithir. P. lxxiv., l. 8, read memhadatar; l. 25, dele combach (gl. fregit). P. xcii., l. 4 from bottom, for le, read la. P. cviii., l. 7 from bottom, for is read are. P. cxvi., l. 19, after byddin, insert fedain. In P. 48, dele note 2. In the translation, p. 164, l. 17, should perhaps be Trade, along with cotillage (cobair for comair?); l. 24, for hearths, read tribe. P. 174, l. 24, for Conaill, read Connail. P. 221, l. 15, for wood, read ground. P. 240, l. 22, and p. 387, s.v. cippe, for palisade read phalanx. P. 247, l. 15, for the great devotion read devotion of the greater part. P. 273, l. 4 from bottom, for bid farewell to read greet. P. 276, l. 4, for my, read thy; l. 5, for thy, read my. P. 279, for rich food read relish. P. 331, l. 12 from bottom, for 1, read 2. P. 336, l. 5, for apparently, read in verse. P. 343, ll. 5, 6, dele Perhaps . . . Findian. P. 355, l. 7, dele perhaps. In the Index of Irish Words, p. 384, col. 2, l. 11 from bottom, for "ammforlunn=immforlann," read an-bforlunn; l. 4 from bottom for Perhaps, etc. read = the neg. prefix an and tacat prosperity. P. 386, s.v. caibden, for co+buiden, read con+fedain. P. 391, s.v. er-lamaigim, before make, insert I. P. 239, s.v. fiad, for "(for fid?) forest," read ground (i. ferann). O'Ol., cognate, perhaps, with Germ. Weide; s.v. foire, for "meaning doubtful," read along with=fairé; faré (Revue Celtique, vii. 360); faré (Annals of Loch Cé, 1521).

WHITLEY STOKES.

MAZZINI AND UNITED ITALY.

London: April 28, 1890.

At a moment when the government, the parliament, and the king of Italy, together with the councils of Rome and other towns, are doing honour to Mazzini by the erection of a national monument, I may perhaps be allowed, for the sake of the memory of a friend with whom, as well as with Garibaldi, I was connected by long intimacy, to take exception to the remarks made by your reviewer in the ACADEMY of April 26, about the "enthusiastic dreamers" and "the leaders of 1848-49."

Your reviewer says "history must record the fact" that "Italy became a nation, not owing to the Mazzinis," &c. Yet it is a historical fact that the expedition to Sicily in 1860, which later on, under Garibaldi, led to the establishment of United Italy, was, in the first instance, prepared by Mazzini. Garibaldi himself, for reasons I need not detail here, was in the beginning not initiated into the plan. When he was approached he hesitated for a long time, of which hesitation he afterwards repented. Cavour, bound by the alliance with Napoleon whose agents worked in the Muratist interest, opposed the Sicilian enterprise. Sig. Cripici, one of the early leaders of the expedition of 1860, and himself a Sicilian, knows all the facts of the case. The tribute recently paid by the Italian premier to Mazzini has, therefore, a twofold significance. I myself can also bear witness in the matter, as I was present at some of Mazzini's confidential conferences in London, at which arrangements were made for the rising in Sicily.

KARL BLIND.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 4, 4 p.m. South Place Institute "Morocco," by Dr. Robert Brown.
7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Are we Agnostics?" by Mr. Bernard Bosanquet.
MONDAY, May 5, 5 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Sugar, Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa, their Origin, Preparation, and Uses," II., by Mr. Richard Bannister.
TUESDAY, May 6, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Art of Engraving," I., by Mr. Louis Fagan.
8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology: "The Priestly Character of the Earliest Egyptian Civilization," by Mr. P. le P. Renouf; "The Terms for 'God' and 'Sacrifice' in Accadian and Chinese," by the Rev. C. J. Ball.
8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Screw-Propeller," by Mr. S. W. Barnaby.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "A particularly fine Example of the 'Black Coral' of the Mediterranean, lately acquired by the British Museum," by Prof. F. Jeffrey Bell; "The Wild Sheep and Mountain-Goats of Algeria," by Mr. E. N. Buxton; "A remarkable Antler from Asia Minor," by Mr. R. Lydekker; "The Minute Structure of the Eye in some Shallow-water and Deep-sea Species of the Isopod Genus Aroturus," by Mr. F. H. Bedford.
WEDNESDAY, May 7, 9 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Aim and Scope of Higher Technical Teaching," by Dr. Percy F. Frankland.
8 p.m. Elizabethan: "John Donne, his Verse and Prose," by Prof. Edward Dowden.
THURSDAY, May 8, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Flame and Explosives," I., by Prof. Dewar.
5 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Western Frontier of China," by Mr. Demetrius Boulger.

* So he writes daighair for daidhair.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "The Function which denotes the Excess of the Divisors of a Number which $\equiv 1$, mod. 8, over those which $\equiv 3$, mod. 8, by Dr. Glaisher; "Chronological Decimals," by Mr. R. D. Christie; "The Genesis of Binodal Quartic Curves from Conics," by Mr. H. M. Jeffery; "The Arithmetical Theory of the Form $x^2 + ny^2 + n^2z^2 = 3m^2$," by Prof. G. B. Mathews.

8 p.m. Chemical: Extra Meeting; Exhibition of Apparatus, &c.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers: Discussion, "A Lightning Guard for Telegraph Purposes," and "The Protection of Cables from Lightning," by Dr. Oliver Lodge; "The Treatment, Regulation, and Control of Electric Light by the Legislature and the Board of Trade," by Major P. Cardew.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Design Applied to Wood-Carving," by Mr. Lewis F. Day.

FRIDAY, May 2, 8 p.m. New Shakspeare: a Paper by Mr. W. A. Harrison.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Colour-Vision and Colour-Blindness," by Mr. R. Brudenell Carter.

SATURDAY, May 10, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Recent Excavations in Greece," I. by Dr. Charles Waldstein.

8.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

TWO TRANSLATIONS OF GREEK HISTORIANS.

The Works of Xenophon. Translated by H. G. Dakyns. In 4 vols. Vol. I. Hellenica, Books I.-II., and Anabasis. (Macmillan.)

The History of Herodotus. Translated by G. C. Macaulay. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

MR. DAKYNS, already favourably known by an essay on Xenophon published a few years ago, now issues the first instalment of a complete translation of that author's works. The single volume is supplied with a good index, introduced by a thorough examination of Xenophon's life, and illustrated by five most serviceable maps. The translation appears to be generally accurate.

But here our commendation of the work must stop. Mr. Dakyns is not so happy in his choice of English as he is in his insight into the Greek, and his style appears to us often diffuse and wordy. This is more the case perhaps in the translation of the Hellenica than in that of the Anabasis, but it is very visible in both books. Let us take as our chief example the speeches of Kritias and Theramenes in Hell. ii. 3. 24 sq. That "the people has batted upon liberty" is, to say the least of it, a heightening of Xenophon's remark ἐν ἐλευθερίᾳ τὸν δῆμον τετράφθαι. In §26, 27 the phrases "Do you not agree? And the case is no imaginary one," are an addition by the translator. In §28, ὅπως αὐτὸς μὲν αὖ ἐν τῇ ἀσφαλείᾳ καταστῇ is expanded into "The explanation is obvious. In case of a catastrophe, how much pleasanter for him once again to light upon his legs." In §29 we cannot find that Xenophon said "men fight their enemies," though it is true enough. Very often Mr. Dakyns says twice over what Xenophon thought it enough to say once. In §32 "Death and destruction are concomitants of constitutional changes and revolution," just doubles the sober Greek, εἰσὶ μὲν δὴ πᾶσαι μεταβολαὶ πολιτειῶν θανατηφόροι. In §§33, 44 Xenophon's words are doubled in the same way. In §41 ὀλίγον ἐπὶ χρόνον τῷ λιμῷ πίδακτας blossoms out into "A few more weeks, or even days, would have sufficed to extinguish us quietly by famine." This kind of fault is of common occurrence. But it is only fair to say that of another kind the instances are far fewer. In Hell. ii. 3. 28 ἀρξας is more than "authorised," and the force of νῦν δὲ is completely lost by translating "Why, this is the very man," &c. The speaker means to contrast νῦν δὲ with the ἐλ μὲν clause just before; "but, as it is." In Anab. iv. 3. 32 ἐφ' ἑαυτὸν διὰ τοῦ ποταμοῦ is of course inadequately rendered by "betook themselves to the river."

It seems to us quite within the limits of possibility that Herodotus in an English dress might become a very popular work, might take a place something like that which North's Plutarch filled in an earlier generation, and might usefully enlarge our rather hackneyed circle of familiar sayings and allusions understood of the people. The good stories of Herodotus, his pictures of savage life, his unconscious betrayals of himself and his countrymen, and the downright honest wisdom of his reflections, ought to make him widely read in circles to which his folklore, his history, or his anthropological data do not appeal. But, if this is ever to come about, we have felt that it must be when Herodotus had been well and plainly rendered into English—not in an archaic style which might be thought profane, and certainly would be thought affected; not with any patronising air of studied simplicity, nor yet with a curt directness which would rob the author's sentences of all their grace; but with attention to exact rendering, and in an everyday style which must take its chances of itself becoming some day venerable and interesting. Mr. Macaulay's version goes a long way towards realising our ideal.

Mr. Macaulay has put into his translation a quantity of minute work which hardly appears on the surface, but which enables it to stand close comparison with the text. Wherever we have looked, we have found only small points to criticise. In v. 29, κατίβησαν ἐς τὸ ἄστυ, is probably more than "they returned to the city," and alludes to the deputies descending to the sea-coast from the high ground (cf. c. 20). In v. 31, προσκήσσει is, we suspect, not "thou wilt gain islands," but "thou wilt gain in addition"—in addition, perhaps, to the Lemnos and Imbros of c. 26. The force of προς—would be the same as in προσέχρηξε of c. 11, where Mr. Macaulay has correctly given it. In v. 51, "having entered in as a suppliant" may be right, but is hardly explicit enough; it should be "being let in because he was a suppliant." In v. 81, for "asked them for men," read "for their men." In vi. 133, ἐπὶ Παρόν, is not "to Paros" but "against Paros," compare ἐς τὴν ἑπλεε below. More debatable matters, which it would take too long to argue, are whether in v. 49 Herodotus meant to say that "the barbarians are not valiant in fight" (contrast ix. 62, 102, &c.); whether in v. 68, αὐτὰ τὰ τελευταία belongs to μεταριθεῖς or to ἐπέθηκε; and whether in vi. 12, ὅπως with the optative may not mean "whenever he did," rather than "that he might."

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LANGUAGE OF ARAM-NAHARAIN AND THE 'SU OF THE ASSYRIAN TABLETS.

Queen's College, Oxford: April 28, '890.

I have lately made a discovery which will be interesting to students of Hittite antiquities. In the Assyrian lexical tablets certain words are mentioned as belonging to the language of the 'Su. Prof. Delitzsch thought that the nomad 'Sutu, on the eastern side of Babylonia, were referred to under this title, and pronounced the words to be Semitic. In the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie for last November, however, I have pointed out that the 'Su must be sought to the north-east of Assyria, and that the language of the 'Su was either the language of the Vannic inscriptions or one cognate to it. My conclusion turns out to have been more correct than that of Prof. Delitzsch, but nevertheless only partially true.

Among the tablets from Tel el-Amarna, now at Berlin, is a long letter from Dusratta, king of Mitanni, in the native language of his country. Mitanni was the district known to the Egyptians as Nahrina, the Aram-Naharaim of the Old Testament; and the letter sent from it has been published by Messrs. Winckler and Abel, in their magnificent edition of the Tel el-Amarna tablets. In the letter the ideograph which denotes a "god" interchanges with the word ene (or with the suffix ene-ippi); while we learn from it, as well as from other letters of Dusratta which are written in Assyrian, that Tessub or Tessubbe, whose name is also given as Tessupas, was the divinity who corresponded to the Assyrian Rimmon. Now two of the words belonging to the language of the 'Su which are explained in the Assyrian lexical tablets are Tessub, who is identified with Rimmon, and ene, which is stated to signify "a god." The language of the 'Su, accordingly, must be the language of Mitanni.

This language is a very curious one, utterly unlike any with which I am acquainted, except that of the Vannic texts. And since the Vannic name of Rimmon was Teisbas, it seems probable that the two languages belonged to the same family of speech.

At any rate, the words which are quoted by the Assyrian scribes from the language of the 'Su are now shown not to be Semitic. I trust this will be a lesson to certain Assyriologists who have been eager to turn everything in the inscriptions into Semitic.

The name of Mitanni (Maten) occurs in a fragment of a geographical list on the walls of Karnak, which has just been published by M. Bouriant, in the Recueil de Travaux of Prof. Maspero (xi. 3, 4, p. 166). It is followed by the name of the country of Qa(t), the Que or Qani of the Assyrian inscriptions.

A. H. SAYCE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following fifteen candidates have been selected by the council of the Royal Society to be recommended for election on June 5: Sir B. Baker, Mr. R. H. M. Bosanquet, Mr. S. H. Burbury, Mr. W. Gardiner, Dr. J. Kerr, Dr. A. S. Lea, Major MacMahon, Rev. A. M. Norman, Prof. W. H. Perkin, Prof. S. U. Pickering, Mr. J. Roberts, Mr. D. Sharp, Mr. J. J. H. Teall, Dr. R. T. Thorne, and Mr. W. F. R. Weldon.

THE first Conversazione of the Royal Society will be held at Burlington House, on Wednesday, May 14.

PROF. DEWAR will begin a course of six lectures on "Flame and Explosives" at the Royal Institution on Thursday, May 8.

THE Religious Tract Society will publish immediately Modern Ideas of Evolution in Relation to Revelation and Science, by Sir J. William Dawson.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, April 14)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—The Rev. P. N. Waggett read a paper on "Beauty." The best writers about beauty have not, at their best, enquired of its nature. The artistic writers, as Winckelman, Lessing, Goethe, take it for granted and write about its place in art. The philosophical writers, from Hume to Alison, explain it away chiefly as the association of ideas either of utility or the higher emotions. Ruskin's work has been to teach the ethics of the higher pleasures, and especially of that in beauty rather than of the nature of beauty; it is not aesthetic but theoretic work, and the more valuable for this reason. Association of ideas replaces beauty when beauty is absent, or enhances it when present. We want first an exact psychological analysis of the beauty emotion in itself, apart from those ideas which are connected with it in imagination, or those assistances which it gains from other modes of preference. And next—what Mr. Grant Allen has largely supplied—we want a physiological examination of the physical basis of the beauty emotion or sense. And thirdly, an enquiry into the proximate causes and wider relations in nature of beautiful appearances, and especially further light on the origin and effects of this element in natural selection in organic forms. Such enquiries do not preclude speculation upon the teleology and significance of beauty as of other phenomena. The results, so far as they go, of the positive enquiries encourage such a speculation.

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, April 18.)

HENRY BRADLEY, Esq., in the chair.—Prof. Skeat read a paper on "English Etymologies." Askances, used by Chaucer to mean "as if." Composed of E. as, and O.F. quances, "as if" (see Godefroy). Bedens "immediately," in O. Northern English; here dens represents A.S. dēn "done," variant of dōn, pp. of dōn "to do." For the A.S. dēn (see gēdēn in Grein) the O. Northern and Mercian form is always dom, not don. Thus bidens = "by done," when the thing is done; or else it is the pp. of bido, "to shut a door," hence, to conclude. Cant (see the curious use of cantum "a song, an outcry," in Caxton's Reynard, c. 27, p. 63). Chest, Chete, a slang term for "thing" (see Harman's Caveat). Compare "Rorum, ceatta" in Wright's Glossaries. Ockroash; the Span. oca-racha explains not only Mod. E. ockroash, but also the form oolooloh (in Nares). Compans, in Chaucer (O. T. A. 3708) should be com ba me, i.e., "come kiss me," a jocular phrase; at least four MSS. have this reading (see Ba in New E. Dict.). Cowl "a tub," from A.S. cūf, of Lat. origin; the pl. cūfās is in Birch, Cant. Anglo-Saxon, iii. 367 (cf. G. kübel, both from Lat. cupella). Cruetle, perhaps for crasle (cf. crasset, from O.F. crasset, a lamp supplied with grease). Wright's Gloss. 576, 9, has "Crassipulum, crassipularium, crucibulum, Anglice, a cresset." M.E. cury, i.e., cookery; O.F. queneris, from O.F. quēu "a cook," Lat. acc. cocum. Dicker, a quantity of ten hides; also M.E. daykyr, O.F. daore, dakere (Godefroy), Low Lat. daora, deora, from Lat. decuria (Ducange). Dine; O.F. dimer, Lat. diuinare, for discutunare, fully explained by G. Paris (see Romania, viii. 95). Prov. E. duller "to moan, whimper"; merely E. dolour (compare the pronunciation of colour). Essex griff "a slate-pencil"; O.F. grese "a pencil," Low Lat. graphium (cf. G. griffel, from the same). Reckless, short for effectless, i.e., inefficient. Filbert (see my Dict.); A.F. phübert, in Britton, ed. Nichols, i. 371, note 5. Inklings, i.e., for O.F. molin "inclination," &c. (see Ootgrave). Luscious, M.E. lucious, Robeson's Thres Metrical Romanes, p. 17, also spelt lious, p. 38, short for delicious (confused with lust). So in Wedgwood; but he omits M.E. lucious. Mididone "forthwith"; Weber, Met Rom "Seven Sages," 1368, 1442. For mid idone, lit. "with (its being) done"; idon is A.S. gēdōn. Pawn (at chess) (see pawn in Godefroy; Littré is wrong here). Pie "a pasty"; Low Lat. pica, from its mixed contents (Babes Book, pt. ii., p. 36, l. 51). Plash "a pool"; O.F. plaseq, plasia (Godefroy), from Mid. Du. plaseh "pool." Pony, O.F. poulnet "little colt" (Godefroy); the l is lost in pronunciation, as in Colney, Lincoln Rail "a bar"; O.F. reile (Godefroy), from Low G. regel. Roach "fish"; O.F. roche. Sleigh answers to O.F. sleiole*, from Low G. slēde "sled"; M.E. solays, Mandeville, p. 130. Snore, for A.S. snora "a snore," like snaze, for A.S. snosan; A.S. snora, in Bosworth, is snora in the MSS., confused with snort. Sledge, O.F. astochier "to stab," also to stop, obstruct; cf. Walloon astokier "to fix," also to fill full, from G. stocken. Tennis, perhaps from Low Lat. tenar "the palm of the hand," Wright's Gloss., ed. Wülker, 158, 14, Gk. θίρα. Wearish (in Nares), lit. "pimpled, rough-skinned"; from A.S. wear "a callosity, pimple," A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 409.

BROWNING SOCIETY.—(Friday, April 25.)

PROF. E. JOHNSON in the chair.—Dr. Furnivall, President, read an article from the Jewish Quarterly on "Browning's Jewish Poems." The chairman, speaking of the article, which was by Mr. Jacobs, recognised its suggestiveness, and continued on the broader subject of Browning's detachment from all systems of theology, such systems being always promulgated in the interest of great corporations. Of such the poet was independent. There had been an effort to attach to him the name of Broad Churchman, an entire misconception of his position. The Broad Church had arisen from the confluence of many feelings—an affection for old things united to a desire to be just to modern science and philosophy; but all these things Browning could regard from the poet's standpoint unworried by the ecclesiastical. Unitarianism, whatever Mr. Jacobs might allege, was Jewish, and indeed Arabian before it was Jewish. The Koran represents a monotheism earlier than the Jewish system, which is the work of Moses Maimonides, a great doctor of the eleventh century, himself of Arab descent. Derived from the Arabs, the Jewish system has influenced the destinies of the world, and as a corporation the Jewish is only rivalled by the Roman Catholic Church. Moses Maimonides expressed its creed in a dozen articles which are perfectly comprehensible, beginning with the unity of God and ending with the resurrection of the dead. Browning had no profound acquaintance with the Talmud, and there is accordingly very little real Judaism in his poems. We find his own opinions expressed by every member of the varied gallery of his subjects. The value of his Jewish poems is that he touches on the Jews with warm-hearted catholicity, showing us how to go to them, share in their feasts and learn to understand them.—Some discussion ensued on Browning's theological attitude as expressed in his poems, monotheistic or trinitarian.

FINE ART.

SIGNOR MORELLI'S NEW BOOK

Die Galerien Borghese und Doria-Panfilii in Rom. Von Ivan Lermolieff. (Leipzig.)

EXACTLY ten years have elapsed since Signor Giovanni Morelli of Milan gave to the world, under the pseudonym of Ivan Lermolieff which he has not yet abandoned, his now celebrated work, Die Werke Italiennischer Meister in den Galerien von München, Dresden, und Berlin, of which a revised English edition and a further enlarged Italian edition have successively appeared. No volume of the like modest dimensions has in our time made so profound a sensation in the world of art and art-criticism as did this brilliant and aggressive production, cast as it was in an original and piquant form differing absolutely from the heavy formal mould in which the results of research into the history and processes of painting have, as a rule, been embodied. Few books dealing with a subject of this class have been so violently attacked or so passionately defended. Whatever side we may choose to take in the conflict which still ranges with undiminished fury between the "Kunstgelehrte" from the banks of the Spree and the Milanese paladin, supported by the school which he has created, it is undeniable that the production of his "epoch-making" work has given an electric shock to art-criticism and to the appreciation of works by the old masters regarded as a science. Even those who most strenuously deny Lermolieff's claims to take higher rank than that of a brilliant amateur, who most systematically deny or ignore his conclusions, have been penetrated to the very marrow by his methods. They persistently utilise while denying them, to say nothing of the fact that they slyly seek from time to time to appropriate his discoveries, and to push a stage further the study of the forgotten masters to whom his pen has given renewed life and fame. It would no more be possible—let Signor Morelli's opponents protest as they may—for the art-historian to go back to a pre-Morellian state of things in criticism, than it would for the most rabid contemner of the Wagnerian music-drama to ignore the revolution effected by that master in dramatic music or to free himself from the influences which have once for all taken possession of this branch of fine art. The eccentric form of Lermolieff's study gave the charm of novelty to his treatment of a branch of research which many might otherwise have shrunk from approaching, and was further of signal use in enabling him to deal rattling blows all round against the German "Galerie-Directoren" and "Kunstforscher"—folk, be it remarked, as a rule, well able to strike a blow in return—and more especially against "die berühmten Historiographen," Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcasse.

Now, however, that our author's position has been securely established, and can no longer be materially shaken either by open attack or covert innuendo, we who are proud to rank ourselves among the most ardent admirers not less of Lermolieff's brilliant personality than of his critical methods, may frankly own that we should have preferred to see on the present occasion all the elaborate machinery of disguise vanish, and the Italian senator and critic emerge from the skin of the art-loving Tartar. The fiction that Signor Morelli's remarks are addressed in the first place to beginners in the study of art-history and art criticism, and that his conclusions, when they clash with those of previously accepted authorities, are brought forward with a certain amount of fear and misgiving, has no longer any raison d'être, even as a piece of irony. Moreover, it accords but ill with the noble rage which seizes upon the famous critic when he deems that a great artist or a great work of his country has been misrepresented or misunderstood, or with the outspoken language of authority which he uses in dealing with rival theories and those who propound them.

If, on the last occasion, Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcasse were the giants whom this David manfully attacked, they are in the present work, though by no means ignored, yet no longer in the front rank of the battle; the "Kunstforscher" whose opinions Signor Morelli deliberately, and at almost every page of the book, challenges is Dr. Wilhelm Bode, of the Berlin Museum. The works of the latter dealing with Italian art include, as will be well remembered, Italienische Bildhauer der Renaissance, and the two successive new editions of Burckhardt's famous Cicerone. Indeed, this last-mentioned delightful manual has, in the process of re-editing, been completely metamorphosed—or shall we say renovated?—so as to embody the results of modern research, and more especially the views of the learned Berlineser art historian. This direct and reiterated attack is, in its way, a compliment, as showing that the Milanese champion fully realises the weight attached north of the Alps to the opinion of Dr. Bode; in connexion with whose ex cathedra pronouncements, however, it is necessary to bear in mind that they have met with less absolute acceptance in England and France than in his own country.

One reason why we especially deplore the too controversial and personal character of the new book is that it is thus too much made to take the form of an ephemeral production, destined to serve its purpose—that of confounding and crushing the enemy—and then to disappear. It is worthy, on the contrary, to take its place with its predecessor as a succinct, but none the less invaluable, book of reference, an acquaintance with the conclusions of which will be indispensable to those who pretend to any systematic study of Italian art in its greatest and most representative phases. It is from this point of view that the perpetual thrusts at the "Herr Ober-Director Bode" and his subordinate phalanx of North German savants become, by their very reiteration, just a little wearisome to the uninitiated; and we cannot help thinking that a considerable excision or modification of the passages coloured with personal feeling would be desirable. The results of Lermolieff's serious and indefatigable labours would thus unquestionably be made to stand forth in a more solid and enduring shape.

The foundation of the new work is a series of essays on the Borghese Gallery, published by Signor Morelli in the Zeitschrift für Bildende Kunst some fifteen years since, in connexion with which his name first became familiar to the public. But these critical remarks have been varied, added to, and to a great extent remodelled; and they are now followed by a similar study on the Doria-Panfilii Gallery. Practically, however, the ground covered is much more extensive than the title of the book would lead us to believe. Lermolieff's disquisitions extend not only to most of the principal collections of Rome, but to those of the whole of Italy; taking in, by the way, the Uffizi, the Pitti, the Academies of Venice and Siena, the Brera, the Turin Gallery, the municipal galleries of Brescia and Bergamo, the Museo Nazionale of Naples, and many private collections at Milan and elsewhere—including especially the author's own and that of his colleague, Dr. Frizzoni.

Carrying a stage further his Raphael studies, our author gives us first, through the medium of a curious dramatic dialogue, his views on many of the most celebrated works in the Uffizi and the Pitti, and does so with his wonted authority and outspoken frankness. He throws the weight of his opinion into the scale of those who give to Sebastiano del Piombo the Giorgionesque "Fornarina" of the Tribune; and he ranks with this picture, as from the same hand and of the same period, the famous "Violinist" of the Sciarra-Colonna Palace at Rome—deemed by most connoisseurs one of the finest performances in portraiture of Raphael's Roman period. This attribution is, however, not made for the first time; it had already, as the writer states, been tentatively put forward by Prof. Springer. Lermolieff follows O. Mündler, and runs counter to Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle, in giving the uninviting and much-restored "Donna Gravidia" of the Pitti to the divine Sanzio instead of to Ridolfo Ghirlandajo. All his enthusiasm is, however, reserved for the beautiful "Donna Velata" of the same collection, in which he recognises (here also following in the footsteps of Mündler) the very hand of Raphael and the real portrait of his mistress, while classing the celebrated "Fornarina" of the Barberini Palace as a later portrait of the same model by Giulio Romano. Signor Morelli enables us to follow him here without misgiving, by pointing out that the veil and draperies in the "Donna Velata"—which are unquestionably confused and disappointing both in arrangement and execution—are attributable to the hand of an assistant. It is unnecessary to dwell on the "Bibbiena" and "Inghirami" portraits which are set down to Sanzio at the Pitti; it being apparently agreed on all sides that the original of the former is at Madrid, and that of the latter at Volterra. The execution of Raphael's sublime design "The Vision of Ezechiel" Signor Morelli with much verisimilitude assigns to Giulio Romano. To him he also gives a number of the most celebrated drawings catalogued as Raphael's—including the "Venus and Psyche" of the Louvre (Braun 257); the "Three Graces" of Windsor; the drawing of "Two Naked Men," said to have been sent by Sanzio to Dürer "to show his hand," and now in the Albertina; and the design for the great "Madone de François I." (Uffizi: Braun 486). The three drawings in sanguine for the "Transfiguration," which are respectively in the Albertina, the Louvre, and the Ambrosiana, are now set down—though not authoritatively—to Francesco Penni. On the other hand, Signor Morelli renders signal service to art in vindicating once for all the right of the "Beazzano e Navagero" double portrait of the Doria-Panfilii Palace at Rome to take its place as an undoubted original of the Urbinate's best time, due entirely to his brush. True connoisseurs have long felt that this masterpiece revealed a vitality and a supreme power of characterisation such as no mere copyist could possibly attain; but they have been overborne by the weight of Passavant's authority, declaring it to be a Venetian copy, and by that of later Kunstforscher, who, it appears, affect to recognise in it the hand of Polidoro da Caravaggio. One of Signor Morelli's most striking achievements is the fashion in which he for the first time clearly defines the artistic personality and the distinctive technical characteristics of Perino del Vaga—more especially in the first period of his practice, when, as a youthful prodigy, he worked in the Vatican, at the Loggie, and in his spare time eagerly copied such drawings of the great capposcuola as he could lay hands upon. Students must be referred to Signor Morelli's work for the technical arguments on which he bases his bold and original conclusions under this head. To our thinking, he has completely established his contention that, among many others which he specifies, the following drawings—which are among the more important generally ascribed to Raphael—are copies after the master, or, as the case may be, developments of his first sketches, by Perino.

The great "Battle of Constantine" (Louvre: Braun 236); the "Calumny of Apelles" (Louvre); the so-called "Study for the Disputa" (Windsor Castle); "St. Peter and St. Paul appearing to Attila" (Louvre: Braun 235); "Abraham with the Angels" (Albertina). The "Destruction of Pharaoh's Host" (Louvre: Braun 275) Signor Morelli shows to be an original by Perino, executed in 1522 for the Chaplain of S. Lorenzo in Florence. Our author thus robs some museums and collections of the first rank of more than one much-valued treasure. Especially the "Salle aux Boites" of the Louvre—that Salon Carré of choice drawings—suffers an eclipse, or rather a permanent diminution, of its attractions. We may, therefore, expect a terrific outcry, and the formal excommunication, with bell, book, and candle, of the audacious Milanese idol-breaker.

Not less iconoclastic or less uncompromising in his conclusions is Signor Morelli in dealing with the great burning question of the paintings still to be attributed to Leonardo da Vinci. Agreeing, mirabile dictu, for once with Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle, he assigns (not for the first time) the much-discussed Montolivet "Annunciation," now in the Uffizi, to Ridolfo Ghirlandajo, while Herren Liphardt, Lübke, and Bode pronounce it an early work of Leonardo himself. Seeing how striking is the analogy which exists between the treatment of the blue-robed Madonna in this picture and that of Leonardo's famous angel in the Verrocchio "Baptism" at the Accademia delle Belle Arti; and, considering too the Verrocchio-like character of the sculptured ornaments in the stone-work, and the peculiar character of the landscape, we are constrained on this point to lean rather to the German than to the Italian view. Ridolfo, as is well shown in the Antinori "Procession to Calvary," now at the National Gallery, was influenced by the later or Milanese, and not by the earlier or Florentine manner of Leonardo. Being born in 1483, he could hardly have been more than an infant when this picture, which is still emphatically quattrocentist in character, was painted. The great fresco in the Casa Melzi at Vaprio—known as "Il Madonnino"—which Mündler gave to Da Vinci himself, is now, for the first time, assigned to Sodoma; the "Madonna and Child" of the Hermitage is, with a fitness hardly to be questioned, put down to Bernardino de' Conti; while the beautiful "Colombina," of the same collection—which has been variously ascribed to Leonardo, Solario, and Luini—is given to Giampetrino. Returning to the charge on the subject of the famous profile-portrait of the Ambrosiana, called sometimes Isabella d' Este, sometimes Beatrice Sforza, Signor Morelli brings to bear, in support of his bold contention that this rapturously admired work is by his resuscitated Milanese painter, Ambrogio de' Predis, such a mass of technical evidence as must, we should imagine, convince all Leonardo students who are not pledged up to the hilt to support the contrary opinion. Our author attributes the companion male portrait at the Ambrosiana—accepted by Dr. Bode as an unfinished performance by the great Florentine himself—to an anonymous and highly-skilled pupil of the master, to whom he also gives what he styles the copy in the National Gallery of the "Vierge aux Rochers." To this beautiful repetition of the Louvre picture, which bears markedly the stamp of the later Milanese manner as distinguished from the earlier Florentine style of the French example, Signor Morelli and his followers—with the exception of Sir Henry Layard—are, we think, hardly just; failing, as they apparently do, to recognise in it, if not the brush of the master himself, at any rate his own personality and his supervising influence—and it may be, too, in some of the heads signs of his own master hand. Among the immediate pupils and imitators of Da Vinci, and those painters of the pre-existing Milanese school who were in a less degree influenced by him, especially Sodoma, Cesare de Sesto, Bernardino de' Conti, Ambrogio de' Predis, and Giampetrino are brought into additional prominence. The technique of the first-named master as a draughtsman is shown in reproductions from several studies for a "Leda and the Swan," of which an old copy (formerly regarded by Signor Morelli as the original) is in the Borghese Gallery. Of these drawings two are at Windsor Castle—one under the name of Leonardo, the other under that of Raphael—a third is at Chatsworth, and a fourth at Weimar, both the latter being also ascribed to Leonardo.

Where we part company altogether with Signor Morelli is in his attempt to show that the great "Entombment" of the Borghese Gallery and our own "St. Sebastian, St. Rock, and St. Demetrius" (ascribed to the Ferrarese L'Ortolano) are characteristic works belonging to the early time of Garofalo. Whatever may be the anatomical and technical points of resemblance between these splendid works and those recognised as undoubtedly from the hand of Bevenuto Tisi—and these appear to us less convincing than such as are usually brought forward by Signor Morelli—we find it impossible to accept his assumption. How is it to be believed that a master who had already attained such authority and decision of technique as are shown in the "Entombment," and whose conceptions were, moreover, of so noble and profoundly emotional a character, should ever have become in his maturity so mannered, empty, and perfunctory a painter as Garofalo persistently showed himself in the very numerous series of technically excellent but mechanical and uninspired performances which, during a lengthened career, he gave to the world? Moreover, as a landscapist the painter of the "Entombment" and the "St. Sebastian" shows, notwithstanding his sharp and trenchant colouring, much closer affinities with the Venetian, and more especially Giorgionesque, school of landscape (see the background to the National Gallery picture) than did ever the Garofalo with whom students of Italian art are familiar.

Neither Florentine nor Umbrian art is in the new work treated in great detail, though we find in it interesting notices of Francesco Pesellino, Piero di Cosimo, Mariotto Albertinelli, Jacopo da Pontormo, Il Bacchiacca, and Girolamo Genga.

In the section of Venetian art proper perhaps the only absolute novelty is the authoritative pronouncement of Signor Morelli that the fine female portrait, No. 30 in the second room of the Borghese Gallery—over the authorship of which he had long hesitated—is from the brush of Giorgio Barbarelli himself. It is not a little diverting to learn that in this particular instance the great critic was not helped to a final conclusion primarily by the technical qualities of the work; but that he allowed the spirit of Giorgione, emanating from the mysterious canvas, to commune with his spirit, thus bringing about appeasement and conviction. Is this then so very different from that yielding to a "Gesamteindruck"—to a "Giorgionesker on Raffaelscher Duft"—which Signor Morelli, as a rule, stigmatises as a mere weakness of the abhorred aesthete of professorial type. We ourselves hold that it is by the employment in the proper proportion of both methods, pressed into the service of a true and vivid intuition, that earnest students of art can alone proceed. Signor Morelli's own great achievements are surely due as much to his intuitive genius for divining and laying bare the true artistic individuality of the Italian masters as to the application of his admirable scientific method to the analysis of their purely technical characteristics.

Had these remarks not already assumed somewhat alarming proportions, it would have been a labour of love to call attention to our author's interesting notes on other Venetian masters, such as Carlo Crivelli, the Ravenna painter Niccolò Rondinelli, the favourite Lorenzo Lotto, Giovan Antonio da Pordenone, Paris Bordone, and the masters of the Brescian branch—Romanino, Moretto, and Calisto da Lodi.

Although we have, as much for Signor Morelli's sake and out of solicitude for his glory as in the interest of his followers and readers, taken exception to the controversial form of his last work, it may be replied on the other side that this honneur battailleur which permeates it will act up on some lovers of vigorous fight as a stimulant, and thus promote the deglutition of much serious matter which might otherwise prove difficult of digestion. Lermolieff writing as before in German—a sufficiently extraordinary tour de force for a foreigner, even though he may have Teutonic blood in his veins—commands a style of a clearness, brightness, and vivacity which are uncommon indeed in German prose, and especially in prose dealing with subjects of this class. He is never for a moment pedantic or obscure even in the most elaborate of his expositions—affecting wherever he can a homely, vernacular phraseology, and giving play in his controversies to a vein of humour which is neither distinctively German nor Italian, but is rather, in its use of proverb and illustration, akin to the Spanish literary manner. The little scene at the close of the book—in which a Viennese connoisseur and a Berlineser "assistant gallery director" are shown in the Doria-Panfilii Palace aux prises in the presence of the "Beazzano e Nava-gero" portrait to which we have already referred, disputing as to whether this magnificent original is a Venetian copy or a repetition by Polidoro da Caravaggio—is in its way inimitable. It is a worthy pendant, indeed, to the delightful episode of the earlier work in which a cultured North German Fräulein scornfully reproves Lermolieff for his light remarks as to the famous Dresden "Magdalen," then universally admired as a work of Correggio. Although Signor Morelli is frankly, and very naturally, in love with his own opinion on points of importance, he by no means plays pontiff or sets up exaggerated pretensions to infallibility. On the contrary, in more than one instance he withdraws or modifies opinions formerly expressed. He is willing to weigh and, it may be, to accept suggestions from all sources—save, it must be owned, that of the Spree, from which he resolutely refuses to be fed.

The new and definitive edition which the author is now actively preparing of Die Italienischen Meister in den Galerien von Dresden, &c., will be in two volumes, and is to contain so much fresh matter as to be practically a new work. It is expected that Signor Morelli will here not only approach certain branches of his subject not yet touched upon by him, but will state in what points a still further matured experience and a closer study may have induced him to modify or alter his views. To the publication of this work in its definitive form all those who, unblinded by prepossession or prejudice, have estimated at their true value the immense services rendered by Ivan Lermolieff in connexion with the study of Italian art will look forward with eager expectation.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

IN addition to the Royal Academy, the Grosvenor, and the New Gallery, two minor exhibitions of some interest will be opened next week. These are a number of Animal Studies, by Mme. Henriette Ronner, at the Fine Art Society's in New Bond-street; and a representative collection of the late Mrs. Julia Cameron's photographs, at the Camera Club, in Bedford-street, Covent-garden. We believe that the first public exhibition of Mrs. Cameron's now well-known photographic portraits took place more than twenty-five years ago, when they at once attracted attention, not only from the personages represented (including Sir John Herschell, Sir Henry Taylor, Lord Tennyson, and Robert Browning), but also from the fine effects of light and shade on a grand scale obtained by the artist—for Mrs. Cameron was worthy of that name.

Two series of art lectures will be commenced at the Royal Institution next week. On Tuesday, May 6, Mr. Louis Fagan, assistant keeper of the department of prints and drawings in the British Museum, will deliver the first of a course of three lectures on "The Art of Engraving," dealing successively with engraving in line, on wood, and in mezzotint; and on Saturday, May 10, Dr. Charles Waldstein, director of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, will deliver the first of a course of three lectures on "Recent Excavations in Greece." Each course will be illustrated—the former by more than one hundred photographic reproductions shown by oxy-hydrogen light; the latter by photographs thrown on the screen by means of the electric light.

THE May number of Igdrasil will contain in a supplement a full report of the speeches (revised by the speakers) delivered at the opening of the Ruskin Museum at Meersbrook, Sheffield; and an article on the museum, by Mr. William Marwick, the editor.

MR. HENRY BLACKBURN, editor of Academy Notes, proposes to deliver during the month of May a conversational lecture on "The Paris Salon," illustrated by reproductions of some of the pictures.

An Edinburgh correspondent writes to us as follows:—"We have just examined proofs of the photogravure and woodcut illustrations, more than thirty in number, which are being prepared for an unusually elaborate paper, read before the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland in December last, and to be included in the twelfth volume of the new series of their Proceedings. The paper deals with the Regalia of Scotland, a subject which (it will be remembered) engaged the pen of Sir Walter Scott in the early part of the century, but regarding which recent research has disclosed much that is new, and has dispelled at least one pleasant legend that was formerly current—the myth that the golden circlet made for the coronation of King Robert Bruce had been incorporated in the present Scottish crown. The historical portion of the present communication is the work of the late Mr. J. J. Reid, Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and is based upon a fresh examination of historical documents; while Mr. Alex. J. S. Brook has brought his technical knowledge to bear upon his elaborate description of the various objects comprised under the general title of "The Honours" of Scotland, each single stone in the circlet receiving specific comment. The illustrations, from photographs by Mr. W. B. Mitchell, have been executed with due fidelity to their originals, as we satisfied ourselves by a comparison made in the Edinburgh Castle Crown-room the other day. Of especial interest are the various reproductions of the sword of state presented by Julius II. to James IV. in 1507, bearing the engraved name and—on an escutcheon, in enamel—the Rovere oak-tree of that pontiff. In the guard, the combination of fine broad work, thoroughly Gothic in feeling, with the later Renaissance ornaments of the additions and repairs is distinctly curious; and, on the blade, incised figures of St. Peter have been now, for the first time, deciphered and figured. We may add that coloured reproductions of the various pieces of "The Honours" are given in the memorial volume of Stuart Relics, to be published shortly by Messrs. Macmillan. Here the drawings are by Mr. William Gibb; while the description is contributed by Mr. Brook."

THE STAGE.

THE TWO PLAYS AT THE SHAFTESBURY.

WHATEVER fault may be found with either of the pieces individually, there can be no question that the Shaftesbury Theatre has just now a very strong bill. I did not see "Dick Venables" at the moment that it was produced; but I am convinced that it has gained in many ways by having its four acts compressed into three, and that its last state is better than its first. The compression, too, permits the presentation of a piece artistic people must have been looking forward to, but which was not expected to have been seen just at present—I mean Mr. Alfred Berlyn's adaptation of François Coppée's charming play, "Le Luthier de Crémone," of which another version had some time ago been enacted by Mr. Giddens. Let me speak of this piece first.

Mr. Berlyn's version of "Le Luthier de Crémone" is in blank verse. No merit whatever attaches to it because it is in blank verse, but much merit attaches to it because its blank verse is good. I am not even now quite certain that the best and most chosen of prose—the prose every word of which is the evidence of an art—would not have conveyed with even more of directness, with even more of precision, the point and pathos of M. Coppée's poetry. But, be that as it may, the present blank verse version is undoubtedly a good one; it is not cold, it is not halting, it is not academic or artificial. And in regard at least to its most notable interpreter at the Shaftesbury, the method of its delivery is satisfactory, and is extremely telling. Indeed, the quality of Mr. Willard's voice and his skill in the production of it, and his art of diction, have never been more plainly apparent than they are as one listens to him in this piece. The quality of his voice, it may be remembered, was naturally a little lost amid all the excellencies of "The Middleman"—the voice had to be veiled or changed a little; it was to counterfeited the voice of the elderly and of the not very well-bred. Passing to Mr. Willard's actual performance—to the dramatic part of it, that is to say—it was only at his entry that I found the slightest occasion for disappointment. His hunchback—a man, it must be remembered, with the nerves of an æolian harp—did not enter frightened, breathless, hunted down, overwhelmed. Yet the jeers of the crowd have followed him, as I understand, to the door. But the manner of his entry, as Mr. Willard chose to make it, was no doubt deliberately considered and intended to be part of an harmonious whole. If the only detail I mention is a detail which I somewhat take exception to, I hope I am not unappreciative of the grip, the impressiveness, the poetic power of the performance. From almost the beginning to the very end, it seemed to me large and masterly.

A word for the minor parts. Mr. Alfred Bishop is very well known to be an excellent character-actor. But he is much better at representing those individualities of character which he has had the opportunity of seeing than in representing those which he is first compelled to imagine. His Ferrari, the old violin maker with the two pupils and the daughter, is of the latter order. The French actor who played the part originally made the man a good deal funnier, in his cups; but Mr. Bishop is, in any case, to be commended for the virtues of moderation and reticence, where the obvious temptation could only be the temptation to exaggerate. Mr. Elwood, as the somewhat unworthy fellow-pupil of Mr. Willard—the straight and stalwart lover whose fiddle is only second best—was it seemed at moments unduly heavy: almost needlessly uninteresting. If we say these harsh things of him, it is only because we can commend him sincerely in the second piece that falls under notice to-day. And then there is Miss Olga Brandon. In "The Violin Makers" she was graceful, and it may be sufficient; but who would for one moment have suspected from a performance alike blameless and colourless that we were going to see—an hour afterwards—one of the most remarkable performances that have lately been anywhere shown? And this brings me to the second piece, in which there is no doubt whatever that Miss Olga Brandon legitimately shared Mr. Willard's triumph.

"Dick Venables" may perhaps be called a melodrama. It is at all events a drama of strong sensational interest; and not a piece for which its author is to be credited with original conceptions of character, or original thoughts that are of value. But it is extremely well written for the sort of piece that it is. Its dialogue is natural; and, whatever it may have been when it was in four acts instead of in three, it is now distinctly terse. Its story of course I do not profess to tell, but briefly it is that of the miserable marriage still existing between a charming young woman and an unmitigated blackguard at present on Dartmoor. The charming young woman believes at first that the unmitigated blackguard had been shot in an attempted escape from prison bounds; but it is too soon brought home to her—though not before she is desperately in love with Capt. Lankester, who chances to be governor of the prison—that Richard Venables is alive and well, and in full possession of every faculty that can conceive of and compass crime. He is this moment guilty of manslaughter, if not of murder, and it only takes a little pressure from a comrade to plunge him into a scheme for a great jewel robbery. How is Richard Venables to be disposed of, so that the charming young woman may have what the English play-going public demands that she shall have—her full rights to marry the worthy governor? Yet, again, how is the final disposition of this criminal to be so delayed as to insure our following his fortunes with a great amount of interest, and a certain amount of sneaking sympathy, over at least an act or two? These are the problems which Mr. Law's stage-craft solves, as I think, successfully.

The excellence of the interpretation—at all events in several of the parts—is all that need be dwelt upon. As for Mr. Willard himself, to his gallery of villains he has added another canvas, bearing upon it, as his portraits are wont to do, the mark of decisive and energetic and accomplished draughtsmanship. He has not been upon the stage many minutes before he has persuaded you of Dick Venables's reality. And if it happens that your experience of very deep-dyed villains in real life has not been either wide or profound enough to enable you to pronounce with confidence upon the matter, you feel at all events that if the actual villain were not quite like that, it would clearly be his business to be as much like it as possible—you know that Mr. Willard's villain is the ideal, towards which all well directed villainy should tend. Seriously, the actor is as admirable as ever—as admirable, I mean, as it is possible to be within the limits of the rôle. And next to him—and hardly indeed behind him upon this occasion—comes Miss Olga Brandon, as the villain's most unwilling but not consciously unfaithful wife: a woman who even in her youth (as Miss Brandon represents her) suggests a past: clearly a person with a secret, a person with a tragedy, and a being alive in every inch. The sense of the extreme cleverness—the extreme rightness, moreover—of Miss Brandon's performance comes upon you gradually. The excellence of the thing is not due at all to the effectiveness of a particular moment, and is not due altogether to the effectiveness with which the actress uses any one weapon among the several ones which it is the business of her art to wield. But if, among these weapons, I had to name one more than another, it would assuredly be the weapon of facial expression—a mobility and expressiveness of countenance equal to all the demands that the trying part of Mrs. Venables makes upon them; and these, too, guided by a discrimination that is certainly very delicate. Two "character parts" are played with skill by Mr. Garden and Mr. Alfred Bishop. That represented by Mr. Bishop—in spite of incidents undeniably farcical—is perhaps the nearer to actual life. It was the dramatist, and not Mr. Bishop, who made the ecclesiastic a kleptomaniac—Mr. Bishop has taken care that at the same time he shall be sympathetic. The ecclesiastic purloins; but it is much to be able to purloin with dignity. Another man's part—that of the young governor of the convict prison—is played, as was implied earlier in the notice, in a satisfactory and manly fashion by Mr. Elwood. Two women's parts—those of the churchman's wife and daughter—are played by Mrs. Cannings and Miss Annie Rose. I have been better pleased with Miss Annie Rose before now. Mrs. Cannings, if a little conventional or traditional in her reading of the character of the wife of a beneficed clergyman who happens to be an archdeacon, is at least consistent, and is sufficiently mistress of her means to execute what she had planned.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

Mrs. AUGUSTA WEBSTER has, we hear, consented to the desire expressed by many of her friends that her classical drama "In a Day" should be acted on the stage. The performance will be given at the end of May or beginning of June—either at the Westminster Town Hall or at some theatre. The scenery used will be that painted for "The Tale of Troy" and "Orestes"; and Prof. G. O. Warr, of King's College, has promised his help in the matter of costumes, &c. Miss Webster will take the part of Klydone; but most of the other actors will be professionals.

MR. A. W. PINERO has consented to read his play of "The Profligate" in the theatre of the Birkbeck Institution, on Friday evening, May 16. The entire proceeds will be devoted to purchasing books for the library of the institution.

MUSIO.

RECENT CONCERTS.

IN inviting Antonin Dvorák to come to London and conduct his new Symphony, the directors of the Philharmonic Society showed praiseworthy enterprise. The composer of the "Stabat Mater" and of the "Spectre's Bride" did not perhaps satisfy expectations with his Leeds Oratorio a few seasons ago; but an uninteresting libretto, not decline of strength, was the main cause of that comparative failure. It is gratifying to record that Dvorák has returned once more to the country which in the past has so fully recognised his genius, and that his Symphony in G was received last Thursday week at the third Philharmonic concert with enthusiasm. This new work has so much life and charm that it at once created a favourable impression. The ease with which the music can be followed makes one, perhaps, undervalue its skill at first hearing. The composer has, indeed, spoken of his Symphony as "simple"; but that epithet is somewhat misleading—only study and effort could bring about such simplicity. Beethoven, it will be remembered, described his eighth Symphony in F as a "little" one. The Allegro opens with an impressive theme in minor, and to this the two subjects which follow in the major form striking contrasts. The development section is interesting, and the ooda effective. The Adagio is as fascinating as it is original; the composer wrote it while in the country, and it has a character thoroughly pastoral. The Allegretto Grazioso is delightfully fresh. The Finale is spirited and full of fancy; it is a movement such as Haydn might have written had he lived in the nineteenth century. The composer, who conducted his work, was recalled no less than three times to the platform. The programme also included Mr. Edward German's clever overture to "Richard III."; Henselt's pianoforte Concerto in F minor, played with great strength and brilliancy by Mr. Sapelnikoff; and the "Jupiter" Symphony—all three under the careful direction of Mr. Cowen. Miss Marian Mackenzie was the vocalist.

The Bristol Orpheus Glee Society gave a concert at St. James's Hall last Saturday afternoon; and we are glad to record that this admirable body of singers, under the able conductorship of Mr. G. Riseley, drew a much larger audience than on the occasion of their visit to London last season. The rich quality of the voices, the refinement of the singing, and the perfect ensemble render this one of the finest male choirs in the kingdom. Brahms' "Lullaby," Viotta's "Dying Child," and Sullivan's "The long day closes" were sung with wonderful delicacy. Again, in Dr. Hiles' "Hush'd in death" and Elton's "Tara Song," and other glees, there was a marked display of power. Miss Liza Lehmann and Mr. Harper Kearton diversified the programme with solos.

Signor V. Galiero gave a concert at Prince's Hall on Wednesday evening. His reading of Beethoven's pianoforte Sonata in E flat (Op. 27, No. 1) was fairly good. He played Scarlatti's Cat's Fugue in rather a hard manner; but in Liszt's transcription of Mendelssohn's "Auf Flügeln des Gesanges," he appeared to better advantage, and in Brahms' difficult and somewhat ineffective left-hand transcription of Weber's "Moto Perpetuo" he displayed fine technique. He was also heard in a Sonata for piano and violin, and in some solos of his own composition. The music is beneath criticism; but it is fair to add that it was to the taste of some of the audience, for the applause was hearty. Signor A. Simonetti, the violinist, has good intonation and plays with taste. Mdlle. Leila Dufour sang songs by St. Saens and Denza with much success: she has a good voice and clear enunciation.

It is impossible to do full justice to all the musical events of the past week. Mr. Mann's benefit concert was given on April 26 at the Crystal Palace, at which also a Serenade by E. M. Smyth was performed for the first time. This composer has studied chiefly at Leipzig, and works from her pen have been heard in several continental cities. M. Sapelnikoff played with great success Tchaikowsky's second pianoforte Concerto. The thirty-fourth series of the Saturday Concerts just concluded has been one of considerable interest; and the performances, under Mr. Mann's direction, have been of great excellence. At a concert given by Miss Ethel and Mr. Harold Bauer at the Prince's Hall on Monday evening, a Sonata for pianoforte and violin by the young and talented violinist was produced. This work is one of considerable merit. The slow movement has a taking theme, somewhat Brahms-like in character; and the finale is full of spirit. Mr. Harold Bauer gives, indeed, good promise. The Sonata was played by himself and his sister, and well received. The students of the Hyde Park Academy gave a concert at the Steinway Hall on Tuesday afternoon, assisted by the professors. The part songs, under the direction of Mr. F. Gilbert Webb, were rendered in a thoroughly conscientious, though not sufficiently vigorous, manner. Mr. Schönberger gave a brilliant performance of Liszt's Polonaise in E. Miss Cowen recited between the parts, and was much applauded. Mr. Henschel gave his second orchestral concert for young people at St. James's Hall on Wednesday afternoon. There was a good attendance, and an interesting programme, including Mozart's "Linz" Symphony in C. The various performances were exceedingly good. Mrs. Henschel sang solos, delightfully, as usual.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIO NOTES.

THE "Antigone" of Sophocles, translated into English verse by Mr. Robert Whitelaw, was performed at the Westminster Town Hall last Saturday evening. Mr. F. W. Macklin, of the Lyceum, was stage manager; and, considering the limited space, the general effect was very good. The Viscountess Maidstone played the part of Antigone with feeling and intelligence. Miss Weston was no less successful as Ismene. Mr. H. Jenner, who undertook the part of Creon at short notice, deserves commendation. Mr. E. Wyatt, as second messenger, won loud and well-deserved applause. Mendelssohn's choruses were sung, but it needed a greater and more able body of singers to do justice to the music. There was an excellent orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Barnby. Such serious efforts to reproduce the masterpieces of antiquity are of great interest, and this performance of "Antigone" was well attended.

A CONCERT was given on Saturday, April 26, at the Working Women's College, Fitzroy-street, in aid of the entertainments fund. Kind help was given by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, who played solos from Mendelssohn, Schumann, and Hans Seeling; Miss Bright gave a violin solo from Brahms; and Mr. John G. Bright one on the 'cello—Popper's Tarantella in D; Mrs. Gatty sang Tosti's Venetian Boat Song; and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Scott Gatty two of their "Plantation Melodies"; Miss Genevieve Ward recited "The Widow of Glenage," and the more homely study—"A Frenchwoman's Story"; and Mme. Antoinette Stirling sang some stirring songs. There are 390 names on the register of the College; and the income for the past year was £400. The College has a lending library, a reading-room, and a penny bank. The treasurer is Mr. Alexander Macmillan. The students include women of all trades, such as needlewomen, book-keepers, and shop assistants. The work has been steadily and quietly carried out; though, if larger funds were forthcoming, there is doubtless room for further development.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvender or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0 15 3	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 0

CHAPMAN AND HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW, MAY.

TENNYSON and AFTER.
THE IRISH LAND BILL. By T. W. RUSSELL, M.P.
THE WORKING OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN WYOMING. By the Hon. HORACE PLUNKETT.
THE LAMENTABLE COMEDY OF WILLOW WOOD. By RUDYARD KIPLING.
THE DANISH DRAMA OF TO-DAY. By WILLIAM ARONER.
LEAVES from a DIARY on the KARUN RIVER.—II. By the Hon. GEORGE N. CURSON, M.P.
THE MEDOC VINTAGE of 1889. By W. BRATTY-KINGTON.
NORTH AMERICAN FISHERIES DISPUTES. By F. HENRY GREFFCKY.
ENGLISH and AMERICANS.—II. By WM. MORTON FULLERTON.
ENGLAND'S OUTLOOK in EAST AFRICA.

ON RIGHT and WRONG. By W. S. LILLY, Author of "A Century of Revolution." Demy 8vo, 12s. [This day.]

H. M. STANLEY: his Life, Works, and Explorations. By the Rev. H. W. LITTLE. Demy 8vo. [Next week.]

WEST AFRICAN STORIES. By Major A. B. ELLIS, Author of "South African Sketches," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

WE TWO at MONTE CARLO. By ALBERT D. VANDAM. Crown 8vo, 1s. [This day.]

BRITISH SPORTING FISHES. By JOHN WATSON. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. [Next week.]

TEN YEARS' TRAVEL and SPORT in FOREIGN LANDS. By H. W. SETON-KARR. A New Edition, with Additions and Portrait of the Author. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL by H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON.
LADY FAINT HEART. By H. B. MARRIOTT WATSON. 3 vols.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,
19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1793.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK
Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANKS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free.

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PIOTON, M.A., M.P.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER'S
PARIS PRIZE MEDAL
CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Children's	1s 3d.	HEMSTITCHED—
Ladies'	2s. 4d.	Ladies' : : 2s. 11d. } per
Gent's	3s. 6d.	Gent's : : 4s. 11d. } doz.

Embroidered Handkerchiefs in all the Latest Styles, from 1s. to 60s. each.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Belfast.
Samples and Price Lists post-free. (Please name this Paper.)

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

READY ON MONDAY NEXT COSMO MONKHOUSE'S NEW VOLUME OF VERSE.
Finely Printed by R. & R. Clark, of Edinburgh, on hand-made paper, in an edition of 250 copies, fcap. 8vo, at 6s. net, and 80 copies fcap. 4to (for sale), large paper, numbered and signed at 18s. net.

CORN and POPPIES. By Cosmo Monkhouse.

The large paper copies (nearly all sold) contains as Frontispiece proofs of an Etching by Mr. William Strang Crown 8vo, brown buckram, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

ROBERT BROWNING: Essays and Thoughts.

By JOHN T. NETTLESHIP.

Also, Edition de Luxe, limited to 75 copies, Whatman large paper, price 31s. net.

LONDON: ELKIN MATHEWS, VIGO STREET, W.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES. 2 vols., 21s.

"THE QUALITY OF MERCY": A TALE OF SLUMBERLY QUAMP.

By HAROLD VALLINGS, Author of "The Superior Sex."

GARDNER & CO., 26, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATT, Sole Proprietors and Managers.

This Evening, at 8,

THE GREEN BUSHES.

Messrs. Frank Cooper, J. D. Beveridge, J. L. Shine, W. L. Abington, Lionel Rignold, Arthur Styan, Howard Russell, Marshall Moore, James East, J. Northcote, &c.; Mesdames Mary Rorke, Ada Ferrar, Kate James, Brunton, Clara Jocka, &c.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, MISS CINDERELLA.

DR. BILL.

Messrs. George Alexander, Nutcombe Gould, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Gratian, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elisabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Lenton, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lily Young, and Fanny Brough.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. C. H. HAWTREY.

Every Evening, at 8, the celebrated Comedy

PINK DOMINOES.

adapted by James Albery, with powerful cast.
Followed by the new Comic Operetta, by Messrs. Burnand & E. Solomon, DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BERNHORN-THOMAS.

This Evening, at 8.15, A VILLAGE PRIEST.

Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Allan, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Norrey, Mrs. Gaston Murray, Mrs. Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Henry Irving.

This Evening, at 8,

THE DEAD HEART; A STORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.
Messrs. Henry Irving, Bancroft, Stirling, Righton, Gordon Craig, Haviland, Tyars; Mesdames Kate Phillips, Carter, Coleridge, and Ellen Terry.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. F. J. HARRIS.

Manager, Mr. H. GITTUS LOWSDALE.

This Evening, at 8, LES CLOCHES DE CORNEVILLE.

Messrs. H. Gittus Lonsdale, Tom Paulson, Charles Ashford, L. Cadwaladr, and Shiel Barry; Mesdames Irene Veron, Florence Lonsdale, and Violet Cameron.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART, Lessees and Managers.

This Evening, at 8,

THE VIOLIN MAKERS.

At 9,

DICK VENABLES.

Mr. Willard, Messrs. A. Bishop, Garden, Elwood, H. Cane, H. V. Edmund, R. Keith, E. W. Thomas; Mrs. Cannings, Miss Annie Rose, Miss A. Hill, and Miss Olga Brandon.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Managers, Mrs. LANGTRY.

Every Evening, at 8,

AS YOU LIKE IT.

Mrs. Langtry, Mesdames M'Neil, Lea, Lamb, Armbruster, &c.; Messrs. Cantley, Bourchier, Studden, Everill, Fulton, Brodie, Forbes, Gay, Lewis, Cannings, Lawford, Grover, Lingham, Arncliffe, Elyne, York, &c.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also
ESSENCE OF BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

ON MORDELL'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1863.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MORDELL

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

MEMORY. A. LOISETTE'S

SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to Memory which your Lectures in Cambridge opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer (Jan., '90). "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew Wilson (April, '88). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '89). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—Capt. J. B. Hays, R.N.—Apply 57, New Oxford Street, London.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW BOOK BY SIR CHARLES DILKE, BART.

PROBLEMS of GREATER BRITAIN. By the Right Hon. Sir CHARLES DILKE, Bart. With

Maps. 2 vols., 8vo., 38s.

The Quarterly Review says:—"Sir Charles Dilke has often been spoken of as a statesman possessing a more thorough acquaintance with the 'Problems of Greater Britain' than any other of his time, and the remarkable book to which he has given this title justifies his reputation."

The Australasian says:—"Sir Charles Dilke has studied international politics more deeply and thoroughly, perhaps, than any man of the time, and by personal investigation and careful study has acquainted himself with all the larger facts of the time, and the inferences which naturally attach to them. If Sir Charles Dilke's great book helps others forward in the same road it will be a legacy to Greater Britain equal, perhaps, to any which will be left by any men of the time."

APPRECIATIONS, with an ESSAY on STYLE. By WALTER PATER, Fellow of Brasenose

College, Author of "The Renaissance," "Marius the Epicurean," "Imaginary Portraits," &c. Extra Crown 8vo., 8s. 6d.

(Second Edition.)

"This is an extremely interesting and characteristic collection of essays."—Nineteenth Century.

TWENTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL PUBLICATION. RE-ARRANGED THROUGHOUT.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK. A Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilised World, for the year 1890. Twenty-seventh year of Publication. Revised after Official Returns. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. Crown 8vo., 10s. 6d.

AMONG the SELKIRK GLACIERS; being the Account of a Rough Survey in the Rocky Mountain Regions of British Columbia. By WILLIAM SPOTSWOOD GREEN, M.A., F.R.G.S., A.C., Author of "The High Alps of New Zealand."

Illustrated. Crown 8vo., 7s. 6d.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"Every mountaineer should read Mr. Green's book."

The Saturday Review says:—"To read his account of the ascent of Mount Bonney is truly invigorating."

MYTHOLOGY and MONUMENTS of ANCIENT ATHENS; being a Translation of a portion of the "Attica" of Pausanias by MARGARET DE G. VERRALL, with Introductory Essay and Archaeological Commentary by JANE E. HARRISON, Author of "Myths of the Odyssey," "Introductory Studies in Greek Art, &c. With Illustrations and Plans. Crown 8vo., 16s.

The Daily News says:—"The most useful volume for archaeologists, mythologists, and serious tourists in Athens that British scholarship has produced for a long time."

The Scottishman says:—"Miss Harrison's admirable and scholarly work upon the 'Mythology and Monuments of Ancient Athens' appeals strongly to two classes of readers. In the first place, tourists who have had a classical education and visit Athens could not have a better guide-book than this, which was written on the spot, and which keeps the present state of Athens always in view while describing its past glories. In the second place, the Hellenist who wishes to understand Pausanias, whether he goes to Athens or not, must study this work. Miss Harrison's work, it remains to add, is illustrated by a series of valuable plates and diagrams. The volume substantially enriches the literature of classical antiquity."

The Manchester Examiner says:—"The volume is crammed with curious learning."

NEW NOVELS.

THE HERIOTS. By Sir Henry S. Cunningham, K.C.I.E.,

Author of "The Ceruleans: a Vacation Idyll," "The Chronicles of Dustypore," "Wheat and Tares," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo., 31s. 6d.

The Speaker says:—"We are glad to welcome home the delightful author of 'The Chronicles of Dustypore' and the 'Ceruleans.' 'The Heriots' is not a novel with a purpose, but for all that it produces an effect on the reader's mind, and favours the belief that purity and goodness are better possessions than alloments in 'going' companies and villas on the Thames. And it teaches this gratifying lesson amid a whirl of talk and sociability. People will do well to read 'The Heriots.'"

The St. James's Gazette says:—"The reader will find plenty of entertainment in this book. It is one of the brightest novels of English society at home Sir Henry Cunningham has yet given us."

THE RING of AMASIS: a Romance. By the Right Hon. the Earl of LYTON, G.C.B., G.O.S.I. 1 vol., crown 8vo., 8s. 6d.

ENGLISH MEN OF ACTION. New Vol. With Portrait. Crown 8vo., 2s. 6d.

HAVELOCK. By Mr. Archibald Forbes.

BY LEWIS CARROLL.

THE NURSERY "ALICE." Containing Twenty Coloured

Enlargements from Tenniel's Illustrations to "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland," with Text adapted to Nursery Readers by LEWIS CARROLL. The cover designed and coloured by E. GERTRAUDE THOMSON. 4to., 4s.

NOW READY, POPULAR EDITION, PART II. ONE SHILLING.

THE PLEASURES of LIFE. By Sir John Lubbock, F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., &c. Part I. Library Edition, 8s. 6d. Part II. Uniform with Part I., 8s. 6d. Parts I. and II. Popular Edition, Sixtieth Thousand, each, paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.STONES from the QUARRY. Sermons. By the Rev. ROBERT VAUGHAN, Curate in Charge of St. Mary's, South Shields, Author of "St. John and the Seven Churches." Crown 8vo., 6s.

LITERATURE PRIMERS.—NEW VOLUME.

ROMAN LITERATURE. By A. S. Wilkins, Litt.D., LL.D., Professor of Latin, Owens College, Manchester. 18mo., 1s.A SECOND POETRY BOOK. By M. A. Woods, Head Mistress of the Clifton High Schools for Girls, Author of "A First Poetry Book" and "A Third Poetry Book." A New Edition in Two Parts. Fcap. 8vo., 2s. 6d. each.MONOGRAPH of the BRITISH CICADÆ or TETTIGIDÆ (Froghoppers and Grasshoppers). By GEORGE BOWDLER BUCKTON, F.R.S., Corr. Memb. Acad. Nat. Hist. of Philadelphia, Memb. de la Soc. Ent. de France. Illustrated by more than 400 Coloured Drawings. In Eight Parts, Demy 8vo., Parts I. and II. 8s. each.A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN, M.A., LL.D. With Maps, Genealogical Tables, and Chronological Annals. 150th Thousand. Crown 8vo., 8s. 6d.

Or, In Four Parts. Part I. 607–1365. Part II. 1365–1553. Part III. 1553–1689. Part IV. 1689–1873. The corresponding portion of Mr. Tait's Analysis being bound up with each. The price of each Part is 8s.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

for MAY, profusely illustrated, price 6d., by post 8d., contains:—

1. A GREEK WATER-CARRIER. After J. Finemore. Frontispiece.
2. TRANSATLANTIC TRIFLES. Sir JULIAN GOLDEN, Bart., M.P.
3. EXPECTANCY. SOPHIE SINGLETON.
4. ALBERT DUR'R. ALBERT FLEMING. With Illustrations.
5. FOR the CAUSE. STANLEY J. WEYMAN.
6. SOME BOARD SCHOOL CHILDREN. JAMES RUNCIMAN. With Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON.
7. FASTING. The Ven. Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D.
8. CYCLE of SIX LOVE-LYRICS. VI. THEY are REUNITED." Words by JOSEPH BENNETT. Music by HAMISH MACGREGOR.
9. MAY. A Decorated Page. HEYWOOD SUMNER.
10. THE RING of AMASIS: a Romance. Conclusion. The Earl of Lytton.

THE MINER'S RIGHT. By Rolf Boldrewood, Author of

"Robbery under Arms," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo., 31s. 6d.

The Pall Mall Gazette says:—"The three volumes are brimful of adventures, in which gold diggers, prospectors, claim holders, take an active part."

JOHN VALE'S GUARDIAN. By D. Christie Murray,

Author of "Aunt Rachel," "The Weaker Vessel," &c. 3 vols., cr. 8vo., 31s. 6d.

The Athenaeum says:—"John Vale's Guardian" is in some respects the best novel Mr. Christie Murray has produced."

The Academy says:—"Both in respect of matter and style 'John Vale's Guardian' is one of Mr. Christie Murray's best books."

The Guardian says:—"It is a very clever novel."

The Saturday Review says:—"The book is eminently readable."

PURE LOGIC: and other MINOR WORKS. By W.

STANLEY JEVONS, M.A. (Lond.) F.R.S., LL.D. (Edin.). Edited by ROBERT ADAMSON, M.A., LL.D., Professor of Logic at Owens College, Manchester, and HARRIET A. JEVONS. With a Preface by Professor ADAMSON. 8vo., 10s. 6d.

CAPITAL and INTEREST: a Critical History of Economic Theory. By EUGEN BOHM-BAWERK, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Innsbruck. Translated, with a Preface and Analysis, by WILLIAM SMART, Lecturer on Political Economy in Queen Margaret College, Glasgow. 8vo., 14s.

ORGANIC EVOLUTION as the RESULT of the INHERITANCE of ACQUIRED CHARACTERS according to the LAWS of ORGANIC GROWTH. By Dr. G. H. THEODOR EIMER, Professor of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy in Tübingen. Translated by J. T. CUNNINGHAM, M.A., F.R.S.E., late Fellow of University College, Oxford. 8vo., 17s. 6d.

"The Scottishman says:—"Mr. Cunningham has done his work as a translator with scrupulous care and uniform excellence that places it beyond criticism."

The Manchester Examiner says:—"As a collection of novel, interesting, and significant facts, well arranged for their intended purpose, Professor Eimer's book merits the warmest praise."

SCIENTIFIC LECTURES. By Sir John Lubbock, F.R.S.,

D.O.L., LL.D., &c. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 8vo., 8s. 6d.

PINDAR.—The OLYMPIAN and PYTHIAN ODES.

Edited, with an Introductory Essay, Notes, and Indexes, by BASIL GILDER-SLEEVE, Professor of Greek in the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. Crown 8vo., 7s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S CLASSICAL SERIES.—New Volume.

PLUTARCH.—LIVES of GALBA and OTHO. Edited by E. G. HARDY, M.A., late Fellow of Jesus College, Oxford, and formerly Head Master of Grantham School. Fcap. 8vo., 6s.

ELEMENTARY CLASSICS.—New Volume.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS. With Notes and Vocabulary.

By the Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A., Assistant Master, at Malvern. 18mo., 1s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s. No. 367, for MAY, contains:—

1. KIRSTEEN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chapters XXXI.—XXXIV.
2. A MORAL ORUSADER. By GOLDWIN SMITH.
3. GETTING READY. By W. WARDE FOWLER.
4. OUR BOYS in FLORIDA. By ARTHUR MONTFORTH.
5. GEORGE WITHER. By JOHN FYVIE.
6. SOME PASSAGES in the LIFE of HAMISH MACGREGOR.
7. THE ORY of the PARENTS.
8. RONALD LESTER.
9. PRINCE ALBERT VICTOR in TRAVANCORE. By J. D. REES.

MACMILLAN & CO., BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 940.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS" SERIES.

Edited by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

Large crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

The above will be a Series of Biographical Studies of the Lives and Work of certain representative Historical Characters, about whom have gathered the great traditions of the Nations to which they belonged, and who have been accepted, in many instances, as Types of the several National Ideals. With the Life of each Typical Character will be presented a Picture of the National conditions surrounding him during his career.

The Narratives are the work of Writers who are recognised Authorities on their several Subjects, and, while thoroughly trustworthy as History, will present Picturesque and Dramatic "Stories" of the Men and of the Events connected with them.

VOLUME I. NOW READY.

NELSON, AND THE NAVAL SUPREMACY OF ENGLAND.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c.

OTHER VOLUMES IN PREPARATION—

PERICLES, and the GOLDEN AGE of ATHENS. By EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS, and the STRUGGLE of PROTESTANTISM for EXISTENCE. By C. B. L. FLEETWOOD SHEPPARD, M.A., late Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford.

ALEXANDER the GREAT, and the EXTENSION of GREEK RULE and GREEK IDEAS. By Professor BENJAMIN J. WHEELER, Cornell University.

THEODORIC the GOTH, the BARBARIAN CHAMPION of CIVILISATION. By THOMAS HODGKIN, Author of "Italy and her Invaders," &c.

CHARLEMAGNE the REORGANISER of EUROPE. By GEORGE L. BURR, M.A., Cornell University.

WILLIAM of ORANGE, the FOUNDER of the DUTCH REPUBLIC. By RUTH PUTNAM.

CICERO, and the FALL of the ROMAN REPUBLIC. By J. L. STRACHAN DAVIDSON, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

LOUIS XIV., and the ZENITH of the FRENCH MONARCHY. By ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A., Senior Student of Christ Church College, Oxford.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH, and the ADVENTURERS of ENGLAND. By A. L. SMITH, M.A., Fellow of Balliol College, Oxford.

BISMARCK—The NEW GERMAN EMPIRE: How it Arose; What it Replaced; and What it Stands for. By JAMES SIME, Author of "A Life of Lessing," &c.

FULL PROSPECTUS WILL BE SENT POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 27, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

METHUEN'S NOVEL SERIES.

Under the above title Messrs. METHUEN will publish from time to time Copy-right Novels by well-known Writers. They will be well printed and handsomely bound. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Vol. I.—THE PLAN OF CAMPAIGN. By F. MABEL ROBINSON, Author of "Disenchantment," &c. [Ready.]

Vol. II.—JACQUETTA.

By S. BARING-GOULD, Author of "Mehalah," &c. [Shortly.]
* * Other Volumes will follow shortly.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MEHALAH," "OLD COUNTRY LIFE," &c.
YORKSHIRE ODDITIES and STRANGE EVENTS. By S. BARING-GOULD. New and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
OLD COUNTRY LIFE. By S. Baring-Gould, M.A.
Second Edition, with 65 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.
"Bright, cheery, and picturesque. No one knows or loves quaint old England better than Mr. Baring-Gould. This delightful volume is illustrated with clever and comical drawings."—Times.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
ARMINELL: a Social Romance. 3 vols., crown 8vo.
"To say that a book is by the author of 'Mehalah' is to imply that it contains a story cast on strong lines, containing dramatic possibilities, vivid and sympathetic descriptions of nature, and a wealth of ingenious imagery. All these expectations are justified by 'Arminell.'"—Speaker.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.
HISTORIC ODDITIES and STRANGE EVENTS. By S. BARING-GOULD, M.A. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.
"A collection of exciting and entertaining chapters. The whole volume is delightful reading."—Times.

Part III. just ready.
SONGS of the WEST: Traditional Ballads and Songs of the West of England (with their Traditional Melodies). Collected by S. BARING-GOULD, M.A., and H. FLEETWOOD SHEPPARD, M.A., Arranged for Voice or Piano. In 4 Parts (containing 25 Songs each), 8s. each.
Part I. (Third Edition). Part II. (Second Edition).

BY WILLIAM ANDREWS.
CURIOSITIES of the CHURCH: Studies of Curious Customs, Services, and Records. Illustrated. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 6s.

BY F. MABEL ROBINSON.
IRISH HISTORY for ENGLISH READERS. Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, paper boards, 1s.

BY MRS. LYNN LINTON.
ABOUT IRELAND. By E. Lynn Linton, Author of "Joshua Davidson," &c. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, paper boards, 1s.
"A brilliant and justly proportioned review of the Irish Question."—Standard.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "DONOVAN," "WE TWO," &c.
DERRICK VAUGHAN, NOVELIST. By Edna Lyall.
Twenty-fourth Thousand. Post 8vo, 2s. 6d.
"Edna Lyall has not written anything more artistic, or, from the moral point of view, more stimulating, in substance as well as in form it is the manliest of of Edna Lyall's books."—Academy.

BY W. PIMBLETT.
EMIN PASHA: his Life and Work. With an Account of Stanley's Relief March. With Portrait and Map. Crown 8vo, paper boards, 1s.

EDITED BY F. LANGBRIDGE, M.A.
BALLADS of the BRAVE. Poems of Chivalry, Enter-prise, Courage, and Constancy, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day. Edited with Notes, by Rev. F. LANGBRIDGE. Crown 8vo, gilt edges, 6s.
"The book is full of splendid things."—World.

METHUEN & CO., 18, BURY STREET, W.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
THE NEW SERIES OF STATE TRIALS, by J. A. HAMILTON	311
HURBERT'S FRANCE AND THE REPUBLIC, by W. MARKHEIM	312
MRS. CHANDLER MOUTON'S POEMS, by OSWALD CHAWFUND	313
TOZER'S ISLANDS OF THE A'GRAW, by Prof. MAHAFFY	313
THE LIFE OF ROBERT OWEN, by WALTER LAWIN	314
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	315
HISTORICAL BOOKS	316
NOTES AND NEWS	317
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	318
ORIGINAL VERSE: "BEATA BEATRIX," by S. WADDINGTON	319
OBITUARY: EDWIN WAUGH, by W. E. A. AXON	319
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	319
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	319
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Oxford Invitation to the Oriental Congress, by Prof. Sayce and Prof. Rhys; "Cockney," by Dr. Murray; The Irish MSS. at Cheltenham, by Dr. Kuno Meyer; Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore by Whitley Stokes	320
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	322
TWO VOLUMES OF FOREIGN THEOLOGY, by A. W. BENN	322
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Persian Catalogue of the Boileau Library, by Dr. H. Eihé	323
ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS	323
SCIENCE NOTES	324
PHILOLOGY NOTES	324
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	324
THE ROYAL ACADEMY.—I, by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	325
THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS, by COSMO MONKHOUSE	326
EXCAVATIONS AT PLATEA, by Dr. C. WALDSTEIN	327
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	327
RECENT CONCERTS, by J. S. SHELDON	327
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	328

RUSKIN SOCIETY of LONDON.—

AN ILLUSTRATED LECTURE will be delivered by Mr. KINOTON PARKES (of Birmingham), on TUESDAY, 20TH MAY, at 6.30 p.m. Subject: "DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI, Painter and Poet." Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of becoming Members, and applications for Tickets (enclosing stamped envelope), please address HON. SEC. RUSKIN SOCIETY, London Institution, Finsbury Circus, E.C.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—FOUR LECTURES

on "THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF THE BABYLONIANS," will be delivered by Mr. G. BERTIN, M.A., at 8.30 p.m., on the TUESDAYS, JUNE 3, 10, 17, and 24. Tickets, for One Lecture, 5s.; for the Series, 15s., may be had from E. A. CLARKE, Stationer, 38, Museum-street, or from the LECTURER, before the Lectures.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and

SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent-street, S.W.

MISS HELEN CLEGG, ACCOUNTANT and AUDITOR, is desirous of extending her practice in the direction of Auditing of Schools, Charity, and Private Accounts. She would also undertake the Sole Management of the Business Affairs of Schools, such as Collecting Fees, and the Payments of Rent, Taxes, Salaries and Wages, &c.

Office, 35, Alfred-place, Bedford-square, W.C.

MR. OTTO SCHOLDERER'S

SCHOOL OF ART,
6, BEDFORD GARDENS, KENSINGTON.
Instruction in Oil Painting, Pastel Drawing, and in Black and White.
For terms apply to the above address.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.E., Secretary.

CATALOGUES.

Just published.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE NEW

ORIENTAL CATALOGUE. The Languages, Religions, Antiquities, and Literature of the East. Post free one stamp.
14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THÉOPHILE BELIN, 29, Quai Voltaire,

Paris. Livres anciens et modernes rares et Curieux. Catalogue Mensuel envoyé sur demande.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is

OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100 Mercer's-road, Tufnell Park, N.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14,

HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO., have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

A NEW MANUAL OF BOOK-KEEPING

for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.
G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C., and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery-lane, W.C.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

IMPROVED EDUCATION for MIDSHIP-

MEN.—Messrs. DEVITT and MOORE have the pleasure to announce an improved plan of PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION for the MERCANTILE MARINE, inaugurated by Lord Brassey, who, with the view of meeting the wishes of parents anxious to send their boys to sea under proper care, has arranged that two of their Australian Lines, the "Hesperus" and the "Hastings," shall be specially adapted to this purpose. A surgeon will be carried by each ship, and a naval instructor, acting under the captain, will be appointed, who will teach the boys navigation, nautical astronomy, &c., superintending their instruction in seamanship and the other duties of their profession, and exercise control in matters of discipline both on the voyage and in a colonial port. It is proposed to despatch one ship in June to take boys going to sea for the first time. The second ship sailing in August will be specially intended for boys from the training ships "Worcester" and "Conway," who will be able to keep the knowledge they have already gained instead of forgetting so much as they now usually do in the period of sea service through which they must pass before going up for examination for the Board of Trade certificate. All youths applying will have to produce a certificate of good conduct, either from the training ship in which they have served or from their last school. Certificates of conduct and efficiency will be given for each voyage, which, if good, will be of advantage to the youths in obtaining future promotion. For further particulars and terms apply to DEVITT & MOORE, 39, Fenchurch-street, London, E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH

WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in CHEMISTRY at a Salary of £120 per annum. Applications, with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 10TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH

WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

CHAIR of MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of MECHANICAL ENGINEERING in the new Engineering Department. The stipend of the Professor will be £300 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 10TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4,

ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom: over 2,000 have passed.

- I. All Army Examinations.
- II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
- III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.

There is not a corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at Cramping; unsurpassed Staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.R. Hist. Soc., &c.

GLENALMOND.—FIVE ENTRANCE

SCHOLARSHIPS, of which one (for exceptional merit) will be of £70, the others of £50, will be offered for competition in JULY, age, 11 to 15. Candidates can be examined in England. For particulars apply to WARDEN, Glenalmond, Perth.

The College, placed in singularly healthy site, at foot of the Grampians, has classical and modern side, and prepares directly for Universities and Public Services. Junior school for boys between 9 and 13.

Warden, Rev. J. H. SKIRVEN.

HIGH-CLASS BOARDING SCHOOL for

GENTLEWOMEN. Foreign Languages and Accomplishments Specialities. Also Intellectual Home for Ladies who wish to continue certain studies only.

Miss ESSER, Rockfield, Lansdowne-road, Croydon.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY,

(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

President—THE LORD ABERDARE, G.C.B.

THURSDAY, 15TH MAY, at 8.30 p.m.

The following Paper will be read:—"THE DESIRABILITY OF TREATING HISTORY as a SCIENCE OF ORIGINS," by J. S. STUART GLENNIE, M.A., F.R. Hist. S.

11, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, W.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT

INSTITUTION for the RELIEF of DISTRESSED ARTISTS, their WIDOWS and ORPHANS.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place at the "WHITEHALL ROOMS," the HOTEL METROPOLE, on SATURDAY, MAY 10TH, at half-past six o'clock.

The Right Honourable JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN, M.P., in the Chair.
Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea.

Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by—

Sir JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., R.A., Honorary Secretary.
PHILIP CHARLES HARDWICK, Treasurer.

DOUGLAS H. GORDON, Secretary, 19, St. James's-street, S.W.

The PHOTIADES Collection of GREEK and BYZANTINE COINS.

M. HENRI HOFFMANN, expert, assisted by M. MAURICE DELESTRE, commissaire-priseur, will SELL at the HOTEL DROUOT, PARIS, on MONDAY, 15TH MAY, 1890, and Five Following Days, the unrivalled COLLECTION of GREEK and BYZANTINE COINS, formed by His Excellency PHOTIADES Pacha, formerly Governor of Crete, and Ottoman Minister at Rome and Athens.

The Greek division consists of Coins of Greece Proper, Crete, and the Aegean Islands, and comprises excessively rare and unpublished examples of Klerion, Gomphi-Pheippolis, Lemnia, the Oeae, Phrae, Mantinea, Alexander Phere, Pythos, Delphi, Boeotia, Thessaly, a very complete series of Athens, including the almost unique stater of Mithradates, Elia, Maseia, Arkadia, Pheneos, Gortyna, Kosmos, Hierapytna, Ithaca, Naxos, Paros, Tenos, &c., &c. The Hysantine division, commencing with Araculus and finishing with John VIII. Paleologos, comprises exemplum, as, medallion of Araculus, and solidi of Eudokia, Verina, Constantina V. Irene, Basil I., Michael I., Michael III., with Theodora, and Thekla, Alexander, &c., &c.

Illustrated Catalogues, price 25 francs, and information respecting the sale may be obtained of the Expert, M. H. HOFFMANN, 11, Rue de la Harpe, Paris, or of W. TALBOT READ, 55, Rathbone-place, London, W.

Now Ready, Price 2s. 6d.,

ROYAL ACADEMY ANTICS,

With over SIXTY Original Illustrations.

By HARRY FURNISS.

"The Illustrations are as admirable as they are humorous."—Daily News.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

"A book without a parallel."

Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

Now ready. 2 vols., price 24s.

THE

JOURNAL of MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF

Translated from the French, with an Introduction, by MATHILDE BLIND. With Two Portraits.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE,

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl, R.A.; Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs of Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS, Scientific, and

of all descriptions, Legal Documents, Specifications, Plans, &c., COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in Shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring dexterity and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Messrs E. B. & I. FARRAR 4, Southampton-street, Strand, London.

TO LIBRARIANS, SECOND-HAND

BOOKSELLERS, NEWSAGENTS, COLLECTORS, and OTHERS.—REQUIRED by the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, to complete their File, the Following Numbers of the TIMES Newspaper, viz.: For the years 1783, 1788, 1789, 1790, 1791, 1792, 1793, 1794, 1795, 1796, 1797, 1798, 1799, 1800, 1801, 1802, 1803, 1804, and 1843, also for the half-year ending June, 1844. A Liberal Price will be paid for Complete Copies in fair condition.

If desired, can exchange the Following Duplicate Numbers, viz.: January to December, 1818; January to May, 1840; March to December, 1833; April to December, 1837; January to December, 1834; April to June, 1835.

London-road Station, Manchester,
1st May, 1890.

Just published, post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE LIFE and WRITINGS of ALEX-

ANDER VINET. By LAURA M. LANE. With an Introduction by The Venerable Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D.

"I may say without hesitation that readers will here find a deeply interesting account of a sincere and brilliant thinker.... The publication of this book will be a pure gain if it calls the attention of fresh students to the writings of a theologian so independent as Vinet was, yet so supreme in his allegiance to the majesty of truth."—Archdeacon FARRAR.

Edinburgh T. & T. CLARK, 38, George-street
To be had from all Booksellers.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW. No. 340.

CONTENTS.

- I. THE MODERN FRENCH NOVEL.
- II. BUDDHISM.
- III. THE VIKING AGE.
- IV. THE BEGINNING and the END of LIFE.
- V. ST. SAVIOUR'S, SOUTHWARK.
- VI. SOPHOCLES.
- VII. THE FRENCH in ITALY and their IMPERIAL PROJECT.
- VIII. ROBERT BROWNING.
- IX. PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION of SCOTLAND.
- X. GREATER BRITAIN.

LUX MUNDI: a Series of Studies in the Religion of the Incarnation. Edited by CHARLES GOBE, M.A., Principal of Pusey House. Fifth Edition. 8vo, 14s.

ADVENTURES in the GREAT FOREST of EQUATORIAL AFRICA, and the COUNTRY of the DWARFS. By PAUL DU CHAILLU. Popular Edition. With Map and 90 Illustrations. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE RAILWAYS of SCOTLAND. Their present position, with a glance at their past, and a forecast of their future. By W. M. ACWORTH. With a Map. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A SOUTHERN PLANTER By Susan DABNEY SMEDES. Post 8vo, 7s. 6d.

OUR VICEREGAL LIFE in INDIA during the years 1884-8. By the MARCHIONESS of DUFFERIN. Fourth Edition. With Portrait and Map. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s.

THE WITNESS of the PSALMS to CHRIST and CHRISTIANITY. By the LORD BISHOP of DERRY. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 9s.

THE REIGN of LAW. By the DUKE of ARGYLL. 19th Edition. Post 8vo, 6s.

HANDBOOK for TRAVELLERS in ENGLAND and WALES. Arranged Alphabetically, with List of Hotels, Railway Stations, and Objects and Sights worth seeing. New and Revised Edition. With Map. 1 vol., post 8vo, 12s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

REMINGTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Just published.

LAST TWO VOLUMES OF THE ENGLISH EDITION OF

MEMOIRS of DUKE ERNEST of SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 8's.

Just out.

NEW WORK BY DR. GORDON STABLES.

The MYSTERY of a MILLIONAIRE'S GRAVE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Just out.

NEW WORK BY TOLSTOL

Translated from the Russian by H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS.

THE KREUTZER SONATA. Paper cover, 1s.; post free, 1s. 3d.

LAYS of COMMON LIFE. By William TOYNBEE. Crown 8vo, 5s.

REMINGTON & CO.,

HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 842 pages, cloth 10s. 6d., or bound in calf limp for the pocket, 12s. 6d.

A HAND-BOOK OF EUROPEAN BIRDS

For the use of Field Naturalists and Collectors.

By JAMES BACKHOUSE, Junr.

Containing descriptions of Plumage, Dimensions, Distribution and Habits of the various species.

GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, Paternoster-row (Mr. VAN VOORST'S Successors).

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

WARD & DOWNEY'S NEW BOOKS.

PAPER and PARCHMENT. By A. C. EWALD. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Next week.]

STRANGE CRIMES. By William Westall. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Next week.]

THE GOLDEN SOUTH: Memoirs of Home Life in Australia. By "LYTH." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [This day.]

A MEMOIR of the late CAPTAIN MAYNE REID. By his WIDOW. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Just ready.]

BISMARCK at HOME. Crown 8vo, 1s. [Just ready.]

'TWIXT OLD TIMES and NEW: the Baron de Malortie's Reminiscences. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. "Altogether his stories are so varied and charming that all one can do is impatiently and incontinently to ask for more." Scots Observer.

AN ARTIST'S TOUR in NORTH and CENTRAL AMERICA and in the SANDWICH ISLANDS. By P. KROUPA. With 32 Whole-page Illustrations by the Author. Royal 8vo, 21s. "A graphic and interesting record of a prolonged tour." Daily Telegraph.

THE LOVES and MARRIAGES of SOME EMINENT PERSONS. By T. F. THISELTON-DYER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 30s.

"An acceptable, instructive, and extremely entertaining book."—Truth.

UP and DOWN: Sketches of Travel. By GILBERT MACQUOID. With 20 Illustrations by Thomas R. Macquoid. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. "Brightly written, and rendered admirably attractive by Mr. T. R. Macquoid's drawings."—Saturday Review.

ANCIENT CURES, CHARMS, and USAGES of IRELAND. By LADY WILDE, Author of "Ancient Legends of Ireland." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A mass of interesting folklore."—Daily Telegraph.

THE NEW NOVELS.

ILLUSTRATED BY HARRY FURNISS.

PERFURVID: the Career of Ninian Jamelson. By JOHN DAVIDSON. 6s. [Just ready.]

THE BLIND MUSICIAN. Adapted from the Russian. By S. STEPNIAN and WILLIAM WESTALL. 2s. 6d. [This day.]

AN UNFORTUNATE ARRANGEMENT. By JOHN HILL. 2 vols. [This day.]

THE GOLD of OPHIR. By Elizabeth J. LYSAGHT. 3 vols.

"An excellent romance.....Altogether there is a healthy and pleasant warmth of simple sentiment."—Academy.

THE NUGENTS of CARICONNA By TIGHE HOPKINS. 3 vols.

"Quite delightful.....Humour, truth, kindness of feeling, and good taste are the principal ingredients.....The people in the story are human, natural, and individual to an uncommon degree."—Athenaeum.

A QUEEN of ROSES. By Baynton Foster. 6s.

"Simple and pretty.....Rustic beauty and innocence are charmingly personified in the heroine."—Morning Post. "The characters are no mere lay figures, but flesh and blood personages with human feelings and human emotions." Scottish Leader.

THE NEW FAITH and WHAT CAME of IT. By CHARLES T. C. JAMES, Author of "The Blindness of Memory Earle," "An Early Frost," &c. 3 vols. "There is a good deal of rollicking humour throughout this novel, and some love episodes which have an important bearing on the climax of the new creed."—Scotsman.

A BRUMMAGEM BARON. By John BRIDGES, Author of "Idylls of a Lost Village." 2 vols. "A decidedly original and amusing story." Scottish Leader.

12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

STANFORD'S AFRICAN LIST.

NEW EDITION, Revised to March 25th, 1890.
Reduced in price.

STANFORD'S LIBRARY MAP OF AFRICA.

Engraved in the Finest Style on Copper Plates.
Scale, 94 miles to 1 inch; size, 65 inches by 58.

Prices:—4 sheets, coloured, 35s.; per post, packed on roller, 35s. 8d.

Mounted on rollers, varnished, 45s.

Mounted in morocco case, £3; per post, £3 0s. 8d.

Mounted on spring roller, £5.

The vast progress that has been made in the last few years in opening up the interior of this great continent has so altered its aspect as to make this New Edition largely a New Map.

The development of large territories in the east and south by means of Chartered Companies under British influence is clearly shown; and further south the States of South Africa, now making sure and steady progress in the work of exploration and topographical survey, are carefully delineated.

The recent route of Stanley in his last great journey across tropical Africa, the results of Junker's, Wissmann's, Leat's, Capello and Iven's, and numerous other travellers' explorations in this vast region, together with those of Selous and others in the countries south of the Zambesi, have all been duly incorporated.

The political boundaries have been carefully revised up to date, the agreement just arrived at between Great Britain and France in West Africa, and the territory claimed by Lobengula and recently placed under British influence, being properly coloured.

STANFORD'S LONDON ATLAS MAP

of AFRICA. Showing all the available information regarding that Country as well as the scale permits. Scale, 260 miles to 1 inch; size, 22 inches by 28. Price, Coloured Sheet, 3s.; per post, packed on roller, 3s. 6d.; mounted in case, 5s.; per post, 5s. 8d.

STANLEY'S ROUTE.—STANFORD'S

NEW LONDON ATLAS MAP of CENTRAL AFRICA. Showing the Line of March taken by Stanley's Expedition, Emin Pasha's Province, and the Coast Line on both sides of the Continent. Size, 26 inches by 22; scale, 94 miles to 1 inch. Price, Coloured Sheet, 3s.; per post, packed on roller, 3s. 6d.; mounted in case, 5s.; per post, 5s. 8d.

SOUTH AFRICA.—STANFORD'S

LONDON ATLAS MAP of SOUTH AFRICA. Compiled from Official Sources and Private Information, including the Cape Colony, Natal, Orange Free State, Zululand, Bechuanaland, and the Southern Portion of the Transvaal. Railways, Main Roads, and Submarine Telegraph Cables are shown, and Mission Stations, Military Posts, and Forts are indicated. Scale, 46 miles to 1 inch; size, 29 inches by 17. Price, Coloured Sheet, 3s.; per post, packed on roller, 3s. 6d.; mounted in case, 5s.; per post, 5s. 8d.

STANFORD'S MAP of the TRANS-

VAAL GOLDFIELDS, 1889. A Map of the Transvaal Goldfields, British Zululand, the Delagoa Bay Railway, and the Routes from Cape Colony and Natal, with an Enlarged Plan of the Witwatersrand Goldfield. Size, 40 inches by 27; scale, 16 miles to 1 inch. Price, in sheet, coloured boundaries, &c., 8s.; per post, packed on roller, 8s. 6d.; mounted to fold in case, 12s.; per post, 12s. 3d.; mounted on rollers and varnished, 15s.

AFRICA.—STANFORD'S COMPEN-

DIUM of GEOGRAPHY and TRAVEL. By the late KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S., Leader of the Royal Geographical Society's East African Expedition. Fourth Edition, Revised and Corrected by E. G. RAVENSTEIN, F.R.G.S. With Ethnological Appendix by A. H. KEANE, M.A.I. Large post 8vo, cloth gilt, with 16 Maps and Diagrams, and 68 Illustrations, price 21s.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 and 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHANCING CROSS, S.W.

STANDARD WORKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

MR. FRITH'S REMINISCENCES
(recently published in 2 vols., 8vo.) A New and Cheaper Edition is now ready. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE PRIVATE LIFE of MARIE ANTOINETTE. By HENRIETTE FELIOITE CAMPAN, First-Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. With 2 Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

DEAN HOOK: his Life and Letters. Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, Vicar of Woolbeding; Author of "Life of St. John Chrysostom," &c. The POPULAR EDITION. With Index and Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RECOLLECTIONS of a LITERARY LIFE. With Selections from her Favourite Poets and Prose Writers. By MARY RUSSELL MITFORD. Crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

THE LIFE of the Rev. RICHARD HARRIS BARHAM (Author of "The Ingoldsby Legends"). By his Son, the Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARHAM. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 6s.

A MEMOIR of the Late Rev. JOHN RUSSELL ("Parson Russell"), of Tordown, North Devon. By the Author of "Dartmoor Days," "Wolf-Hunting in Brittany," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL. From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Eighth Edition. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 6s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon. Thirty-second Edition. With Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of VISCOUNT WOLSELEY. By CHARLES RATHBONE LOW, late Indian Navy, F.R.G.S. 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

BY the AUTHOR OF "THE GARDEN OF EDEN."
HER THREE LOVERS.

By ALICE M. DIEHL.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MY LITTLE LADY."
The FAILURE of ELIZABETH.

By E. FRANCES POYNTER,
Author of "Among the Hills," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Its charm of style and beautiful womanliness of tone and sentiment cannot fail to please the most jaded of feminine novel readers."—Manchester Examiner.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "FREDERICK HAZZLEDEN."

"A C T E."

By HUGH WESTBURY.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Written in an energetic straightforward fashion; the character of the Jewess, Judith, is vigorously and sympathetically described."—Observer.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THYRA."
THE EMANCIPATED.

By GEORGE GISSING,
Author of "The Nether World," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE PARISH OF HILBY."
ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS.

By MARY E. MANN,
Author of "A Lost Estate," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Refreshingly clever. Miss Mann has brought together the necessary materials for an excellent story, and employed them with undaunted ability."—Morning Post.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

At the PARIS EXHIBITION, 1889, The CLARENDON PRESS obtained the ONLY GRAND PRIZE and TWO out of the five GOLD MEDALS that were awarded to British Printers and Publishers.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW BOOKS.

Just published, 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

A CONTRIBUTION to the NATURAL HISTORY of SCARLATINA. derived from Observation on the London Epidemic of 1857-58. Being a Dissertation for the Degree of Doctor of Medicine in the University of Oxford. Printed and published at the expense of the University, as a mark of distinction in conformity with the Statutes. By D. ASTLEY GRESSWELL, M.A., M.D. Oxon.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

MODELS and EXERCISES in UNSEEN TRANSLATION. By H. F. FOX, M.A., Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, late Assistant Master at Bath College, and Rev. T. M. BROMLEY, M.A., Assistant Master at Bath College.

"* The exercises in this book are intended for use at the Universities and in the higher forms of schools. They have been collected from various sources, but they will be found generally to be about the standard of a good scholarship examination."—From the PREFACE.

NEW EDITION of LORD CHESTERFIELD'S LETTERS to HIS GODSON.

Now ready, royal 8vo, with Facsimile Letter Pedigree Portraits and Illustrations, cloth, bevelled, extra, 21s.

THE LETTERS of the FOURTH EARL of CHESTERFIELD to his GODSON and SUCCESSOR. Edited from the Originals with a Memoir of Lord Chesterfield. By the Earl of CARNARVON. Second Edition with Appendix of Additional Correspondence.

N.B.—The whole of the First Edition of this Work was sold on the day of Publication.

NEW VOLUME of CHAMBER'S "HANDBOOK OF ASTRONOMY."

Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 21s.

A HANDBOOK of DESCRIPTIVE and PRACTICAL ASTRONOMY. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., V.I.I., INSTRUMENTS and PRACTICAL ASTRONOMY. The remaining Volume, III., THE STARRY HEAVENS, will be published in due course.

"A valuable mine of astronomical information carefully brought up to date."—Academy.
Vol. I., THE SUN, PLANETS and COMETS, is still on sale, price 21s.

Just published, 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE ENGLISH LAW of PROPERTY. By THOMAS RALEIGH, M.A., Fellow of All Souls' College, Oxford, Reader in English Law in the University of Oxford.

NEW VOLUMES of THE SACRED BOOKS of the EAST. Edited by Professor F. MAX MULLER.

8vo, cloth.

Vol. XXXIII. NARADA, and some Minor Law Books. Translated by JULIUS JOLLY. 10s. 6d.

Vol. XXXIV. THE VEDANTA-SUTRAS, with Sankara's Commentary. Translated by G. THIBAUT. 12s. 6d.

Vol. XXXV. THE QUESTIONS of KING MILINDA, Translated by T. W. RHYS DAVIDS. 10s. 6d.

NEW WORK by MR. HENRY SWEET.

Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A PRIMER of PHONETICS. By HENRY SWEET, M.A., Balliol College, Oxford, Hon. Ph.D. Heidelberg.

"* This book is intended to supply the double want of a new edition of my Handbook of Phonetics and of a concise introduction to Phonetics, with especial reference to English and the four foreign languages most studied in this country—French, German, Latin, and Greek."—From the PREFACE.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

MODELS and MATERIALS for GREEK IAMBIC VERSE. By J. Y. SARGENT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Hertford College, Oxford.

"* The special feature of this book is the method which it suggests of teaching Greek Iambic Composition by reference to parallel passages in Greek Poetry."

NEW VOLUME of THE ORATIONS of DEMOSTHENE against PHILIP.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

DEMOSTHENE'S ORATIONS against PHILIP. With Introduction and Notes by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., and P. E. MATHESON, M.A. Vol. II.—DE PHACE, PHILIPPIO II.; DE OHERSONESO, PHILIPPIO III.

Vol. I. PHILIPPIO I., OLYNTHIAOS I.-III., by the same Editors, still on sale, 3s. 6d.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent Free on Application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WARHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

TWO ADDITIONS TO LOW'S 6s. STANDARD NOVELS.

SPRINGHAVEN: a Tale of the Great War. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. With numerous Illustrations by Alfred Parsons and F. Barnard. New Edition. Small post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"'Splendid' and 'glorious' are strong terms, but they are scarcely too strong for application to some parts of 'Springhaven.'.....The story is among the author's best; and to read it is a most invigorating tonic."—Illustrated London News.

THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN, and OTHER STORIES. By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Princess of Thule," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"'The Penance of John Logan' is so well contrived, so brightly told, and so lifelike, that its simple pathos is irresistible."—Athenaeum.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count PAUL P.—. Edited by FRANK HARKUT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"There is no lack of startling incident and sensational adventure in this record of Russian oppression and Polish intrigue.....The interest of the story seldom flags."—Speaker.

GLANCES at GREAT and LITTLE MEN. By "PALADIN." 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CONTENTS:—Oxford—Bishop Wilberforce—Some Preachers—The late Emperor of Brazil—Sir Barile Frere—Anthony Trollope—Richard Wagner—Napoleon III.—George MacDonald—Emperor William I. and Prince Bismarck, &c.

A CENTURY of PAINTERS of the ENGLISH SCHOOL. Abridged and Continued to the Present Time. By R. REDGRAVE, O.B., R.A., and S. REDGRAVE. New Edition. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.; roxburgh binding, 12s.

HOMES of TASTE: Economical Hints on Furniture and Decoration. By J. E. PANTON, Author of "From Kitchen to Garret," &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

GREAT MUSICIANS SERIES. Edited by the late Dr. F. HUEFFER.

NEW VOLUME.

BEETHOVEN. By H. A. RUDALL. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, 3s.

SLIDE VALVE GEARS: an Explanation of the Action and Construction of Plain and Out-off Slide Valves. By FREDERICK A. HALSEY, Member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, &c. 1 vol., royal 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

HANDY GUIDE-BOOK to the JAPANESE ISLANDS. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

THE "NURSING RECORD". SERIES OF MANUALS AND TEXT-BOOKS.

No. 1—LECTURES to NURSES on ANTISEPTICS in SURGERY. By E. STANMORE BISHOP, F.R.C.S., &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 2s.

UNDER THE DIRECT SANCTION OF HER MAJESTY.

LOW'S HANDBOOK to the CHARITIES of LONDON for 1890. Fifty-fourth Year. Revised according to the latest Reports. Small crown 8vo, paper covers, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED),
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1890.

No. 940, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Reports of State Trials. New Series. Volume II. 1823-1831. Edited by John Macdonell. (Eyre & Spottiswoode.)

THE second volume of the new series of Reports of State Trials is less political, but more legal than the first. The range covered by the term "State Trials" is considerable. In this volume it extends from the prosecution of O'Connell for conspiracy to commit a breach of a Coercion Act to a decision that the King of Spain had just as much right to file a bill in Chancery as the humblest of His Majesty's lieges. There are four trials for libel—those of Whittle Harvey, proprietor of the Sunday Times, for publishing a paragraph to the effect that George IV. was as insane as his father; of John Hunt, for printing Byron's "Vision of Judgment"; and also the trials of Richard Carlisle and of William Cobbett for publications tending to promote riot and disorder among the agricultural labourers during the distress of the winter of 1830. Several cases deal with the prerogatives of the Crown and the rights belonging to the Duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall. There are two very interesting decisions upon the extent to which English law recognises slavery. The other cases are even less political, and the only trial in the volume that very directly affects the current of political history is the trial of O'Connell in 1831.

Of the editing, it is sufficient to say that the series is still in the hands of Master Macdonell. All that erudition and industry and pains can do have been done. The notes are models of what notes upon a judicial decision should be—both learned and laconic; and any one who is curious to know what are the privileges of royal palaces or the immunities of ambassadors will find all the authorities collected for him in the notes on pages 214 and 140. The editor has drawn not only upon purely legal sources, but has gone afield into general historical materials to explain allusions to passing events. One suggestion there is to be made. In addition to the cases reported at length, Master Macdonell's industry collected no fewer than twenty-three other cases, which the State Trial Committee considered and decided not to have fully reported. Might not this process have been carried a little further? This series is intended to be at least as much a legal as an historical authority. Need that which is already sufficiently reported elsewhere for historical purposes, and is of the minimum value for legal purposes, be reproduced verbatim here? There is a rambling speech of Carlisle's which occupied five hours and a half, and an abusive one of Cobbett's only an hour shorter, both of which are reported at length. Surely they ought not to be rewarded for wearying their contemporaries by being allowed to bore posterity. Counsel's speeches are throughout, especially those of Sir Thomas Denman, reported very fully. This is a doubtful boon. The editor could have made their points for the speakers ten times better in one tenth of the space; and it must be remembered that in these long speeches one cannot see the wood for the trees. Confronted with a report one hundred columns long, the laziness of vicarious human nature is content with the succinctness of the headnote.

Mankind is so prone to jargon that probably the jargon of lawyers is no more deserving of ridicule or repugnance than the jargon of stockbrokers or curates, but necessarily in cases of this description there is an immense amount of technical language and technical discussion of the most out of the way kind. The Devon peerage case contains an avalanche of concentrated learning upon the effect of a patent of nobility granted to a person "and his heirs male for ever." A grant to a man and his heirs is a grant to the heirs of his body, to lineal descendants only; a grant to one and his heirs male for ever is a grant to collateral descendants as well. "Why," as the Lord Chancellor pertinently asked, though one may be sure without any jocular suggestion "why should the word male make a difference in a grant? In a grant to a man and his heirs you supply the body and make it a tail." Yet there is a grim humour about some of these discussions and decisions. The King of Spain triumphantly maintained his right before the House of Lords to file a bill in Chancery. "Has not the sovereign power of another country," cried the Chancellor, Lord Lyndhurst, "the common privilege of mankind?" But at the end his counsel proposed to carry this argument to its logical conclusion, and asked for his Majesty's costs. "No," said Lord Lyndhurst, "we will not disparage the dignity of the King of Spain by giving him costs." Another case defined the rights of a Colonial Governor. Basham v. Lumley was an action for false imprisonment and assault. Basham was churchwarden of the parish of St. George in Bermuda, and the governor of the island, Sir William Lumley, called on him to appear and deliver up his accounts. Basham declined, was promptly laid by the heels, and on obtaining his liberty sued Sir William in England. It appeared that Sir William united in himself the offices of Governor, Commander-in-Chief, and Ordinary, but Lord Tenterden told the jury that although as Ordinary Sir William might have authority over a churchwarden, still that was an authority to be exercised according to ecclesiastical forms. Instead of laying hands on Basham like a commander-in-chief, he ought to have communicated him like a bishop. To this versatility Sir William's character had been unequal, and so there was a verdict for the plaintiff for £1,000.

But putting aside the weightier matters of the law,

"whether the tenure of land in Calcutta holden by Pottah was of the nature of freehold"; "whether the appointment of clerk of the peace belongs both in England and Ireland to the Custos Rotulorum as incident to his office and not to the crown"; and "whether or no on account of the interest of the crown in the Duchy of Cornwall, acts which affect the revenues of the Duchy are to be considered as public acts so that an instrument affecting such revenues, though not executed by the parties to an action or their privies, is admissible in evidence."

It is probable that the cases in this volume most interesting to the general reader will be the two slave cases. In the middle of the last century the Attorney and Solicitor-General of the day, Lord Talbot and Mr. Yorke, gave an opinion that a slave coming from the West Indies with his master to Great Britain or Ireland does not thereby become free, and can be compelled to return again to the plantations. Even baptism would not divest his master's property in him, or affect anything but his spiritual condition hereafter. Upon the faith of this opinion domestic slavery flourished in England. There were said to be fourteen thousand slaves in London in 1771, and slaves were openly bought and sold on 'Change. But in that year Lord Mansfield decided Somerset's case and enfranchised them all at a blow. It was an eloquent judgment, but the eloquence of the judge produced almost as much mischief as the bad law of the law officers. The notion of the regeneration which is worked by contact with English soil was carried too far. If he landed on any part actual or legal of the territory of the United Kingdom, a slave's fetters were supposed to fall from him by a legal miracle, like the scales from the eyes of the blind man when he received sight. Thus in Forbes v. Cochran, reported in this volume, some slaves belonging to an Englishman resident in Florida, then a Spanish possession, took refuge on board a British man-of-war. Their master required the captain to surrender them. The captain with irony replied that the master might persuade them to return to the slave gang and the cotton field if he could, but declined to use force to expel the men. Now, outside of territorial waters, the deck of a British man-of-war is as it were a fragment of the Ward of Chepe gone adrift upon the high seas. When the slave-owner sued the captain in trover for his slaves the court took a high tone.

"Slavery," said Mr. Justice Best, "is a local law, and, therefore, if a man wishes to preserve his slaves, let him attach them to him by affection, or make fast the bars of their prison, or rivet well their chains, for the instant they get beyond the limits where slavery is recognised by the local law, they have broken their chains, they have escaped from their prison, and are free."

This was an instance of "Mr Justice Best, his great mind," as the facetious index-maker put it, but it went too far. Judgment might quite well have been given for the defendant on the ground that there was no evidence of his having detained the slaves, or even refused to allow the owner to force them away, and that it was no part of the business of a post captain to do slave-hunting for planters. "In truth, this is no more than a decision of that court respecting the privilege claimed by ships of war of sharing in the rights and immunities of their own country." Subsequently, in the case of The Slave Grace, or as another report contumeliously terms her, "the mongrel woman Grace," Lord Stowell had to determine whether a domestic slave, brought by her mistress to England from the West Indies and taken back again by her, was, or was not, free on her return to Antigua. In him we revere the lawyer if we dislike the man. In a judgment very sarcastic and hostile to Lord Mansfield he pronounced her still a slave. He discussed the history of villenage in England.

"The arguments of counsel in that decisive case of Somerset do not go further than to the extinction of slavery in England as unsuitable to the genius of the country and to the modes of enforcement; they look no further than to the peculiar nature, as it were, of our own soil; the air of our island is too pure for slavery to breathe in. How far this air was useful for the common purposes of respiration during the many centuries in which two systems of villenage maintained their sway in this country history has not recorded."

Somerset's case, in Lord Stowell's judgment, was really a case determining that a slave-owner has in England no procedure by which to assert his claims to interfere with the liberty of the slave.

"The system of slavery in our West India Colonies was perfect in every part, if I may use that expression, meaning thereby that perfection which consists in the adequacy of the means to produce the intended effect. It was a system not to be thrown out of use because it was incapable of being used in the full extent in England. With the laws of the colonies it could be conciliated. That system was completely armed at every point, and though frequently softened, as in the case of domestic slaves, it was in no wise deficient in compelling the obedience of its subjects, whereas in England it was totally impotent, and the law could not borrow those instruments from a foreign land which were necessary to make the system work properly. This may have occasioned one great difference between the two systems. The fact certainly is that it never has happened that the slavery of an African returned from England has been interrupted in the Colonies in consequence of this sort of limited liberation conferred upon him in England. There has been no act nor ceremony of manumission, nor any act whatever that could even formally destroy those various powers of property which the owner possessed over his slave, by the most solemn assurances of law, such as pledging him or selling him for the payment of the owner's debts, or making any other use of him that the law warranted. Such rights could not be extinguished by mere silence, or by this country's declining to act in such a conveyance. There is nothing that marks a liberation from slavery. He goes back to a place where slavery awaits him, and where experience has taught him that slavery is not to be avoided. Slaves have come into this island and passed out of it, in returning to the Colonies, in the same character of slaves, whatever might be the intermediate character which they possessed in England, and this without any interruption or without any doubt belonging to their character in that servile state. They go back with a perfect knowledge of the state which they are to re-enter."

One could hardly find a better illustration than this of the characteristics of English law which Prof. Dicey summarises thus in his Lectures on the Law of the Constitution:

"With us, freedom of the person is not a special privilege, but the outcome of the ordinary law of the land enforced by the Courts. . . . With us individual rights are the basis, not the result, of the law of the constitution. . . . The right to personal liberty, as understood in England, means, in substance, a person's right not to be subjected to imprisonment, arrest, or other physical coercion in any manner that does not admit of legal justification. That anybody should suffer physical restraint is, in England, prima facie illegal, and can be justified on two grounds only, that is to say, either because the prisoner or person suffering restraint is accused of some offence and must be brought before the Courts to stand his trial, or because he has been duly convicted of some offence and must suffer punishment for it. Personal freedom, in this sense, is secured in England by the strict maintenance of the principle that no man can be arrested or imprisoned except in due course of law."

J. A. HAMILTON.

France and the Republic: a Record of Things seen and learned in the French Provinces during the Centennial Year 1889. By W. H. Hurlbert. (Longmans.)

MR. HURLBERT is an American and a republican; yet he says of the republic now existing in France:

"If it were possible, as happily it is impossible, that the American people could be afflicted with a single year of such a republic as that which now exists in France, we would rid ourselves of it, if necessary, by seeking annexation to Canada under the crown of our common ancestors."

Perhaps Mr. Hurlbert's fellow-citizens in the United States might not agree with his choice of a remedy for the evils of republican misrule, but the evils themselves are in the case of France beyond the possibility of doubt. Mr. Hurlbert has very clearly seen and exposed the two weak points of the Third Republic, one in its constitution, and the other in its origin. Its constitution lacks the provisions which have been made by the United States and other republican communities for the independence of the executive power; its origin is not national. The republic has never been founded in France by the deliberate will of the people, nor submitted for approval to the national vote. Proclaimed in Paris by a mob, it exists in the country by virtue of the control which its partisans have acquired of the central machinery of government. Mr. Hurlbert observes with great truth—

"I speak of France as one thing, and of the Republic as another thing. I do not speak of the French Republic; for the Republic as it now exists does not seem to me to be French, and France, as I have found it, is certainly not republican."

What is France then? The best answer to this question is supplied by the friend who told Mr. Hurlbert:

"We should be the most monarchical people in Europe, if we were not the most anarchical." The monarchical character of France is determined by her past history; the anarchy is the result of a purely destructive revolution which proclaimed principles but failed to embody them in political institutions. After a century of such failure, the nation is feeling its way back to the past, without a guiding principle, by a blind effort of instinct. A country mayor gave perhaps unconscious expression to this truth when he said to Mr. Hurlbert—

"We must have a man to vote for before we can make our farmers move. They will not vote for the monarchy as a principle. But give them a man who touches their imaginations, and they will make him a monarch."

Mr. Hurlbert distinguishes two epochs in the history of the Third Republic: the Conservative Republic of M. Thiers and of Marshal MacMahon, and the Republic such as the parliamentary revolutionists have made it. This Republic is condemned, he says, by its irreligious creed to be a government of persecution, and by its machinery to be a government of corruption. Its fate hangs on a parliamentary majority which cannot keep itself in power except by spending money, and the money of the taxpayer is poured out like water for what is known in the United States as "purposes of political irrigation."

"M. Léon Say, a man of wealth and of business, from whom more circumspection might have been expected, lent himself, as minister of the finances, to a grand scheme devised by M. Gambetta in a single night, like Aladdin's Palace, for spending indefinite millions of money upon docks, railways, and ports all over France, wherever there was a seat in the Chamber to be kept or won."

Four milliards and a half of francs, a sum nearly equal to the indemnity of the German war, were voted for these purposes, and have by this time swelled into twelve milliards. The excess of national expenditure over national income during the last ten years is estimated at 280 millions of pounds sterling; the local debts of the French communes for the same period amount to eighty millions sterling.

"Instead of trying to develop France, or letting France develop herself, into a republic, the partisans of a republic have invented successive republics, each more grotesque and uncomfortable than its predecessor, and insisted on cramming France into them. So far, the republics have gone to pieces and France has survived. So intense is her vitality, so tough appears to me to be the old traditional fibre in many parts of the French body politic, that, before the great chapter of the Gesta Dei per Francos can be safely assumed to be finally closed, a good many more milliards will have to be spent on that state establishment of irreligion and disestablishment of God, which the 'true republicans' of the Third Republic call 'laicisation.' Long before those milliards can be raised and spent, the Third Republic will come to the bottom, I believe, if not of the purse, certainly of the patience of the French people."

Mr. Hurlbert's book owes much of its interest to the fact that he went over the French provinces during the summer of 1889, while the general elections were in course of preparation. He saw and had friendly conversation with men of all conditions and sorts—priests, farmers, shopkeepers, journalists, country squires, directors of great factories, archbishops, politicians. He is an old-world traveller, who is interested in men and manners.

"I went nowhere," he says, "without the certainty of meeting persons who could and would put me in the way of seeing what I wanted to see, and learning what I wanted to learn. I took with me everywhere the best books I could find bearing on the true documentary history of the region I was about to see, and I concerned myself in making my memoranda not only with the more or less fugitive aspects of public action and emotion at the present time, but with the past, which has so largely coloured and determined these fugitive aspects."

Mr. Hurlbert's acquaintance with France dates from his youth, and began in the salon of M. de Tocqueville during the early days of the Second Empire. He writes like a man of business and like a man of the world who has been behind the scenes of politics, and his style has the clearness and directness which belong to personal and original knowledge. A shrewd observer of social changes, he shows the transformation which is being wrought in French society by the disastrous war of 1870-71.

"The French Legitimists came forward in all parts of France to the defence of their country. They were thus brought into contact with the people and the people with them. They ceased to be a caste, and began to be citizens. . . . There are at this time more men of the old families of France on the rolls of the army than ever before since 1789."

A great work of moral harmony between the different classes in France began during the campaigns on the Loire, and it is being continued by the operation of the new military laws.

"The calling of men of all ranks and conditions under the colours has necessarily raised the moral and the social level of the rank and file as well as of the officers, and it is quite certain that the army holds a higher place in the estimation of the better classes in France than it used to hold. M. de la Gorce cited to me several instances here, at St. Omer, of young ladies of excellent family—three of them at least considerable heiresses—who have married young officers of merit solely because they were officers of merit, and who have gladly turned their backs on the flutter and glitter of fashionable Paris to share the quiet, unpretending quarters and take a sympathetic interest in the serious military career of their husbands in this rather out-of-the-way garrison town."

Here are symptoms of a great social fact, full of consequence for the future. The youth of France have been at last provided with an object in life.

WILLIAM MARKHEIM.

In the Garden of Dreams—By Louise Chandler Moulton (Boston, U.S.: Roberts Brothers; London: Macmillan).

By all accounts the American Parnassus is easier to climb than the corresponding mountain, sacred to the Muses, in this country. Especially are those cliffs, on this ancient hill frequented by the poets, less rugged in America than in Great Britain, and in consequence they are more populous. In so far as this is due to a more generous appreciation of song among our cousins than with us, who are in truth exceedingly chary of according supremacy either in poetry or in any other department of literature, it is surely a right and proper thing; seeing that the worker in the domain of letters—if he have any worth in him at all—yearns not for fame and from vanity, as outsiders will have it he does, but for appreciation, the appreciation and sympathy of those he holds worthy. To descend from metaphor to plain fact, there are many more verse writers in America recognised by their own public, and capable of large editions, than in England, where it is a by word among publishers that not half a dozen poetic authors can produce a poetry book that will sell.

Mrs. Chandler Moulton stands among the American poets who have long dwelt in the hearts of their countrymen. She has her place by their common consent, as I should judge, pretty well up on the shoulder of this afore-said Parnassus of theirs; and now her new songs must certainly carry her higher up the mountain than ever, beyond the snow line into a region where the air is purer and keener than what the mere minor poet may breathe and live. This I say undoubtingly. I hope and I believe that such a sonnet as this that I am going to quote, with its "larger utterance," its fine phrasing, its calmness and its strength, will not only of itself suffice to absolve me from the charge of extravagance in praise, but will help to set its author in the high place in English estimation which she deserves henceforth to hold.

"RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

"His soul was one with Nature everywhere
Her seer and prophet and interpreter,
He waited in her courts for love of her,
And told the secrets that he gathered there,—
What flight the wild birds dared; why flowers were fair;
The sense of that divine tumultuous stir
When Spring awakes, and all sweet things confer,
And youth and hope and joy are in the air.
"Do the winds miss him, and the fields he knew,
And the far stars that watched him night by night,
Looking from out their steadfast dome of blue
To lead him onward with their tranquil light;
Or do they know what gates he wandered through,
What heavenly glories opened on his sight?"

The present writer once heard Robert Browning quote of his own poetry, with a pleasant characteristic mockery, the adage that "what is not worth saying can be sung"; on which one in company observed that it might be better put that what was unsayable in prose could still be sung in verse. "That is true enough," said the poet; and indeed the adage so amended is the short-hand expression of much that many fine critics have spoken in discrimination of poetry from prose. In reading these many lyrics of the American poetess on many and various subjects, this conversation comes back to me strongly. Lyrical poetry is the only language of the more evanescent yet often the deeper emotions. And for those who have taught themselves no language but the prose of daily material life, Mrs. Chandler Moulton's verse will sometimes seem inchoate, sometimes air-spun, sometimes obscure; but it will be far otherwise for those who have learnt to seek wisdom in the borderland between good and evil, in the contention between things that are and things that might be, in that which a seer has called the "Marriage of Heaven and Hell," and who have ears to hear that particular

"Unexpressive nuptial song."

It will never, I think, to anyone who has ears to hear at all seem unmusical. Indeed Mrs. Moulton has this great and to the present writer indispensable attribute of the true poet, that her voice is a singing voice, her uttered thoughts make music. Mrs. Moulton has joined the band of those poets of our day who have made a renaissance of the methods of old French song, and learnt something of the secret of its long lost melody. Here is a sample of her work in this line:—

"IN FEBRUARY.

"Already the feet of the Winter fly
And the pulse of the Earth begins to leap,
Waking up from her frozen sleep,
And knowing the beautiful Spring is nigh.
"Good Saint Valentine wanders by,
Pausing his festival gay to keep;
Already the feet of the Winter fly,
And the pulse of the Earth begins to leap.
"To life she wakes; and a smile and a sigh—
Language the scoffer holds so cheap—
Thrill her with melody dear and deep.
Spring, with its mating time is nigh;
Already the feet of the Winter fly,
And the pulse of the Earth begins to leap."

This, indeed, is but a tuning of the lyre, but Mrs. Moulton's has strings that thrill to far fuller and higher notes than this, with a music as tender and as true.

OSWALD CRAWFORD.

The Islands of the Aegean. By H. F. Tozer.
(Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

ALL students of the beauties and the curiosities, which make the Levant and its many islands unique in interest to cultivated men will hail the appearance of Mr. Tozer's new volume, wherein he gathers the fruits of much adventure and much learning into a modest compass, and adds to his former studies published in the ACADEMY new matter of no little importance. The northern islands which, as he rightly says, are little visited, are fully described; and we may at least say that with this book and with Mr. Bent's Cyclades, the traveller who undertakes the hardships and uncertainties of a cruise in a sailing boat among these beautiful islands will find himself well provided as regards guide-books. Of course, both of them are far more than guide-books, for Mr. Bent is a hardy excavator, who has added much to our knowledge of the prehistoric condition of these coasts, while Mr. Tozer is a very accomplished scholar, who brings his great and varied learning to bear in the way of myriad illustration. The day is probably not far distant when intelligent men of fortune will use their steam yachts to make this instructive tour, or when men of modest means will combine to do it with a hired steamer. For the delays and doubts of a sailing tour will still deter most people whose time is circumscribed. If, as I suggested long ago, the English School, instead of setting up one more establishment on the model of the excellent and adequate French, German, and American Institutes at Athens, had started their domicile in a good steam yacht, and anchored near the various sites where researches were to be made—if this had been done, our harvest of knowledge from these islands would not have depended upon the occasional enterprise of exceptional individuals.

The few notes I will here add on Mr. Tozer's work are not by way of criticism, but merely by way of suggestion for a new edition. Though Mount Athos is joined to the land by a narrow isthmus, its life and constitution are so perfectly isolated, and it lies in every serious sense so completely among the islands, that an account of it from one who knows it so well might well be transferred from the author's Highlands of Turkey to the present book. No wanderer among the northern islands is likely to pass it by, nay, he would make it one of his most important halts, and he will be disappointed not to find it handled along with Lemnos and Thasos. The latter island is evidently in beauty of landscape most akin to Athos, while the former has this curious analogy to its next neighbour, that while at Athos women have been excluded for centuries, at Lemnos the old Greeks laid the scene of the reverse experiment, and told of a society where the male sex was not tolerated. This female experiment is not recorded to have lasted very long, whereas at Athos, the gens aeterna, in qua nemo nascitur, has been going on for about 800 years.

This curious feature reminds me that in Mr. Tozer's fascinating account of Patmos, while noticing (p. 188) the foundation of the monastery by Christodulus in 1047, he says nothing of the similar order then issued for the total exclusion of women; and so he does not tell us, what I personally should gladly have known, when the female sex again invaded Patmos, and how they failed to do it at Athos. It occurs to me to add to his account of the famous Codex N (p. 190), written in silver letters on purple vellum in the sixth century, that in addition to the scattered pages which he notes, there is one in the library of Trinity College, Dublin, if I am not greatly mistaken. He speaks in the next page of the emblems of the four Evangelists, on the binding of an early codex of the Gospels. I wish he had told us the age of this, which he calls the original binding, as I searched in vain at Athos for any specimen of these emblems older than the eleventh century. In the book of Kells, in Dublin, which we put about A.D. 700, these emblems, very Byzantine in character, though encompassed by magnificent Celtic ornamentation, are to be seen. It would be most interesting to find older specimens in the East, as then we might find some possible origin for the style of the great Irish book in the earlier work of the Eastern Church.

When he speaks (p. 225) of the habit of hanging up the old Rhodian ware at Rhodes and elsewhere by way of ornament, it may be added that certainly up to the last century there existed the habit of building in these, or such like old plates and pots of blue and green ware, into the walls of the Greek churches by way of ornament. The visitor to Athens can see them at the monastery of the Phaenomenon on Salamis; and the little churches in the Athos monasteries have them in numbers—sometimes four plates are set at the points of a Greek cross, worked in the brick in the wall. It is a very quaint form of ornament, and corresponds in the later churches to the habit of building in fragments of classical work and figure reliefs which so strikes the traveller when he first sees the old Metropolitan Church at Athens.

Since his account of Lesbos an excellent monograph on some recently discovered inscriptions of Cichorius has been published, entitled Rom und Mytilene, which corroborates some of his observations. He speaks (p. 133) as if the octopus were a staple of food for the inhabitants of this island only. If he had chanced to live in Athos during Lent, as I did, he would have found it persecuting him at every meal. Indeed, I have seen it fried in strips and served at the table of an Italian steamer in the Adriatic, and in that form quite eatable.

But there is hardly a page of the book which does not suggest something interesting—either novel to those who have not visited the Levant, or corroborative of sister experiences to those who have. Let us hope that the author's energy may not flag, and that he will presently add more to his large and fruitful labours.

J. P. MAHAFFY.

The Life, Times, and Labours of Robert Owen.
By Lloyd Jones. (Sonnenschein.)

THE present publication of a Life of Robert Owen cannot be described as premature. It is now 119 years since Robert Owen was born, and over thirty years since he closed his long and checkered but always honourable career; and yet, hitherto, almost the only record that made any pretension to completeness was the late Mr. William Lucas Sargant's Robert Owen and his Social Philosophy, published in 1860. That was a work possessing a certain amount of merit, but in some ways it was defective and inadequate. Mr. Sargant had not the sympathetic understanding of Robert Owen that is an essential of a good biographer. It was not merely that he differed from Owen's opinions and disapproved of some of his actions, for a biographer is by no means bound to be a disciple. But Mr. Sargant could not put himself in the place of Owen to see things as he saw them, and so appreciate correctly the motives of his conduct. He was much too eager to justify himself, as he fancied, in the eyes of the world, by showing wherein he differed from Robert Owen. Handling what he considered a dangerous subject, he had fears for his own reputation, for he was nothing if not orthodox. At the best his tone was one of patronage. Sargant (good man in his way, no doubt) patronising Robert Owen! He was sadly wanting in a sense of the ludicrous, or he would have seen that the man of diminutive stature, however graceful his form, cannot patronise the giant without the situation becoming absurd. If Mr. Sargant had been more self-forgetful, he would have been more useful. As it was, he failed in his duty as a biographer by trying to pose as a moralist. The world did not need his antidote to what he believed to be Robert Owen's errors.

With Mr. Lloyd Jones the case is altogether different. He has the sympathetic understanding in full measure. Amid many differences, there were points of strong resemblance in his character and that of Robert Owen—notably in their love of their fellow-men, their sanguine temperament, and their faith in others' motives. If this biography is not all that could be wished, it is because it is a sketch rather than an exhaustive study. It was written, originally, as a series of articles for publication in the Co-operative News, and, as such, was a contribution worthy of that excellent journal. If Mr. Lloyd Jones had lived, he might have seen fit to reorganise and amplify the work before allowing it to take book form. Even as it is, we are glad to have it. It will help to make Robert Owen better known and better understood; and it may, let us hope, so stimulate Mr. George Jacob Holyoake or some other competent person, that a full and complete biography will soon be given to the world.

For the student of social life, the co-operative movement of the present century has a peculiar interest, as the first successful attempt from the side of labour to resolve the strained relations between labour and capital. Robert Owen has been named, aptly enough, the "father" of co-operation; but his first great effort to deal with the problem was from the capitalist side. The story of New Lanark is a story which capitalists and employers of labour should study well and take to heart. Robert Owen thought he had demonstrated how society as a whole could be reorganised and perfected; but he misapprehended the nature of his success, and, when he tried to give effect to the idea by forming a free society at New Harmony in the United States he failed signally. He was, in reality, far more autocratic than other employers, for he took upon himself to regulate the personal habits of his workpeople in a way which could be tolerated by them only because the proofs were overwhelming that his supreme desire was for their welfare. He differed from the majority of employers in this—that they were chiefly concerned about the privileges, and he was chiefly concerned about the duties, of the position. He gave practical proof what an employer can do, if he will, to benefit those whom he employs. When it is added that there was a corresponding benefit to the employer's pocket, the lesson will, perhaps, be more willingly learned. In some respects it is as well for the workers that employers as a rule do not know how cheaply their goodwill and devotion can be bought. Less disinterested than Robert Owen, they might take undue advantage. Even from a purely business point of view, the honest and generous policy of Robert Owen proved to be good. On January 1, 1800, Owen took possession of New Lanark; and from that time forward for thirty years, with several rearrangements of partnership, he remained the responsible manager. The first partnership paid to David Dale £60,000 for the establishment. In 1809 it was transferred to the second partnership for £84,000. For the four years next following, the net profit, after paying 5 per cent. on capital, amounted to £160,000, and at the end of this time the estate realised at auction £114,100. Owen was free to spend as he pleased on his workers; yet, notwithstanding this, the amount which went into the pockets of the employers during Owen's thirty years of government averaged £10,000 a year, in addition to interest on their capital. The New Lanark mills never paid such dividends under any other management as they did under that of Robert Owen. If Owen himself did not amass a great fortune, it was because he preferred to spend his gains on others.

Nor is this all. Robert Owen was as scrupulously honest to his customers as he was to his partners and his workpeople. None of those sharp practices, which in the counting-house are considered clever, but which in the home would be very differently named, were ever resorted to by him. He had the same code of morals for business and for private life. It is recorded that whenever he anticipated a change in the market he caused his customers to be informed in order that they might be prepared. No doubt, in this way, many small profits were missed; but the confidence which was thus secured must have had much to do with Owen's commercial success, while the example of perfect integrity could not fail to be an influence for good upon the workers.

"It were good," said Francis Bacon, "that men in their innovations would follow the example of time itself, which, indeed, innovateth greatly, but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived." Robert Owen, in common with most enthusiasts, never rightly understood that progress is by steps and not by leaps and bounds. The hope he clung to all his life was that his dream would be realised promptly. "No human power can now impede its progress," he declared. The disappointment of such a hope was inevitable. But in his case, as in many another, an apparent failure was really no failure at all. The "new moral world" was not brought into existence by his efforts, but they shattered the superstition that the ancient relations between labour and capital were inviolable. It was made manifest that those relations both could and should be altered. Robert Owen's first appeal was to kings and emperors, whose position, he thought, fitted them to perfect his work. Of course they did not heed him. Probably no one but Owen thought they would. Kings and emperors are not consumed with enthusiasm for humanity. His second appeal was to the people, and although they, too, for the most part, turned a deaf ear to him, there were some among them who listened and made his appeal effectual. Movements, some wise and many foolish, were started. "Socialism" was preached. After sundry failures, the sure mode of innovation was found in co-operation. This co-operative movement was no such re-construction of society as Robert Owen aimed at, but was simply the adapting of existing methods to new ends. It was seen that capital could not be dispensed with; but it was also seen that capitalists, if a class, were not yet a caste. Let us be capitalists as well as workers, said the workmen; and the old fable of the bundle of sticks was newly verified. The men clubbed their pence together, opened grocery stores, suffered failure but gained experience, adopted better methods and succeeded, became carriers and factors as well as distributors, until to-day co-operation is commercially a gigantic success and socially a force in the land.

Robert Owen finally severed his connexion with New Lanark in the year 1829, being "driven out," according to Mr. Lloyd Jones, by the intolerable interference of a middle-some partner. That he had serious differences with William Allen which made the later years of his management irksome is certain; but if that had been all and he had desired to remain, he would hardly have yielded without a struggle. He had had troublesome partners before who greatly desired to drive him out, but could not. The truth seems to be that he felt the time had come for a new form of effort. As he himself said:—

"I could do no more for a mere manufacturing population, for manufacturers are not the true foundation of society. . . . Having thus by this experiment ascertained the knowledge of the principles and practice, or the means by which to create wealth and character for all, sufficient to secure the prosperity, progress, and happiness of every person, I had now to consider what was the next measure that I ought to adopt. My individual position was, in all worldly points of view, most enviable; but I saw and strongly felt that society was in error, and therefore in misery. The error, I thought, might be overcome, and the misery removed, if I would sacrifice my station in society, and go forth as a public lecturer to prepare the public mind for so strange a change as I had to propose. This idea, strongly impressed on my mind, forced me to determine to leave New Lanark in the hands of my partners." [The Revolution in Mind and Practice. London, 1850, pp. 17, 18.]

Robert Owen was then fifty-seven years of age; but he had still a long and active life before him, as a preacher of Socialism—a totally different thing from what is called Socialism to-day—and as a sharer in several fresh experiments. Mr. Lloyd Jones, who was one of his co-workers, gives an interesting account of some of these, including the Labour Exchange and the settlement at Tytherley, which latter was killed, it would seem, by overmuch management. Of New Harmony, founded in 1825, he might, with advantage, have told us more.

During his lifetime, Robert Owen made many mistakes in opinions and in policy. He attempted much that could end only in failure. At one period of his life he was the friend of princes and statesmen; afterwards he was an object of popular scorn and calumny. He was denounced for his religious as well as for his social opinions. For religion, as generally understood and practiced, he had little reverence. "Agnostic" would probably be his modern label. In his last years he became a spiritualist. If he had been a boastful man, he might have said, "To do good is my religion." As it was he did good without talking about it. In prosperity and adversity alike his single purpose was to give happiness to others. For this end no sacrifice was too great; indeed, he gave both riches and reputation freely, without even thinking that there was any sacrifice. He was a supremely unconscious doer of good, and Abou Ben Adhem's epitaph is his not less—"one who loves his fellow-men."

WALTER LEWIN.

NEW NOVELS.

Misadventure. By W. E. Norris. In 3 vols. (Spencer Blackett.)

The Quality of Mercy. By Harold Vallings. In 2 vols. (Gardner.)

A Brummagem Baron. By J. A. Bridges. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Eric Rotherham. By Mrs. W. D. Hall. (Digby & Long.)

A Very Strange Family. By F. W. Robinson. (Heinemann.)

The House of the Wolf. By Stanley J. Weyman. (Longmans.)

The Sanctity of Confession. By the Hon. Stephen Coleridge. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

Agnes Surriage. By E. L. Bynner. (Sampson Low.)

The Mynns Mystery. By G. M. Fenn. (Frederick Warne.)

TOWARDS the conclusion of Misadventure, and, indeed, some time before reaching it, we began, we confess, to long for "arf-bricks" to throw at Mr. Norris. He can write admirably when he chooses, and he begins Misadventure as if he did choose. Almost the whole of the first volume is excellent; almost the whole of the second and third very far from excellent, besides being to the last degree improbable. The unfortunate hero, or half-hero, Archie Bligh, is represented as not very learned and not very clever. But we suppose he sometimes read novels. Objections have indeed been brought against that occupation, but it would hardly lie in Mr. Norris's mouth to make them. Now any person who has read novels and who forgets that, when he has a fight on a cliff and the other person tumbles over, there is sure to be an inconvenient seafaring man below taking notes and drawing nasty conclusions, is a person whom it were gross flattery to call a donkey. Further, an Englishman who joins a continental secret society, and is not prepared to break the sixth commandment, is a worse donkey still. One cannot sympathise with such folly as this. Moreover, all the secret society business and the Russian amateur diplomatist of the other sex, and so forth, is terribly stale and unprofitable stuff. Mr. Black, who is Mr. Norris's superior in storytelling if he is his inferior in dialogue, tried it and failed years ago. Mr. Wilkie Collins, who had abilities for the particular task superior to those of both Mr. Norris and Mr. Black, tried it years earlier; and, good as Count Fosco was, the secret society was what dragged him just below supreme goodness. We cannot think of anyone who has tried it and not failed. Without this incubus, and the unpardonable deafness of Archie Bligh to the teachings of fiction, Cicely Bligh and her very objectionable brother Morton, and her ingenuous lover Dare, and her corrupted lover Chetwode, and her stupid lover Archie, and her goose of an aunt, and her invalid but wideawake father, would have made a book of much merit. There is merit as it is, but it perishes by "misadventure"—or by mismanagement.

The Quality of Mercy, though not a first, is a decidedly "young" book; it is also much above the average of young books, or of novels generally, in power. We have read it with more interest than any English novel written by an outsider for some time past; but we are bound to say that it is full of faults, the most important of which touches on a really important point of general criticism. We are not of those who pine for the enlargement of "limits" in English fiction; on the contrary, we hold that those who do so pine either do not know, or fail to appreciate, the Babylonian bondage of enforced impropriety which has been imposed on the luckless French novelist by his so-called liberty. But, if you do deal with forbidden fruit, let it be forbidden fruit scientifically classed and clearly distinguishable. Mr. Vallings, either from lack of art or from lack of pluck, has left the exact extent of his heroine's transgression not merely indistinct, but unintelligible. At one (and more than one) time he uses language which would imply that Francis Fawkes, a wicked married artist of wealth, was not only the lover, but also the amant, of Lilla FitzUrse. Yet, in the central scene between Lilla and the wife whom Fawkes has deserted for her, Miss FitzUrse solemnly protests (and we are evidently intended to believe her) "I am not so utterly bad as you think"; and her conduct is elsewhere described as "bordering closely upon absolute guilt." Now, if this is the case, a great deal of the tragic interest becomes a much ado about nothing; while, if it is not the case, Mr. Vallings has mistold his own story. Another fault is the termagant vulgarity of Rose Chichester, the unlucky little cousin of the hero Geoffrey, who loves him while he loves Lilla. A well-born and well-bred girl of generally amiable temper does not behave and speak like a fishwife with her arms akimbo, simply because she cannot secure a man's affection; that is to say, she may do so in real life as an exception, but exceptions are not for art, save the art of exceptional genius. Nor do we think that a man like Randolph FitzUrse, however "cynical" he might be, however indisposed to accept his cousin's engagement, however fond of his friend Fawkes, and however ignorant that Fawkes was a married man, would play a part unpleasantly like that of Sir Pandarus of Troy crossed with Iago, by deliberately, and as head of the family, inviting the man who is engaged to his cousin to his house for the purpose of getting the said Fawkes (whose attentions had already been more than equivocal) to cut him out. This is not cynicism, it is blackguardism. To which it may be added that the hero apparently makes, or has a chance of making, an income by poetry, and that the whole character of Emily Children, the deserted wife of Fawkes, is extravagant to the last degree. These things, though they mar the interest of the book, do not spoil it completely, and this shows that it has rather more than ordinary appeal in other ways.

It is an unusual thing to find in a single parcel of books two which are out of the common; but Mr. J. A. Bridges' work deserves that description, though in a very different way, as well as Mr. Vallings'. Here, too, the praise cannot be unmixed. Even in the first volume there are longueurs, and a great deal of the second ought to have been ruthlessly "cut." So dog-in-the-mangerish is man that probably no one who thinks himself to be what is generally called a gentleman can read of a person, to whom certainly no one would apply that name, carrying off a very nice girl, who is a lady, without a certain "scunner." Yet the history of "Baron" Barrett—wastrel, farmer's boy, loblolly boy, bookmaker's clerk, bookmaker, successful quack, landowner, and so forth—is told in the crisp and quaint manner, with a decided and, above all, an unusual piquancy. Sometimes the author sins in the direction of cleverness, and sometimes in that of the peculiarly inexcusable attempt at cleverness known as American humour; but the former fault is forgivable, and the latter, though not forgivable, is rare. His observation is shown us when he says: "The fact is, the generality of men—I am not so sure about women—hate anything that is new. They like to get into a groove and stay there." Now this contrast happens to be true, and to have been, as far as we can remember, very seldom drawn before. And there are not a few things of the same kind in A Brummagem Baron. In fact, perhaps one of its least good points as a novel is a tendency to let the active part of the story stand still while the autobiographic baron discourses about himself and about other people and about things in general. But it is good discourse as a rule, and heaven knows we do not get too much of it.

Mrs. Hall's book is amiable and well-intentioned, but profoundly amateurish, and a little silly. The amiability and the good intentions are so unmistakable that we prefer to say as little as possible about the other qualities, and go our way pondering how the same lady managed to be both "Lady Prior," "Lady Edwin Prior," and "Lady Mary."

With Mr. F. W. Robinson we return from such "vain and amateurish" countries, and are in the hands of a tolerably practised storyteller. But we do not think A Very Strange Family one of his happiest efforts. Although the device has often been tried—sometimes by very eminent hands, indeed—the recounting of a story by someone who is not the hero, and who is represented as a person not particularly interesting, is almost always a failure, chiefly from the fact that the narrator is bound by the necessities of his position to adopt a sort of "hope-I-don't-intrude" and "don't-mind-me" air, which becomes exasperating after a time. Edward Wilton plays a kind of Copperfield with less brains and luck to Arthur Darrell, who is a sort of Steerforth with less rascality and more Bohemianism; while Darrell Père is (if such a thing can be imagined) a Mr. Dorrit who has been an actor. His elder son, Lewis, is a more original character than any of these, and a better, but he somehow lacks the last vivifying touch. Still the book lets itself be read; and this is certainly the chief end of, at least, the order of books to which it puts in a claim to belong.

We make our compliments to Mr. Stanley Weyman, who is the first promising scholar of Mr. Louis Stevenson that we have seen. Like Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Weyman gives no very great prominence to his female characters, and, perhaps like him also, he seems to have no great fancy for them. "Kit," the heroine of this book, is thin; and a wicked person, Mme. D'O., is thinner though more promising. Yet again like Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Weyman occasionally wanders away from the plain and straightforward path of the story-teller to indulge in tricks of style or thought. Still, The House of the Wolf is a very good study in a good school. It deals with St. Bartholomew's Day, and thus challenges a kind of comparison with no lesser masters than Mérimée and Dumas; but its scale is, perhaps luckily, much smaller than theirs. The fortunes of Anne de Caylus and his boy brothers as they rode to Paris to warn the lover of their cousin respecting his fate; their outwitting at the hands of a certain terrible Vidame de Béziers; the apparent triumph of this wicked man and his strange access of scornful chivalry towards his rival—are on the whole very well told indeed. We shall be glad (not too soon) to welcome another book from Mr. Weyman.

Mr. Stephen Coleridge is rather a rash person. When you write elaborate passages twice over about "the spirit that loves the prosperous lover, that watches behind the student, &c., and who is called by men Our Lady of Peace," you raise a very parous comparison with a certain Thomas de Quincey who, though about as unequal as Apollo or Mercury makes them, was, when he was writing these passages: scriptor haud paullo melior quam Mr. Coleridge—or, for the matter of that, Mr. Coleridge's reviewer. The whole scheme, indeed, of The Sanctity of Confession is rather dangerously ambitious. It tells how of two Spanish rivals the less favoured one murdered, by a mistake of intention, the sister of his beloved; adroitly threw the blame on his more fortunate competitor, and, securing the secrecy of a priest by confessing to him, allowed the innocent man to be executed. This, if serious tragedy could now be written, would be a good theme for the stage; indeed, we have seen few so good recently; but we are not quite certain that it is good for narrative, especially as Mr. Coleridge, as already hinted, has burdened himself with a very high pitched and, to tell the truth, somewhat high-falutin style of telling it. Not to have wholly failed in so difficult an attempt is, however, something.

Mr. Bynner's story of "the old colonial days" in Marble Head and elsewhere, has considerable freshness of local colour, and a certain originality of character drawing, especially in the heroine—a damsel of low degree who bewitches a handsome Englishman. Whether these merits will outweigh the terrible drawback of American spelling, and the difficulty of rendering the eighteenth century to the life, is a question the answer to which will depend very much on individual taste. But the book is at least out of the groove into which most American novelists have got, and in which they plod laboriously on with the fair vision of Mr. Howells's approval fleeting before them.

A rich old hunk, a charming adopted daughter, a ne'er-do-weel nephew, another ditto, not ne'er-do-weel but wandering in the West, a treacherous "pard," a cinnamon bear, a personation, the stage lawyer, and the stage doctor of the benevolent type, focussed liquors, a disappearance, a re-appearance, a tragedy something of the "Cask of Amontillado" kind, though not quite so ghastly—these are the materials which the practised hand of Mr. George Manville Fenn has whipped up into The Mynna Mystery. We need say no more.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

HISTORICAL BOOKS.

"ENGLISH MEN OF ACTION."—Peterborough. By William Stebbing. (Macmillan.) This account of Lord Peterborough, the most active in personal movements of all the "English men of action," draws a middle course between the partisans who have accepted as gospel truth all the marvellous stories that grew up around him and those who have denied him all merit for his successes. Mr. Stebbing recognises Mordaunt's wonderful daring in designs and the courage with which he pushed his plans, with no less warmth than was felt by Sir Walter Scott, who saw in this fiery peer a modern counterpart to the chief among the knights of the round table. He refuses to follow Colonel Parnell in his attempt to transfer from Peterborough's head to the brow of Prince George of Heese Darmstadt the laurels which were awarded for the capture of Barcelona. But he acknowledges that the Englishman succeeded, by his want of consideration for the feelings of others, and by the profuse use of scorching sarcasm, in raising up all round him a swarm of enemies who united to thwart his designs. Peterborough was, like many another soldier, very difficult to live with, and in this respect he is most at a disadvantage when compared with the calm suavity of his ducal rival in the Low Countries. The Whigs, with whom he first acted, and the Tories, to whom he transferred his claims, alike found him an impossible ally. To unite with him in any course of policy at home was beyond the endurance of his colleagues; and for him to carry out his instructions, when sent abroad on a mission to a foreign potentate whom it was prudent to conciliate, was beyond his own patience. The fiery soul slowly fretted to nothing the enclosing clay; but in sickness, as in health, his two devoted wives—the last was the kindly Anastasia Robinson—remained faithful to their lord, in spite of a thousand vagaries on his part. An incidental point in Peterborough's life is the amount of credibility which can be assigned to the Military Memoirs of Captain Carleton; and in this, too, Mr. Stebbing follows the middle line of believing that some editor put into shape the notes of a veritable soldier. We notice that in discussing this question he does not make any reference to the pages of Hill-Burton in his Reign of Queen Anne.

The King's Book of Sports. A History of the Declarations of King James I. and King Charles I. as to the Use of Lawful Sports on Sundays, with a Reprint of the Declarations, and a Description of the Sports then Popular. By L. A. Govett. (Elliot Stock.) Long as the above title is, it does not more than express the copious contents of this valuable little book. It is not often that we have come across a more thoroughly satisfactory treatise (if we may apply so formal a term to an informal book), and one which combines accurate information with a pleasant and easy style. Mr. Govett has, we think, formed too favourable an opinion of James I., and we cannot concur with him in holding that the king's "errors were on the surface." In fact, he is here scarcely consistent with himself; for he admits that James was steeped in vanity, and that cowardice was a prominent characteristic. The celebrated Declaration (which more men have heard about than read) was issued in 1618, and was the result of a petition presented to him when passing through Lancashire on his way from Scotland in the preceding year. The petition, signed by "servants, labourers, mechanics, and other vulgar persons," alleged that they were debarred from dancing, playing, church-ales—in a word, from all recreations on Sundays after divine service. The king, being himself a pleasure-lover and no Puritan, was ready enough to redress their grievance; and, while declaring what were lawful sports for Sundays and upon what grounds, desired that his judgment should be made known in other parts of the realm beside Lancashire. Charles I. re-issued his father's Declaration or Book of Sports in the ninth year of his reign. But there was an increasing dislike on the part of many of the clergy to its provisions; and, in spite of episcopal apologies and no small amount of persecution, it was often left unread. Like many worthier volumes, it was burnt by the common hangmen in Puritan times; but it arose from its ashes at the Restoration, enjoyed a certain amount of favour in the reign of Queen Anne, and then fell into the obscurity from which Mr. Govett has helped to rescue it. Possibly, it may again attract attention; for the question of Sunday observance is becoming, in some quarters, a burning one, and there was no little sagacity displayed by the British Solomon in his mode of discussing it.

Witch, Warlock and Magician. By W. H. Davenport Adams. (Chatto & Windus.) Mr. Adams must be congratulated on having furnished a valuable contribution towards the "History of Human Error." After an introductory chapter dealing with the progress of alchemy in Europe, the author divides his work into two books—the first dealing with the English magicians, and the second with witches and witchcraft. It is difficult to say which of these two divisions is the more interesting, or which more markedly bears the stamp of careful and conscientious research. Mr. Adams's style and spirit can be alike commended. In a book that deals with demonology, so profound an expert as our James I. naturally takes a prominent place. A very full and impartial narrative (p. 107-123) is given of the divorce between the Earl and Countess of Essex, of the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, and of the trial of Somerset and his wife. Hume, in his account of these proceedings, in order to screen the king, admits the favourite's guilt; but Mr. Adams succeeds in casting doubts on the complicity of Somerset in Overbury's murder, however grave his other crimes. This cause célèbre is given at length, not merely on account of its importance as a state trial, but because it is the last case (in English jurisprudence) in which men and women of rank have been mixed up with the secret practices of the magician. Astrology and politics were in the Stuart reigns often allied, as Dr. Lambe, the adviser of the first Duke of Buckingham, found to his cost, when a London mob stoned him to death (p. 126). What we call "faith-healing," our ancestors called diablerie. There is an instance given of such a cure by Dr. Napper, the parson of Great Lindford, in Bucks (p. 147). It is a disgraceful fact that estates were often endangered by charges of necromancy trumped up against neighbours who happened to be defenceless women. We read of the prosecution of witches through the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. The accession of James I. gave a great impulse to these mock trials. With the Restoration a more sceptical and more merciful spirit began to prevail. Unfortunately, one of the best men of his day—Sir Matthew Hale—was behind the age in this respect. Strange to say, one of the judges who first took pains to prevent convictions for this fictitious offence was Lord Jeffreys. At the very time (1685) he was engaged on the Bloody Assize in butchering his political opponents he managed to procure acquittals of witches (p. 289). This good work was continued by Chief Justice Holt, whose commonsense brushed away the tittle-tattle on which these charges of witchcraft were brought. We had thought that the last execution for witchcraft in England took place at Northampton in 1712; but we learn from Mr. Adams that Mary Hicks and her daughter were executed for witchcraft in 1716. It was not till 1736 that the laws against witchcraft were repealed. As our author does not refer to it, we will quote here the opinion expressed by Wesley in his journal a generation after this wise legislative act:

"It is true likewise that the English in general, and, indeed, most of the men of learning in Europe, have given up all accounts of witches and apparitions as mere old wives' fables. I am sorry for it. The giving up witchcraft is, in effect, giving up the Bible. But I cannot give up, to all the Deists in Great Britain, the existence of witchcraft, till I give up the credit of all history, sacred and profane."

Yorkshire Legends and Traditions. By the Rev. Thomas Parkinson. Second Series. (Elliot Stock.) The editor of this readable volume does not claim to have exercised—nor, indeed, to possess—the critical faculty which might have led him to reject some of the stories which have found their way into his pages. He has thought them, on the whole, worth recording; and, if occasionally their connexion with Yorkshire be not clearly proven, their connexion with any other place would be equally hard to establish. For example, we associate Robin Hood with Sherwood Forest; but it would be hard to show that that popular hero confined his operations within the limits even of Nottinghamshire. Barnsdale Forest had, in Leland's time, the reputation of having been one of his haunts, and in other parts of Yorkshire there are traces of his name—for example, Robin Hood's Bay near Whitby, and Robin Hood's Well near Fountains Abbey. Mr. Parkinson does not make out so good a case for identifying the scene of the legend of Edgar and Elfrida with Harewood in the valley of the Wharfe. He speaks, indeed, of the rival claims of a Hampshire place of the same name (with which we are unacquainted), but ignores those of Harewood in Herefordshire, which are the strongest that have been advanced. The monastic traditions rest, of course, upon a more substantial basis, and the grim stories connected with witchcraft are unfortunately over-true. The latest of those given by Mr. Parkinson belongs to the year 1687; but not in the remote dales only, but even in the great towns, a belief in witchcraft has survived until the present day. It is curious how frequently one comes across much the same traditional origin for the building of two churches in close proximity to each other. Jealousy and spite between members of the same family, or between near neighbours, are generally assigned as the causes; and these operate with equal force in Yorkshire and in East Anglia. Mr. Parkinson cites a wild-cat legend in connexion with Barnborough Church, which disproves itself. He tells us that "once upon a time lived one Percival Cresacre More, a member of a family of great respectability in the neighbourhood," and regards him as the original of the rude effigy of the man at whose feet the lion or wild-cat couchant (which he is said to have slain) reposes. It is almost superfluous to say that double Christian names do not belong to the "once upon a time" period, and that the name of Cresacre was introduced into the More family by the marriage of the great Lord Chancellor's son with the heiress of Barnborough. The cat-a-mountain, which is the crest of the Cresacres, is by no means an uncommon cognisance. Mr. Parkinson's book is well-printed and suitably got up, and contains a good deal of entertaining matter.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Hibbert Lectures of the late Rev. Dr. Edwin Hatch on the Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by Greek Influence of Christianity—which, owing to his long illness and subsequent death, have been so long in the press—will probably be published this month. The editing of the portion of the lectures which remained unprinted at the time of Dr. Hatch's death has been undertaken by the Rev. Dr. Fairbairn, principal of Mansfield College, and Prof. Sanday.

Messrs. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN, & Co., of Boston, announce a complete edition, in ten volumes, of the works of Mr. James Russell Lowell. The prose works fill six volumes, and are thus distributed: Literary Essays (4), Political Essays (1), Literary and Political Addresses (1). These will contain some matter hitherto uncollected. The poems have been carefully revised, and "The Biglow Papers" annotated for the benefit of posterity. An index to the prose, and a table of first lines to the poetry, complete the scheme.

MESSRS. RIVINGTONS will issue shortly the second volume of Mr. H. Morse Stephens's History of the French Revolution, which continues the work from the legislative assembly of 1791.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS have published this week the first volume of their new series, "Heroes of the Nations," which forms a companion series to "The Story of the Nations." So far as we can judge from the announcements, no representative American is included: but for English readers the series could not have begun better than with Nelson: the Naval Supremacy of England, written by Mr. W. Clark Russell, who, by the way, is also engaged upon a Life of Collingwood.

MEANWHILE, two more series are announced. The earliest to appear will be "Heinemann's International Library," edited by Mr. Edmund Gosse. This will consist of translations of standard foreign works, chiefly novels, to be published at intervals of about a month. The first volume, Björnsterne Björnson's In God's Way, translated from the Norse by Elizabeth Carmichael, will be ready early next month. This will be followed by Guy de Maupassant's Pierre and Jean, translated by Clara Bell, and Emil Franzos's The Chief Justice, translated by Miles Corbet.

THE other series is "The National Churches," under the editorship of the Rev. P. H. Ditchfield, which will be published by Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., in about fourteen volumes. The object of this is to lay before English readers continuous histories of the several Churches of Christendom, from their foundation to the present day. The first volume, to appear in October, will be Germany, by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould. Other volumes that have been arranged for are: Russia, by Canon Rawlinson; Spain, by Canon Meyrick; America, by the Bishop of Delaware; Scandinavia, by Dr. Maclear; and Ireland, by the Rev. T. Olden.

THE next volume of the "Cameo Series," to appear very shortly, will be a volume of verse by Dr. Richard Garnett, entitled Iphigenia in Delphi, containing, in addition to the chief poem, some translations from Homer and Theocritus. It will be illustrated with an interesting example of late Greek sculpture.

MR. W. HEINEMANN will issue the following novels during the summer season:—In the Valley, an historical novel, by Mr. Harold Frederick, in three volumes, with illustrations (now appearing in "Scribners' Magazine"); A Marked Man, by Miss Ada Cambridge; and The Dominant Seventh, a Musical Story, by Miss Kate Elizabeth Clark.

Passing Thoughts of a Working Man: a Volume of Essays on Current Subjects, by Mr. Hubert Cloudeley, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. W. H. ALLEN & Co. will publish next week a work on the Health-Springs of Southern Germany, by Dr. F. O. Buckland.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish immediately a cheap edition of Mr. Baring Gould's Yorkshire Oddities, which has been for some years out of print.

MR. CHARLES HANNAN, author of A Swallow's Wing, is writing a series of short tales for the new monthly, Welfare.

IN the coming year the council of the Camden Society propose to issue three volumes:—(1) Visitations of the Collegiate Church of Southwell, edited by Mr. A. F. Leach; (2) The Clarke Papers, Vol. I., edited by Mr. C. H. Firth; (3) The Accounts of Henry, Earl of Derby (afterwards Henry IV.), during his Travels abroad, edited by Miss Lucy Toulmin Smith, with the co-operation of the Historical Society of East and West Prussia. The first of these, relating to visitations of a different character from those given in Dr. Jessopp's book, adds to our knowledge of the condition of a collegiate church in England during the period immediately preceding the Reformation. The second takes us behind the scenes of the Army Council in 1647 and 1648. It contains some new letters and many speeches of Cromwell himself, and altogether does more to throw light on his character than any book published since the appearance of Carlyle's memorable work. The third illustrates the mode in which a wealthy prince travelled in distant regions towards the end of the fourteenth century, and affords valuable material for the biography of an English king before he came to the throne. It is, moreover, a contribution of some importance to the history of chivalry.

THE first general meeting of the newly-formed British Record Society was held at Mr. Athill's chambers at Herald's College, on Wednesday, May 1. Mr. Robert Harrison in the chair. Earl Beauchamp was elected first president of the society, and the Bishop of Oxford, Sir James Hannen, Sir Reginald Hanson, and Mr. E. J. Phelps, vice-presidents; Mr. Athill, Richmond Herald, was appointed hon. treasurer, and Mr. W. P. W. Phillimore hon. secretary and general editor. Proposals made by the Index Society for amalgamation with the British Record Society were fully discussed and approved. The completion of the Signet Index was then referred to; and it was announced that Sir James Hannen had given his permission to print Calendars (so long looked for by antiquaries) to the prerogative wills of Canterbury at Somerset House. The society will print Mr. J. C. C. Smith's new Calendar to the wills from 1383 to 1558, which number between 40,000 and 50,000. This Calendar, which is arranged lexicographically in one index, is now being transcribed, and will be sent to the press, it is hoped, at an early date.

The Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau, by the author of "Charles Lowder," which was noticed in the ACADEMY of May 3, has reached a second edition. It has been improved by the insertion of a plan of the new theatre, and by the official tariff for carriages, as lately fixed by the government.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. INGRAM BYWATER, reader in Greek at Oxford, has completed his edition of the Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle, which will be published in the course of the summer by the Clarendon Press. At the same time we may also expect the text of the Republic of Plato, with introductory essays and critical notes, by Prof. Jowett and Prof. Lewis Campbell; and the second volume of Mr. E. C. Wickham's commentary on Horace, containing the Satires, the Epistles, and the Ars Poetica.

THE second edition of Mr. W. D. Macray's Annals of the Bodleian Library will be published very shortly by the Clarendon Press. The book has been revised and enlarged throughout, and continued to the year 1880. The new edition is illustrated with portraits of Bodley and Richard Rawlinson, and with a facsimile of a water-colour drawing of the interior of the library.

THE Rev. Charles Gore, principal of the Pusey House at Oxford and editor of Luz Mundi, has been appointed Bampton Lecturer for next year.

QUEEN'S COLLEGE, Cambridge, has submitted a statute to the Privy Council, reducing the term of fellowships from seven years to six years, and increasing the maximum dividend from £200 to £250.

CANDIDATES for the regius professorship of divinity at Cambridge, vacant by the appointment of Dr. Westcott to the see of Durham, will be required "to expound openly in the Public Schools for the space of one hour a part of Holy Scripture assigned to them by the electors."

IN reply to a challenge in the Oxford Magazine, Prof. J. S. Blackie has promised to deliver a public lecture at Oxford on Thursday next, May 15, on "The Genius, Character, and History of the Greek Language from 1453 downwards."

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER, Slade professor of fine art at Oxford, will deliver a course of six lectures during next week on "Portrait Painting in Oil," with practical illustrations.

PROF. J. H. MIDDLETON, Slade professor of fine art at Cambridge, announces a course of three lectures on "The Development of Mediaeval Sculpture in Italy."

IN connexion with the Teachers' Training Syndicate, Mr. Arthur Sidgwick will deliver a lecture at Cambridge on Saturday next, May 17, on "Difficulties in Early Stages of Language Teaching."

THE new volume of "Collectanea," to be published immediately by the Oxford Historical Society, will include a series of extracts from the Gentleman's Magazine relating to the university in the eighteenth century, made by Mr. F. Haverfield.

SIR LUDOVIC GRANT—son of the late principal of Edinburgh University—has been nominated by the Crown to the chair of public law, vacant by the death of Prof. Lorimer.

THE Rev. Andrew Clark, of Lincoln College, has issued in pamphlet form (pp. 58) a letter addressed to members of congregation upon "The Cataloguing of MSS. in the Bodleian Library." His attention was called to the question in connexion with his labours on the history of the university for the Oxford Historical Society; and he made use of his position as proctor last year to examine at first hand into the condition of the library. The oriental MSS., charters, rolls, deeds, &c., and State papers, he puts on one side as subjects for specialists; and confines himself solely to the Western MSS., which number about 18,000 volumes. After giving elaborate details about the existing condition of the cataloguing of these, he proceeds to advocate a new system of a summary catalogue on the principle of the "Inventaires Sommaires" of the Bibliothèque Nationale. We can say no more here than that he has treated a burning question with infinite pains, and with equal good taste.

PROF. HENRY SIDGWICK, in an article in the New Review, entitled "A Lecture against Lecturing," protests against the practice of giving academical instruction mainly by means of oral lectures, instead of from printed books. He thus sums up the practical conclusions to which experience has led him:—

"In the teaching of philosophy provision should be regularly made for explaining any important argument, if necessary, three times over; first, in books and printed papers which the student is to read in his own room; secondly, in a supplementary lecture, framed in view of written statements of difficulties received from the students; and, thirdly, if necessary, in subsequent informal conversation.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

BEATA BEATRIX.

"Ella ha perduta la sua Beatrice:
E le parole ch'nom di lei può dire
Hanno virtù di far piangere altrui."
(VITA NUOVA.)

AND was it thine, the light whose radiance shed
Love's halo round the gloom of Dante's brow?
Was thine the hand that touched his hand, and thou
The spirit to his inmost spirit wed?
O gentle, O most pure, what shall be said
In praise of thee to whom Love's minstrels bow?
O heart that held his heart, for ever now
Thou with his glory shalt be garlanded.
Lo, 'mid the twilight of the waning years,
Firenze claims once more our love, our tears:
But thou, triumphant on the throne of song—
By Mary seated in the realm above—
O, give us of that gift than death more strong,
The loving spirit that won Dante's love.

SAMUEL WADDINGTON.

OBITUARY.

EDWIN WAUGH.

By the death of Mr. Edwin Waugh, Lancashire loses the most characteristic of her literary sons. What Barnes did for the Dorsetshire dialect, that and more Waugh did for the Doric of the County Palatine. These two men raised dialect to a higher level than it had previously attained since the death of Robert Burns. Barnes had, perhaps, the more delicate touch of the two, but Waugh was more racy of the soil. Barnes, with all his sympathy, painted his Dorset peasants from the outside, whilst Waugh was a veritable "Lancashire lad," and recorded the experiences and thoughts that made him a type of the race.

He was born at Rochdale on January 29, 1817, and on the father's side came of Northumbrian "statesman" stock, while his mother was a pure-blooded Lancashire witch. To her he owed much of his early training, for his father died when the boy was only nine. Mrs. Waugh bravely fought the battle of poverty for her children; stored their memory with verses from the Bible, and encouraged their intellectual tastes. Edwin could recite several chapters of St. Matthew, and thus on one occasion gained a sixpence, the acquisition of which made a red-letter day in his youthful calendar. The household library consisted of the Bible, the Prayer-book, Culpeper's Herbal, Wesley's Hymns, Baxter's Saint's Rest, a History of England, The Book of Martyrs, and The Pilgrim's Progress. The latter he was especially fond of, reading it many times—as romance, not as theology. His father had been a shoemaker, but Edwin's choice lay between a sea-faring life and the printer's craft. His mother, by strenuous exertions, had given him a longer and a better "schooling" than most of the boys of his class and condition at that time received. With the exception of a runaway attempt to become a sailor, his apprenticeship was not eventful; and at its close he worked at "case" both in London and in his native town, where he had the friendship of most of that remarkable group of working-men who founded the modern co-operative system.

His sympathy with the people made him glad to be assistant-secretary of the Lancashire Public School Association—a body whose labours paved the way for later educational reforms. This brought him to Manchester, where his literary powers were now developing, and he contributed much in prose and verse to the Manchester Weekly Times.

In 1856 appeared a lyric which at once made his name famous. "Come whomeo to this childer an' me" is an idyll that no Lancashire-born man or woman ever hears unmoved. It is a picture of life among the lowly, in which every detail is given with the fidelity and minuteness of Dutch art at its best. The humour is frank, and the appeal to homely affections is alike natural and effective. It caused a renaissance for the literature of his native dialect—a branch of the west-midland which has had occasional literary exponents for several centuries. Waugh was at once accepted as the Lancashire laureate, and a succession of characteristic lyrics was followed by an equally characteristic series of prose sketches. The forty years of Waugh's literary life are represented by about a dozen volumes of a Collected Edition of his writings. In 1874 an unsuccessful attempt was made to obtain from Mr. Disraeli a civil list pension for Waugh; but the memorialists were not very "courteously entertained." Mr. Gladstone showed a keener appreciation, and soon after his accession to power in 1880 Waugh was placed on the pension list. This and the revenue from his copyrights made his latter days easier. After several years of comparative silence, Waugh had a fresh outburst of song, and the "after-math" harvested in the volume of Poems and Songs issued last year contains some excellent work.

It would be difficult to imagine a man more typical than Waugh was of the real Lancashire—Lancashire that has wild moorlands as well as factory towns, and a people whose dogged perseverance and untiring industry is relieved by love of frolic and quaint humour that makes them laugh at their own poverty and treat as a jest that which is really heroic endurance. None understood better the intricacies of Lancashire nature, its strength and weakness, its failings and its virtues, than did Edwin Waugh.

In private life Waugh was a delightful companion, a capital raconteur; keenly interested in literary subjects; ready with apt quotation, supplied by an excellent memory stored with good reading; and loving to flavour his talk with expressive phrases from the folk-speech. He was, perhaps, seen to best advantage either in the drawing-room of some hospitable friend or at one of the gatherings of the Manchester Literary Club, of which he was one of the founders, and where his fellow-members delighted to do him honour.

WILLIAM R. A. AXON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for April appears late, probably owing to the forty pages of lithographs which illustrate the important article of Celestino Pujol "La Epigrafía numismática ibérica." Sr. Pujol prints, arranged according to locality, the legends, with their variants, of all the types of Iberian coins. The student is thus enabled to compare the several characters, with an opportunity of arriving at a determination of the stages of their development, and of their relations to other alphabets. Nothing is advanced as to the interpretation; this previous methodical transcription was greatly needed. We hope that the Academy will soon give a like arrangement and co-ordination of the other and longer inscriptions. F. Codera has a favourable notice of Saussure's "Matériaux pour servir à l'histoire de la Numismatique et de la Metrologie musulmanes." Father Fita prints a Bull of Innocent VIII., 1478, commanding an extradition of all fugitive heretics to the inquisition, incorrectly alluded to by Llorente. With regard to an insinuation by Gams (Kirchengeschichte von Spanien), as to the non-existence of this bull and of other briefs referred to by Llorente, Father Fita remarks that, however faulty the comments and untrustworthy the inferences of Llorente may be, he does not invent or forge his documents and authorities. No opinion on this point can have greater weight than this of the learned Jesuit. We notice that Drs. A. Neubauer and Isidore Loeb have been elected members of the Academy.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for May contains an exegetical study by J. C. Matthes on the origin and consequences of sin according to the Old Testament, and an essay by A. Bruining on the standard of the moral judgment; also reviews of an orthodox work, by J. H. Gunning, on the philosophy of religion from the principles of the faith of the Church, and of a manual for catechizing, by A. Bruining. Dr. Oort notices next works on Semitic literature, including Dalman on the divine name "Adonai," and Budge's Martyrdom and Miracles of St. George of Cappadocia (Oriental Text Series).

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CATALOGUS codicum manu scriptorum, qui in bibliotheca monasterii Mellicensis O. S. B. servantur. Vol. I. Wien: Hölder. 14 M.
DUMONT, A., et J. CHAPLAIN. Les céramiques de la Grèce propre. Fasc. 8. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 30 fr.
FASTENRATH, J. Catalaniische Troubadoure der Gegenwart. Leipzig: Reissner. 8 M.
FERRY, Jules. Le Tonkin et la Mère-Patrie. Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
GAUTHIER, Léon. Portraits du XVII^e siècle. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.
GIRAUD, J. B. Les industries d'art à Lyon. Paris: Baudry. 20 fr.
HEUSE, E. Ueb. die Errechnung d. "Geistes" im Hamlet. Elberfeld: Bader. 1 M.
JOGUET-TISSOT, J. Les armées allemandes sous Paris. Paris: Didier. 7 fr. 50 c.
LANCOKOROWSKI, K. Graf. Städte Pamphyliens u. Pisidiens. Unter Mitwirkg. v. G. Niemann u. E. Petersen hrsg. 1. Bd. Pamphylien. Leipzig: Freytag. 100 M.
LINGG, E. Empirische Untersuchungen zur allgemeinen Staatslehre. Wien: Hölder. 6 M.
MACH, G. Mon musée criminel. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
MARISTON, P. La terre provençale: journal de route. Paris: Lemerre. 3 fr. 50 c.
MATEJKO, J. Polens Könige u. Herscher. Mit histor. Einbegleitg. v. S. Smolka. 1. Lfg. Wien: Perles. 3 M.
MONTÉGUT, E. Dramaturges et romanciers. Paris: Hachette. 3 fr. 50 c.
ROSCHE, W. Umriss zur Naturlehre der Demokratie. Leipzig: Hirzel. 6 M.
TISOT, Ernest. Les évolutions de la critique française. Paris: Didier. 3 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY, ETC.

- AUVRAY, L. Les Registres de Grégoire IX. Fasc. 1. Paris: Thorin. 9 fr. 50 c.
BARBAU, A. La vie militaire sous l'ancien régime: les officiers. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 6 fr.
BRUFFEL, A. v. Kaiser Karl V. u. die römische Curie 1544–1546. 4. Abth. München: Franz. 3 M. 50 Pf.
HEUSLER, A. Rechtsquellen d. Cantons Valais. Basel: Detloff. 8 M.
LAIR, J. Nicolas Fouquet, procureur général, surintendant des finances, ministre d'état de Louis XIV. Paris: Plon. 16 fr.
MIRABEAU, la Comtesse de. Le Prince de Talleyrand, et la maison d'Orléans: Lettres du Roi Louis-Philippe, de Madame Adélaïde et du Prince de Talleyrand. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
RIEG, V. Asiatische Handelscompagnien Friedrichs d. Grossen. Berlin: Heymann. 8 M. 50 Pf.
SATHAS, O. Μνημεία ἑλληνικῆς ἱστορίας. T. IX. Paris: Maisonneuve. 26 fr.
URKUNDBUCH der Stadt Basel. 1. Bd. Hrg. durch R. Wackernagel u. R. Thommen. Basel: Detloff. 24 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BOAS, J. E. V. Lehrbuch der Zoologie. Jena: Fischer. 10 M.
BREIDICH, Th. Sur les propriétés importantes des courants météorologiques. Leipzig: Voas. 1 M. 20 Pf.
FELDRGG, F. Ritter v. Das Gefühl als Fundament der Weltordnung. Wien: Hölder. 5 M.
KIESER, Th. Coleopteren, gesammelt in den J. 1863–1877 auf a. Reise durch Süd-Amerika v. A. Stübel. Berlin: Friedländer. 20 M.

- KÖNIGLICH, R. v. Grundsätze e. theoretischen Spektralanalyse. Halle a.-S.: Schmidt. 15 M.
 LIMPMANN, E. Photometrische Bestimmung der Grössenklassen der Bonner Durchmusterung. Leipzig: Voos. 8 M.
 RENAUD, A. Traité de chimie appliquée à l'industrie. Paris: Baudry. 30 fr.
 SORAUER, P. Atlas der Pflanzenkrankheiten. 4. Folge. Berlin: Parey. 10 M.
 STRAUSS, O. Tabulae quantitatum Besselianarum pro annis 1890 ad 1894 computatae. Leipzig: Voos. 2 M.
 VOIGT, W. Ueb. die innere Reibung der festen Körper, insbesondere der Krystalle. Göttingen: Dieterich. 3 M. 80 Pf.
 WIESEBUND, O. A. Fauna der in der paläarktischen Region lebenden Binnenschnecken. I. Suppl. Berlin: Friedländer. 6 M.
 WOLFF, H. Képos. Die Weltentwicklung, nach monistisch-psycholog. Prinzipien auf Grundlage der exakten Naturforsch. dargestellt. Leipzig: Friedrich. 15 M.
 ZUM 50-jährigen Bestehn der Nicolai-Hauptsternwarte. Beschreibung d. 50-jährigen Refraktors u. d. astrophysikalischen Observatoriums. Leipzig: Voos. 30 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BARHEBRAUS, Greg. Chronicon syriacum. E codd. mss. emendatum ac punctis vocalibus adnotationibus locupletatum. Paris: Maisonneuve. 40 fr.
 CHABANEAU, O. La Prise de Jérusalem, ou la Vengeance du Sauveur. Texte provençal. Paris: Maisonneuve. 8 fr.
 QUATT, Th. Die Sprachschöpfung. Versuch e. Embryologie der menschlichen Sprache. Würzburg: Staber. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 DOUBESJOURN, P. X. Dictionnaire bahna-français. Hongkong 7 fr. 50 c.
 REINSON, L. Die Saho-Sprache. 2. Bd. Wörterbuch der Saho-Sprache. Wien: Hölder. 24 M.
 RIES, J. De Aeneas Tactici commentario Poliorcetico. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE OXFORD INVITATION TO THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

Oxford: May 4, 1890.

I found, to my surprise, upon my return to England, that my Oxford friends had been guilty of what seemed at first sight an act of extreme discourtesy. The next meeting of the International Congress of Orientalists had been announced to take place in London in 1891, in accordance with the statutes of the Congress. Central committees had been formed in London and Paris, presidents and secretaries had been appointed, and delegates nominated for the different countries of Europe, America, and Africa. When all this had been done, on March 18 certain members of this university issued an invitation proposing that the next meeting of the Congress should take place at Oxford (in 1892), the signatories stating that "we understand that the place of assembly of the next Oriental Congress is not yet fixed." The circular looked like an act of intentional disrespect to the eminent scholars who have consented to preside over the Congress of 1891, and has been so interpreted; but the words I have quoted from it show clearly that it was signed under a misunderstanding, and that, in spite of appearances, Oxford has not forgotten its old traditions of courtesy and good manners. The utmost that can be said is that those who were responsible for sending round the circular ought to have acquainted themselves with the account of the arrangements for the next meeting of the Congress which had already been published in the papers.

But the address of the circular is the best proof of its having been signed in the absence of information. It is addressed to the secretary of a small committee whose legal authority has been denied, and which has been termed by the honorary secretary of the Royal Asiatic Society "an irresponsible and non-representative body." But, whatever may be the legal position of this committee and their secretary, they have no power to decide where the International Congress of Orientalists shall meet. Hitherto, the place of meeting has been determined by the majority of the delegates at the last meeting of the Congress immediately preceding. The Congress of 1889, however, broke up somewhat stormily without deciding where or when it should come together again. Such being the case, it was necessary to take the votes of the whole body of Orientalists, so far as was practicable—the result being that, whereas 250 voted for London and 48 for Paris, only 18 voted for Oxford.

Perhaps, as a member of the London committee and, at the same time, a resident in Oxford, I may be allowed to offer a suggestion which may serve to heal the schism with which the Oxford circular has threatened the Orientalist camp. Why should we not follow the precedent of the last Congress, and hold the meeting of 1891 first in London and then in Oxford? The work done in London could be followed by a pleasant scientific picnic within the hospitable walls of Oxford, and the short distance of the two places from one another would obviate the objections occasioned by the long journey from Stockholm to Christiania.

A. H. SAYCE.

Oxford: May 5, 1890.

I have just been roused by a member of the Oriental Congress to a sense of the enormity of the crime committed by some Oxford men, including myself, when we signed an invitation to the Orientalists to hold their Congress among us. I have not got before me the exact text of the paper I signed; but I signed it under the impression that I was doing the right thing, that the Congress was a united and peaceful body, and that the place of their next meeting had not been fixed. I have no doubt that such was also the impression of my co-signatories, including my colleague who drew up the paper for signature. Unfortunately I was not at Oxford at the time, otherwise I might, perhaps, have learned, from some source or other, what I have just had explained to me with great warmth. For now, to my dismay, I find that we have acted most culpably, that we have appealed to a rump, that we have, in effect, given the signal for sedition and disruption within the learned body of Oriental scholars, and that we have even endangered the peace of Europe.

Some of my colleagues ought, perhaps, to have known all this and more; but how was I, a benighted occidental, to know that such learned men were in the habit of looking daggers at one another over their spectacles? How should I have found out that at their last Congress one scholar challenged another to fight a duel? Or how should I have discovered that they are habitually divided into a Gallic and a German camp? Now I am told this, together with a great deal more; and I repent in sackcloth and ashes for having interfered in the slightest degree with the domestic arrangements of this happy family of scholars. So it is with great diffidence that I venture to suggest that, if they could do such a thing as to agree among themselves once more, they might find it possible to visit both London and Oxford. The distance between these two places is not very great; at any rate, it is far shorter than that between the chief centres of the jollifications of the last Congress in Scandinavia. Having friends both in Germany and France, I for one would be sincerely pleased to see peace re-established on this or any other satisfactory basis.

J. RHYS.

"COCKNEY."

Oxford: April 28, 1890.

There are few words in the language about whose origin and history so much has been written as about those of cockney. From the time of Minsheu, with his merry folk-etymology, founded on the Londoner's alleged inquiry, "Doth the cock neigh too?" to the present year, etymologists and etymological quacks (the latter especially) have given forth their con-jectures upon its derivation. The most recent of these is the assertion that the word represents an (imaginary) O.F. coquine, corresponding to an (imaginary) Med. Lat. coquinatus, taken in some such sense as "a vagabond who hangs around the kitchen," or "a child brought up in the kitchen." Notwithstanding that we have been recently assured, on the high authority of Prof. Whitney, that this is "the only solution of cockney phonetically satisfactory," I think I know Somerville Hall girls, perhaps even Extension Students, who would irreverently laugh at it as impossible. Not to speak of the Latin or Old French absurdities involved, but to keep to the familiar ground of English, of which something is admitted to be now known at Yale, it is obvious that M.E. cokenay, cokeney, is a word ending in the diphthong -ay or -ey, riming with day, array, say, in Chaucer and other poets. But everybody knows that the English diphthong -ay had nothing to do phonetically with O.F. -é, which gave in English -é, -ie, and finally -y, as in cité, citte, city. Indeed, nothing can be more certain in phonetics than that cokenay, whatever it might be, could not be an O.F. coquine; and it is much to be regretted that the Century Dictionary, which is sure to be accepted as an authoritative work by many Americans, and, indeed, claims to be "in accordance with the established principles of comparative philology," should thus give an authoritative certificate to error. It would be a desirable thing to cancel the leaf containing it, the more so that this contains under *cockle*¹, *cockle*² (a bogus word having no existence, as was long ago shown by Todd), cock-shut (which is not "a net"), and cock-sure, other serious errors. Popularization of scholars' work is all very well, provided one has scholarship enough to do it. But surely it should be the broadcasting of truth not of error; and if a man does not know what is truth and what is error, it is better not to set up as an authority and "talk tall" like an expert of what is phonetically satisfactory. One can always say "I don't know." Especially important is this in America, where, in the absence of living English usage, the dictionary occupies a place of authority never conceded to it by educated Englishmen. There men swear by the dictionary, its pronunciation, its spelling, its etymology. In England, no great harm is done by the bogus words—two hundred odd—to be found in recent dictionaries, the compilers of which have sequaciously swallowed all the blunders of their predecessors in order to swell their word-list. People only laugh at them, and treat them as comic illustrations of a dry book; but in America people may use them. And when the Century Dictionary assures its buyers that cockle is in English "a young cock, a cockerel," and that it has a cognate verb cockle "to cry like a cock," the fear is that the next poet of the century, freshly inspired by his dictionary, will hear cockles cockling to greet the morn on reeking dung-hills of the Bay State, and cockles a-cocking a drowsy response from the chaparrals of New Mexico.

The history of cockney, as far as it means a person, is very clear and simple. We have the senses (1) "cockered or pet child," "nestle-cock," "mother's darling," "milk-sop," the name being applicable primarily to the child, but continued to the squeamish and effeminate man into which the cockered child grows up. (2) This was applied as a nick-name by country people to the inhabitants of great towns, whom they considered "milk-sops" from their daintier habits and incapacity for rough work. York, London, Perugia, were, according to Horman, all nests of cockneys. (3) By about 1600 the name began to be attached especially to Londoners, as the representatives par excellence of the city milk-sop. One understands the disgust with which a cavalier in 1641 wrote that he was "obliged to quit Oxford at the approach of Essex and Waller with their prodigious number of cockneys."

But before these personal senses there is a small series of other examples of cockney, including the earliest, which have been a serious puzzle. They are (1) in Piers Plowman (A. vii. 272): "And I sigge, bi my soule, I haue no salt Bacon, ne no Cokeneye, be Crist, Colopus to maken." (2) Heywood's Prov. and Epigrams (1867), 36: "Men say he that cometh every day, Shall have a cocknaie, He that cometh now and then, Shall have a fatte hen, But I gat not so much in coming seeld-when, As a good hens fether, or a poore egg-shell." (3) Tournament of Tottenham, l. 227: "At that feet were thei seruyd in a rich aray, Every fyve and fyve had a cokenay." Numerous are the conjectures that have been made on these passages. The majority of inquirers have guessed "something to eat," e.g. a little cock, a lean chicken, a capon; others have proposed a cook, a scullion, a page, a "puer stans ad mensam," a "hanger on about the kitchen." There can be little doubt, I think, that the meaning in Piers Plowman is an egg, a fowl's egg. A collop was, according to Palsgrave, œuf au lard, an egg fried on bacon, a sense abundantly supported by other sixteenth century quotations, as well as by our well-known Collop Monday, the Monday before Shrove Tuesday, on which the orthodox dish in the north is still fried bacon and eggs. Piers, poor fellow, had neither bacon nor "cokenay," and, of course, could have no collop. Equally clear is this sense in Heywood, whose words may be paraphrased: "They say, he that comes every day shall have an egg, He that comes now and then, as the greater stranger, shall have a fat hen, But I, though I came very rarely, and might have expected something still better, Got not so much as a feather of the hen, or even the shell of the egg." In the burlesque Tournament of Tottenham the matter is probably, as Wright thought, satirical or jocular, "every five had a hen's egg among them." These conclusions are confirmed by a curious entry (pointed out by Halliwell) in Florio's Italian Dictionary, viz, in ed. 1598: "Caccherelli, cacklings of hens; also egg, as we say, cockanega"; ed. 1611: "Caccherelli, hens'-cackling; also egges, as we say, cockanega." Here, then, we have evidence that in certain circumstances, probably as a childish or familiar name, eggs were called cockanega. But cockan-eg is only in another dialect the same as coken-ey; for eg was the northern, ey, ay the southern English for ovum; and coken-eg, cocken-ey, cocken-ay, can be nothing but cocks' egg. The genitive plural coken is precisely as in clerken covettise, in P.P. B. IV. 119, and in composition in Clerken-well, Monken-well, Monken-Hadleigh, Frieren-manor, Frieren Barnet, &c. That it is the genitive plural, and not the singular, as we should now make it, is a touch of truth, being the original form, just as in the German hühner-ai, hens' egg (i.e., egg of the race of hens), not egg of a hen. But why did they say cocks' egg, and not hens' egg? That I do not presume to answer, not having been there to ask; perhaps it was in its origin a child's name; children think more of cocks than of hens.

Now, I have no direct evidence to prove that cokenay=cocks' egg=fowl's egg, is the same word as cokenay, a cockered child; but nobody has ever doubted that the words are one (except myself, for at an earlier stage of the enquiry, I had actually intended to put them in the Dictionary as two distinct words, on the ground that as the meaning of the one was unknown to us, except that it was evidently something to eat, we had no ground for identifying it with the known word). And now that we know the original meaning, there is no difficulty—the petted and cockered child was his mother's nest-egg, or as Fuller, little suspecting how near he was to the truth, said, her "nestle-cock."

A curious illustration of all this is to be found in the French word coco, which, according to Littré, is (1) terme de caresse qu'on adresse aux enfants et aux jeunes gens; (2) terme familier de moquerie appliqué aux hommes, et presque toujours ironiquement; (3) terme enfantin; un coco=un œuf. Coco is in short, like cockney, a child's name for an egg, a pet name for a child, a contemptuous name for a man. I do not for a moment connect coco etymologically with cockney (except that it is probably, as Littré says, a diminutive of coq, cock); but it is worth while to point out that it has originated a verb coqueter, "to dandle, cocker, fiddle, pamper, make a wanton or cockney of (a child)," just as cocker and cockle in Tudor-English were to make a cockney or nestle-cock of; and that it gave a Med. Lat. diminutive coconellus, which the Promptorium Parvulorum has as the monastic equivalent of kokenay, and moreover tells us was one of certain words, "derisorie flota et inventa," "flota et derisorie dicta." Moreover, coconellus came into sixteenth century English in the form cocknel, which Peter Levins, of Magdalen College, rendered in Latin, accesa, delicatus, the very words by which Huloet rendered cockney. And rustics knew cocknell, as well as cockney. Quoth the country fellow to the London Prodigal (1605): "A! and well said, cocknell, and Boebell too!" an association with Bow bell, afterwards familiar in the use of cockney.

It is a penalty of growth of knowledge that we lose favourite fictions. But if that picturesque "vagabond who hangs around the kitchen" must, alas! be dismissed, it will be some consolation to our American friends to find that it will be "phonetically satisfactory" and "historically supportable," and not in the least anthropophagous, to have a fresh cockney every morning to breakfast, either in the shell, or in a "collop."

J. A. H. MURRAY.

THE IRISH MSS. AT OHELTENHAM.

University College, Liverpool: April 21, 1890.

When at the Teachers' Conference in Oheltenham the other day, I made use of a spare hour to have a look at some of the Irish MSS. preserved in the late Sir Thomas Phillipps's library. This collection is scarcely known, and has never been properly catalogued. Jubainville (Essai d'un Catalogue de la Littérature Épique de l'Irlande, p. xvi.) has summed up all that is known about it from Hardy's Catalogue of the library. In the short time at my disposal I could of course do but very little; yet I believe even this little will be welcome to Irish scholars.

The first MS. which I examined was a small vellum octavo, numbered 9194. It is curiously bound in a map of the Mississippi. It contains an Irish version of the Life of St. Fechin, beginning: Fer aintech aibhinn almanach, brigh-mur brountseug briatharcert. From a scribe's colophon on fo. 5b we learn that this Life was turned from Latin into Gaelic by Nicholas the Young, son of the Abbot of Cong, and that it was copied in 1329 by one O'Duffy. On fo. 6a this is followed by a homily in Latin and Irish on this Life, beginning: O vos fratres carissimi, audiuimus plura de uir[tu]tibus sancti Fethni abbat[is] et angorite .i. a braithrecha inmuine, &c. The rest of the MS., from fo. 9a, is taken up by a fragment of Irish Annals.

No. 9195 is a small vellum quarto, consisting of two parts. Part i. contains a fragment of Irish Annals; part ii. a copy of the Book of Rights, beginning with the privileges of the King of Cashel. On one of the last folios are some quatrains beginning:

Ochtar is ferr do claind ban doneoch rochin o Adamh.

No. 10297 is a large vellum quarto of 459 pages, written in the fifteenth century, and containing medical treatises.

No. 10279 is a paper quarto containing treatises on Ogam, Grammar, and the Liber Fercertne. Fo. 1 begins: Caidhe log 7 almsear et perea 7 fath airie ind oguin? Fo. 19a: Indse tra, ciallr indse docuiss'n? Nin. a tri .i. ferindsci, banindse, demindse lasin n-Gaoidel, masculinum, femeninum, neutrum lasin Lait-neoir. Ceist: caitte deochuir etorro? Fo. 27b: Incipit do libor Fercertne sunnu. Fo. 36b contains some glosses, e.g., iustitia .i. indracus, utilitas .i. tarbdacht, dualitias .i. cathugud, pietas .i. trocaire, hi'aritas .i. subhachus, dignatus .i. dinete, &c.

No. 8215 is a paper MS. of the last century containing a copy of the poem beginning Eire airinis na riogh.

I take this opportunity of stating that I have lately found the Irish particle didu written out in the well-known Bodleian codex Rawl. B. 512. The usual Middle Irish compendium for this is di, which was variously read by editors as din, dim, dino, until Thurneysen recognised that it represented Old Irish didiu, didu, Z. 713. Yet, as far as I know, the full form has not before been found in a Middle Irish MS. The passages in which it occurs are from a treatise on the Psalter, and run as follows:

Fo. 47a, l. 1: ar it gnima a trócúri dodnuess hi firinne 7 erasins. huair dido is tre trócúiri 7 h'firinne dotagar hi erasiniu. Fo. 47b, l. 1: dicunt ali . . . combat for-oid libair boua nach du hi fl 'flat, flat'. so che[h] air didu atá son ima psalmaib.

KUNO MEYER.

LIVES OF SAINTS FROM THE BOOK OF LISMORE.

London: May 3, 1890.

In preparing the list of Corrigenda given in the ACADEMY for May 3, 1890, p. 304, cols. 2 and 3, the following were accidentally omitted: P. xviii, l. 21, for ó Thoraig read ó thoraib "from (the) multitudes," and compare the Annals of the Four Masters, A.D. 926.

P. xxxvii, l. 35, p. xxxviii, ll. 3, 22, for free clans read nobles.

P. lxxxi, l. 6. Here should come the examples beginning with rocaithed, p. lxxx., and ending with robaistédh 64, p. lxxxi.

P. lxxxiii, col. 1, dele the article braich.

P. 195, l. 22, for sinning read in evil hap.

P. 220, l. 30, for emblem read relic. P. 220, last line, and p. 221, l. 1, for prepareth read presageth.

P. 385, col. 1, to the article staire add is a sister-form of sitre guarantee.

P. 392, col. 1, ll. 2, 3, for "Can . . . pipe" read In Laud 610, fo. 5b. 1, fetal (leg. fethal) is glossed by mind "relic."

P. 392, col. 2, in the article forsaide, for meaning obscure read staidness.

P. 397, col. 2, for "othair, sick" read othair, gen. othair, a sick person (duine othair, 2711, is a phrase like peta sinnaig, 1654).

P. 402, col. 2, for provide . . . food read augur, presage, cognate with tuar omen.

WHITLEY STOKES.

[In Mr. Stokes's letter in the ACADEMY for May 3, 1890, p. 303, col. 3, for tol. read col. P. 304, col. 1, l. 33, for casin read caoin; l. 66, for Brenain read Brenainn.]

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

- SUNDAY, May 11, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Portugal," by Senhor Bataha Reis.
 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Unrecognised Responsibilities," by Miss Helen Dendy.
- MONDAY, May 12, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Sugar, Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa, their Origin, Preparation, and Uses," III., by Mr. Richard Bannister.
 8 p.m. Aristotelian: "The Philosophical Conception of Property," by Prof. J. Brough.
 8 p.m. Library Association: Monthly Meeting.
 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "The Karun River and the Commercial Geography of South-West Persia," by the Hon. George Curzon.
- TUESDAY, May 13, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Arts of Engraving," II., by Mr. Louis Fagan.
 8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "The Military Defence Forces of the Colonies," by Col. John F. Owen.
 8 p.m. Civil Engineers.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Use of Alloys in Art Metal Work," by Prof. W. O. Roberts-Austen.
 8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "A New Instrument for Measuring the Velocity of the Arm or other Limb," by Mr. Francis Galton; "The Ethnographical Basis of Language, with special reference to the Customs and Language of Hunza," by Dr. G. W. Leitner; "The Wiltshire Circles," by Mr. A. L. Lewis.
- WEDNESDAY, May 14, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Prof. E. du Thomson's Electro-Magnetic Induction Experiments," by Dr. J. A. Fleming.
 8 p.m. Gymnædion: "The Development of Music in Wales from a Historical Point of View," with illustrations, by Mr. D. Emylv Evans.
 8 p.m. Geological: "The so-called Upper-Lias Clay of Down Oliffa," by Mr. S. S. Buckman; "Some New Mammals from the Red and Norwich Ores," by Mr. E. T. Newton; "Burrows and Tracks of Invertebrate Animals in Palaeozoic Rocks, and other Markings," by Sir J. W. Dawson; "Contact Alteration at New Galloway," by Miss M. I. Gardiner.
- THURSDAY, May 15, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Flame and Explosives," II., by Prof. Dewar.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Jamaica and its Forthcoming Exhibition," by Mr. O. Washington Eves.
 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "Design Applied to Wood-Carving," III., by Mr. Lewis F. Day.
 8 p.m. Historical: "The Desirability of treating History as a Science of Origins," by Mr. J. S. Stuart Glennie.
 8 p.m. Chemical: "Diethylphosphorus Acid," by Prof. Thorpe and Mr. Barker North; "The Ten Isomeric Dichloronaphthalenes," and "The Action of Chlorine on Naphthalene and Naphthalene Derivatives," by Prof. Armstrong and Mr. W. P. Wynne; "A Third Naphthaquinone," by Prof. Meldola and Mr. Frank Hughes.
- FRIDAY, May 16, 8 p.m. Physical: "Huygens's Gearing in Illustration of Electric Induction," by Lord Rayleigh; "Dr. R. Konig's Researches on the Physical Basis of Music," by Prof. Sylvanus P. Thompson.
 7.30 p.m. Civil Engineers: Students' Meeting.
 8 p.m. Philological: Anniversary Meeting, Address by the President, the Rev. Dr. Richard Morris.
 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Photographic Image," by Prof. R. Meldola.
- SATURDAY, May 17, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Recent Excavations in Greece," II., by Dr. Charles Waldstein.

SCIENCE.

TWO VOLUMES OF FOREIGN THEOLOGY.

Die Geschichte des alttestamentlichen Priestertums. Von Wolf Wilhelm Grafen Baudissin. (Leipzig.)

La Religion dans la Bible. Par C. G. Chavannes. Vol. II. "Le Nouveau Testament." (Leyden.)

THE volume of Prof. Baudissin—he is a count as well as a professor, but I prefer to call him by his nobler title—is less what its name would imply, a history of the priesthood in the Old Testament, than an enquiry into the age of what is known as the Priestly Code, that is to say, the central portion of the Pentateuch. According to a famous theory, supported, among others, by the great names of Kuenen and Wellhausen, this document, called for shortness P., is, in all its essentials, a post-exilic work; and to that theory the majority of authorised critics seem to have given in their adhesion. Nevertheless, various weighty judgments may be quoted in favour of a less extreme view; and among these not the least considerable is that of Prof. Baudissin. His opinions, whatever may be their value, have evidently been formed without the slightest prejudice in favour of orthodox or traditional beliefs; and he writes in a spirit as different as possible from that which animates certain controversialists who are periodically permitted to make English scholarship ridiculous in the pages of the Contemporary Review. His cool and close reasonings move in a sphere far removed from the camels of Major Conder and the cryptogams of Sir William Dawson.

Prof. Baudissin's method is first to give an account of the Hebrew priesthood, its constitution, functions, and privileges, as described in P., and then to pass in review the other books of the Old Testament about whose date and authorship there is less disagreement, with the object of determining what evidence they supply as regards the point at issue, what position their writers occupy in reference to the pretensions of the Levitical legislation. In this part of his work he assumes as established that literary analysis of the Hexateuch which has been presented under its most finished form by Wellhausen and Kuenen, and is almost unanimously accepted by contemporary criticism. To a certain extent also his investigations go to confirm the conclusions of the more advanced school. He holds with them that the monopoly of sacrificial functions by a sacerdotal caste was unknown until a comparatively late date in Hebrew history. He holds with Wellhausen that the caste subsequently formed, and known under the name of Levites, were connected not by descent but by community of functions, and that their alleged ancestor Levi was a purely fictitious personage; but he dissents from Wellhausen's theory that there was in ancient times a real tribe of Levi, having nothing sacerdotal about it, which was subsequently lost and whose name was assumed by the ministry of the altar. He believes that the Zadokides or priests of Jerusalem did not originally claim descent from Aaron, but, on the contrary, regarded him as the ancestor of the priests of the Northern Kingdom, whose worship of oxen is, according to Prof. Baudissin, satirised in the story of the golden calf. He also accepts the prevailing opinion that the Deuteronomistic legislation dates from the reign of Josiah; he admits, unlike Kittel, that its author or compiler ignores any such impassable barrier between Aaronides and other Levites as is assumed by P.; and he concedes to Wellhausen that the Deuteronomistic feasts are of an altogether different, simpler, more rustic type as compared with those prescribed by the Priestly Code. Nevertheless, he holds that the latter is not really the more recent of the two, but was drawn up very nearly in its present form at about the same period, that is under Josiah. The profound discrepancy between the two documents he interprets as geographical rather than historical, P. representing the tradition of the city and the temple, D. the tradition of the country and the high-places. Still, even granting that D. was, as Prof. Baudissin supposes, the work of a country priest, the fact remains that it was promulgated in Jerusalem under the auspices of Hilkiah, who, whether we are to give him the title of "high-priest" or not, was of all men surely the most interested in upholding the exclusive privileges of his order. It seems a rather ineffectual way of dealing with this objection to assume, as our author does, that "Hilkiah may have been far above the narrow-minded tendencies of the corporation at whose head he stood" (p. 231). Nor does it help us much to be told that the centralisation of public worship, however disadvantageous it may have been to the inferior Jerusalemite priests (by exposing them to the intrusive competition of their rural brethren) "could only add to the power and influence of the high priest by extending his authority over all the priests outside Jerusalem" (p. 234). For Prof. Baudissin himself has already suggested—he can scarcely know it as a fact—that the office of ministering at the high places was, at a time when those sanctuaries were tolerated, in the gift of the Zadokides (p. 203), and therefore one must suppose of their chief. Hilkiah must not only have been very liberal but very brave if at one and the same moment he undertook to bully Josiah, to deprive the rural Levites of their living, to renounce a valuable piece of patronage for himself, and to let loose a crowd of hungry competitors on his own immediate subordinates. We can compare him to nobody but the supposed country priest who fabricated Deuteronomy for the sake of denouncing the sanctuaries with which all his own interests and affections must have been intimately bound up.

It has been mentioned that, in the opinion of Prof. Baudissin, the Zadokide priesthood, who during the whole pre-exilic period presided over the temple services, did not at first claim descent from Aaron, but on the contrary would have repudiated such a lineage as only fit for their idolatrous rivals the priests of Bethel. Now as P. embodies a genealogical theory very much the reverse of this, it must necessarily have been drawn up at a period long posterior to the rise of the house of Zadok, and even, we must suppose, considerably after the time when the prophecy contained in 1 Sam. ii. 27-36, on which the whole theory is based, was written. Accordingly, if Wellhausen and Kuenen are justified in assigning a post-Deuteronomistic date to the passage in question, the case against them is ruined. Prof. Baudissin does not even mention Kuenen's arguments, which, however, deserve attention, being partly based on considerations of style (see his Ordersbook, i. p. 377); while his answer to Wellhausen is most unsatisfactory. To urge that there were no priests' offices to give away after the centralisation of public worship in Jerusalem (p. 202) is irrelevant as against the theory that the "offices" referred to were those filled by the ministering Levites; and it seems natural to assume that the great increase of work thrown on the central sanctuary by Josiah's reforms would involve a corresponding multiplication of the posts to be distributed—perhaps even extending to the superior grades of the hierarchy.

Ezekiel is often quoted by the advocates of Graf's theory as one who, although himself a priest, entirely ignores the Levitical law. According to our author, the prophet shows his acquaintance with its provisions by re-enacting some of them under a more stringent and therefore, he argues, a more developed form. But it seems just as likely that the régime eventually established was a compromise between the extreme views of a rather unpractical dreamer and the traditions of pre-exilic times. Ezekiel would scarcely have ventured to remodel ordinances which he and his colleagues regarded as not only of divine origin but also of enormous antiquity; and apart from this, it remains an insurmountable difficulty that he should ignore any hereditary distinction between priests—whether Aaronides or Zadokides—and other Levites.

Prof. Baudissin's principal objection to Graf's theory is that there was not sufficient time for such a development as it assumes between the promulgation of Deuteronomy and the establishment of the Levitical Code after the return from Babylon. Perhaps he underrates the possibilities of elaborating a new system during the period of exile. But, of course, owing to our imperfect acquaintance with Jewish history, there are objections to every possible theory on the subject, and that theory will survive which involves us in the fewest or least formidable difficulties and best accounts for all the facts. Prof. Baudissin cannot, as a rule, be accused of not doing justice to the argument on the other side; but there is one, and a strong one, which I think he has overlooked. This is the general resemblance of tone between the historical portions of P. and of Chronicles. Both indulge in numerical statements of a manifestly fictitious and extravagant character; both are partial to genealogies of not much greater authenticity; and both are animated by the same spirit of fanatical hatred for everything outside the pale of Judaism. If, as Prof. Baudissin supposes, the compiler of our Deuteronomy was also the compiler of the whole Pentateuch, it is remarkable that he should nowhere have betrayed any acquaintance with the historical sections of P., while freely using the document known as J E., or, if Kittel be right, E. alone.

M. Chavannes' volume is the sequel of a work on the religion of the Bible, of which the first part, dealing with the Old Testament, was noticed in the ACADEMY of January 26, 1889. M. Chavannes occupies a standpoint made sufficiently familiar to English readers by Robert Elmore. True religion—the religion of Jesus—is for him the love of God manifested in the love of the believers for one another, and what St. Paul meant by faith is an ideal state making us the children of God through an inward renovation. Such doctrines as the Messiahship of Jesus, the atoning efficacy of his death, and his second coming on the earth to be followed by a retributive dispensation of happiness and misery, he regards as alien ingredients disturbing the pure beauty of the primitive gospel. This idea is in itself not new; but the interest of the work lies rather in the author's attempt to determine the various attitudes of the New Testament writers towards what he assumes to be the sole vital element of their creed. The most striking sections are, in my opinion, those on the Acts of the Apostles and on the Fourth Gospel. His judgment on Acts is very severe. Its religious value is very slight. The work of a Catholic in the bad sense, it enormously over-estimates the importance of external agreement, of a uniform doctrine and discipline. To make believe that such a superficial harmony had prevailed among the founders of Christianity is the writer's object, and to attain it he systematically falsifies the early history of the Church, and softens down the salient oppositions of doctrine at the cost of reducing all doctrine to an innutritious pulp; while, as in a more developed Catholicism, the specious show of peace within the fold has for its reverse side a bitter hatred for all without it. The Fourth Gospel is, contrariwise, a protest against this narrow traditional ecclesiasticism, as also against the materialism, the unintelligence of the Synoptics. "The disciple whom Jesus loved" is neither St. John nor any other eye-witness in the flesh, but the ideal believer who at any time and in any place bears witness to Christ, and comprehends the meaning of his mission in spirit and in truth—nay, more, who by faith becomes identified with Christ, for, according to our author, nothing less than this is implied in the dying Redeemer's bequest of his mother to the beloved disciple. M. Chavannes explains the absence of all concrete and definite teaching from this Gospel by its polemic purpose, by interpreting it as "a defence of the spirituality and personality of religion at an epoch when authoritative and ritualistic tendencies were beginning to manifest themselves" (p. 254). Nevertheless, he holds that its purpose was marred by the admission of a theosophy with which true religion has nothing to do.

Space precludes any further discussion of this little volume, whose interest and originality have, it is hoped, been made sufficiently evident.

ALFRED W. BENN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PERSIAN CATALOGUE OF THE BODLEIAN LIBRARY.

University College of Wales, Aberystwith:
April 19, 1890.

I feel greatly obliged to Mr. E. G. Browne for his kind and appreciative review of the first part of my Bodleian Catalogue (ACADEMY, April 26); and I shall be glad to avail myself of his hints and suggestions for the Addenda at the end of the second part, now in the press.

But in justice to myself I am bound to say that—for the very reasons indicated by the reviewer himself—I never aimed at an absolute completeness of bibliographical references. In fact, I could not do so with regard to Eastern editions, as the Bodleian Library is not well stocked in that department; and it was not always possible for me to have recourse to the exhaustive collection of the British Museum, especially as I had to carry the work through the press while in Aberystwith. Besides, most of the omissions mentioned in the review concern editions issued only two or three years ago; that is to say at the very time of, or even after, the printing of those portions of the Catalogue which deal with Persian poetry and Sûfism. I may state in this connection that the work has been in the press for more than ten years. I regret very much not to have mentioned the important publication of Pelly and Wollaston on Persian passion plays; but this is due to mere oversight, as I know the book well enough and esteem it greatly.

H. ETHÉ.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL JOTTINGS.

THE May number of the Journal of the Anthropological Institute is not particularly rich in original papers. Mr. Sydney Skerretchly—who is engaged in the search for gold in North Borneo, and who when in this country wrote a memoir on the manufacture of gun-flints—describes with much clearness the primitive processes of producing fire in Borneo, dwelling especially on the use of the fire-syringe, an example of which has been sent by him to Dr. Tylor for the Oxford Museum. The native processes are being rapidly superseded by the use of matches. Dr. Rink, of Copenhagen, contributes a paper on the "Origin of the Eskimo," the views in which are opposed by Dr. John Rae. Mr. Beardmore describes the customs of the natives of Mowat in New Guinea, his notes having been procured by Prof. Haddon in reply to Mr. Frazer's published schedule of queries. This number of the Journal also contains the anniversary address delivered last February by Dr. Beddoe, the president of the institute.

THE April number of the Scottish Review (Alexander Gardner) opens with a general view of "The Early Ethnology of the British Isles," by Prof. Rhys, which forms the first instalment of his Rhind lectures delivered at Edinburgh last winter. Apparently all the six lectures are thus to be published quarterly. The professor, who treats the subject almost entirely from the philological point of view, begins by explaining the recognised distinction of Neo-Celtic languages into two groups—the Goidelic and the Brythonic. He then points the same distinction in ancient Gaul, where the Celts proper belong to the Goidelic, and the Belgæ to the Brythonic group. The principle of this classification consists, as is well known, in the transformation of an original Q into Goidelic O and Brythonic P (mac=map=son). Prof. Rhys goes on to show that a similar distinction may be traced in Italy (where the Latins alone belong to the P class), and also in Greece, contrasting the Attic ως with the Ionic ως; while nothing of the sort is to be found in the other branches of the Aryan family. In each case it seems probable that the Q groups represent an earlier race than the P groups. Finally, the author hazards a conjecture that all the several P groups started from a common home in central Europe (say, Switzerland), where the primitive Aryan phonology was modified by some non-Aryan element. In subsequent lectures the non-Aryan element in the population of the British Isles will be discussed.

THE Contemporary for May has an article entitled "The Race Basis of Indian Politics." The author, Mr. H. H. Risley, who has for some years past been engaged on an ethnographic survey of Bengal and Northern India, here prints a summary of his results. He seems to have adopted, in the main, two methods in his investigations: (1) an anthropometrical record of individuals; and (2) an inquiry into the usages, and specially the marriage customs, of certain tribes. From the former, he draws the general conclusion that the so-called "Aryan" element in the population of Northern India regularly diminishes as we proceed from West to East, and also as we descend from the higher to the lower castes. This, of course, is in accordance with what might be expected; the value of Mr. Risley's work is that he has reduced common knowledge to precise scientific data. He then goes on to suggest, from his study of marriage customs, that the traditional origin of lower castes from intermarriages may possibly have more foundation than is generally supposed. Finally—in view of what is known in India as the Congress movement for national representation in the legislative councils—he proposes that the example of recent administrative reforms in Prussia should be followed, by reorganising the panchayat, and giving greater authority to the village headmen. He would thus supply a broad popular basis for rural representation.

THE Open Court, of Chicago—a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science, which deserves to be better known in this country—contains, in its number for April 10, a letter from Canon Isaac Taylor on “The Cradle of the Aryans,” in which he argues against Prof. Max Müller’s view that the original home of the Aryans is to be sought for on the Pamir.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE next volume in the “International Scientific Series,” published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., will be The Colours of Animals, by Mr. E. B. Poulton, illustrated with frontispiece and sixty-six woodcuts. The author’s chief object has been to demonstrate the utility of colour and marking in animals. He holds that in the majority of cases Natural Selection suffices to account for the results, and supports these views by a large amount of experimental evidence, mainly selected from the Lepidoptera.

MESSRS. NEILL & Co., of Edinburgh, have published an Index to the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, from its foundation in 1783. These Transactions now consist of thirty-four volumes, the first of which appeared in 1789, so that they just cover the period of one hundred years. The Index proper consists of: (1) a list of the contents of the volumes in chronological order; (2) a list of the prominent obituary notices; (3) an alphabetical index of authors, with their papers; and (4) an alphabetical index of subjects. The permanent value of the work has been enhanced by prefixing a brief history of the Society, together with illustrative documents, and by appending a list of members, recipients of prizes, &c. The Royal Society of Edinburgh differs from the Royal Society of London in that, by the terms of its charter [Societatem, quae non solum in scientiis mathematicis, physicis, chemiae, medicinae, et historiae naturalis verum etiam in iis quae ad archaeologiam, philologiam, et literaturam spectant, versetur], the promotion of literature is included as well as the promotion of science. The early volumes of the Transactions regularly contain papers “in the literary class,” and Sir Walter Scott was president from 1820 to 1831. But, though candidates may still be proposed as being “well versed in polite literature,” the Society has, as a matter of fact, long been as purely scientific as that of London. It numbers at present close upon 500 fellows, besides 54 honorary fellows, of whom 34 are foreigners. Finally, it is not unworthy of note that the firm of Messrs. Neill and Co., who have been printers to the Society since its foundation, have prepared this handsome volume as a gift to the fellows.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE anniversary meeting of the Philological Society will be held at University College, Gower-street, on Friday next, May 16, at 8 p.m. The retiring president, the Rev. Dr. Richard Morris, will deliver an address; and Mr. Henry Bradley, joint-editor of the New English Dictionary, will be proposed as his successor.

MESSRS. RIVINGTONS have now ready for issue Mr. E. R. Wharton’s long-expected Etyma Latina. Like the companion volume, Etyma Graeca (1882), this is, in the main, an etymological lexicon of the classical language. Taking the sixteen Latin authors of the first rank, from Plautus to Juvenal, Mr. Wharton finds that they use about 3055 words which are not derivatives or compounds. Of these, about 1130 are “inherited” words, having cognates in other “Celtindic” languages; about 930 are “manufactured” words; about 615 are “imported” from Greek or elsewhere; and about 380 are left as of obscure origin. Of the derivations given in his book, the author believes about 360 to be new, including such familiar words as almus, cervix, dirus, elegans, flamma, grex, hospes, ipse, lis, materia, non, officium, pulcher, quantus, ramus, sodalis, testa, vehemens. But besides the etymological lexicon proper, which fills 118 pages, Mr. Wharton has prefixed an Introduction dealing generally with the Ursprache of the “Celtindic” languages, and a Note on “Hidden Quantities in Latin.” He has also appended a second Part, containing a sketch of comparative etymology, based upon the vocalic and consonantal changes which result from a comparison of Latin, &c., with the Ursprache. It will be seen, then, that Etyma Latina is more than an etymological lexicon; it may rather be called a study in comparative philology, illustrated by the word changes of Latin.

THE forthcoming number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record will contain the following articles:—“Oriental Testimonies regarding Khvetic Das” by Dr. O. Casartelli; “The Deluge Tradition and its Remains in Ancient China,” by Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie; “A Buddhist Repertory,” by Prof. C. de Harlez; “Did the Assyrians know the Sexes of the Date-palm,” by Dr. J. Bonavia; “The Campaign of Sargon II. (B.C. 712) against Judea,” by Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

MANCHESTER GOETHE SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, March 26.)

DR. WARD, president, in the chair.—Messrs. Finlayson and Preisinger read papers on “The Life and Work of William Taylor, of Norwich,” one of the first pioneers of modern German literature in England. Mr. Finlayson gave an account of Taylor’s life, which he prefaced by some remarks on Carlyle’s somewhat unfair criticism of Taylor’s Historic Survey of German Poetry (republished in Carlyle’s “Miscellaneous Essays”). William Taylor was born in 1765, at Norwich, then the centre of an intellectual life and a literary activity without its equal in the provinces. In his tenth year he was sent as a boarder to the Rev. B. Barbauld, chiefly known as the husband of Mrs. Barbauld. This learned lady exercised a marked influence on Taylor, both then and when she submitted the MS. translations of her favourite pupil to the Literary Society of Edinburgh. In his fourteenth year Taylor was sent by his father (a well-to-do merchant) on the grand tour—Italy, Switzerland, France—mainly for the advancement of his commercial career; but the lad’s tastes lay rather in the direction of literature than commerce, and it was the language and literature of the countries he visited that attracted his chief attention. In July, 1781, he again went abroad, this time to Germany, where he spent a year in Detmold to acquire the language. Happily, he got into a thoroughly literary circle, and not many months passed before he came under the spell of a language and literature which was at that time not only rousing individual minds into unwonted activity but moving the nation itself. In 1782 Taylor returned home, brimful of enthusiasm for German literature, which was then all but unknown in England, in spite of the fact that the court was essentially German, and that German music, in the person of Handel, was warmly appreciated. From 1791 till his death in 1836, Taylor devoted himself exclusively to literature; and the main aim of his work is thus told by Lucy Aiken five years after his death:—“To what extent he was indebted for his literary stores and for the cast of his thought and style to German models, it is not for one unacquainted with that language to determine; but, whatever may have been his obligations, they were assuredly not unrequited. When his acquaintance with this literature began, there was probably no English translation of any German author which had not been made through the medium of the French; and he is very likely to have been the first Englishman of letters to read Goethe, Wieland, Lessing, and Bürger in the original. He hastened to spread the fame of his new favourites, and from this time translations or imitations—more or less close—from the German formed the bulk of his writings.” Concerning Taylor’s first translation from the German—that of Bürger’s “Lenore,” the same lady gives an interesting anecdote, gathered from the lips of Sir Walter Scott himself as he was relating it to Mrs. Barbauld. After reminding her that long before the ballad was printed she had carried it with her to Edinburgh and read it to Dugald Stewart, “he,” said Scott, “repeated all he could remember of it to me, and this, madam, was what made me a poet. I had several times attempted the more regular kinds of poetry without success, but here was something I thought I could do.” Before long, indeed, Taylor was exercising a quiet but powerful influence on a wide circle, to whom he was known as the first German scholar of his day. Among others (besides Scott), Southey and Coleridge acknowledged their obligations to him. As a translator, he is best known by his renderings of “Lenore,” Lessing’s “Nathan der Weise,” and Goethe’s “Iphigenie.” But he was also one of the most prolific, original, and discriminating contributors to the periodical literature of his day; and his articles on foreign literature gave a character to the Monthly Review and the Monthly Magazine above all their rivals.—Mr. Preisinger then read a paper on “William Taylor as a Translator of German Poetry,” with special reference to his version of Goethe’s “Iphigenie.” The lecturer divided translators into three general classes—(1) those who imitate the material elements of form in the original, such as words, syntax, metre—the close translators; (2) those who imitate the less tangible elements of form, and aim at reproducing the leading qualities and, through them, the general effect of the original—the free translators; (3) those who are content with reproducing the sense of the original, giving it, for the most part, a form of their own—the imitators. As examples of these classes may be named Bayard Taylor’s “Faust” for the first, Cary’s “Dante” for the second, and Pope’s “Iliad” for the third class. Taylor’s work is never close, but usually free translation, sometimes even imitation; but, as an imitator, where Taylor improves upon his original, it is not by expanding but by simplifying and compressing it, sometimes even by rendering it more forcible. His strength lies in dignity and impressiveness rather than in tenderness and grace; hence he is more successful in an ode of Klopstock’s than in Goethe’s lyrics or ballads. After giving examples of these qualities of Taylor’s work in his translations from Klopstock, Lessing, and Bürger, the lecturer discussed more fully Taylor’s version of Goethe’s “Iphigenie,” in which, in spite of the freedom of the rendering, the translator comes very near to the original. Of the qualities of dignity, simplicity, impressiveness, and grace, by which the style of the “Iphigenie” is distinguished, Taylor chiefly succeeds in reproducing the first three. His plain yet noble diction, his impressive rendering of tropes and metaphor, the simplicity of his cast of thought and syntax, correspond closely to the effect of Goethe’s style in the “Iphigenie”; and his bent towards conciseness stands him in good stead in rendering Goethe’s single lines of passionate dialogue, so hard for the translator. On the other hand, Taylor’s desire for the forcible, the direct, the natural, sometimes carries him too far. He is in places stiff and bald where Goethe is full of flowing grace, and he scarcely equals the music of Goethe’s verse; but he rises to the occasion in all important passages, and is seldom unworthy of his model.—The president, in a few brief remarks, expressed his concurrence, in the main points, with the views expressed by the two lecturers on Taylor’s merits as a pioneer and translator of German poetry.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday,
April 26.)

WALTER STRACHAN, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. J. W. Mills gave a summary of Mr. F. G. Fleay's theory of the authorship of "Timon of Athens," which is that the nucleus, the valuable part of the play, is Shakspeare's, and that this was completed for the stage by a second hand (New Shakspeare Society's Transactions, 1874, part 1). If this theory be true, the editors of the Folio showed their reverence for Shakspeare's memory in a whimsically absurd fashion. To reject "Pericles," and yet to take the nucleus of "Timon," with its bursts of splendid poetry, and foist upon it such mountains of veritable rubbish, seems an act of amazing absurdity.—Miss Emma Phipson in "A Few Words on Timon" said that the interest in the play lies almost entirely in the character of Timon. The others do not change or develop, but remain much as we see them at first. There is no reason to believe that Shakspeare sat down deliberately to write a play with a purpose; but doubtless the experience of life and the knowledge of character which he had gained by his close study of human nature led him, perhaps unconsciously, to trace events to causes, especially in his later plays, and to show how inevitably certain conduct leads to a certain result. Shakspeare, by a strong similarity of treatment, shows this in "Lear," "Coriolanus," and "Timon." Timon's predominant quality is vanity. Only a vain man whose self-love had been wounded to the quick could so turn upon those whom he had once professed to love. We may well fancy that Shakspeare drew the character of Timon from some young nobleman of his own time. Timon, with a princely fortune recently inherited, has little sense of justice, and even in his prosperous days gives a hint of the choleric, headstrong temper which he afterwards allows to master him so completely. Why does he turn misanthrope? Why should he hate all men because of the injuries inflicted on him by a few? Is it not because his mind is ill-balanced almost to the verge of insanity? His professed love for mankind is as unreasonable as his professed hate. His philanthropy is as false as his misanthropy. Unjust in his anger, he would revenge himself upon innocent people, upon those he had never known, and he curses all the inhabitants of Athens. He complains bitterly of the loss of his friends, but he had done nothing to deserve a friend, and had evidently failed to win the heart of a single Athenian. He trusted without discretion, and his punishment is that he can never trust again. Mr. Walter Strachan read a paper on "Misanthropy in Timon of Athens," comparing the misanthropy of Timon with that of Apemantus. That of Timon, if irrational, is at least intelligible, for the meanness and lies and base ingratitude of his crowd of parasites was some cause; but for that of Apemantus there is no reason, unless it is to be found in his poverty, the pinch of which was intensified by the knowledge that he was witty and clever, and he may have felt like the hero in Lytton's "Money," a play which contains many suggestions probably derived from "Timon of Athens." Shakspeare chose the theme of misanthropy because it suited his frame of mind at that period of his life, when his conception of man was shaded with a misbelief in human goodness.—Miss E. Maud Williams brought forward "Some Different Readings in the Text of 'Timon of Athens,'" which, as there is no quarto of the play, consists of emendations of various editors.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths read a paper on "The Emblem References in 'Timon of Athens,'" beginning with a short account of the emblem books to which Shakspeare may have been indebted, and then citing the references given in that interesting but too little valued book Shakspeare and the Emblem Writers, by Henry Green, who has facilitated the labours of investigators by the full and varied indexes he has provided for them in his careful and painstaking work.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, April 28.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Mr. P. Daphne read a paper on "Newman's Grammar of Assent." In an examination and criticism of the work, he endeavoured to show that the author's description of "certitude" exceeded the real condition of that state of consciousness by postulating not only conviction (or assent satisfied by investigation and experience), but also actual objective truth or reality in the object of certitude. Also that the assent thus given, though sufficient for all purposes of practice, as we have nothing else to go upon while choice is imperative on each of us, permits and to some extent requires the speculative judgment to be held in suspense, to the extent, at least, of the recognition of the partial and conditioned character of our knowledge.—The paper was followed by a discussion, in which Prof. Romanes, the Rev. P. N. Waggett, and the president took part.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Anniversary Meeting, Tuesday, April 30)

SIR PATRICK COLQUHOUN, president, in the chair. The address of the president having been read, the following were elected officers and council for the ensuing year: President—Sir P. Colquhoun; Vice-Presidents—The Duke of Devonshire, Sir H. O. Rawlinson, Sir C. Nicholson, Sir Collingwood Dickson, Sir O. T. Newton, Mr. J. Haynes, Dr. W. Knighton, Lord Halsbury, the Master of St. John's College, Cambridge, the Duke of Northumberland; Council—P. W. Ames, F. Bennock, J. W. Boney, E. W. Brabrook (secretary), C. H. E. Carmichael (foreign secretary), Baron G. de Worms, W. H. Garrett, T. R. Gill (librarian), Col. J. Hartley, Major A. Heales, E. G. Highton, R. A. D. Lithgow, Major G. A. Raikes, H. J. Reid, Dr. G. A. Tucker, Dr. G. G. Zerffi; Auditors—The Earl of Limerick, J. Henniker Heaton.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

I.

THERE is nothing very sensational or very striking about this year's display at the Royal Academy, and the general impression left by an examination of the paintings and plastic works in the round there brought together is consequently not a very vivid one. Thus even the diligent observer, after a conscientious first examination of the galleries, is apt to pronounce the show a mediocre one, rather beneath than above the usual sufficiently modest level. This would, nevertheless, in our opinion, be a hasty and not altogether a fair judgment. It must be conceded to those who take the lowest view that there is still evident on almost every side a want of concentration, a want of definiteness in the artistic aims sought to be achieved, and an absence of true style, as of authority for good or for evil in technical matters. It is still too patent that the main object to be attained—if the fates be favourable—is to captivate quand même a so-called artistic public, which, affecting a passionate interest in the productions of English art, is still at the best thick-skinned and hard to move. The Old Guard—including, alas! some of the brightest luminaries who have upheld the national flag in former years have very palpably turned the brow of the hill, and are descending with alarming rapidity. On the other hand, it must in fairness be pointed out that the level of technical achievement is slowly but surely rising, and that the walls of the Academy are now but rarely disfigured by such displays of lamentable vulgarity of conception and grotesque insufficiency of execution as have on former occasions brought British art into ridicule. The wave of foreign influence flowing from French centres has not been allowed to submerge the indigenous style so absolutely as it has done the most modern Scandinavian, American, and even German schools; though it is making itself in the most opposite quarters very sensibly felt.

One important feature of the present exhibition is the presence in unusual numbers of works by French-bred American painters, all of whom exhibit the very remarkable facility of their race for dexterous assimilation and imitation, and prove, nevertheless, once again that America, if she has many exceedingly skilful practitioners, has as yet no national art. The name and the manner of Mr. J. S. Sargent are assuredly by this time very familiar to the art-loving public; and not less so the sympathetic style of Mr. Edwin Abbey; but comparatively strange, except to frequenters of the Paris Salon, will be the productions of Mr. Dannat, Mr. George Hitchcock, Mr. Ralph Curtis, Mr. Julian Story, and Mr. John Donoghue. Among foreign contributors less nearly akin to ourselves in blood are M. Emile Wauters, M. Fantin-Latour, and M. E. de Blaas.

Among the absentees we chiefly deplore the failure to contribute of the most popular sculptor of the day, Mr. Alfred Gilbert, of Mr. E. Burne-Jones—an old offender in this way—of Mr. J. W. Waterhouse, and Mr. Frank Bramley.

In virtue of its vast dimensions, and of the laudable ambition which it reveals, priority may be accorded to the "Death of Cleopatra," by the Hon. John Collier (551). He has depicted the form of the crowned enchantress as she lies already dead and rigid on her magnificent funereal couch—one handmaiden writhing in the death-agony on the ground, the other still living, and turning away so that she may hearken to the sound of approaching footsteps. The scene of the final tragedy is a magnificent Egyptian temple with massive columns and incised reliefs painted in the orthodox fashion, showing as its central feature a pair of colossal statues of seated divinities sculptured in black basalt. There is dignity, if not audacity of movement or true tragic force, in the central group; while the careful and pictorially happy rendering of archaeological detail on a large scale is worthy of all praise. But the scheme of colour is too timid and reticent for a work which aspires to be not only dramatic but monumentally decorative; and, moreover, the composition bears in itself intrinsic evidence that it has been laboriously pieced together bit by bit, rather than conceived as a whole, with the true vision of the creative artist. The productions of Sir Frederick Leighton's later time prove more and more that the true inclination of his art is, and ever was, towards sculpture rather than painting. Much as he has achieved in the former direction, considering that sculpture has occupied his later years only, it is evident that a greater technical facility would have crowned his efforts had his serious attention been earlier engaged by this branch of plastic art. All three contributions to this year's display are conceived from the sculptural rather than the pictorial point of view; and at least one of them—the "Bath of Psyche"—if carried out as to its main figure as a statue tinted in the true Greek fashion, would have been exquisitely harmonious. The "Solitude" (166) shows a beautiful white-robed figure—whose draperies suggest the imitation Pheidias remains rather than actual models—seated musing at the margin of a rocky stream or spring. The lines of the virginal form have here a very satisfying and rhythmical harmony. "The Bath of Psyche" (243)—which should still, we think, be styled (as the President did, we believe, originally style it) "Aphrodite"—shows a consummately well-drawn and wholly statuesque divinity in the act of covering her undraped limbs with a white drapery. The scene is a section of a magnificent atrium or hall of the Ionic order, adorned with gilding and with a profusion of coloured marbles—the two main columns of the background being united by a deep violet hanging, which is not brought into harmonious relation with the azure of the sky. Least satisfying—even if we accept Sir F. Leighton's own standpoint—is the "Tragic Poetess" (310), in which elegance of pose and appropriately delicate tinting in a mournful key cannot blind us to the insufficiency of the conception when looked at from its dramatic and human aspect. Mr. Poynter's "On the Temple Steps" (866) is nothing more or less than a half-draped academic study, carefully composed, but vacuous and uninteresting, the effect of which is heightened by its rich and fantastic environment. The same identical academie, minus the drapery, appears on a somewhat smaller scale at the New Gallery under the title of "High Noon." The soaring ambition of Mr. Solomon J. Solomon in his choice of subject renders it necessary to take his "Hippolyta" with the group now under discussion, although he deals with his theme more after the fashion of the glorified art-student than as the serious artist. His Amazonian queen is seen in the ruddy light of sunset, not altogether heart-broken at her defeat in equestrian combat at the hands of a robust and vulgar Theseus. Such attractiveness as the picture has is lent to it by a mode of illumination obviously suggested by the impressionistic essays in monumental decoration of that curious painter, M. Bessard. Since Mr. Jacomb-Hood showed at the Grosvenor Gallery his large "Spring" fantasy—the exact title of which we cannot recall—he has not made any excursion of importance into the realms of imaginative art. To his "Witches' Dance" (1168) cannot be denied a measure of the true imaginative quality. He has seen, with something of the poet's eye as well as the painter's, these weird revels of comely, well-rounded witches—like Goethe's Junge Hexen in the Walpurgis Nacht—who circle in the moonlit glades of a precipitous mountain forest, urged on to greater fury of gyration by a beautiful queen-sorceress standing in their midst, completely nude, and with the frenzied mien of Satanic possession. Objection might be taken to a certain heaviness of movement and over-deliberation of execution, and to a want of complete harmony in the interweaving of the lines of the picture; but its genuine novelty and power of fascination are hardly open to question. Of powerfully suggestive effect are the uncanny black shadows of these circling Maenads of the North, thrown sharply by the moon on the stony, uneven ground. We should like to place in this group—although it is, perhaps, primarily a landscape—Mr. Arthur Lemon's "Conversion of St. Hubert" (470), since he has cleverly renewed, by a piquant and not inappropriate rendering, this well-worn theme. The mise-en-scène is one of those luxuriant green landscapes which delight this painter. In its foreground appears the doughty hunter in a garb of primitive simplicity, dismounted and kneeling in adoration by the side of his horse as he contemplates the mystic stag which fronts him—a crucifix of phosphorescent light between its horns.

Imaginative art is not necessarily based on mythological or romantic legend, or, indeed, dependent on the mere défrôque of classicality or romanticism, as is proved by the absence of this subtle and indefinable element in such excellent work as is often provided by Mr. Alma Tadema and Mr. Pettie. It may, on the other hand, be present even in studies dealing primarily with the animal world; and this is conclusively shown on the present occasion in the contributions to the Academy of Mr. Watts and Mr. J. M. Swan. Let us first take, however, a little gem by the last-mentioned artist, "The Piping Fisher Boy" (465), in which the human element is paramount. Lapping blue waters surround and gently caress a flat rock, on the smooth stones of which a naked fisher boy lies prone-fluting to the fishes who, like the birds of St. Francis, crowd round him and lift their heads in rapture. A certain subtle charm as of a thing done as a labour of love—and not with one eye glancing round the corner at the gros public—emanates from this poetic study. But Mr. Swan must beware of allowing his love of the blue-grey tonality, from which he cannot apparently escape, to degenerate into mannerism. The harmony is on this scale charming; but in the larger performances it lacks just that self-assertive power, from a decorative point of view, which a French painter would have known how to impart to it. A splendidly passionate design is the same painter's "Lioness defending her Cubs" (614), painted, however, in so obscure and smoky a variation of the same key that, in its present position, it is hardly to be made out. Singularly pathetic, and full of that human sympathy which no living English painter has in such overflowing measure as Mr. Watts, is his "Patient Life of Unrequited Toil" (437), a nearly life-size study of a poor, worn-out white horse cropping the herbage on the skirts of a thickset green thicket. Alas! that the execution of this painting should be marked by the characteristic over-anxious hesitancy, and by all those drawbacks of the later years which it is unnecessary here to particularise in detail; though they reappear in the portrait "Hester Fraser Tyler" (196), as in the two contributions to be seen in a neighbouring gallery. Would not Mr. Watts do wisely to rest satisfied with his well-earned laurels and to preserve intact a great reputation of which we are all proud?

Mr. Frank Dicksee must not take it amiss that the consideration of his large and important "Redemption of Tannhäuser" (203) has been postponed to that of some works of seemingly less importance. It presents the ceremonies of sepulture which—much as in the concluding scene of Wagner's work—follow upon the death of St. Elizabeth of Hungary, when failing to find her recreant but still beloved knight among the pilgrims who return from Rome, happily absolved, she fades gently and uncomplainingly into eternity. By the side of the bier—over which prays a bishop, with attendant monks and acolytes, while the knights of the court and the pilgrims mournfully crowd round—kneels the dying Tannhäuser, saved at last by the intercession of the saint, while Venus, the demoniac temptress of the mediæval legend, vanishes wrathfully in a red glow of no uncertain origin. The arrangement of the whole canvas is nothing short of consummate, in the studied and successful harmony of line which it displays in every portion of the composition alike; while the draughtsmanship of the individual figures shows both accuracy and style. The colour scheme, if marked by no happy audacity or strength of general tone, is appropriate and in no sense inharmonious. Yet, with all these elements of a fine work—too rarely found in English painting—we seem to have before us the shell only; for the true dramatic power, which with an invisible thread should bind together the elements of the picture, so as to give it intellectual and emotional as well as mere pictorial unity, is wanting.

To demand absolute vitality or dramatic suggestion in what is avowedly a mere decoration—though one of a high order—would be to look for what such a work need not and cannot well possess, without imperilling its chief aim—that of gladdening and refreshing the eye with brilliant and subtle combinations of line and colour. Mr. Albert Moore in our opinion attains a very high measure of success—assuming this and this only to be his standpoint—in his large and beautiful decoration, "A Summer Night" (487). On a terrace or balcony of rich and altogether fanciful design—made fresh and beautiful by hanging decorations of closely interwoven pansies of a pale yellow tint, and opening out upon a moonlit blue-grey sea—lie the half-draped rosy forms of statue-like women, with blonde rippling tresses loosely bound. Their draperies and those of the couches upon which they recline are steely blue, pale primrose, or a more positive shadow of yellow; subtle connecting touches being provided by vases of green faience and other similar gear. The whole makes an enchanting harmony—or, if you will, symphony—in which nocturnal blue, of every shade, and yellow are the main ingredients—or motives. It is the hand of a master of decoration, who has woven them into cunning and seemingly natural combinations of perfect balance. English-born limners possess undoubtedly many admirable qualities, but this particular subtlety of colour-harmony is not, as a rule, one of them; and no artist of purely British origin has the same mastery over the keyboard of tints and tones as is achieved by Mr. Albert Moore. That such a painter, whatever may be the limitations of his art, should persistently be excluded from the ranks of the Academicians, while that august body contains so many crude, perfunctory, and unspeakably tiresome practitioners, is a riddle the solution of which had, perhaps, better not be attempted.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.

As usual, the strength of this exhibition consists mainly in its landscapes; but it is seldom that the figure-drawings have been so few and poor. This is partly caused by the absence of most of the society's best men, like Mr. Alma Tadema, Mr. Poynter, Mr. Albert Moore, Mr. Henry Wallis, and Mr. Burne Jones; but it is also due to the presence of a good deal of mediocre work, and of not a little for which even that epithet is too flattering—the drawings of Mr. J. D. Watson, for instance, which show a sad falling off indeed. Even of their latest recruits in this branch of art the society have not much reason to be proud this year.

Mr. Wainwright's large and ugly drawing of a girl holding "The Grace Cup" (46), with coarse, red, badly-drawn hands; Mr. Glindoni's common piece of hackneyed humour, called "Artful Cards" (177); and Mr. Bulleid's weak classicisms, are all unworthy of the associations of the room in which they are hung. On the other hand, Mr. Henshall's "Osiris" (19)—an Egyptian harp player—and the fine head by the same artist, called "Sweet Violets" (161), which we like better still, are rich in colour, and painted with masterly skill. And Mr. G. Clausen, if not so fine a colourist as Mr. Henshall, sends two small drawings admirable for their truth and vigour. One of these, the more English and fresh of the two, though patchy in colour, is a study of "A Boy Trimming a Hedge" (125). The other, more French in sentiment, but more perfect in tone and poetical in composition, is also an idyll taken from the life of the same class; but here we have (211) old "Hedgers" returning from their day's work with their backs bent under loads of wood seen against a misty sunset. Of the older members, the most striking drawing which is not a landscape is Mr. Frederick Shields's "Facilis est Descensus Avernus" (69). This is, we believe, the first time that Mr. Shields has attempted the nude figure, and he is to be congratulated on the success with which he has treated the beautiful falling body of the witch surrounded with her golden hair. Scarcely less successful is that of her human pursuer, who rushes blindly over the cliff, scattering blood-red poppies with his eager feet. It is seldom that we see an allegory so vividly conceived and fully realised. The impetuosity of the pursuit, the imminence of the catastrophe, are finely balanced by the steady row of reapers in the distant field. The colour is also fine and appropriate, with its flame-like golds and reds.

Mr. Alfred Hunt sends but one landscape, a small view of Windsor (212), full of sweet and delicate colour—too delicate, indeed, for its surroundings. Mr. Albert Goodwin has a few brilliant little foreign drawings of Zermatt and Lucerne, and Monte Carlo; and he gives play to his imagination both as to form and colour in a scene from his favourite "Sindbad"; but, on the whole, we prefer his English scenes; and a comparatively quiet drawing of Sandwich (132) is certainly not the least to be admired of his contributions this year. Mr. Herbert Marshall has, we presume, been too busy with his drawings now exhibiting at the Fine Art Society to send so many as usual to Pall Mall; and Mr. North sends but two small ones. But these, and Mr. Boyce's one small drawing, and Mrs. Allingham's sweet pictures of lane and cottage, will afford no less pleasure than usual to their many admirers. Mrs. Allingham's "Buss's Corner" (209) is, indeed, of exceptional sweetness, even for her.

It is always difficult in the exhibitions of this society to pick out any drawings as especially notable—the accomplishment of the different artists is so well known, their level so generally even; and we must pass over a great many pleasant drawings by Messrs. Marks, Marsh, Rigby, Eyre Walker, Birket Foster, Beavis, E. A. Goodall, C. Robertson, Brewtall, Arthur Hopkins, Tom Lloyd, C. B. Phillip, and others. Perhaps if anyone has this year excelled his former self, it is Mr. Thorne Waite, with his drawing of "The Blue Waggon" (59). Perhaps also it may be said of Mr. Robert Allan that his drawings, especially "The Vintage in Medoc" (167), surpass in force, if not in subtlety, those he has exhibited before. If he could only learn how to unite both, and avoid the stare of his white caps and blue shadows! The drawing by Mr. Arthur Melville would not be better, but it would be of greater promise, if it were not for its date, which is some years old. Has he done anything better since? Could either of these artists attain the combined strength and delicacy of Mr. Alfred Fripp's "Durdle Door" (90), or would they care to do so if they could. The old conventions are going; new forces are thrusting them out, doomed also in time to settle into conventions too. Will they be nobler or better conventions than those of the "old school," still represented here in the masterly work of the Fripps, Mr. Callow, Mr. Naftel, Sir John Gilbert, and others who have given us an annual treat for so many years? The new conventions may be more vigorous, more vivid; but will they be so modest, so subtle, so restful, so sweetly tuned? The "laudator temporis acti" will, doubtless, say "No"; but the younger men will be able to point in triumph to the bold, bright drawings of the new school, and ask if they do not make "holes in the wall." The appeal would be more successful if they were all so masterly as Mr. Henry Moore's "Off the Cornish Coast" (120).

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

EXCAVATIONS AT PLATEA.

King's College, Cambridge: April 25, 1890.

I finished my excavating work at Platea in the second half of last month. The members of the American School at Athens who assisted me in my work there were Mr. Hunt, Messrs. Washington, Mr. Shelley, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Gray.

Our first object was to make an accurate map of the ancient city of Platea, so far as it is now visible. The site has been thoroughly surveyed; the walls, which are over two and a half miles in circumference, have been measured; and we may hope by the publication of our results to give a final account of what is now to be seen, which will be at the service of all students, whether archaeological, literary, or historical.

A careful paper on the topography of the battlefield of Platea has been prepared by Mr. Hunt, and will be illustrated by a new map drawn by Messrs. Hunt and Hale. I also carried on excavations at several points within and without the city walls; but I have not as yet succeeded in discovering one of the three important temples (Athena, Hera, Demeter).

In the course of our excavations we came upon some interesting inscriptions, the most important of which is a large slab containing a portion of the famous Edict of Diocletian "De Pretiis Rerum Venalium." You may remember that last year I found at Platea fifty-four lines of the Latin preamble to this Edict. About half a mile from the spot where this was discovered last year we now found another slab of about the same dimensions, and in the same form, of the body of this edict in the Greek text; and it appears to be likely that the preamble was given in Latin originally, whereas for the use of the people the text itself was published in Greek. The portion of the price list contained in this tablet is the one dealing with textiles. A part of it is published and known from other fragments, but there are interesting variations even in this part. A column and a half of prices here given has hitherto been unknown, and supplies the beginning of the eighteenth chapter in Waddington's edition hitherto wanting. Another inscription records dedications on the part of women to a goddess, probably Artemis or Demeter, and contains a large number of interesting feminine names.

I intend to complete my excavations at Platea next session.

CHAS. WALDSTEIN.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

SIR HENRY AUSTEN LAYARD has been appointed secretary for foreign correspondence at the Royal Academy, in the room of Robert Browning.

MESSRS. ARTHUR TOOTH & SONS will have on view next week, at their gallery in the Haymarket, a new work by Rosa Bonheur, entitled "Scotch Sires."

THE picture gallery at the Crystal Palace was to be reopened at the end of this week with a new collection of paintings, among which prizes have been distributed on the award of Messrs. J. B. Burgess, E. Long, and H. Moore.

MR. G. BERTIN will deliver a course of four lectures during June at the British Museum upon "The Manners and Customs of the Babylonians," as illustrated by the cuneiform documents in the Museum.

ON Thursday of this week Messrs. Sotheby was to sell the interesting collection of coins antiquities, &c., formed by the late Walter K. Myers during his visits to Italy, Egypt, and the East, in several of which he had Prof. Sayce for a travelling companion. On the two following days they will sell a very large number of medals and military decorations belonging to different collections.

MESSRS. A. HÖLDER, of Vienna, will shortly publish a new number of Prof. O. Benndorf's Wiener Vorlegeblätter für Archäologische Übungen, containing a continuation of the historical series of paintings on Greek vases with the painter's signatures, and a large collection of illustrations of the two lost epics, the Oidipodeia and the Thebaïs.

THE opening of the great exhibitions has brought with it more than the usual number of illustrated accompaniments. For the system originally started by Mr. Henry Blackburn has so taken the popular taste, and has been so accepted by the painters themselves, that the Art Journal and the Magazine of Art for May both devote a great portion of their space to reproductions of pictures which the public was supposed not to have yet seen at the actual date of publication. This year, too, "Royal Academy Pictures, 1890," forming a sort of supplement to the Magazine of Art, is subdivided into three parts, which are all to appear during May. The large size of the page, and the uniform method of reproduction, undoubtedly gives a permanent value to this work. Mr. Henry Blackburn's Academy Notes, to be followed by Grosvenor Notes and New Gallery Notes, maintains its utility as an illustrated catalogue and guide to the lazy visitor. The English edition of the Illustrated Catalogue of the Salon (Chatto and Windus) is in many respects the most interesting of all, despite the frequent mistranslations of the titles of the works. We may also notice here Mr. Harry Furniss's latest jeu d'esprit—for we decline to accept it seriously—Royal Academy Antics (Cassell). The humour of the cuts half-atones for a good deal of unnecessary ill-nature in the letter-press—which seems particularly inappropriate in a year when the Academicians have allowed outsiders to have the best of the show to themselves.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

The summer season opened at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last, when Sir A. Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was performed. Mrs. Hutchinson sang well, although she found the soprano music trying. Mr. H. Piercy was effective in the part of Prince Henry. The other vocalists were Miss Marian McKenzie and Mr. Watkin Mills, who did themselves credit. The Crystal Palace choir, under Mr. Mann's able direction, was, on the whole, good. The long-continued popularity of this Cantata is not difficult to explain—words and music fit like a glove, as the saying is.

The Hackney Choral Association gave their final concert at Shoreditch Town Hall on Monday evening. Mr. Prout's Dramatic Cantata "The Red Cross Knight," written specially for the Huddersfield Choral Society, and produced in that town in 1887, was the work selected. The choristers, who have important and effective music, sang with much enthusiasm, and excited the same feeling among the audience. The vocalists were Miss Z. Monteith, Mme. O. Morgan, and Messrs. Gawthrop, Pierpoint, and Brereton, who sang with artistic taste. The composer conducted, and was well received.

A concert of Welsh music was given at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening, at which a short Dramatic Cantata, entitled "Nebuchadnezzar," by Dr. Joseph Parry, principal of the Musical College at Swansea, was performed. Ten years ago this composer's Oratorio "Emmanuel" was heard in London, and the music, though Handel-like in character, displayed considerable ability. In the new work we find the influence of the Saxon master less strong; and, indeed, there are many touches which seem to show that Dr. Parry is in sympathy with modern art. There are some effective pages in his Cantata, and everywhere an earnest effort is to be noted. In spite of this, the music does not make a strong impression, because the composer has not strong ideas. He has, however, a feeling for contrast and a certain dramatic conception of his subject. The vocalists were Mrs. M. Davies, Messrs. H. Jones and L. Williams, who, with the United Welsh Choir, did their best to make the work acceptable. Dr. Parry, who conducted, was received with enthusiasm. The programme also included "Gwen," a Cantata, by the composer's son, Mr. Haydn Parry. The closing scene of Part 4, and the Lament in Part 5, give signs of promise; but the rest of the work, with its familiar progressions, ordinary ballads, and simple accompaniments, if creditable to a young composer, was not of sufficient interest to present to a London audience. Mr. Haydn Parry would do well to imitate his father in the matter of brevity; the mighty king of Babylon occupied attention for less time than the gentle though somewhat insipid water-fairy Gwen.

Mr. Franz Rummel gave the first of two pianoforte recitals on Wednesday afternoon at the Steinway Hall. This pianist has often proved himself a clever and intelligent interpreter of the great masters. He played Bach's chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata (op. 110), and Schumann's Fantasia (op. 17). In the last-named work the effect would have been pleasanter had the pianist moderated his tone in the loud passages.

Mr. Henschel brought his short series of orchestral concerts to a successful close on Wednesday. The programme included Beethoven's rarely-heard First Symphony, and the "Peer Gynt" Suite. Mrs. Henschel was the vocalist, and a graceful May-Song by A. Hervey was encored.

J. S. SHEDLOCK

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

FROM Edwin Ashdown we have received:

Deux Etudes, pour Piano, par M. Moody. From a technical point of view, both of these studies are useful, but the music has no distinctive character. The first, indeed, though vaguely, reminds one of Henselt.

Entends ma Prière, Rhapsodie pour Piano, F. Spindler, is a quiet, melodious piece, neither deep nor difficult.

Chant des Sirènes. Mélodie par Boyton Smith. A flowing Balfe-like theme, varied in a simple and somewhat obsolete fashion.

Mazurka-Caprice, by A. O. Faull, is a pianoforte piece, loose in construction, and, like the last named, written in a style which recalls the past.

First Gavotte. By G. W. F. Crowther. The composer has pleasing themes, both for his Gavotte and his Trio; but he is weak in development, and his writing for the instrument does not show a practised hand.

Fête Napolitaine. Tarentelle pour Piano, par Margaret Gyde, is lively, but not striking. This lady appears to better advantage in a tuneful, lucid song, entitled "The Sunlight Plays on the Golden Sheaves."

The Easiest Pieces. By S. Jadassohn. Op. 99. This composer, whose works are numerous and varied, is, perhaps, best known in England by his light and taking pieces in canon form. In the duets now under notice, he has written the treble all within the compass of five notes for the pupil. The teacher's bass is fairly elaborate. Thus the pupil learns time, while his musical interest is aroused by effective harmonies and figures, in which he is taking an active, if unequal, part. Teachers will find these duets most serviceable.

Parallel-Studien. By Louis Köhler. (Op. 160). This composer is noted as a teacher, and his educational works are thought highly of in Germany. The present set of studies are in use at the Conservatorium and Neue Akademie der Musik of Berlin. They are entitled "parallel" because they are similar in character to certain Cramer studies, and are intended to be practised at the same time.

From Weekes & Co.:

Exercises on the Elements of Music. By J. Norman. The chapters of this little manual are made to correspond with Davenport's Elements of Music so that students preparing for the local examinations of the Royal Academy or Royal College of Music will find it of service. Mr. Davenport himself—to whom the work is dedicated—speaks of the exercises as "excellent."

Lullabye, by Samuel Weekes, is an expressive song. In the accompaniment there are some well-chosen and effective harmonies.

Break, Break, Break. Song by A. Ray. Lord Tennyson's well-known lines are set to somewhat ordinary music. The accompaniment of the opening and closing sections is monotonous, and that of the middle one, if light, is artless.

Golden Stars across the Heavens, by P. V. Sharman, is a simple but thoughtful little song. Heine's words are well translated by Miss Alma Strettel.

A Tune with Pleasant Words. Song. By Charles Gardner. The tune is also pleasant, if not particularly original.

Festal March in F, by Langdon Colbourne, is a bright and well-written pianoforte piece; but the Coda, if the ad lib. octaves are played, is not over easy.

Etude-Tarentelle. Pour Piano. Par B. Albert. This piece has more the character of a Saltarelle. It is good study for the fingers. The notation is somewhat erratic.

Songs for School Concerts. By Myles B. Foster. No. 1, "A Daring Enterprise," is a clever and amusing ballad. No. 2, "A Pastoral," is light, and opens in waltz time. It is for solo and chorus in unison.

Romance, for Violin, with Pianoforte Accompaniment, by P. V. Sharman, is a quiet, carefully written, and effective little piece.

THE UNIVERSAL REVIEW,

MAY 15, 1890.

CONTENTS.

PRICE 2s. 6d.

- I. SIBERIAN EXILE: a Symposium and a Protest.
- II. SOCIALISM in EUROPE CHARLES BRADLAUGH, M.P.
- III. THE ART OF ENGLAND. (Fully Illustrated.) .. HARRY QUILTER.
- IV. THE TRUMPET OF FAME.—Part I. H. D. TRAILL.
- V. THE DEADLOCK in DARWINISM.—Part II. .. SAMUEL BUTLER.
- VI. THE GIRL OF THE FUTURE GRANT ALLEN.
- VII. PROCRIS. (Fully Illustrated.) GRAMAM E. TONSON.
- VIII. THE WAGES OF SIN. (Illustrated) LUCAS MALET.
- IX. THE WORLD in MAY THE EDITOR.

FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

- "Onwards." (Original Drawing) SIR JOHN GILBERT, R.A.
 "A Summer Night" ALBERT MOORE.
 "Our Village" HUBERT HERKOMER, A.R.A.
 "The Silver Lining of the Cloud." J. AUMONTIER.
 "A Venetian Canal" CLARA MONTALBA.
 "On the Temple Steps" E. J. POTYER, R.A.
 Study for "The Tragic Poetess" MR. FREDERICK LEIGHTON, F.R.A.
 Illustrations to "The Wages of Sin" A. SACREVEEL-COKE.
 "Procris" WALTER DUNHAM, R.W.S.

Also many smaller reproductions of Pictures in the Royal Academy, Initials, Tailpieces, &c.

SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., Paternoster-square, E.C.

PHILOSOPHICAL CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED

LOCKE. By A. CAMPBELL FRASER, D.C.L., LL.D.,
 Professor of Logic and Metaphysics, University of Edinburgh. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE AUTHOR OF "THE EPIC OF HADES."

The FOURTH THOUSAND of MR. LEWIS MORRIS'S POETICAL WORKS, complete in one volume, crown 8vo, 6s., is now ready at all Booksellers.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

At all Libraries and Booksellers.

EGYPTIAN SKETCHES. By JEREMIAH LYNCH, formerly President of the San Francisco Geographical Society, and Member of the Californian State Senate. With 16 full-page illustrations. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Author resided in Egypt for nearly six months during the winter of 1892-90, and had, therefore, ample opportunities for studying the country carefully. Writing as an American, his views contain much that is novel and original, and his chapters on "The English in Egypt" will be found especially interesting.

"The independent testimony of a shrewd and competent observer.—Spectator."

READY IMMEDIATELY.

THE MODERN MALADY: or, Sufferers from "Nerves." By CYRIL BENNETT, Author of "The Massage Case," &c. With an Introduction by Dr. HERBERT TIBBITS. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

LAMB'S ADVENTURES of ULYSSES. With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. Containing a Map of the Wanderings of Ulysses, an Index of Proper Names, and a few brief explanatory Notes. Cloth, crown 8vo, 184 pages, 1s. 6d.; also, specially bound for a prize or gift-book, 2s. 6d.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 18, WARWICK SQUARE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
This Evening, at 8, THE GREEN RUBBER.
Messrs. Frank Cooper, J. D. Beveridge, J. L. Shine, W. L. Abington, Lionel Riggs, Arthur Styan, (Howard Russell, Marshall Moore, James East, J. Northcote, &c.; Madames Mary Burke, Ada Ferrar, Kate James, Brunton, Clara Jecka, &c.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, MISS CINDERELLA.
At 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Nutcombe Gould, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Gratton, and Albert Chevalier; Madames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lily Young, and Fanny Brough.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. C. H. HAWTNEY.
Every Evening, at 8, APRIL SHOWERS.
With powerful cast, including Miss E. Brunton, Miss Maud Millett, &c.; Mr. Walter Everard, Mr. E. Dagnall, Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Mr. Reeves Smith, &c.
Preceded, at 8, by the one-act Comedy, THE BEGGAR.
Madames Ellaline Terriss, E. Brunton; Messrs. Legg, Bulst, and Dagnall.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.
To-Night and Every Evening, at 8, will be acted an Original Farce, by Mr. A. W. Fluor, called
THE CABINET MINISTER.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Saturday, 10th inst., Oliver Goldsmith's celebrated old Comedy, SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.
Young Marlow, Mr. Charles Wyndham; Hardcastle, Mr. Wm. Blakeley; Sir Charles Marlow, Mr. F. Atterley; Hastings, Mr. W. Draycott; Tony Lumpkin, Mr. Geo. Glendon; Dignory, Mr. B. Valentine; Mrs. Hardcastle, Miss M. A. Victor; Miss Neville, Miss E. Layton; Miss Hardcastle, Miss Mary Moore.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERBOM-TRAE.
This Evening, at 8.15, A VILLAGE PRIEST.
Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Allan, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Norrey, Mrs. Gaston Murray, Mrs. Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Henry Irving.
THE BELLA.
MAY 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and also 24th and 26th, at 8.50.
MATHIAS (his original part), Mr. IRVING.
Preceded, at 8, by THE KING AND THE MILLER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THEODORA.
Messrs. W. H. Vernon, Charles Cartwright, Cecil Morton York, George Berners, George W. Cockburn, Alfred B. Cross, H. de Solle, H. Sturge, Charles Lander, G. I. Grange, and Leonard Boyne; Madames Dolores Drummond, Charles Trevor, Marie Stuart, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGEM.
Every Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hudson, and H. Monkhouse; Madames Phyllis Broughton, Amedi, and Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABOARD.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART, Lessees and Managers.
This Evening, at 8, THE VIOLIN MAKERS.
At 9, DICK VENABLES.
Mr. Willard, Messrs. A. Bishop, Garden, Elwood, H. Cane, H. V. Edmond, E. Keith, E. W. Thomas; Mrs. Canning, Miss Annie Rose, Miss A. Hill, and Miss Olga Brandon.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Managers, Mrs. LANGTRY.
Every Evening, at 9, ESTHER SANDRAZ.
Messrs. Chas. Sugden, A. Bourchier, Everill, De Lange, E. Lewis, &c.; Madames Langtry, Chas. Calvert, M. Lea, C. Benton, L. Meyers, E. Wilham, &c.
Preceded at 8, by THE TIGER.
Messrs. Charles Colnaghi, W. F. Stirling, and J. G. Taylor.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Managers, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, NEW LAMPS FOR OLD.
Messrs. W. B. Fenley, F. Kerr, B. Gould, and W. Leetock; Madames Gertrude Kingston, Houston, and Clara Graham.
Preceded, at 8.15, by FOR THE CHILDS SAKE.
Messrs. Oscar Adye, A. Ellis, and J. Nelson; Madames M. A. Giffard and Helen Leyton.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE BUNGALOW.
By Frederick Horner. The 203rd Time. The most laughable play of the century. "Another 'Private Secretary'."—Daily Telegraph.
Preceded, at 8.15, by ON TOAST.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Thorne, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe, O. Yorke, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Madames Winifred Emery, Harbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER'S

PARIS PRIZE MEDAL.
IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Children's	: 1s 3d.	HEMSTITCHED—
Ladies	: 2s 4d.	Ladies	: 2s 11d. } per
Gent's	: 3s 6d.	Gent's	: 4s 11d. } doz.

Embroidered Handkerchiefs in all the Latest Styles, from 1s. to 60s. each.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Belfast.
Samples and Price Lists post-free. (Please name this Paper.)

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below $100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free.
LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 8d., with PORTRAIT.
(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

Price One Penny; post-free, Twopence.
"FIFTY YEARS' PROGRESS" of the BRITISH EMPIRE, comprising the Term of the Reign of HER MAJESTY QUEEN VICTORIA.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

MONDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from $10 to $10,000
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MONDER
245, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

MEMORY. A. LOISETTE'S

SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to Memory which your Lectures in Cambridge opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer (Jan., '90). "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew Wilson (April, '83). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '83). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—Capt. J. B. Hays, R.N.—Apply 87, New Oxford Street, London.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.
S. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Dedicated by Special Permission to her Majesty the Queen.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of the REV. ADAM SEDGWICK, LL.D., F.R.S.,
Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Prebendary of Norwich, and Woodwardian Professor of Geology from 1818-1878. By JOHN WILLIAMS OLARK, M.A., F.S.A., and THOMAS MCKENNEY HUGHES, M.A. 2 vols., demy 8vo. With portraits and other illustrations. [Nearly ready.]

Now ready, with a Portrait, demy 8vo, 12s.

MEMORIALS of the LIFE of the REV. GEORGE ELWES CORRIE, D.D., late Master of Jesus College, Cambridge. Edited by Miss HOLROYD.

GRAY and his FRIENDS. Letters and Relics in great part hitherto Unpublished. Edited by Rev. D. O. TOVEY, M.A. [In the Press.]

New Edition. Demy 8vo, 16s.

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE during the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By W. CUNNINGHAM, D.D.

"Dr Cunningham's volume may be strongly recommended to every real student of the structure of ancient or modern society. The facts which it collects arranges, and presents, possess not only an interest for antiquarians, but a practical value for politicians of to-day."—Guardian.

THE SPEECH of DEMOSTHENES AGAINST the LAW of LEPTINES.
A Revised Text, with an Introduction, Critical and Explanatory Notes, and an Autotype Facsimile from the Paris MS. By J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D., Public Orator in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 9s.

LECTURES on MENTAL FACULTY: being Lectures delivered in the University of Cambridge during the Lent Term, 1888-89, on the Growth of Intellectual Faculty and Means of Training it. By FRANCIS WARNER, M.D., Physician to the London Hospital, Lecturer on Therapeutics and on Botany at the London Hospital College, &c. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

LANGUAGE and LINGUISTIC METHOD in the SCHOOL. By S. S. LAURIE, M.A., LL.D.
Crown 8vo, 4s. [Immediately.]

THE GOSPEL HISTORY of our LORD JESUS CHRIST in the WORDS of the REVISED VERSION. Arranged in a Connected Narrative, especially for the Use of Teachers and Preachers. By the Rev. C. C. JAMES, M.A., Rector of Wortham, Suffolk, and formerly Fellow of King's College, Cambridge. 8s. 6d.

CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL ESSAYS SERIES.

III.—THE CONSTITUTIONAL EXPERIMENTS of the COMMONWEALTH.

A Study of the Years 1649-1660. Being the Thirlwall Prize Essay for 1898. By E. JENKS, B.A., LL.B. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE PITT PRESS SERIES.

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENEIA in AULIS. By C. E. S. HEADLAM, B.A. 2s. 6d.

"This is a book of the right sort; the matter of the notes and introduction, whether original or not, bears the stamp of thoughtful and enlightened consideration."—Classical Review.

EURIPIDES.—HIPPOLYTUS. With Notes and Introduction. By W. S. HADLEY, M.A. 2s.

"We have here a text, by no means unduly conservative, of which every page gives proof of care, judgment, and taste. The well and even brilliantly written introduction contains some admirable remarks upon Euripides in relation to his times, and a comparison of the treatment of the subject by Euripides, Seneca, and Racine; and there is a good excursus on Orphism. The notes are full, not too full; there is enough, and not too much, of the views of other editors, and in their treatment no carping, but no lack of independence: the style is clear and vigorous: the scholarship, the critical acumen, the literary appreciation leave nothing to be desired. Difficulties—of which there are many in the Hippolytus—are never avoided. The accuracy of the printing, too, deserves praise."—Classical Review.

PLATO.—EUTHYPHRO. With Introduction and Notes. By J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

PLUTARCH.—LIFE of TIMOLEON. With Introduction, Notes, and Lexicon. By Rev. HUBERT A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 6s.

XENOPHON.—CYROPAEIDEIA. Books VI., VII., VIII. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. HUBERT A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. [In the Press.]

HOMER.—ODYSSEY, BOOK XXI. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow of Sidney Sussex College.

HERODOTUS. Book V. With Notes, Introduction, and Maps. By E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. 8s.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO CIVILI. Book I. Edited, with Notes, by A. G. PECKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. [In the Press.]

LIVY. Book IV. With Introduction and Notes. By H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

LIVY. Book V. With Notes and Introduction. By L. WHIBLEY, M.A. 2s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

VERGIL.—THE COMPLETE WORKS. Edited, with Notes, by A. SIDGWICK, M.A. 2 vols. Vol. I. Text, 2s. 6d.; Vol. II. Notes, 4s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

"Mr. Sidgwick's Vergil is, we believe, on the whole, the best school edition of the poet."—Guardian.

MOLIERE.—LES PRECIEUSES RIDICULES. With Introduction and Notes. By E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. 7s.

RACINE.—LES PLAIDEURS. With Introduction and Notes. By E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D. 2s.

SCHILLER.—WILHELM TELL. With Maps, Introduction, and Notes. By KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A. 2s.

AN ATLAS of COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY. Intended as a Companion to Dr. Mill's "Elementary Commercial Geography." By J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. With an Introduction by Dr. H. R. MILL. Royal 4to, 8s.

"The Atlas is, so far as we know, the first work of its kind, devoted entirely to a subject which is coming very much to the front....the maps are very tastefully executed, and the general physical aspects of the regions dealt with are well brought out."—Times.

BRITISH INDIA, A SHORT HISTORY of. (Uniform with Dr. Mill's "Elementary Commercial Geography.") By Rev. E. S. CARLOS, M.A., late Head Master of Exeter Grammar School. With a Map. 1s.

"In these days the History of India ought to form a definite part of every boy's education, and this volume is admirably adapted for young students who wish to begin by making themselves familiar with the rudiments of the subject."—Speaker.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

HAGGAI, ZECHARIAH, and MALACHI. Edited by Archdeacon PEROWNE. 8s. 6d.

"For the convenience of those who have already purchased HAGGAI and ZECHARIAH, copies of MALACHI will be supplied at 1s. each."

THE SMALLER CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS.

With Maps. Price One Shilling Each Volume.

"The notes elucidate every possible difficulty with scholarly brevity and clearness, and a perfect knowledge of the subject."—Saturday Review.

THE FIRST and SECOND BOOKS of SAMUEL. By Rev. Prof. KIRKPATRICK, B.D. 1s. each.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MATTHEW. By the Rev. A. CARR, M.A. 1s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. MARK. By the Rev. G. F. MACLEAR, D.D. 1s.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. LUKE. By Archdeacon FARRAR, D.D. 1s.

Complete Catalogues on application.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 941.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1890.

PRICE 8d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By E. Rentoul Esler. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count Paul P—. Edited by FRANK HARKUT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.
"There is no lack of startling incident and sensational adventure in this record of Russian oppression and Polish intrigue.....The interest of the story seldom flags."—Speaker.

TWO ADDITIONS TO LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS, SIX-SHILLINGS SERIES.

SPRINGHAVEN; a Tale of the Great War. By R. D. Blackmore, Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. With numerous Illustrations by Alfred Parsons and F. Barnard. Small post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Of "Springhaven" the Saturday Review says: "The story is one of Mr. Blackmore's best. A fine touch of romance reveals the author of 'Lorna Doone' on almost every page.....The portraits of Nelson and Napoleon are marvellously true and lifelike."

THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN; and other Stories. By William Black, Author of "A Princess of Thule," "A Daughter of Heth," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The Penance of John Logan" is so well contrived, so brightly told, and so lifelike, that its simple pathos is irresistible.—Athenaeum.

ANONYMS: a Dictionary of Revealed Authorship. By WILLIAM OUSHING, B.A., Compiler of "Initials and Pseudonyms." Royal 8vo, cloth, 57s. 6d.

SAVAGE LONDON: Lights and Shadows of Riverside Character and Queer Life in London Dens. By Mrs. MUGGRAVE, Author of "Our Flat," "Illusions," &c. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

GLANCES at GREAT and LITTLE MEN. By "Paladin." 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CONTENTS:—Oxford—Bishop Wilberforce—Some Preachers—The late Emperor of Brazil—Sir Bartle Frere—Anthony Trollope—Richard Wagner—Napoleon III—George Macdonald—Emperor William I., and Prince Bismarck, &c.

A CENTURY of PAINTERS of the ENGLISH SCHOOL. Abridged and Continued to the Present Time. By R. REDGRAVE, O.B., R.A., and S. REDGRAVE. New Edition. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.; roxburgh binding, 12s.

BEETHOVEN. By H. A. Rudall. Being the New Volume in the "GREAT MUSICIANS SERIES"; Edited by late Dr. F. HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, 8s.

HOMES of TASTE: Economical Hints on Furniture and Decoration. By J. E. PANTON, Author of "From Kitchen to Garret," &c. Post 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

UNDER THE DIRECT SANCTION OF HER MAJESTY.
LOW'S HANDBOOK to the CHARITIES of LONDON for 1890. Giving the Objects, Date of Formation, Office, Income, Expenditure, Invested Funds, Bankers, Treasurers, and Secretaries of over a Thousand Charitable Institutions. Fifty-fourth Year. Revised according to the latest Reports. Small crown 8vo, paper cover, 1s.; cloth bound, 1s. 6d.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

RECENT VOLUMES.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s.; cloth, uniform, 2s. 6d.

THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE	...	By THOMAS HARDY.
ADELA CATHOART	...	By GEORGE MACDONALD.
ORIPUS the CARRIER	...	By R. D. BLACKMORE.
TRUMPT-MAJOR	...	By THOMAS HARDY.
DRED	...	By Mrs. BECHER STOWE.
THE VASIV DEEP	...	By STUART CUMBERLAND.
DAISIES and BUTTERCUPS	...	By Mrs. RIDDELL.
GUILD COURT	...	By GEORGE MACDONALD.

*. To be followed by others.

ALUMINIUM: its History, Occurrence, Properties, Metallurgy, and Applications, including its Alloys. By JOSEPH W. HARRARD, M.A. Second Edition, Revised and greatly enlarged. Fully illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s.

SLIDE VALVE GEARS: an Explanation of the Action and Construction of Plain and Cut-off Slide Valves. By FREDERICK A. HALSEY, Member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, &c. 1 vol., royal 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

HANDY GUIDE-BOOK to the JAPANESE ISLANDS With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS OF MR. HENRY M. STANLEY'S BOOKS.

THE CONGO, and the FOUNDING of its FREE STATE: a Story of Work and Exploration. 2 vols., demy 8vo. With over 100 Full-page and smaller Illustrations, 2 large Maps, and several smaller ones. Cloth extra, 21s.

"Mr. Stanley may fairly boast of having given to the world two of the most remarkable books of travel and adventure."—Athenaeum.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. The Unabridged Edition, superior in paper and binding, and with the Original Maps, price 7s. 6d., can still be obtained.

"It is incomparably more lively than most books of African travel."—Saturday Review.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT; from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. The Unabridged Edition, superior in paper and binding, and with the Original Maps, price 12s. 6d., can still be obtained.

"Every page contains the record of some strange adventure, or the note of some valuable observation."—Full Mail Gazette.

MY KALULU: Prince, King, and Slave. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s. 6d. (Forming one of the Volumes in "Low's Series of Standard Books for Boys.")

"The book is extraordinarily fascinating, and will be read by everyone, man or boy, with breathless interest, from cover to cover."—Penny Illustrated Paper.

Ready on the 20th inst., price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, June Number.

COMMENCING A NEW VOLUME.

CONTENTS.

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventure of the illustrious Tartarin. ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 24 Illustrations, Drawn by Eugène Delacroix and others.

THROUGH the CAUCASUS. VICOMTE EUGENE MELCHIOR DE VOGUE. 12 Illustrations, Drawn by T. de Thulstrup and H. D. Nichols.

"WOULD DIOD DO THAT?" A Story. GEORGE A. HIBBARD.

THE ENEMY'S DISTANCE: Range-finding at Sea by Electricity. With 3 Diagrams. PAUL BENJAMIN, Ph.D.

THE AMERICAN BURLESQUE. LAURENCE HUTTON. 19 Illustrations, Drawn by A. B. Steiner and others.

FURST BISMARCK. GEORGE MORITZ WAHL. With Full-page Illustration.

THE BEST GOVERNED CITY in the WORLD (Birmingham). JULIAN RALPH. Illustrated.
&c., &c., besides numerous Stories, &c.; nearly 80 Illustrations in all.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE & RIVINGTON, LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.		PAGE
THE ACTS OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL UNDER HENRY VIII., by ARTHUR GALTON . . .
GOLDWIN SMITH'S LIFE OF JANE AUSTEN, by J. A. NOBLE . . .
WOODFORD'S A NATURALIST AMONG THE HEAD- HUNTERS, by Prof. KEANE . . .
MOULTON'S THE ANCIENT CLASSICAL DRAMA, by H. RICHARDS . . .
A PRINTER AT AVIGNON IN 1414, by W. H. JAMES WEALE . . .
NEW NOVELS, by W. WALLACE . . .
RECENT THEOLOGY . . .
NOTES AND NEWS . . .
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS . . .
ORIGINAL VERSE: "BALLADE OF YR OLDE CHESSIRE CHERE," by T. W. ROLLETON . . .
OBITUARY . . .
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS . . .
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Oxford Invitation to the Oriental Congress, by D. B. MONRO, Sir W. ANSON, and Sir W. MARK- by: Bracton's "Cons and Key," by W. H. STEVENSON; The Etymology of "Corkney," by the Rev. A. L. M. YEHU and Prof. EARLE; "France and the Republic," by P. G. HAMERTON . . .
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK . . .
PROF. KIMMER ON ORGANIC EVOLUTION, by GRANT ALLEN . . .
SOME CATALAN PUBLICATIONS . . .
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A Late Babylonian Tablet of Aspasine , by T. G. PINOCH . . .
SCIENCE NOTES . . .
PHILOLOGY NOTES . . .
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES . . .
THE BRITISH MUSEUM CATALOGUE OF COINS, by C. OMAN . . .
THE ENCHED WORK OF WILLIAM STRANG, by COSMO MONKHOUSE . . .
RECENT EXCAVATIONS IN CYPRUS . . .
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY . . .
AT THE HAYMARKET, by F. WEDMORE . . .
DR. TODDINGTON'S PASTORAL AT BEDFORD PARK, by T. W. R. . . .
STAGE NOTES . . .
GLUCK'S "ORPHEUS" AT CAMBRIDGE, by J. S. SHEDLOCK . . .
RECENT CONCERTS . . .
MUSIC NOTES . . .

RUSKIN SOCIETY OF LONDON.—An illustrated lecture will be delivered by Mr. KINOTON PARKES, of Birmingham, on TUESDAY, 20th MAY, at 6.30 p.m. Subject: "DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI, Painter and Poet." Ladies and Gentlemen desirous of becoming Members, and applications for Tickets (enclosing stamped envelope), please address Hon. Sec. RUSKIN SOCIETY, London Institution, Finsbury Circus, E.C.

LONDON LIBRARY, St. James's-square, S.W.—The FORTY-NINTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Members will be held in the READING-ROOM on THURSDAY, the 22nd MAY, at 3 p.m. ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—Forthcoming Examination.—ASSISTANT KREPER IN THE ART BRANCH of the South Kensington Museum (18-33) 6th JUNE. The date specified is the latest at which APPLICATIONS can be RECEIVED. They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars from the Secretary, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

LIMITED OWNERS' RESIDENCES ACTS, 1870-1871.—Board of Agriculture.—Noblemen and landed proprietors desirous of taking advantage of the facilities afforded by the above Acts for making improvements may CONSULT Mr. JOHN BIRCH, Architect, who re-builds Ingleston Hall and other country houses.—No. 7, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

WEEKLY POPULAR PAPER for SALE, by order of Mortgagee. Well established. Actual Sale about 6,000 Weekly. Capable of unlimited extension and of earning a large Advertisement Income. Low price for Copyright. Part could remain at 2d per cent.—Address, W. P. P., London Institution, Finsbury Circus, E.C.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent-street, S.W.

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

A LADY, of great literary experience and scholarly attainments, is prepared to READ MSS. of all descriptions, and to advise Authors as to the best form and mode of Publication.—For terms address (Mrs.) A. M. GORDON, 29, Ellerslie-road, W.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS. The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s. ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100 Mercer's-road, Tufnell Park, N.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS PRACTICAL EXAMINATION in VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC will this year be held in London during the week commencing MONDAY, JUNE 2nd. The Society's Bronze Medal will be given to any Candidate obtaining full Marks in this Examination. A limited number of the Society's Silver Medals will be awarded to those Candidates (taking a First Class) whom the Examiner shall certify as having acquitted themselves best in the Honours portion of the Examination. Full particulars may be obtained on application. H. TAYLOR WOOD, Secretary, Society's House, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

HIGH-CLASS BOARDING SCHOOL for GENTLEWOMEN.—Foreign Languages and Accomplishments Specialities. Also pleasant Intellectual Home for Ladies who wish to continue or retain studies only. Miss ESSER, Rockfield, Lansdowne-road, Croydon.

The choicer Portion of the extensive and valuable Library formed by the late Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Bart., Lord Chancellor of Ireland.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGKIN will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WEL- LINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C., on MONDAY, MAY 19, and Five Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the FIRST PORTION of an extensive and valuable LIBRARY, formed by the late Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Bart., Lord Chancellor of Ireland, consisting of important Printed Books and Manuscripts in the various branches of English and Foreign Literature, including Early and Rare Editions of the Greek and Latin Classics—remarkable Series of the Productions of the Aldine and Elzevir Presses—additionally Illustrated Books with rare Engravings—Shakespeare and Shakespeareana—a large Collection of Works by Irish Authors, or relating to Ireland—Picture Galleries and other splendid Books of Prints—Original Editions of Shelley, Keats, Byron, Dickens, Thackeray, Browning, Tennyson, Lover, George Eliot, and other Standard Authors—numerous Privately Printed Publications—Black-Letter Chronicles, including a fine Copy of the 1577 Edition of Holinshed's Romances of Chivalry, and Writings of the principal Dramatists—Books Illustrated by the Cruikshanks, Rowlandson, Bewick, Blake, Philz, &c., others by Moreaux, Cockin, Marillier, Flanagan, and various Artists of the French School, the whole in the condition, the greater portion in choice bindings, comprising Specimens from the Libraries of many of the best known Collectors of the 17th and 18th Centuries. The Second Portion will be SOLD ON TUESDAY, MAY 27, and Six Following Days, and the Third and Final Portion will be SOLD ON JUNE 5, and Seven Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely. The First Twelve Days' Sale will be on view three days prior. The remaining Nine Days on May 30 and 31 and on June 2. Catalogues of the whole may now be had, price Five Shillings.

Collection of Ancient and Modern Engravings of Mr. H. Cranion, &c.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on MONDAY, MAY 19th, and following day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a large collection of Ancient and Modern ENGRAVINGS, a series of Illustrations to Exhibitions, Topography, Sports, &c. Catalogues on receipt of stamp.

Old and Modern Decorative China, a few Miniatures, &c.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, MAY 21st, and following day, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a small collection of Ancient and Modern DECORATIVE CHINA, in groups, figures, services, &c., together with a few finely-painted miniatures on Ivory, from various private sources. Catalogues on receipt of 2 stamps.

Musical Instruments, including the Collections of the late T. M. Shuttleworth, Esq., of Preston; the late J. Parker, Esq., of High Wycombe, and others.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on THURSDAY, MAY 22nd, at half-past 12 o'clock precisely, a collection of GRAND and COTTAGE PIANOFORTES by leading manufacturers, harps, harmoniums, American organs, several choice specimens of Italian and other violins, violas, violoncellos, and double basses, guitars, banjos, flutes, brass and other wind instruments. Catalogues on receipt of 2 stamps.

Libraries of the late Thos. H. Wyatt, F.S.A., and of the late Dr. Ernest Brette.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, MAY 22nd, at half-past 12 o'clock precisely, the collection of the ARCHITECTURAL LIBRARY of the late Thomas Henry Wyatt, F.S.A., at half-past 12 o'clock precisely, a collection of GRAND and COTTAGE PIANOFORTES by leading manufacturers, harps, harmoniums, American organs, several choice specimens of Italian and other violins, violas, violoncellos, and double basses, guitars, banjos, flutes, brass and other wind instruments. Catalogues on receipt of 2 stamps.

Collection of valuable Modern Pictures of the Countess Reigersberg, removed from Munich.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on MONDAY, JUNE 2nd, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, the small collection of valuable modern PAINTINGS, by eminent modern artists, of the Countess Reigersberg, of Munich. Catalogues are preparing.

Coins and Medals, the property of a Collector, deceased.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on TUESDAY, JUNE 3rd, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, English and Foreign COINS, Medals, and Traders' Tokens, in gold, silver, and copper, with the cabinets, the property of a collector, deceased. Catalogues are preparing.

Fine collection of English Engravings of H. Fitzgerald Bell, Esq., South Woodford.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4th, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, the collection of ENGRAVINGS of the English School of H. F. Bell, Esq., all in splendid states. Catalogues are preparing.

Collection of Drawings and Pictures of the late Samuel Simon, Esq.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on THURSDAY, JUNE 5th, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a small collection of WATER-COLOURED DRAWINGS and PICTURES, by the Old Masters of the Venetian, Flemish, Dutch, and Early English Schools, including examples by: J. B. Weenix Isaac Oude W. Hillen, H. A. S. R. Thurnhill, H. Van der Velde, D. Keyser, Geo. Morland, A. Kaufmann, R. A. and many others. Catalogues, when ready, can be obtained of RALPH THOMAS, Esq., Solicitor, 27, Chancery-lane; and of the AUCTIONEERS.

Autograph Correspondence and Compositions of Eminent Musicians, &c.
MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on TUESDAY, JUNE 10, at 10 minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, highly interesting collection of AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and MANUSCRIPTS of celebrated COMPOSERS, including Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Schubert, Haydn, Wagner, Liszt, Auber, &c.; also Letters of Goethe, and a few others literary. Catalogues are preparing.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUF'S ANGL. of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for his pictures, and he is now preparing for large plates and editions of large. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO., have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Price on application.

THE HENNESSY LIBRARY.

JOHN W. SULLIVAN

Respectfully announces that he is preparing to SELL by AUCTION, at his LITERARY, ART, and GENERAL SALE-ROOMS, No. 8, DOLIER STREET, DUBLIN, Early in the ensuing month,

THE VALUABLE and EXTENSIVE LIBRARY Of the late WILLIAM M. HENNESSY, Esq., M.B.A., The eminent Irish Scholar and Archaeologist, Including many rare and valuable Works on the History, Antiquities, and Literature of Ireland, with numerous MSS., annotations by the late learned owner, and an important collection of Original and Transcript Manuscripts, &c., &c.

*. Catalogues at press, and may be had by application to the Auctioneer.

CATALOGUES.

Just published.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE NEW

ORIENTAL CATALOGUE. The Languages, Religions, Antiquities, and Literature of the East. Post free one stamp. 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 30, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THEOPHILE BELIN, 29, Quai Voltaire, Paris. Livres anciens et modernes rares et Curieux. Catalogue Mensuel envoyé sur demande.

BOOKBUYERS are invited to send for a CATALOGUE OF STANDARD WORKS in the several departments of Literature.—J. J. MAUDOCKE, 3, York-street, Manchester.

NOW READY.

CATALOGUE OF CHOICE and RARE BOOKS (24 pp.), comprising for the most part FIRST EDITIONS of Esteemed Authors, [and other carefully] selected Second-hand Books.—NICHOLS, Bookseller, Sheffield.

LUZAC & CO.,

Foreign and Oriental Booksellers and Publishers, 48, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, W.O. (Opposite the British Museum).

NOW READY.

LUZAC & CO.'S MONTHLY LIST. No. III. MAY, 1890.

CONTENTS: 1. New Oriental Books, published in England. 2. New Oriental Books published on the Continent. 3. New Oriental Books, published in the East. 4. Recent Continental Publications (a) Miscellaneous; (b) Belles-Lettres; (c) History, Politics, Sociology; (d) Medicine; (e) Novels; (f) Philosophy and Theology; (g) Science, Technology, Architecture. 5. A Choice Collection of New and Second-hand Books.

Messrs. LUZAC & Co. will have constantly on hand a large choice collection of Works in all branches of Literature in Europe and the Orient.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in CHEMISTRY at a Salary of £130 per annum. Applications, with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 15th, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

CHAIR OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of MECHANICAL ENGINEERING in the new Engineering Department. The stipend of the Professor will be £300 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 15th, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom; over 2,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R.I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at Cramping; unsurpassed Staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.R. Hist. Soc., &c.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the LECTURESHIP in ENGLISH LITERATURE. The stipend is £150 per annum together with two-thirds of the fees paid by students attending the classes of the Department. The Council guarantee a minimum income of £250 per annum (exclusive of Evening Class fees). Application with testimonials should be sent not later than JUNE 1st, under cover to the REGISTRAR, from whom a full statement of duties, &c., may be obtained. HENRY W. HOLDS, Registrar.

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has removed to FIXHOLM, DORKING, and has new space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays special attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus by Herr Stempel, who will give weekly lessons. Inclusive terms 80 or 100 guineas a year according to age. References remitted to Miss Buss, North London Collegiate School, N.W. Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge. NEXT TERM will begin TUESDAY, MAY 6th.

GLENALMOND.—FIVE ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, of which one (for exceptional merit) will be of £70, the others of £50, will be offered for competition in JULY, age 11 to 15. Candidates can be examined in England. For particulars apply to WARREN, Glenalmond, Perth.

The College, placed in singularly healthy site, at foot of the Grampians, has classical and modern side, and prepares directly for Universities and Public Services. Junior school for boys between 9 and 13. Warden, Rev. J. H. SKRINE.

VOL. V. NOW READY.

CHAMBERS'S ENCYCLOPÆDIA.A Dictionary of Universal Knowledge, with Maps and Wood Engravings.

In 10 vols., imperial 8vo. Entirely New Edition. Vols. I., II., III., IV., and V., are now ready.

Price 10s. each, cloth; 15s. each half-morocco.

Times.—"The second and third volumes are marked by all the good qualities that characterised the first; there is the same enterprise in securing specialists as contributors, and the same accuracy, clearness, competency, and condensation in the treatment of the articles; the illustrations and maps are numerous and good."

Daily Telegraph.—"The editor has spared no pains, labour, or expense to bring the work into close touch with the most recent discoveries in science and original research in literature."

Newcastle Leader.—"The value of the Encyclopædia—the quality of the workmanship, the wealth of literary talent at the disposal of the editor, the remarkable variety of the information supplied, the pains taken to give the subscribers the benefits of the results of latest achievements in science, literature, and art—all are made increasingly evident as the publication proceeds."

W. & R. CHAMBERS, 47, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; AND EDINBURGH.

TURNER'S LIBER STUDIORUM.

Just published, in Four Parts, square folio, 12s. 6d. each; or complete in Portfolio, £1 12s. 6d.

A SELECTION from the LIBER STUDIORUM of J. M. W. TURNER, R.A.

For Artists, Art Students, and Amateurs.

Comprising 4 Facsimile Reproductions in Mezzotint by Photogravure; 51 Facsimile Reproductions of the Etchings, including 7 rare unpublished Plates; and 37 Text Reproductions of the finished Engravings.

With Historical Introduction by FREDERICK WEDMORE and Practical Notes by FRANK SHORT.

. Prospectus post free on application.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,
SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London, by the Library Messengers.
SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

A Large number of Copies of the Best and most Popular Books of the Season are now in circulation at MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

All Works of general interest are freely added immediately on publication.

Library Catalogue for 1890, 1s. 6d. Prospectuses and Clearance List of Books on Sale Postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, New Oxford Street.
BRANCH OFFICES: 241, BROMPTON ROAD, and 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

NOTICE.—The New Volume in this Series on
"THE COLOURS OF ANIMALS, their Meaning and Use," by EDWARD BAGNALL
POULTON, F.R.S., with numerous Illustrations, will be ready on Wednesday at all Booksellers.
Price 5s.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S
RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

NOVELS AT ALL CIRCULATING LIBRARIES.

I.
By FLORENCE MARRYAT.—
BLINDFOLD. 3 vols.

By the Author of
"My Sister the Actress," &c."The story is well conceived and skilfully told... May be read with considerable pleasure."—Scotsman.

II.
By IZA DUFFUS HARDY.—
A NEW OTHELLO. 3 vols.

By the Author of
"Love, Honour, and Obedience," &c.

"The closing chapters are tremendous in their intensity."—Athenæum.
"A New Othello" is one of the most powerful and original stories we have had from the author's pen as yet.... It is admirably conceived and well worked out.—Lodge's Pictorial.
"The reader will at once perceive that 'A New Othello' is, perhaps, the best of the many novels that have come from the pen of Iza Duffus Hardy. It is, on the whole, a very good story, and it is told with commendable spirit.... The dialogue is often crisp and pleasant, and some of the characters are portrayed with considerable force."—Scotsman.
"A New Othello" is intensely exciting.... is an exceedingly clever novel."—Life.
"A New Othello" introduces us to some scenes portrayed with more than common power."—County Gentleman.

III.
By Colonel ROWAN HAMILTON.—
THE LAST of the CORNETS. 3 vols. 12s.

IV.
By JEAN MIDDLEMASS.—
TWO FALSE MOVES. 3 vols.

By the Author of
"Dandy," "Wild Georgie," &c.

"An excellent piece of literary workmanship, throughout, and happily devoid of any newfangledness."—People.
"Miss Jean Middlemass's quite remarkable story.... three volumes of intensely dramatic fiction. The reader is carried along at a gallop through scene after scene.... The women of to-day are tolerably sure to read its pages with avidity, and to revel in it. That it contains clever work goes without saying, and it is certainly one of the strongest stories which even a lady novelist has hitherto had the courage to produce."—Court Journal.
"There are many attractive subsidiary characters.... The life led by strolling theatricals; the scenes commonly associated with Monte Carlo; and the trials of maiden teachers are among the incidents effectively utilised by a clever novelist."—Scotsman.

V.
By Mrs. HIBBERT WARE.—
FAIRFAX of FUYSTON;
Or, a Practice Confess'd. 3 vols.

By the Author of
"The King of Bath," "His Dearest Wish," &c.

"...that fertile writer—Mrs. Hibbert Ware.... Quaint, queer, and questionable trade tales and social customs peculiar to Lancashire and Yorkshire in the beginning of the seventeenth century, are not only carefully detailed and contrasted with those of modern times, but they are skilfully utilised in the development of what, after all, is a pleasantly told love story of the olden times. Highwaymen, too confiding maidens, poets, purse-proud persons, penniless 'prentices, and wily witches, figure prominently among the admirably sketched characters met with in the novel."—Scotsman.

"Mrs. Hibbert Ware describes picturesquely, and meditates romantically.... she is careful in her conversations and choice of incidents to keep to the tone and manner of the time." "Fairfax of Fuyston" is on the whole, perhaps, the best book of the kind we have had for some little time, and a great advance in many ways on other works by the same hand."—Whitehall Review.

VI.
By B. L. FARJEON.—
The MYSTERY of M. FELIX. 3 vols.
By the Author of
"Great Porter Square," &c.
(Immediately.)

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.

Alfred O. Calmoun's THE CONFES-SIONS of a DOORMAT. (A New and Original Tale.) By the Author of "The Amber Heart," &c. In paper cover, 1s.;
cloth, 1s. 6d.

"A story both thrilling and pathetic."—Globe.
"Simple, pathetic, and unaffected, which will touch many hearts."—Echo.
"A work of sterling merit."—People.
"A book to be bought."—The Stage.

By Mrs. Hungerford.—A LIFE'S
REMORSE. (Second Edition.) By the Author of "Molly Bawn." Cloth, 2s. 6d.

By Hawley Smart.—A BLACK
BUSINESS. (A New and Original Tale.)
By the Author of "Breezie Langton," &c.
In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Just Ready, Price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR JUNE, 1890.

- I. ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON, Author of "Nancy," &c. PART I. CHAPS. XXI.—XXIII.
- II. LINES ON MR. ANDREW LANG'S "GIFFORD LECTURES" ON NATURAL THEOLOGY.
- III. THE ROMANCE OF HISTORY.—IX. WILLIAM IV. LIFE—OR DEATH. [LITHGOW.]
- V. A TRANSVERSAL OF SIX.
- VI. THE LEGION OF HONOUR.
- VII. A NOBLE GAME OF LAWN TENNIS.
- VIII. CHARACTERISTICS OF RUSSIAN LITERATURE.
- IX. LLOYD COURTENAY'S BANISHMENT.
- X. THE GODS OF GREECE.
- XI. SOME PECULIARITIES OF SUSSEX.
- XII. PEARL-POWDER. By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDS, Author of "Ought We to Visit Her?" &c. CHAPS. XXV.—XXVIII.

Now Ready,

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a SEAMAN. By the TENTH EARL OF DUNDONALD. A New Edition, with continuation, including Lord Dundonald's services in South America, and other additional matter. In one volume, crown 8vo, with portrait, illustrations, and charts, 6s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE GARDEN OF EDEN."
HER THREE LOVERS. By Alice M. Diehl.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"'THE FAILURE OF ELIZABETH' (3 vols.) is a pleasing, wholesome story, and Miss POYNTER'S carefully-drawn distinctive characters can never fail to arouse interest. Elizabeth herself belongs to that charming type of unspoiled girlhood which Miss Poynter knows well how to depict."—Athenæum.

"HUGH WESTBURY has written one of the best historical novels since 'The Last of Barons' and 'The Last Days of Pompeii.' Writers in this branch of literature are apt to be ponderous. In 'ACTE' (3 vols.), however, there is real humour—not merely elaborate jesting after the supposed manner of the times, which surely never could have amused anybody. The author has seized in almost a remarkable way on the leading features of that strange time, and the attitude of the ancient world towards various questions of morality. He has known how far to go in many directions and never wearies his readers. He has written a very interesting book, and we shall look forward some day to hearing of him again."—Saturday Review.

"'THE EMANCIPATED' (3 vols.) is a story of independent characters, mutually influencing each other, of sympathies and antipathies, mistaken interpretations of behaviour, one deplorable act of rashness on the part of an innocent girl, and some pathetic scenes of patient suffering. Mr. GISSING'S latest work is one of his best, and we commend it to discriminating readers."

Illustrated London News.

"Title and story are in strict keeping with each other in 'ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS' (3 vols.). The burdens are unequally distributed; but that is true of life, and especially some phases of married life. Miss MANN has depicted such a case, an extreme one, perhaps, but still a possible one. In point of conception, of character drawing, and of directness and clearness of telling, the story is good throughout."—Academy.

NOTICE.—The New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s., of MISS MARIE CORELLI'S popular Novel, "ARDATH: The Story of a Dead Self," may now be obtained at all Booksellers and Railway Stations. The novel in this form becomes the latest addition to BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS, in which series the same author has three other novels, viz.: "A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS," "VENDETTA," and "THELMA."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST.

WORKS BY

JOHN RUSKIN.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Cheap Small Editions Complete with all the Plates, small post 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. each.

THE SEVEN LAMPS of ARCHITECTURE.

1. The Lamp of Sacrifice.—2. The Lamp of Truth.—3. The Lamp of Power.—4. The Lamp of Beauty.—5. The Lamp of Life.—6. The Lamp of Memory.—7. The Lamp of Obedience. The 14 Plates for this Edition have been specially prepared.

ARATRA PENTELICI:

Seven Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture. With One Engraving on Steel, and 20 Plates by the Autotype Process.

1. Of the Division of Arts.—2. Idolatry.—3. Imagination.—4. Likeness.—5. Structure.—6. The School of Athens.—7. The Relation between Michael Angelo and Tintoret.

VAL D'ARNO:

Ten Lectures on Art of the Thirteenth Century in Pisa and Florence.

With One Steel Engraving and 12 Autotypes.

Will be ready at end of May, uniform with above.

ARIADNE FLORENTINA:

Six Lectures on Wood and Metal Engraving, and Appendix.

With 4 Full-Page Facsimiles from Holbein's "Dance of Death," and 12 Autotype Plates.

1. Definition of the Art of Engraving.—2. The Relation of Engraving to other Arts in Florence.—3. The Technique of Wood Engraving.—4. The Technique of Metal Engraving.—5. Design in the German Schools of Engraving (Holbein and Dürer).—6. Design in the Florentine Schools of Engraving (Sandro Botticelli).—7. Appendix.

JUST OUT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A NEW NOVEL by BLANCHE ATKINSON.

Author of "The Web of Life."

THEY HAVE THEIR REWARD.

NEARLY READY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

GOSSAMER AND SNOWDRIFT.

THE

POSTHUMOUS POEMS OF CHAS. MACKAY, LL.D., F.S.A.

With Introduction by his Son, ERIO MACKAY.

At End of May,

In 1 vol., small post 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

FOUR GREAT TEACHERS: Ruskin, Carlyle, Emerson, & Browning.

By JOSEPH FORSTER.

* * All Books sent carriage-paid. Lists post-free.

GEORGE ALLEN, ORPINGTON,
and
London: 8, BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, W.C.

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

The Study of Dante.

A Second Edition of an Introduction to.
By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS, M.A.,
Author of "The Renaissance in Italy."

Now publishing in 14 Monthly Volumes, small crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d. each.

New and Enlarged Edition of the Collected Works of Thomas De Quincey.

With all the Author's Notes and Latest Emendations, and with Portraits and other Illustrations.

Edited by Prof. DAVID MASSON, M.A., LL.D.

The writings (many of which have been omitted in previous editions) will be Re-arranged and Classified on a systematic plan. The work is printed from a new type.

Vols. I.—VII. [Now ready.]

In 2 vols., demy 8vo, price 24s.

The Lives of the Fathers:

SKETCHES OF CHURCH HISTORY IN BIOGRAPHY.

By FREDERICK W. FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, price 15s.

The Religion of the Semites: FUNDAMENTAL INSTITUTIONS.

By W. ROBERTSON SMITH, M.A., LL.D.,
Professor of Arabic, University of Cambridge.

In 2 vols., crown 8vo, price 22s.

Algebra:

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK FOR THE HIGHER CLASSES OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND FOR COLLEGES.

Part I., pp., 552, price 10s. 6d. Part II., pp. 598, price 12s. 6d.

By GEORGE OHRYSTAL, M.A.,
Professor of Mathematics, University of Edinburgh

SCIENCE IN PLAIN LANGUAGE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d.

Evolution, Antiquity of Man, Bacteria, &c.

A Series of Papers giving the general results of Scientific Investigations in plain every-day language, without too much detail.

By WILLIAM DURHAM, F.R.S.E.

"His expositions are so clear and fresh that the book ought to be of considerable service to the readers to whom he specially appeals."—Nature, May 1, 1890.

In fcap. 8vo, cloth, pp. 436, price 4s. 6d.

A NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION, THE FIFTH, OF THE School Manual of Geology.

By the late J. BEETE JUKES, F.R.S.

Edited and partly Rewritten by A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, B.A., F.G.S.,

Of the Geological Survey of England and Wales.

NOW COMPLETE, WITH INDEX.

The Encyclopædia Britannica. NINTH EDITION.

Edited by THOS. SPENCER BAYNE, LL.D., and W. ROBERTSON SMITH, LL.D.

In 24 volumes and Index, 4to, price £37; or in half-morocco, £45 6s.

A Detailed Prospectus of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," obtainable from any Bookseller, or from the Publishers.

EDINBURGH: ADAM & CHARLES BLACK.

SATURDAY, MAY 17, 1890.

No. 941, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Acts of the Privy Council of England. New Series. Volume I. 1542 to 1547. Edited by John Roche Dasent. (Published under the Direction of the Master of the Rolls.)

THIS volume begins with a meeting of the Privy Council, on April 22, at Greenwich; the register is lost from July 27, 1543, to May 10, 1545; and it extends to January 26, 1547.

The period is full of interest. In 1542, Henry took the title "Rex Hiberniae," instead of "Dominus"; and we find constant reference to Ireland, to the Lord Deputy, and to the Irish parties and obfeits. In the same year, Queen Katharine Howard was beheaded; but neither she, nor those accused with her, are mentioned. Henry was occupied with foreign wars during the last years of his reign. Francis I. was now in alliance with the Pope and the Turks, and Henry was acting with Charles V. Together, they were to invade France and to march on Paris. Francis carried out the usual policy of embarrassing the English by a Scotch invasion. This danger was averted by the ridiculous disaster of the Solway Moss; the Scotch army was ruined; James V. died soon after, and Mary Stuart, at the age of one week, began her unfortunate reign. The English then took the offensive; Edinburgh and Leith were burnt; and, after ravaging the open country, the army sailed for Calais to join in the French war. Charles V. advanced into France, and Henry in person besieged and took Boulogne. In 1544, Charles and Francis made a separate peace, at Cr py; and Henry was left alone to face a war with France and Scotland. An army of 120,000 men was stationed in the southern counties, and a strong fleet rode in the channel. The French landed in the Isle of Wight, and some desultory fighting took place there; but they were afraid to storm Portsmouth, and the plague forced their ships to return. The English held Boulogne, and a peace was signed there in June 1546, by which Francis engaged to pay a large sum of money, and Boulogne was granted to Henry as a security. Scotland was included in the treaty; and through the assassination of Cardinal Beaton, in which Henry was an accomplice, it was soon reduced to helpless faction and disorder. At home, an Act was passed, in 1544, to release the king from his debts; and in the following year a large benevolence was extorted. The court was becoming more Protestant: an English liturgy replaced the Latin; the Chantries were attacked; and the "Reformers" were so far powerful that they easily obtained possession of Edward VI. The last entry in Mr. Dasent's volume is for January 26, 1547; and on January 28 Henry was dead.

The break in the register covers some of the most important events between 1542 and 1547; others, which we might expect to find, are not mentioned; and the entries do not usually refer to matters of general history. The entries, however, are valuable, because they tell us the places where the council met; and they afford a clue to the balance of parties, because they show us of whom the council was composed. The business discussed may be divided, according to Mr. Dasent, under five great headings, which relate,

"First, to the English Pale in France; second, to the Scottish Border; third, to the guardianship of the Narrow Seas; fourth, to commercial regulations; fifth, to financial measures. We note that, even when France and England were nominally at peace, questions affecting Calais and Guisnes frequently came before the Council, and how necessary it was considered to guard against encroachments on the part of the French, and how great was the strain of maintaining these outposts of the kingdom in a condition of safety—a strain, only less ruinous than the constant supplies of men, money, and stores required during the subsequent hostilities, and almost daily entered in the register. Under the second category we find numerous entries relating to the Wardens of the Marches and the President of the Council of the North, and constant references to what was almost a perpetual war upon the Borders, allusions to the great defeat of the Scots at Solway Moss, and the subsequent disposal of the Scottish prisoners of rank taken there. Under the third category may be noticed many entries relating to the movements of the fleet, the pressing of sailors, and the police of the Channel. Some entries show that even the commanders of royal ships could not be trusted to discriminate between the friends and the enemies of England when tempted by a rich prize. Under the fourth category we see how closely the Council watched the course of trade, how repeatedly it interfered with regulations as to imports and exports, how it acted as a court of appeal before which foreign merchants appeared to claim their goods wrongfully detained. Later on we find many references to licences to export or import specific articles of trade, such as wine from Rochelle, and to the port dues, and other exactions levied in the Thames; and the names of some of the articles imported, such as soap and writing paper, show how largely England then depended upon foreigners for the supply of many of the necessities of daily life which are now manufactured at home."

Matters of various interest came before the Council. For instance, in 1543:

"Att Saint James, the first day off Aprill, being then present the Lorde Chauncellour off England, &c., Tharle off Surrey being sent for tapere before the Cownsell was charged by the sayde presence, as well off eating off fleshe, as of a lewde and unsemely manner of walking in the night abowght the stretes and breaking wyth stonebowes off certeyne wyndowes. And towching the eating off fleshe he alleged a license, albeit he hadde nott so secretly used the same as apperteyned."

The Earl of Surrey, who is here accused, was the brave and accomplished poet, the last of Henry's victims. He admitted the brawling and the broken windows; and "he was committed to the Fleete." Thomas Wiatt and "young Pikering," who were accused of the same frolics, "utterlye stode in denyall, notwithstanding they were commanded to shew the trewth thereof upon theyre alle-geance." The next day, confronted by a witness, they pleaded guilty, and were sent to the Tower. In 1545, one Jack Banester was imprisoned in the Clynk for hewing "downe lantrenes and signes" upon London Bridge, and, "with lewde wordes," "carring fishe uppon a sworde, dyd clappe the same uppon the faces of prentises and men of the countrey passing by"; and, later, "with oone Hogges," "at the signe of the Bel in Fishe Strete," he was concerned in the "slaying of a servant of Sir Thomas Hennage." In November, Thomas Saunders, of Coventrie, who had been imprisoned since May for possessing a book supposed to contradict the Six Articles, was, "uppon a good lesson, dispeched out of prison," his book being found innocent. The vicare of Halsted was accused of not expounding

"the X Commandments, the Paternoster, the XII. Articles, nor reading the Kinges Majestes Injunctions unto them at tymes prefixed therefore, besides the sinistre interpreting of the Scriptures by him used in a sermon he made touching spiritual oblations."

We find Anne Ascue sent to Newgate "for that she was very obstinate and heddye in reasoning of matiers of religion, wherein she shewed her self to be of a naughty opinion," together with

"oone White, who attempted to make an erroneous boke, and shewed himself of a wrong opinyon concerning the Blessed Sacrament." "One Selby, clarkke, who beforetyme hadde been monk of the Charterhows in Sheen, upon a lewde writing subscribed with his owne hande agaynst the Primacye of the Kinges Highnes, seeming nevertheless to be distract of his witt, was committed unto the Towre."

There are ominous references to the export of bell-metal, and the conversion of it into guns. In Hertfordshire an image "that hadde been plucked downe" was "sette uppe ageyne"; "a certeyne making of Holy Water used about St. John's tyde" was to be abolished; and "an Image called Our Lady of Pitye in the Pew" was to be taken down, "in consideration of idolatrye doone unto the same by the common people." An enquiry is ordered about the robbery of the silver head of Henry V. from the Abbey. A reward is paid "to Petro Aretino, Italian, that dedicated a boke to his Majestie," a writer who by his dedications and scurrility, levied blackmail upon every potentate in Europe. Edmund Finche was imprisoned in the Marshalsea, and then stood in the pillory, on two market days, "with a paper on his hed written in greate letters, 'For slaundersous wordes of the Kinges Counsaill';" and, in a requisition for wood, orders were given "to spare no man's woodes." But, on the whole, the proceedings of the Council were not so arbitrary as many historians would lead us to suppose.

These Acts are interesting to the historian, to the antiquary, and to the student of English. The latter will be rewarded by a rich collection of spellings and uses, such as "horsemeate," "thabovewownden," "jentilmen," "trewx" for truce. The spelling even of proper names is infinitely various: "Sipruce" for Cyprus is a good example of the treatment of foreign words. Mr. Dasent has edited the work with admirable tact and carefulness, though in his preface there is a statement about the Jews which is perhaps misleading. In the index, the king's physician is described as "Augustin," and on the page referred to as "Augustini." Anne Ascue is said to be mentioned on p. 424; the people named there are Kyme and his wife, who was indeed Anne Ascue; but this might puzzle an uninstructed reader.

ARTHUR GALTON.

"GREAT WRITERS."—Life of Jane Austen.
By Goldwin Smith. (Walter Scott.)

It is a somewhat curious coincidence that Jane Austen, after half a century of comparative neglect, should, in the space of a few months, find two biographers and commentators. Mrs. Malden's memoir was reviewed in the ACADEMY at the time of its publication last year, and many of the remarks then made upon it apply equally well to its successor, and need not be repeated. So far as mere biographical material is concerned, both Mrs. Malden and Mr. Goldwin Smith are entirely dependent upon the record given to the world some years ago by Mr. Austen-Leigh, and upon the original matter in the collection of Jane Austen's Letters, edited by her kinsman, Lord Brabourne. And the writer of the little volume now under consideration has done wisely in confining his account of her singularly uneventful life to the first chapter, leaving the remaining eight chapters free for the discussion of the half-dozen books in virtue of which alone Jane Austen is really interesting to us.

"Criticism," says Mr. Goldwin Smith, "is becoming the art of saying fine things, and there are really no fine things to be said about Jane Austen." This is true, for a fine thing in the domain of criticism is rapidly becoming synonymous with a far-fetched thing; but there are a great many interesting things to be said, both about Jane Austen's novels in themselves, and about the causes which have conspired to produce the curious fluctuations in the fame of their writer. In her own day—or, to speak more precisely, in the few years which immediately preceded and succeeded her death—Jane Austen might have been ranked among popular authors. The reading world of the day was not a large world, but she conquered it; and the conquest was not an easy or inglorious one, for she began to write at a time when the nameless wizard of the North was exercising his earliest and most potent spells, the fascination of which we still feel as we turn over the pages of Waverley and Guy Mannering. That a novelist who could hold her own while Walter Scott was in the field should in the course of a few years fall into the ranks of the admired unread is not at first sight an easily explicable fact; and it seems hardly easier to understand how and why it is that readers of to-day, in the absence of any obvious external suggestion, are again turning to the books which delighted their grandfathers, but which had for their fathers a very decided caviare quality. Of course there has always been an unbroken succession of Austen appreciators, and they have been appreciators of whom any writer might well be proud. Sir Walter Scott, with that frank generosity which is a note of healthy genius, spoke of Jane Austen's peculiar talent as "the most wonderful I ever met with."

"The big bow-wow strain," he writes in his diary, "I can do myself like any now going; but the exquisite touch which renders commonplace things and characters interesting from the truth of the description and the sentiment is denied to me."

Scott as a fellow-craftsman speaks with a voice of special authority; but such distinguished contemporaries as Lord Lansdowne, Sydney Smith, and Sir James Mackintosh, were equally emphatic in their praise; and their verdict has been endorsed by such later writers as Lord Macaulay, Archbishop Whately, Miss Martineau, and Miss Mitford. How is it, we may ask, that a writer who in her own day was popular and who since her own day has become famous, with that kind of fame which is secured by the eulogy of eminent admirers, should for half a century have passed out of the cognisance of the reading world?

Those who really enjoy Miss Austen's books find them so irresistibly entertaining that the question will seem to them one that is exceedingly difficult to answer; but the critic who, in spite of his admiration, is able to assume a position of detachment will be able to give a reply that is not wholly unsatisfactory. Jane Austen's novels were pre-eminently sketches of contemporary society—that is, they were undoubtedly novels of character, but they were novels in which character was revealed in delicacies of manner rather than in impressive action; and, while truthful delineation of character has a permanent interest, a delineation of the manner of a time must inevitably—like the manner itself—become old-fashioned, and therefore more or less unrealisable to persons deficient in that backward imagination which can recognise the familiar human nature in an unfamiliar vesture. There is little of pure narrative interest in Jane Austen's work; by which it is not meant that her stories are defective as mere stories, but that the interest they excite is entirely dependent upon the vividness with which the persons who move through them are realised by the imagination. Pride and Prejudice, for example, must prove a dull and tiresome book to a reader who finds himself unable to see and believe in Darcy, Elizabeth Bennet, and the other principal characters; and such inability was likely to be most largely found during the generation immediately succeeding that to which these characters belonged, for there was in the portraiture just enough of the familiar element to impart to the unfamiliar element an air of incongruity and incredibility. There is nothing really wonderful in the fact that Miss Austen's work should for a time have been pushed into the background, or that even among cultivated people of to-day there should be found many who fail to enjoy it. The number of these people is, however, bound to decrease, because sheer uncompromising truth to the realities of human nature—whether of its depths as in Shakespeare, or of its surfaces as in Jane Austen—is sure in the long run to be recognised and welcomed; and with every ten years, nay with every year, the difficulties in the way of such recognition and welcome will become fewer and fewer. Readers of thirty years ago, and, in a less degree, readers of to-day, have some difficulty in making themselves at home in Miss Austen's world, because it is neither sufficiently like the world they know to give them a feeling of familiarity, nor sufficiently unlike it to enable them to free themselves from the associations of their environment. To readers of fifty years hence, life in Mansfield Park and Northanger Abbey will be as completely detached from the life they know as is life in the palace of Elsinore and the forest of Arden; and when the detachment is accomplished, they will altogether lose sight of the incongruities which have during a whole generation put Jane Austen outside the ranks of really popular authors.

Jane Austen's time has not yet fully come, but it is coming very rapidly, and such a book as this of Mr. Goldwin Smith's can hardly fail to hasten its advance. He has not said "fine things," but he has said true, discriminating, and sympathetic things, and has said them in just the right way. His criticism is thoroughly good; but his main object has evidently been not to appraise Jane Austen but to inspire an interest in her—to make those who do not know her feel that they are missing a genuine delight, and that until they have read Emma and Pride and Prejudice and Mansfield Park their life is not so rich as it might be. This is a worthy aim, and in these pages it is worthily achieved.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

A Naturalist among the Head-hunters; being an Account of Three Visits to the Solomon Islands. By Charles Morris Woodford. (George Philip & Son.)

THESE visits were made at intervals during the years 1886-88, and consequently followed closely on Dr. Guppy's memorable expedition of 1882-84. In fact, from the references to that explorer's work, it may be inferred that Mr. Woodford's attention was directed to the Solomon group by the scientific papers which began to appear in various periodicals soon after his return to Europe. Mr. Woodford reserves for a future publication a detailed account of his wanderings through the Archipelago, of which only a brief summary appears in the present volume. His main objects were to collect zoological specimens, and, if possible, penetrate to the highlands in the interior of the larger members of the group. In the first object he was unusually successful, having contrived during his various visits to secure considerably over 20,000 specimens of mammals, birds, reptiles, and insects. Of the larger fauna the most interesting have been placed in the South Kensington Natural History Museum, while the majority of the lepidoptera, coleoptera, &c., have been distributed amongst private collectors. Among the butterflies are two varieties of the superb ornithoptera, O. Uvilleana, which is found throughout the western islands, and O. Victorias, the more beautiful of the two, whose range appears to be restricted to the centre of the group. These lovely creatures are so large as to be mistaken at first sight for pigeons, and individuals were met which measured nearly nine inches across the expanded purplish blue and greenish wings.

In his second object Mr. Woodford was not much more successful than his predecessors, although on one occasion he managed to get within three miles of the Lion's Head (Popo-mamisa), a peak which rises to a height of 5500 ft. in the centre of Guadalcanar. Such are the obstacles opposed to exploration by the dense tangle of tropical vegetation, the rugged surface, and the savagery of the local tribes, that no systematic surveys can be made until orderly government is introduced into these Melanesian islands. Native guides are useless beyond their own immediate district; and if you venture a little way into the neighbouring territory, you are congratulated on your safe return, and much surprise is expressed that you escaped being killed and eaten. No amount of kind treatment or familiar intercourse can secure immunity from sudden attack, as is evident enough from the fate of Commodore Goodenough and Bishop Pattison, and as is here illustrated by the tragic end of Mr. Lars Nielsen. Soon after his return to Europe, Mr. Woodford was shocked by the news of the murder of this kind-hearted trader who had accompanied him on the above-mentioned excursion to the Lion's Head, and who was famed far and wide for his just and generous dealings with the natives. Yet he found no protection from their treachery either in the profound knowledge of their character, acquired by a residence of over ten years, or in the uniform frankness and magnanimity of his bearing towards them.

In reference to this murderous propensity of the Solomon Islanders, and, in fact, of most Melanesian peoples, our traveller endorses the remark of Capt. Simpson, R.N., that the main object of their lives is to take each other's heads, adding that "from my somewhat wide and varied experience of them I am of opinion that the first thought that animates a native upon the sight of a stranger is 'Will he kill me?' Having answered this to his own satisfaction, his next thought is, 'Can I kill him?' the latter question being considerably influenced by the fear of future retribution to be apprehended from the friends of the stranger, in case he is a native; but in case of white men this fear of retribution hardly enters as a factor. Long experience has shown the native that he is comparatively free from any personal consequences, the utmost extent of the punishment to be apprehended being the possible loss of a few coco-nut trees."

The allusion here is to the incredibly imbecile action of the British authorities in the South Seas. The regulations of the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific forbid any retaliation upon the natives on the part of the resident white traders. Yet, when a murder is reported, it is either disbelieved, or else a man-of-war is sent round to fire off one or two shells in the bush, to the amusement of the culprits, who stand grinning at the fireworks sheltered behind their plantations within a few hundred yards of the beach. A hut or two may be levelled to the ground, which can be rebuilt before the vessel dips below the horizon; and meanwhile a white man's head has been secured as a trophy, cheaply purchased even by the destruction of a dozen villages.

Mr. Woodford mentions the case of a murder on Savo Island, the particulars of which he himself reported to the authorities, with the result that "the investigation of the matter was delegated to a government agent who was visiting the islands in a recruiting vessel. I did not see this gentleman, but the following message was given to me from him by a trader whom he met: 'It is no use you people in the islands sending up stories of this sort, because we make a different report, and of course we are believed.' Comment is needless."

Only one would like to ask how long this state of things is to be continued by the home and colonial authorities? Here is a statement which may possibly excite a languid interest in the breasts of the few Britons who have not yet joined the "Aborigines Protection Society," and who may consequently not feel ashamed of reserving a little sympathy for their own flesh and blood:

"All the villages of the district [east side of Malaita Island] will club together and make a pool of native money, shell-beads, armlets, necklaces of porpoise-teeth, and other ornaments, which goes to the village that distinguishes itself most in the attack upon the first vessel that comes along. At the village of Manauai, at the time I am writing of, might have been seen a receptacle raised on four posts and approached by a ladder. This was used as a bank for the pool-money so collected. At the time I last left the group—viz., December 1888, I knew that there was money out in this part of Malaita for a ship; and I regret to hear that the pool has since been won by an attack on the small trading schooner Savo, in which three white men and twelve natives lost their lives."

It will be remembered that by means of a copy of Gallego's unedited journal in the British Museum, Dr. Guppy for the first time clearly identified the Solomon group as the "Islands of Solomon" discovered by the Spaniards in 1567. The original of Gallego's memoir, apparently supposed by Dr. Guppy to be the only account of the discovery written by a member of Alvaro de Mendaña's expedition, is in the possession of Mr. W. Amherst Tyssen Amherst, as was known to Dr. Guppy. But he seems not to have known that Mr. Amherst possesses a still more important contemporary document—a much fuller account of the voyage written by Gomez Catoira, who was Mendaña's chief purser. By means of an English translation of this also unedited original MS., Mr. Woodford has succeeded in identifying many more of the places visited by the Spaniards. For this purpose he surveyed a large stretch of the north-east coast of Yeabel Island, and also paid several visits to the north-west end of Guadalcanar and to the neighbouring islet of Savo. He was thus able to identify the very point where the Spaniards landed on the east coast of Yeabel, and where the descendants of the tribe still survive who occupied the district at the time of Mendaña's visit. At least, he collected from one of the natives a few words

"that agree with those given in Catoira's Spanish Diary, and which proves conclusively that the same language is still spoken in this district as the Spaniards found more than three hundred years ago."

Mr. Woodford has thus unconsciously supplied another interesting proof of the marvellous vitality of these Malayo-Polynesian languages under the most adverse conditions—no written literature, no apparent norma loquendi, no social stability, but constant interminglings or dispersions due to chronic intertribal warfare, sudden surprises, raids, distant plundering, and head-hunting expeditions. Yet these frail forms of speech, which owing to the predominance of the vowel element are said to be "without a backbone," are found persisting with comparatively little radical change for countless ages throughout the oceanic regions from Madagascar to Easter Island and from Hawaii to Maoriland. For the migrations over this watery domain are not recent, as some have argued by a kind of petitio principii from this very uniformity of the oceanic languages. The dispersion east and west had already taken place before the irruption of the Hindus into the Eastern Archipelago for instance, as shown by the total absence of Sanskrit elements both in the Malagasy and the Eastern Polynesian tongues. Within the same period how profoundly divergent have become the Ossetian, the Armenian, the Albanian, the Keltic, and some other members of the apparently so much more stable Aryan stock. In the presence of this strange linguistic phenomenon we seem to be again reminded of the fable of the oak and the reed.

Mr. Woodford has a discerning eye for the local colouring of the South Sea Islands, and like a true naturalist blends the organic with the inorganic elements in his pictures of the surrounding scenery.

"I walk down to the sea, about twenty paces distant from the house-door, and look eastwards and westwards to see if there is any vessel in sight. The waves are lapping the sand beach, which, fringed with coco-nut palms and large Barringtonias, extends for a hundred yards each side of my house. At every step I take I disturb a dozen or so of little hermit-crabs, which scuttle away from their useful and constant work of general consumers of everything eatable at or near the water's edge. Fifty yards away, in deep water, just clear of the coral, a large turtle is floating on the surface. A pair of curlews run along the sand for a few paces, and then take to flight with their well-known cry. A bittern sits contemplatively on a small coral rock, keeping a motionless watchful eye the while for any unwary fry that may come within reach. A large white-bodied kingfisher (Halcyon Saurophaga), with azure head and wings, flies up from among the rocks with a flash in his beak, and settles among the branches of the Barringtonia above my head. Along the edge of the trees fringing the sand beach the small swifts (Callocalia) are already hawking up and down for insects. A pair of black and white flycatchers are flitting about, jerking and twisting their long tails, so tame that they sometimes come and peep into my house-door. Their nest with its mottled eggs is close by, on that dead branch, but so closely assimilated in form and colour to a knot of dead wood that it needs a practised eye to notice it."

For a "first attempt at authorship" this is promising enough to wish for more. The illustrations are all reproductions of photographs taken on the spot, and those where the natives are figured on a sufficiently large scale are consequently of considerable ethnological value. There are also three useful maps, based on the Admiralty Charts with additions and corrections by the author; appendices on the languages and migrations of the Polynesians; and an index.

A. H. KEANE.

The Ancient Classical Drama. By R. G. Moulton. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

MR. MOULTON has not written a history of Greek and Roman drama, but "a study in literary evolution intended for readers in English and in the original." He gives two chapters to the origin of tragedy and comedy respectively; but the greater part of the book consists in a descriptive analysis of the two kinds of drama, as presented to us in extant plays. Copious examples are given of everything on which he lays stress, and there is probably no English book from which so full and exact an idea of the subject may be obtained.

After an introductory chapter on the origin of tragedy, there follows a long account of the "Agamemnon," "Choephore," and "Eumenides," so as to make the reader at once acquainted with the very best remains of Greek tragedy, as far as an account of them in English with quotations from English renderings can achieve that end. Proceeding to analysis, Mr. Moulton dwells on the double functions of the chorus as spectators in and of the drama. He classifies choral odes, according to their topics, as odes of situation, odes of nature, odes of human life, and so on. He speaks of the "lyric solo," or monody, and the "lyric concerto," or kommos; and goes on to dwell upon the metres and the effects produced by them as they vary and alternate, illustrating his thesis by a passage from Mr. Browning's "Heracles," where this metrical effect is powerfully rendered. He speaks next of "dramatic motives," such as destiny (sometimes becoming providence, sometimes chance), horror, splendour (under which head he ably vindicates the treatment of Admetus in the "Alceste"), and works out in some detail a classification of plots in respect of the development or change of situations which they offer. Another chapter, entitled "Ancient Tragedy in Transition," after describing the treatment of the Electra story by the three dramatists, dwells upon the changes that are visible as tragedy progresses, especially in Euripides, and on their causes. The development or decadence is then shown us in the later stage of Seneca's imitations; and the tragic part of the book is concluded with an ingenious and interesting arrangement of "Macbeth" as a Greek tragedy.

Scholars familiar with the subject will find perhaps not much that is new in all this; but for those whom Mr. Moulton calls, not very grammatically, "readers in English," and whom he seems to have specially in view, it ought to prove interesting and instructive, and there are parts of it that anyone may read with pleasure. Mr. Moulton quotes constantly from English verse translators, such as Browning, Morhead, Plumptre; and this adds no little to the attractiveness of his pages. Perhaps his instances and illustrations will be found rather too numerous for the taste of persons not well read in the subject, for there is something rather trying in constant references to literary works with which the reader is not familiar. In one or two places an attempt is made to express different species of plot by algebraic formulæ—e.g., where the author says "the general formula for Roman plot would be CR; or, to bring out the multiplication of actions, $C_2 = R$." This mathematical method is, however, not allowed to appear in the text of the book, but is relegated to notes. A little perhaps in the same spirit are the very formidable tabular statements and genealogical trees that appear in an appendix. Intelligent readers will find the fuller statements in the book itself more agreeable and satisfying, and, indeed, easier to remember: they will ask with Juvenal "stemmata quid faciunt?" The author should qualify the statement on p. 15, which is, indeed, more often made than examined, that "choral odes are composed in the Doric dialect." In reality they come about as near to the Doric dialect as we are brought to the proper pronunciation of Latin by sounding the letter A in the continental fashion. In the adaptation of "Macbeth," the chorus is made to reflect on the punishment of Ajax, Heracles, and "the ruler of Babylon." Here Mr. Moulton has surely fallen into a little confusion; for if the chorus were Greek, they would hardly refer to Nebuchadnezzar, and, on the other hand, Ajax and Heracles would not readily occur to them if they were Scotch. Again, is it true that modern theatres relieve serious drama with a farce at the end of the evening? London managers would be surprised to hear it. The farce comes first, when there is one; and Mr. Moulton seems not to know the very valuable Greek inscriptions in which the satyric play occupies the same position. In speaking of Roman tragedy, he makes no mention of any plays but those of Seneca, and uninformed readers might suppose that there were no others written. No doubt he ignores the rest because they exist only in fragments, and cannot be judged of as works of art. They ought, however, not to be wholly passed over. The word "interlogue," which Mr. Moulton uses two or three times, belongs to no language, and can hardly be defended.

The remainder of the book deals with Greek and Roman comedy in the same way in which tragedy has been treated in the earlier part. Mr. Moulton makes frequent use of the verse-translations of Frere, and the equally excellent, though less well-known, versions by Mr. Rogers. A spirited account of the "Birds" is followed by an analysis of the comic elements corresponding to those of the elements of tragedy, and by some account of the New Comedy in its Roman dress. Mr. Moulton takes Aristophanes too seriously when he writes,

"In his serious parabases Aristophanes attacks the old-fashioned works of his rivals, boasts [? boasting] that he has driven from the theatre the countrified tricks and stage jesting of his predecessors and elevated comedy from its gluttons and weeping slaves to make it a war upon the Hercules monsters of public life. He is amply entitled to all the credit he claims."

It would in any case be rash to take the word of Aristophanes for the inferiority in this respect of his rivals; but, as a matter of fact, it is pretty well known that he was not entitled to any such credit, and that public life was the subject of comedy long before any work of his appeared upon the stage. If the error of believing what Aristophanes says were not still rather prevalent, it would seem needless to point out that an author of comic opera was not a serious and responsible writer.

It is interesting to read in Mr. Moulton's preface that, after giving in twenty-six different places lectures on the ancient drama,

"addressed to adult audiences, representing all classes of society, in which not one person in ten would know a word of Greek or Latin," he would rank "the ancient classics second only to Shakspeare and Goethe as an attractive subject for lectures." The following passage deserves to be well weighed, as the result of an unusual amount of experience.

"I am one of those who believe a knowledge of the ancient classical literatures to be a first requisite of a liberal education. I think it is a mistake to divert attention from these in favour of our own earlier literature. Our true literary ancestors are the Latin and Greek classics; the old English writers have had less influence in moulding our modern literature than have Homer and Virgil and the Greek dramatists. As a practical teacher of literature I find it almost impossible to give an intelligent grasp of form in Shakspeare to those who are ignorant of classical drama, for the first is the multiple of which the latter is the unit. . . . The ancient classics constitute a common stock from which the writers of all modern countries draw, and their familiar ideas are the currency in which modern literary intercourse is transacted."

Mr. Moulton adds the suggestion that in our schools and universities a considerable amount of the ancient classics in English should be substituted for part of the Latin or Greek now required, arguing that some such change would not seriously diminish a student's knowledge of the language, while it would develop his taste and imagination.

HERBERT RICHARDS.

A PRINTER AT AVIGNON IN 1444.

L'Imprimerie d'Avignon en 1444. Par l'Abbé Requin (Paris: A. Picard).

THE last word has not yet been written as to the date and local origin of the art of typography. In the lawsuit of Dritzehn versus Gutenberg, at Strassburg, in 1439, evidence was given that Gutenberg shortly before Christmas sent for all the formen at Dritzehn's and at Andrew Heilmann's, and had them melted in his presence. There has been a good deal of controversy as to whether these formen were separate letters or whole blocks. The documents discovered by M. Requin—already favourably known by his volume on the artists of Avignon as a diligent and careful searcher of records—leave little doubt that they were really separate letters.

Hitherto Avignon has ranked as the sixtieth locality in which printing was practised, and the art was supposed to have been introduced there by John Duprat, in 1497. The five documents now published carry the date back to 1444. These have been discovered in the registers of three different notaries, and there can be no doubt as to the absolute genuineness of any one of them. The first is a contract passed on March 10, 1446, by which one Procopius Valdfoghel, a goldsmith, native of Prague, binds himself to make and deliver to a Jew named Davin de Caderousse "viginti septem litteras Ebreaycas formatas scias in ferro, bene et debite, iuxta scienciam et practicam scribendi," shown and taught to the said Jew by Valdfoghel two years before, "unacum ingenis de fusta, de stagno, et de ferro." The Jew bound himself in return to teach Valdfoghel the art of dyeing textiles in certain colours, to pay for the "stagnum et fustes artificiorum sive ingeniorum scripture Ebrayce," and to restore certain goods and utensils which he held in pledge for a sum of ten florins, without charging Valdfoghel anything for interest or usury. The Jew further bound himself not to divulge the theory or practice of the new art to anyone.

By another deed dated April 26, 1446, Valdfoghel acknowledges to have received from the Jew all the goods he had pledged, save and except a mantle and forty-eight letters engraved in iron; and the Jew acknowledges to have received from Valdfoghel "omnia artificia ingenia et instrumenta ad scribendum artificialiter in litera Latina," and renews his promise to teach him the art of dyeing, and to keep the new art a secret under pain of forfeiting one hundred crowns.

The other documents show that Valdfoghel had also taught the new art in 1444 to a locksmith and mechanic named Gerard Ferrose, with whom he lived and had entered into partnership. Valdfoghel seems to have been often in want of money, and to have had recourse to the Jews, with whom on one occasion he pledged a clock of his partner's. To raise funds he also taught the new art to one George de Jardine; and to two clerics, Manand de Vitalis and Arnold de Coselbac, with the right to use in common with himself all the "instrumenta sive artificia causa artificialiter scribendi tam ferro de calibe, de cupro, de lethono, de plombo, de stagno et de fuste." Vitalis, at the request of Valdfoghel, gave him a formal acknowledgment that the new art of writing artificially which he had taught him was a true and very true art, easy, practicable, and useful to anyone willing to work at it diligently. When Master Manand de Vitalis had taken his degree of Bachelor in Laws and was about to return to Dax, he delivered to Valdfoghel "duo abecedaria calibis et duas formas ferreas, unum instrumentum calibis vocatum vitis, quadraginta octo formas stangni necnon diversas alias formas ad artem scribendi pertinentes," all which Valdfoghel promised to return whenever requested.

Where did this Bohemian goldsmith learn the art? Was he in any way connected with Hans Dünne, of Strassburg, and did he there discover Gutenberg's secret? Or can he be the thief who is said to have carried off on the night of Christmas, 1441, the types of Laurence Johnson Cester? Or are we to suppose that he was an independent inventor? This last hypothesis seems to me the least probable. Time will perhaps clear up the mystery. I cannot help thinking that the archives of Avignon may contain some information as to when Valdfoghel came thither and where from.

W. H. JAMES WEALE.

NEW NOVELS.

The Duke's Daughter, and The Fugitives. By Mrs. Oliphant. In 3 vols. (Macmillan.)

The Lawton Girl. By Harold Frederic. (Chatto & Windus.)

By Order of the Czar. By Joseph Hatton. In 3 vols. (Hutchinson.)

Wildwater Terrace. By Reginald E. Salway. In 2 vols. (Digby & Long.)

Lucinda. By Major G. F. White. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

The Treasure Tower. By Virginia D. Johnson. (Fisher Unwin.)

The Paradise of the North. By David Lawson Johnstone. (Remington.)

Lothair's Children. By H. R. H. (Remington.)

Prince Dick of Dahomey. By James Greenwood. (Ward & Downey.)

Of the two short novels—it would be nothing less than literary sacrilege to style them novelettes—which constitute Mrs. Oliphant's new three volumes, the less characteristic and the less artistic is the one to which the place of honour has been given. There is too much in it that borders on farce; and although Mrs. Oliphant has a large fund of quiet humour, she is incapable of farce even of the comparatively refined Gilbert-and-Sullivan order. The pig-headed, mentally fossilized Duke, with his poverty and his preposterous pride, is more than a bit of a caricature; while there is also a great deal too much of this farcical element in the half-marriage and temporary imprisonment of Lady Jane. There is not much genuine life in Lady Jane herself—nothing indeed but obstinate loyalty to her lover, who, for a "no nonsense" Englishman, is a trifle too effusive. The Duchess, however, is one of Mrs. Oliphant's delightful motherly women; and the little Committee of Private Safety that looks after Lady Jane, and consists of her more sensible relatives and connections by marriage, is very skilfully constituted indeed. But if The Duke's Daughter is a trifle disappointing, The Fugitives is one of the best of Mrs. Oliphant's shorter stories. The flight from England to the continent of Goulbourn, the man who has ruined other people, but who is, nevertheless, deserving of pity rather than of hatred, is itself a masterly piece of plot construction. But everything in The Fugitives is of the highest excellence—the contrast between English and French character, the almost feline love of Goulbourn for his younger daughter, the portrait of Goudron the harsh miser who would be a Quilp but for his inability to withstand a charmante petite demoiselle, and, above all, the portrait of Sir John Harvey, the eminently respectable, stiffly just Englishman who marries into a French family, and who is only saved by a thin nobility of nature and by culture from being a Bounderby, if not a Murdstone. Then, who but Mrs. Oliphant could have given us such an unconsciously magnanimous lover as Charlie Ashton, who marries Helen Goulbourn in spite of her father's character and in spite of Sir John Harvey, or fractious, all-conquering little Janey, or the French peasant couple, Baptiste and Blanchette, who at least have reason to drop a tear of gratitude on the tombstone of poor Goulbourn. In The Fugitives we have Mrs. Oliphant at her best, and than this there is nothing better in the "all round" comprehensively human sense in present day fiction.

The Lawton Girl is a strong story by the author of that remarkable book, Seth's Brother's Wife. One is reminded of The Scarlet Letter by the sin of Jessica Lawton, which in this volume she nobly lives, and dies, down. But in no other respect does this book recall Hawthorne, whose influence cannot be traced in it. It is a book not so much of remarkable incidents—although Jessica Lawton's final act of self-sacrifice is a piece of powerful description—but of contrasts in character. Horace Boyce, selfish, weak, yet not irretrievably bad, is contrasted on the one hand with his honest, resolute, and sagacious though not astute partner, Reuben Tracy, and on the other with his own father, who, though more of a Bohemian, is less of a scoundrel than himself. He is even contrasted with the "superior fiends" in the form of mercantile swindlers in Thessaly and New York, who for a time utilise him. Then Kate Minster is contrasted at almost every third page with her mother, and Jessica both with her father and her sisters. Indeed, the one fault to be found with The Lawton Girl is that one is perpetually asked in it to look upon this picture and on this. It is, however, one of the best, most pathetic, and, in the highest sense, most humorous books which have come even from America within the past few years. It is, too, a decided advance, from the artistic standpoint, upon Seth's Brother's Wife.

All things considered, By Order of the Czar is the cleverest, compactest, and sensationally most effective story that Mr. Joseph Hatton has published. In it he reproduces, as almost no other English writer has yet done, both Russian Nihilism and Russian hatred of the Jews. The first part of the story is perhaps unnecessarily repulsive. Mr. Hatton might have drawn a veil more completely over the frightful outrages which the wretched Anna Klosstock sustains at the hands and by the order of the ruffianly sensualist, Governor Petronovitch, who, besides, looks too much like the ghost of Colonel Kirke stalking the earth disguised as a Russian. Apart from this fault, however, the plot of By Order of the Czar is skilfully constructed without being too painful. Nothing could be better in its way than the weaving, by the ruthless Anna, who reappears as the attractive Countess Stravensky, of a web round the luckless Petronovitch; while Ferrari is all that a morally pure, intellectually subtle, absolutely merciless, and thoroughly Italian conspirator, should be. Then the English sunshine—essentially Cockney and middle-class though it is—which is contributed by the Milbankes, Dolly Norcott, Dick Chetwynd, and Sam Swynford, is very welcome as a relief from the Russian shade. There is something almost too tragic in the hopeless passion of the artist, Philip Forsyth, for the Countess Stravensky; but it enables Mrs. Milbanke to show her powers as a match-maker on behalf of her sister Dolly and her favourite Sam. This is a book which is sure to be read and—to the extent of nine-tenths—enjoyed.

The author of Wildwater Terrace has undoubtedly the power of plot-construction. From the moment that John Richford, in the first chapter of the first volume, takes possession of his property in Wildwater Terrace, to the last chapter of the second, in which the fearful and wonderful Mrs. Monkton dies game, the attention of the reader is kept on the stretch. Agathe Latour, otherwise Mrs. Monkton, otherwise Mrs. Rupert Deane, is a very cleverly drawn sketch of a thoroughly French adventuress, who will stick at nothing, not even at slow murder, to accomplish her ends. It must be allowed, however, that beyond the plot and the character of Mrs. Monkton, there is nothing in Wildwater Terrace that is specially notable. The love-making of John Richford and Adele Latour is very tame; and one can hardly conceive so strong a personality as Agathe allying herself to so pitifully weak a creature as the man who very properly subscribes himself "forger, gambler, and inebriate." Miss Tanner, the vindictive governess, who carries about with her a load of grievances, the chief of which is "unrequited love," might have served as a foil to the other and terribly serious characters had she not been so thoroughly conventional.

Major E. F. White can depict military boisterousness, courage, love of sport, and—it must be added—vulgarity in thought and character. So much is proved by these three rambling scrambling volumes with their Tibbertons and McTaverishes and Havilands, their Lotties and Leilas and Lucys, their horseplay and bad language and undisguised and unrefined delight at "going soon to have my arm round the waist of, and to be kissing, a sweet little ducky, who must some day bring me in every penny of a hundred thousand pounds." But they do not prove that their author ever will be able to write a novel, even although at the beginning of this story a cold-blooded deceiver goes through what he believes to be a mock but is nevertheless a genuine marriage, and although, before it ends, a young man very nearly marries his sister. It is impossible to get angry with Lucinda, which is full of animal spirits; but it is also impossible to say a good word for it as a work of art.

The Treasure Tower is a pleasant, vivacious military story of the conventional rather than of the "Booties' Baby" school. Flag-Lieutenant Arthur Curzon, of H.M.S. Sparrow, which has just arrived at Malta from Suda Bay, stumbles on a treasure tower, a ferocious old miser, and that ferocious old miser's pretty and spirited granddaughter, Dolores. As he "came of a family noted for intrepid courage and originality of mind and character," and as "his golden hair curled tightly on a small and shapely head, and a closely-trimmed beard framed a handsome face, with clearly-cut features, and lighted by a pair of keen blue eyes, capable of a great variety of expression," he has his own way. Miss Ethel Smythe, a garrison beauty of the ordinary sort, has her designs upon him, in which she is aided by Mrs. Griffith, an inveterate match-maker—i.e., "a stout and handsome matron, with smooth black hair, clear complexion, and tranquil grey eyes"; but he nevertheless falls effectually in love with Dolores, introduces her to amateur theatricals and a dancing party, elopes with her and marries her, and finally returns to Malta to find that the old miser is dead, and that through his wife he has "come in for a pot of money." There is plenty of gossip, though none of it specially malicious, and no psychology at all in The Treasure Tower; and it contains several excellent garrison portraits. That ancient and inconveniently loquacious mariner, Fillingham, and his wife, who has the rare art of being able to close his lips at the proper time, are very well drawn. Arthur Curzon does his part as the Young Lochinvar of the story remarkably well; and Dolores is quite as trustful and clinging as Amelia Sedley, and not nearly so limp. Altogether, this is a bright, healthy, sunshiny seaside book.

No doubt "H. R. H." is as much entitled to continue Lord Beaconsfield's story of Lothair as some scores of writers have felt themselves entitled to continue Dickens's Edwin Drood. Unhappily, too, he is only following the multitude when he introduces living personages, more or less disguised, into his book. But he surely exceeds the latitude allowed to writers of fiction when he makes Lothair marry not Corisande but Clare Arundel, and when he introduces into his pages two public men as Mr. Sadrooke and the Duke of Oldtowers. Altogether, Lothair's Children is a crude but not absolutely unpromising story of politics, society, Unionism, Fenianism, child-stealing, and love—both pure and of the sensuous sort, which is evoked by proximity to a "woman with white, gleaming bare arms and neck and throbbing breast, with the diamond stars blazing upon the snowy skin." "H. R. H." should not, however deal in grotesque impossibilities, and should be a little less violently political.

Mr. D. L. Johnstone is a Scotch disciple of M. Jules Verne, and, in The Paradise of the North, strives, not without success, to out-Verne his master. He sends out an expedition to the North Pole; and, of course, when the inevitable discovery is made, a Scotchman is found sitting atop. There is plenty of adventure in that portion of the story which precedes the discovery of the wonderful Norse Arctic paradise; and there is happily the merest suggestion of love-making. Dr. Felix Lorimer, the eccentric and peppery savant, recalls only too readily one or two of Jules Verne's more comic creations; but all the other characters, especially that modern and jealous "viking," Eyvind, are quite original. There can be little or no doubt that when Mr. Johnstone has emancipated himself from the Jules Verne spell, and forgets that there is such an author as Mr. Rider Haggard, he will make an admirable and popular writer for boys. As things are, there is far more genuine imaginative power in The Paradise of the North than has been revealed by any new writer for some years.

There is no lack of adventure in Mr. James Greenwood's new story, the scenes of which are laid in the too fashionable Dark Continent; there is indeed a plot or a combat in every second page. Prince Dick of Dahomey is a spirited lad, whose mother has been, to all intents and purposes, sold to King Gezo, of Dahomey, and who, with his friend Peter Pottinger—at once his fidus Achates and his Sancho Panza—gets into all sorts of scrapes in rescuing that mother out of the net in which she has been caught by her (and his) life-long enemy, the slave dealer, Caleb Krookhorn. Prince Dick is certainly a book that boys will gloat over, more especially as Mr. Greenwood does not pretend to teach much in the way of geography, natural history, or "manners and customs." Dick, Peter and the loyal one-eyed and strong-armed black Charki ought to have very good places assigned to them in the juvenile gallery of fiction. Yet how much better work is Mr. Greenwood capable of than Prince Dick of Dahomey?

WILLIAM WALLACE.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

History of the Catholic Church of Scotland from the Introduction of Christianity to the Present Day. By Alphons Bellesheim, D.D., Canon of Aix-la-Chapelle. Translated, with Notes and Additions, by D. Oswald Hunter Blair. (Blackwood.) We have now before us the first three of the four volumes in which this work is to be completed. Without being a history of original and independent research, it is in the main based upon the labours of historians of repute and authority. Indeed, as is more particularly noticeable in the first volume, Mr. Skene's admirable work on Celtic Scotland (vol. ii.) is in many places simply translated into German by Dr. Bellesheim, and from German re-translated back again into English by Mr. Blair. Nothing better for the German student could have been devised by Dr. Bellesheim; but sometimes the reader of the English work now before us is tempted to prefer Mr. Skene's views in his own words as he wrote them than after they have undergone the processes of a double translation. Prof. Grub, of Aberdeen, is now and again similarly treated. As an example (and examples could be indefinitely multiplied) take the following:

SKENE (VOL. II., P. 173).

"Four years after, in the year 697, he goes again to Ireland, and on this occasion he was accompanied by Brude, son of Derile, King of the Picts. His object was to obtain the sanction of the Irish people to a law exempting women from the burden laid upon all, of what was called fecht and sluagad, or the duty attending hostings and expeditions. For this purpose a synod was held at Tara, which was attended by thirty-nine ecclesiastics, presided over by the Abbot of Armagh, and by forty-seven chiefs of tribes, at the head of whom was the monarch of Ireland. The law exempting women from this burdensome duty was termed 'Lex innocentium,' and the enactments of the Synod were called 'Cain Adhamhnain' or 'Lex Adamnani,' &c.

BLAIR'S TRANSLATION OF BELLESHEIM (VOL. I., P. 145.)

"Four years later we meet with Adamnan again in Ireland, whither he was accompanied by Brude, King of the Picts. His object was to obtain the sanction of the Irish people to a law exempting women from the duty of rendering assistance in war. For this purpose a synod assembled at Tara under the presidency of the Abbot of Armagh, and was attended by thirty-nine ecclesiastics and forty-seven chiefs of tribes. The law by which women were freed from the burden of fecht and sluagad was known as 'Lex Innocentium,' and the canons of the synod were called Cain Adhamhnain or 'Lex Adamnani.'"

Similarly, without specific acknowledgment, extract after extract from Dr. Grub's accurate and scholarly Ecclesiastical History of Scotland is transferred to the pages of Bellesheim, and then reproduced in slightly modified English by Mr. Blair. As examples, taken quite at random, the reader may compare Blair's Bellesheim, vol. ii., p. 22, with Grub, vol. i., p. 344; or Blair's Bellesheim, ii. 69, with Grub, i. 370. Whether other writers with which we are less familiar have been similarly dealt with we cannot say. But though the History of the Catholic Church in Scotland is in the main a compilation, we can say ungrudgingly that it is the compilation of a man of scholarly instincts, possessed of a large measure of critical acumen. And, at least in its English form, it is written in a pleasing and attractive style. The ecclesiastical prepossessions of the writer affect the merits of the work but slightly; and it is written in a spirit of fairness and candour that is as valuable as it is rare. Mr. Blair, indeed, cannot always restrain himself, and in the translator's footnotes he has now and then his fling at his ecclesiastical opponents. Students of early Christian literature are familiar with the piety which saw the sign of the Cross in a thousand familiar objects, but Dr. Bellesheim finds a proof of a similar devotion on the part of the monks of Iona in the fact that "even the masts and yards of their ships were arranged in cruciform fashion" (vol. i. 105). We know, on the high authority of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, that "the British tar is a soaring soul"; yet we never should of ourselves have advanced, as a proof of his deeply religious instincts, that the ships of both merchant and Royal Navy are "square-rigged." But weaknesses like this on the part of Dr. Bellesheim, we are bound to say, are exceptional. And in truth, the lives of the early Celtic saints are treated in a manner that deprives them of much of their interest by the excision of the more stupendous and entertaining miracles. And we are disappointed in the uncritical method of finding true history in legendary lives, chiefly by the simple process of discarding the grotesque and the prodigious. Surely the heraldic arms of the city of Glasgow, with the ring in the salmon's mouth, and the redbreast whose head St. Mungo fastened on, would suggest that a word of explanation should be given. The misfortune is that the facts which are taken as authentic come to us on the same authority as the very amusing miracles which Dr. Bellesheim disdains even to record. The period of the Reformation is dealt with in a tone that does credit to Dr. Bellesheim, but of course it cannot be expected that his view will be satisfactory on the whole to the majority of historical students in this country. But here again Mr. Blair has shown himself less qualified than Dr. Bellesheim for unprejudiced historical inquiry. The partisan and controversialist is stamped on far too many of the translator's notes. And quite apart from questions of ecclesiastical controversy, his judgment is not to be trusted. We cannot congratulate Mr. Blair on the success of his attempt to depreciate the credit of Bishop Stubbs (now of Oxford) on a matter where historical learning and historical impartiality are required. Mr. Blair commits himself to the existence of "King Lucius," and declares that he is no more to be swept away by Bishop Stubbs "than the Atlantic by Mrs. Partington's broom." The third volume, which has recently appeared, brings the history down to the death of James VI. And in dealing with the obscure annals of the unreformed Church after its violent suppression as the religion of the State, much interesting matter not readily accessible to the English reader is utilised by Dr. Bellesheim. The ecclesiastical maps of Scotland at three different periods are highly serviceable.

L'Italie Mystique : Histoire de la Renaissance religieuse au Moyen Âge. Par Emile Gebhart. (Paris: Hachette.) This is a very attractive volume. It deals with such themes and personages as the civilisation of Southern Italy in the thirteenth century, and the religious reform of St. Francis and the Dominicans. Arnold of Brescia, the Abbot Joachim of Flora, the Emperor Frederick II., St. Francis himself, John of Parma, Pope Celestine III., Dante, and Jacopone de Todi pass in review before us in these pages. The author has studied his original sources. He is well read in what has been written on the subject in Italian, German, and French; but something might have been gained had he extended his researches to English and Spanish—Milman's History of Latin Christianity, vols. iv.-vi., might have given him some additional hints, beside the works of Mrs. Jameson and Mr. Symonds. In Spanish the work of Sra. Pardo Bazán, San Francisco de Asís, covers a great deal of the same ground. But it would be almost ungracious to ask for more from an author who has given us so much, were it not that one of the best proofs of the value of the book is that it thus stimulates the appetite. The sketch of Arnold of Brescia is well done; the portrait of the Abbot Joachim of Flora and the mystic teaching which afterwards became the "Everlasting Gospel" is more finished. The poetry and singular charm of the life of Saint Francis are well described; and the existence from the first of the germs of the contradictory principles in the mystic contemplative hermits and the monks and preachers in the world, which worked the schism of his followers, is distinctly brought out. The life of John of Parma is given with some detail. Here we learn to understand the indignant contempt of Dante for Pope Celestine V.: "Che fece per viltate il gran rifiuto." In contrast with these mystics and their shrinking from the world, whose crimes they denounced and shuddered at, for which they prophesied a fearful retribution—by the side of these we have the character of Frederick II., "the wonder of the world." Perhaps justice is hardly done to his great intellectual qualities, his tolerance beyond his age, his farseeing political views. (We may remark in passing that it may have been at his court and from him that our own Simon de Montfort first learnt the principles of parliamentary representation, which he after applied with such lasting results in England.) But the difference of his conception of the Holy Roman Empire of the West, from that of Charlemagne and most of his successors, is excellently put. Frederick's ideal was not a western one—that of an empire with a secular head supreme in political life and in war, side by side with a pope of equal if not superior authority in all else, and the ideal rule consisting in the harmonious working of these two powers. Very different was Frederick's conception. He turned in all things to the east rather than to the west. It was the part of a Byzantine emperor that he would play, the rôle of Constantine and of Justinian rather than that of Theodosius and of Henry IV.; nay, not even that of a St. Louis. Hence his failure; in vain he persecuted heretics, in vain he went on a crusade, and opened anew the road to the Holy Sepulchre. He could not bring the east into the west, the Bishops of Rome were far too strong to be treated as the patriarchs of Constantinople. The volume closes with an account of Dante, and of his relations to the religious movements and to the mysticism of his age. It would be difficult to find a better introduction to the study of religion in Italy from the twelfth to the fourteenth century than this volume. It is packed full of fact and matter, yet told in so clear and agreeable a style that the reader is led on without fatigue. With all who are fond of such works as Vaughan's Hours with the Mystics, this should be a favourite.

John Hannah. A Clerical Study. By J. H. Overton. (Rivingtons.) Archdeacon Hannah, who had made for himself a high reputation as a college tutor and schoolmaster, was summoned at the age of fifty-two to take the spiritual charge of Brighton when he "had hardly ever seen a parish or done a parochial act." It was a hazardous experiment, but, on the whole, was most successful. Dr. Hannah was apt at organisation, and this was just what Brighton needed: That town had grown so rapidly that the regular methods for dealing with its spiritual wants had not, and, perhaps, could not have, been employed. He set himself the task of reducing the ecclesiastical chaos into something like order; and, by his excellent judgment, tact and strength of will, he accomplished his object. The work was not altogether congenial. He would have preferred to live among the Elizabethan poets, and to employ his pen upon more distinctly literary matters than visitation charges and parochial sermons. But duty pointed out to him another course; and, having once entered upon it, he pursued it to the end with ceaseless vigour and rare conscientiousness. Canon Overton has done his work well. There is not a dull page in the book, nor one that is superfluous.

Memoirs of Francis Thomas McDougall, D.C.L., sometime Bishop of Labuan and Sarawak, and of Harriette his wife. By O. J. Bunyon. (Longmans.) This is a rather too copious biography of two excellent people, who did their duty and were sometimes misunderstood. Bishop McDougall was an honest, hardworking, and kind-hearted missionary; but, when the ship in which he was sailing was attacked by blood-thirsty pirates, he joined the crew in repelling the attack, and used his gun with considerable effect. He was indiscreet enough to dwell upon this incident in a letter to the Times, with the result that he was denounced at home by Bishop Baring and others for "shooting the poor heathen instead of converting them." When the hubbub subsided, the bishop got more sympathy than blame; and his later years were passed in the tranquillity of a country parsonage and cathedral close. The most interesting part of the book is that which deals with the scenery and conditions of life in Borneo, where the bishop and his wife did good work as civilising as well as Christianising agents.

On Highgate Hill. By John Pym Yeatman. (Bradbury, Agnew, & Co.) The Passionist Monastery in Highgate has, we learn, a dome more conspicuous than St. Paul's, though not nearly so large. It has been successful in other ways. Probably it did a good deal to create a public for Mr. Yeatman's pamphlet, which has reached a third edition. It contains a good deal of information about the Passionists; a little about Cardinal Newman, including a statement that Tract 90 is his greatest work; a good deal of second-hand talk about Coleridge, sometimes shrewd and always spiteful; and a good deal of local antiquarian discussion which takes the form of controversy with Mr. Lloyd.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. EDWARD T. COOK—author of "A Popular Handbook to the National Gallery," of which an enlarged edition will shortly be issued by Messrs. Macmillan—has just finished a new work, entitled Studies in Ruskin. The first part will expound "the gospel according to Ruskin," applying his principles of art to practical life; the second part will describe some aspects of his work—at Oxford and the drawing school he founded there, at the Working Men's College, in connexion with the St. George's Guild, May Queens, and various industrial experiments—with a special chapter on his relations with the booksellers. In an Appendix will be given notes on Mr. Ruskin's Oxford lectures in 1877 and 1884. The volume will contain twelve woodcuts, including Sir J. E. Boehm's portrait-bust. There will also be a large-paper edition, extra-illustrated with fifteen autotypes of original drawings by Mr. Ruskin, presented by him to the Drawing School at Oxford, and now reproduced for the first time. The book will be published by Mr. George Allen.

THE Rev. F. A. Malleon, vicar of Broughton-in-Furness, has written a little volume entitled Holiday Studies of Wordsworth by Rivers, Woods, and Alps, giving descriptive accounts, from personal knowledge, of Bolton Abbey and the Wharfe, the Duddon, and the Stalvio Pass in Switzerland. One chapter will be devoted to Wordsworth's "Westmorland girl," who died in the author's parish. The book will be published, in foolscap quarto, by Messrs. Cassell & Co., at the end of the present month.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & Co. announce a new edition of Samuel Pepys' Diary, in four demy octavo volumes, printed in the best manner from new founts of type. The text selected is the 1848 (third) edition by Lord Braybrooke, the whole of whose notes and biography will be revised and included in this edition. The first two volumes will be ready almost immediately.

Two new volumes in the Mermaid Series of "The Best Plays of the Old Dramatists" will be published shortly by Messrs. Vizetelly & Co.—a first volume of Ben Jonson, edited by Dr. Brinsley Nicholson, with an introduction by Prof. C. H. Herford, and an engraving after the portrait by Honthorst; and a second volume of Thomas Middleton, edited by Mr. Havelock Ellis, the general editor of the series, with an etching of Mary Frith, "The Roaring Girl."

Newspaper Reporting in Olden Times and To-day, by Mr. John Pendleton, will be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock, as the new volume of the "Book Lovers' Library."

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. have in the press a new novel entitled In the Sunlight, by Miss Angelica Selby.

Church and State: an Historical Handbook, by Mr. A. Taylor Innes, will be published this month by Messrs. Clark, of Edinburgh.

THE next volume in the series of "Eminent Actors" will be Thomas Betterton, written by Mr. R. W. Lowe.

THE popular editions of Mr. Barnett Smith's Life of Mr. Gladstone will in future be published by Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. A new edition of the work is now in the press, and will be ready for issue almost immediately.

MR. WALTER LEWIN has contributed to the Boston Arena an article on "Robert Owen at New Lanark," tracing the rise and progress of that famous experiment and suggesting its application to the labour question of the present day. The same writer's article on "The Abuse of Fiction," which was published in the Forum last year, will be reprinted with some additions in Mr. John Robb's series of "Pioneer Booklets."

FROM the report of the Osham Society, read at the annual meeting held on May 1, we learn that in future two volumes only instead of three will be issued in the year. The following are the three volumes for 1888-89, which are either ready or well advanced in the press: (1) Correspondence of Edward, Third Earl of Derby, during the years 24 to 31 Henry VIII., edited by Prof. Toller, of Owens College, from a MS. in the possession of Miss Farington, of Worden. This correspondence deals with three classes of subjects—scandal about Anne Boleyn, the Pilgrimage of Grace, and the domestic affairs and estates of the earl. (2) The first volume of Minutes of the Proceedings of the First Presbyterian Classis in the County of Lancaster (1646-60), edited by Mr. W. A. Shaw; and (3) the first volume of Records of the Parish Church and Vicars of Lancaster, edited by Mr. W. O. Roper, comprising the chartulary of the priory of Lancaster, printed from the original MS. in the British Museum. For future issue, Dr. Frank Renaud has undertaken to edit the late Canon Raines's Lives of the Fellows and Chaplains of the College of Manchester; and Canon Atkinson, of Bolton, the late Sir Stephen R. Glynne's Notes on the Churches of Lancashire and Cheshire, which were made about fifty years ago, before the destructive epoch of restoration, and which are now the property of Mr. W. E. Gladstone.

M. L'Abbé V. Dubarat, Aumonier of the Lycée of Pau, proposes to reprint, by subscription, with full introduction and liturgical and historical notes, the unique copy of the Breviary of the extinct bishopric of Lescar (1541). The work will be sold to subscribers only, price twenty francs.

UNDER the title of Sociale Fragen vor 200 Jahren, Herr H. Fischer has prepared, and Herr Hirschfeld of Leipzig publishes, a German translation of Defoe's Essay on Projects.

ON Monday next, May 19, Messrs. Sotheby will begin the sale—which will last altogether for twenty-one days—of "the choicer portion" of the library of the late Sir Edward Sullivan, Lord Chancellor of Ireland. Sir Edward seems to have been an omnivorous collector, and to have purchased largely at the recent great London sales. He possessed no less than 186 of the productions of the Aldine Press, including counterfeits; and 90 Elzevirs. We may also single out for mention (among such a vast number of lots) two or three of the folios of Shakspeare, and the rare early editions of Ruskin and Tennyson. A copy of Pine's Horace printed on one side only is believed to be unique. At the end of the catalogue comes a more choice collection of autographs, including Burns's MS. of "Scots wha hae," a characteristic letter of Charles Lamb to Miss Betham, and a volume of Southey correspondence.

THOSE who are interested in dainty verses, daintily printed, may be glad to have their attention called to a little quarto in paper covers, entitled Flower and Bird Posies, which has just issued from the press of Mr. John Bellows, of Gloucester. The joint authors, Prof. A. H. Church and Mr. R. H. Soden-Smith, have here united to revive an old-time English fashion of inscribing appropriate rhymes on "roundels" or fruit-trenchers. Prof. Church, who is responsible for the "Flower Posies," has been the more careful of the two to confine his Muse to the narrow limits of her task, as may be seen from the following specimen:

"THE DAISY."
"My disc is gold, my rays
Of silver are:
Into the day I gaze,
A day-born star."

Mr. Soden-Smith has arranged his "Bird Posies" in the order of the seasons, and has indulged himself in a longer flight, which allows the introduction of both original and reminiscent word-pictures. The authors, who are likewise the publishers, will be happy to send a copy to any applicant who encloses half-a-crown, addressed to Shelsley, Kew Gardens. The entire proceeds go to the Servants' Training Home at Richmond, for which institution Prof. Church and his wife had a sale last Saturday of old china and bronzes, realising over £70. The occasion does not often offer itself of helping a deserving charity and of acquiring at the same time such an attractive possession.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

PROF. JEBB, who has been appointed Rede lecturer at Cambridge this year, has chosen for his subject "Erasmus." The lecture will be delivered on June 11.

A STATUTE has been proposed at Oxford admitting women to the examinations in law and in music. Theology, medicine, and Oriental languages will then be the only schools confined to men.

PROF. CAYLEY has given a donation of £500 towards the new buildings of the University Library at Cambridge.

DR. DASTUR JAMASPI MINOCHEHERJI, of Bombay—who last year presented to the University of Oxford his MS. of the Yasma, with Pahlavi translation—has now offered to the Bodleian Library another valuable MS. of the same work, containing a Sanskrit translation.

THE financial board at Cambridge have reported to the senate a recommendation to sell the whole of the Consols belonging to the university (which amount to about £270,000), and to re-invest the proceeds in other securities authorised by statute.

THE course of Bampton Lectures on "The Fourth Gospel" which Archdeacon Watkins is now delivering at Oxford will shortly be published in volume form by Mr. John Murray.

THE special board for oriental studies at Cambridge recommend the appointment of a university reader in Talmudic, who shall also give instruction in other branches of post-Biblical Hebrew, with special reference to the subjects of examination in the Semitic languages tripos. The proposed stipend is £100, instead of £300, which was paid to the late reader in Talmudic.

THE first annual meeting of the supporters of Mansfield College will be held on Tuesday next, May 20. In the afternoon, Mr. Riseley, of Bristol, will give an organ recital; and in the evening there will be a concert of sacred music in the chapel, under the direction of Mr. John Farmer.

THE Oxford Architectural and Historical Society was to make an excursion to-day (Saturday) to Brill and Boarstall, where Mr. C. H. Firth had undertaken to offer remarks upon points of interest in connexion with the movements of the opposed forces during the Civil War.

THE following is a full list of contents of the second series of Collectanea which will be issued immediately by the Oxford Historical Society, under the editorship of Prof. Montagu Burrows: "The Oxford Market," by the Rev. O. Ogle; "The University of Oxford in the Twelfth Century," by Prof. T. E. Holland; "The Friar Preachers of the University," edited by the Rev. H. Rashdall; "Notes on the Jews in Oxford," by Dr. A. Neubauer; "Linacre's Catalogue of Grocy's Books," followed by a memoir of Grocy, by the editor; "Table-Talk and Papers of Bishop Hough, 1703-1743," edited by the Rev. W. D. Macray; "Extracts from the Gentleman's Magazine relating to Oxford, 1731-1800," by Mr. F. J. Haverfield; "Day-Book of John Dorne, Bookseller at Oxford, 1520," by F. Madan, including "A Half-Century of Notes on Dorne," by the late Henry Bradshaw.

KING'S COLLEGE, London, has just received the means of organising two new departments. The widow of Sir William Siemens, in fulfilment of the intentions of her husband, has given £8,000 for the establishment of an electrical laboratory, of which Dr. John Hopkinson will be the new professor; and Mr. Banister Fletcher, master of the Carpenters' Company, has subscribed liberally towards the formation of an architectural museum.

WE regret to hear that the University of St. Andrews has been obliged to abandon its proposed summer session for women, in consequence of the required number of students not having applied.

THE Nizam of Haidarabad has founded twelve studentships of £300, tenable in England by natives of his state for four years. The students must devote themselves to medicine, engineering, agriculture, or any other profession than law.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

BALLADE OF YE OLDE CHESHIRE CHEESE.

A HOME of antique ease and peace
There is, within the City's pale;
A spot wherein the spirit sees
Old London through a thinner veil.
The modern world, so stiff and stale,
You leave behind you, when you please,
For long clay pipes and great old ale
And beefsteaks in the Cheshire Cheese.
Beneath this board Burke's, Goldsmith's knees
Were often thrust—so runs the tale—
'Twas here the Doctor took his ease,
And wielded speech that, like a flail,
Thrashed out the golden truth. All hail
Great souls, that sat on nights like these,
Till morning made the candles pale,
And revellers left the Cheshire Cheese!
By kindly sense and old decrees
Of England's use they set their sail—
We press to never-furrow'd seas,
For vision-worlds we breast the gale,
And still we seek, and still we fail,
For still the "glorious phantom" flees!
Ah, well! no phantom are the ale
And beefsteaks of the Cheshire Cheese.

Envoi.

If doubts or debts thy soul assail—
If Fashion's forms its current freeze—
Try a long pipe, a glass of ale,
And supper in the Cheshire Cheese!

T. W. ROLLESTON.

OBITUARY.

DR. WILLIAM KIRBY SULLIVAN, for the last twenty years president of Queen's College, Cork, died on Monday last, May 12, at the age of sixty-eight. He was a native of Cork, and received his early education (we believe) in the School of the Christian Brothers. While still young he went to Germany to study chemistry under Liebig; and upon his return he became professor of chemistry at the College of Science, Dublin, and afterwards at the Catholic University. In literature he is best known for his edition of the last three volumes of MS. Materials of Ancient Irish History (1873), in which he added valuable notes to O'Curry's lectures on "The Manners and Customs of the Ancient Irish"; and for his contribution to the recent volume entitled Two Centuries of Irish History, which treats of the period from 1689 to 1782. In Ireland, apart from politics, his name will always be honoured for his life-long services in organising education, and in promoting industrial and agricultural enterprise.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ALT-MUSEUM in Bildern u. erläuterndem Text v. W. Loewe. M.-Leben. Moscho. 16 M.
FABRE, A. Etudes littéraires sur le XVII^e siècle. Chaplain, et nos deux premières Académies. Paris: Didier. 7 fr. 50 c.
FICHER, K. Goethe-Schriften. 3. Goethes Tasso. Heidelberg: Winter. 6 M.
GAUTHIER, Léon. Portraits du XVII^e Siècle. Paris: Didier. 8 fr. 50 c.
HAYN, H. Bibliotheca Germanorum nuptialis. Köln: Teubner. 4 M.
LYS Amors d'Helain-Pisan et d'Isoult de Savoisy, mises en prose par Loys-Julius Gastine et ornées d'images par E. Zier. Paris: Quantin. 90 fr.
MUSEUMSCHWEIZERISCHER GLASMALETER. Erläuternd Text v. A. Hafner. Berlin: Olscamp. 160 M.
PHEANGOUIS, G. S. Olympe. Athens: Wilberg. 5 fr.
PILLER, Ch. Madame Vigée le Brun. Paris: Lib. de l'Art. 2 fr. 50 c.
SARRAZIN, G. La Renaissance de la poésie anglaise, 1798-1819. Paris: Didier. 8 fr. 50 c.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- ATROLES, J. B. J. La Fucelle devant l'église de son temps: documents nouveaux. Paris: Gaume. 15 fr.
BROCK, K. Zur Verfassungsgeschichte d. Rheinlands. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 30 Pf.
BOFFREUILLE DE MARSANGY, L. Madame de Beaumarchais d'après sa correspondance inédite. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
CHAPOTIN, M. D. Etudes historiques sur la province dominicaine de France. Paris: Lecoffre. 5 fr.
DES OARS, le Duc. Mémoires du Duc des Oars. Paris: Plon. 15 fr.
FRAGMENTS des anciennes chroniques d'Alsace. II. Strasbourg: Notriol. 10 M.
LUMBROSO, C. ed R. LASCHI. Il delitto politico e la rivoluzione in rapporto al diritto, all'antropologia criminale ed alla scienza di governo. Turin: Loescher. 14 fr.
MERIC, Ella. Le clergé sous l'ancien régime. Paris: Lecoffre. 8 fr. 50 c.
REUSS, E. Correspondances politiques et chroniques parisiennes adressées à Christophe Günther, syndic royal de la ville de Strasbourg (1681-1686). Paris: Fischbacher. 8 fr.
SOKRATZ, J. Kritik der Staatsformen des Aristoteles. Vermehrte Ausgabe. Eisenach: Baumeister. 8 M. 60 Pf.
SREULLAZ, G. Les sociétés de secours mutuels et la question des retraites. 7 fr. Essai sur la religion romaine et sur les rapports de l'état romain avec quelques religions étrangères. 7 fr. Lyon: Oete.
WARNECK, A. Leben u. Wirken d. Lazarus v. Schwendi. I. Tl. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 1 M. 40 Pf.
ZELLER, Jules. Les Empereurs du XIV^e Siècle. Habsbourg et Luxembourg. Paris: Didier. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- REWARD, Ad. Traité de chimie appliquée à l'industrie. Paris: Baudry. 30 fr.
STIBERUS. Die Kategorien der sinnlichen Perception. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M.
TROUSSART, E. L. La Géographie zoologique. Paris: J. B. Baillière. 8 fr. 50 c.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ACTA Mar Kardaghi, Assyriae praefecti, qui sub Sapore II. Martys occubuit. Syriace juxta manuscriptum Amidense una cum versione latina edidit J. B. Abbeloos. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 8 M.
BEITRÄGE. H. v. Varnhagen, zur englischen Philologie. Hrg. v. H. Varnhagen. Leipzig: Deichert. 5 M. 40 Pf.
DU CANGE, C. du Fresnoy. Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae aetatis. Effigies recens cum veteri editione a. 1688 prorsus congruens. (Anastaticher Neudruck.) Fasc. 1. Breslau: Koebner. 9 M. 60 Pf.
EPHRAEMIS epigraphica, corporis inscriptionum latinarum supplementum. Vol. VII. Fasc. 3. Berlin: Reimer. 5 M.
HOFER, U. Konon. Text u. Quellenuntersuchg. Griefswald: Bamberg. 2 M. 80 Pf.
LOCH, E. De titulis graecis sepulchralibus. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 60 Pf.
LOTS, J. Les Mabinogion, traduits en entier pour la première fois en français. Paris: Thorin. 16 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE OXFORD INVITATION TO THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

Oxford: May 12, 1890.

Some surprise has been caused here by letters which appeared in the last number of the ACADEMY on the subject of a communication addressed a little time ago by members of this University to the eminent scholars who meet from time to time under the title of the International Congress of Orientalists. In that communication the Congress was invited to hold its next meeting at Oxford, and the traditional hospitality of the University was placed at its service. It is alleged by the writer of one of the letters—himself an Orientalist of distinction—that the invitation seemed to him at first sight to be an act of extreme discourtesy, and that it was only relieved from that charge by the ignorance shown in the manner in which it was addressed. As our names appear (among many others) on the document in question, we shall be glad to have an opportunity of stating the grounds on which we acted.

At a sitting of the International Congress of Orientalists, held at Christiania on September 12, 1889, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Il est formé un comité des présidents des quatre derniers Congrès, MM. Dillmann, Kuenen, Kremer, et Landberg (assimilé aux présidents). Ce comité devra coopter un membre de chaque pays pour former un grand comité international devant élaborer de nouveaux statuts pour le Congrès et faire des démarches en vue de fixer l'endroit où se tiendra le prochain Congrès."

We are assured that this resolution stands on the records of the Congress, signed by M. Bonnevie, President at Christiania and Minister of Public Instruction for Norway, and countersigned by Prof. J. Lieblein, as vice president, and by Count Landberg, as secretary.

Under these circumstances it must be clear that an invitation to the Oriental Congress from any place which desired to be the seat of its next meeting could only be addressed to this committee of presidents. The committee may or may not be authorised to accept such an invitation, but their secretary was the only person to whom it could be sent.

If we had known then, as we are now informed, that there is disagreement among the members of the Congress on the question of procedure, it would still have been clearly improper for us to take any action which could be interpreted as interference in the matter. We addressed our invitation to the persons who formed de facto the executive of the Congress, and who are now in possession of its records and accounts; trusting that they would submit it to whatever committee or other body might have authority to accept or decline.

We, therefore, cannot plead guilty to the charge of ignorance any more than to the alternative charge of discourtesy.

It may be desirable to add that, although the invitation received the cordial support of most of the Oriental scholars whom we are proud to have as residents here, it was not set on foot in the first instance by any of them. It owed its origin, we venture to say, to a general wish in the University that the place of meeting of the Oriental Congress should be at once convenient to its members and not unworthy of the distinction which such a visit would confer.

DAVID B. MONRO.
WILLIAM E. ANSON.
WILLIAM MARKBY.

BRATTON'S "ONE AND KEY."

Oxford: May 10, 1890.

We read in the Rolls Series edition of our great mediæval jurist Henry of Bratton, or Bratton as we must continue to call him in consequence of the ignorance of his editors:

"Femina vero plenae esse poterit aetatis in sockagio omni casu, cum possit et sciat domui suae disponere et ea facere quae pertinent ad dispositionem et ordinationem domus, ut sciat quae pertineant ad one et key, quod quidem esse non poterit ante quartum decimum annum vel decimum quintum, quia huiusmodi aetas requirit discretionem et sensum."—Lib. ii. c. 37, § 2, vol. ii. p. 4 (fo. 86 d).

This phrase occurs again in § 3, where the author objects to the unqualified acceptance of the doctrine that a woman attained her majority at fifteen:

"Sed si ita esset, tunc sequeretur istud inconveniens, quod infra legitimam aetatem novem et unius anni, posset placitare et implacitari per breve de recto, et respondere ante tempus legitimum, et cum esset quatuordecim vel quindecim annorum, et unde videtur quod talis aetas intelligenda sit de sockagio et non de feodo militari, quia in tali aetate potest disponere domui suae et habere one et key, et septimo anno consentire matrimonio, et virum sustinere anno duodecimo."

It is notorious that the Rolls edition is little better than a reprint of the Elizabethan folio, faithfully repeating all the blunders of the transcriber for the earlier edition. Sir Travers Twiss, the later "editor," claims to have collated several MSS.; but his collation is confined to noting here and there a few insignificant variations. He prints sheer nonsense with quite as much sang-froid as the Elizabethan editor. For proof of these grave charges I can refer to the exposures of the blunders in this edition by Prof. Vinogradoff and Prof. Maitland. But the single chapter here cited affords ample evidence of the worthlessness of this text and the incredible carelessness of its "editor." In it an heir in socage is said to attain his majority "cum 25 annos compleverit." All the MSS. I have consulted read, as might be expected, "xv. annos"; but not a word is said by Twiss as to the existence of any such reading. Again, in the second of the quotations printed above we have the astounding statement that the "legitima ætas" of majority is "novem et unius anni." This is translated by Sir Travers Twiss without a twinge as the lawful age of "nine years and one." No word is said of any different reading in any MS., in spite of the glaring nature of a blunder which, apart from other considerations, involves the impossible assumption that 14 and 15 are less than 10. The MSS. read, it seems hardly necessary to state, "viginti et unius annorum."

The phrase cove and keye was copied by Spelman from the printed text of Bracton, and from Spelman it has been borrowed by the writers of law dictionaries. Spelman derived the first word from A.S. colne, "computus"; but there is no trace of any such word, and its form does not seem to be an A.S. one. Nor is the meaning satisfactory, for few housewives in Bracton's times were capable of keeping household accounts.

Knowing how unreliable the Rolls text is, I have recently examined the early Oxford MS. of this work. These consist of six MSS. of very little later date than the author's lifetime. Probably all of them were written within a generation of his death, which occurred in or before 1268. These MSS. are the Bodleian MSS. Rawlinson C. 158, C. 159, C. 160, MS. Bodley 170, and MS. Digby 222. I have also consulted the Merton College MS. O. 3, 9 (No. 320 in Cox's Catalogue). This MS. is not even mentioned by Twiss, although it is of early date. It is in splendid preservation, and is altogether a magnificent MS. with a remarkable freedom from contractions. The handwriting has a great resemblance to that of one of the scribes of the Digby MS., and a careful comparison of the two MSS. might bring out some good results.

The result of my examination is that, in the above passages, four of the most important MSS. (Rawl. C. 160, fo. 47 d. col. 1; Bodley 170, fol. 96; Digby 222, fo. 39d., and the Merton MS., fo. 40) have the first word written, plainly enough, cove.^{*} Twiss remarks, in one of the few notes he occasionally vouchsafes us, that "'cove & keye,' such is also the reading of MS. Rawl. C. 160." The true reading cove (= cove) presents no difficulty. It is obviously the Mid. English form of O.E. cōfa,† "chamber, closet, ark." Thus, then, we may assume that "cove and key" meant "closet and key," referring, no doubt, to the housewife's storechamber.

This explanation is countenanced by the MS. Rawl. C. 158 (fo. 48d, col. 1), which has in both cases "cleue et key." This word Dr.

Murray immediately recognised when I showed him my notes as the M.E. form of O.E. *cōfa (see his Dictionary, s.v. "cleve, 2"), which has precisely the same meaning as cōfa in O.E., and indeed forms in many cases exactly the same compounds.

There is yet another reading, for MS. Rawl. C. 159 (fo. 41, col. 1) has cōfre in place of cove or cleue. The scribe seems to have hesitated over the re of this word, which are not altogether regular. But this reading seems to exist in other MSS.; for Twiss remarks (ii. p. 5, n. 1) that "cone and key is, probably, not so correct a reading as 'coffer and keye,' which occurs in some MSS." Can it be that the "some MSS." are simply MS. Rawl. C. 159?

It is worthy of note that not only does a similar alliterative phrase las och lykil, later lās och nykil (=look and key) occur in the old Swedish laws, but that it is also used in the same way to express the housewife's "dispositio domus suae." The laws of Upland (MS., circa 1300), Ætfræ Balke III., say that when a man marries a woman he takes her "to honour, and as housewife, and to half his bed, to look and key," &c. ("til hēbær ok til husrū, ok til siæng halfæ, til lās ok nykil"; Schlyter, Samling af Sveriges Gamla Lagar, vol. iii., p. 107). In c. 6, § 3 (p. 109), a man who expels his wife from his house and takes another woman in her place is said to deprive his wife of lock and key ("þa rænir han husrū lās ok nyklæ"). The description of marriage given in the first of these passages also occurs, almost word for word, in King Magnus Erikson's law code, A.D. 1347 (id., p. 55, Hfto-Blk. V.), cited by Grimm, Deutsche Rechtsalterthümer, p. 447. The possession of the key by the housewife is recorded in the laws of the island of Gotland, i. cc. 36, 37 (Schlyter, vii. p. 76). In the laws of the old Danish province of Skaan (south of Sweden) the fact of stolen goods being found under a second or third lock in the possession of the housewife (i.e., locked up in her store-chamber or in a chest in the store-chamber), rendered her liable to the punishment of theft (id., ix., p. 124, c. 136=c. 87, p. 307, in the Latin version, A.D. 1206-1215, of Bishop Andrew Suneson). The old law of Seland, iii. 3, ante 1241, defines this more explicitly as the wife's inner lock, that is the lock either of the inner chamber or of her chest ("frughænnæ indræ lās, that ær sētingh indræ clæuæ ællær hænnæ kistæ"). This latter passage is especially noteworthy, for clæuæ in the Old Danish gen. sing. corresponding to Icelandic klefa, the gen. sg. of klefi, the precise phonological equivalent of the cleue of the MS. Rawl., c. 158 of Bracton.

W. H. STEVENSON.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "COCKNEY."

Oxford: May 12, 1890.

I should think that there would be a very general agreement among scholars that Dr. Murray has been successful in discovering the etymology of the word "cockney," and that the word meant originally a cock's egg. This discovery has, of course, given the coup de grace to the unhappy conjecture that "cockney" was an English representative of an imaginary French coquiné*. It seems to me, however, that Dr. Murray in his impetuous onslaught on this ludicrous etymology has on one point ventured on language which needs a little qualification. These are the words to which I would like to draw attention:

"It is obvious [Dr. Murray says] that M.E. cookenay, cookeney, is a word ending in the diphthong -ay or -ey, riming with day, array, say, in Chaucer and other poets. But everybody knows that the English diphthong -ay had nothing to do phonetically with O.F. é, which gave in English é, ie, and finally y, as in cié, ciie, city. Indeed, nothing can be more certain in phonetics than that cookenay, whatever it might be, could not be an O.F. coquiné*."

So sure—I might almost say, so cock-sure—is Dr. Murray that the English diphthong -ay or -ey cannot be the representative of a French é, that he does not hesitate, cautious Scotchman though he be, to appeal on this point to the intellectual Cæsar of the period—the Somerville Hall girl; and in anticipation of a favourable decision, he ventures to assert that the court would dismiss the case with an irreverent laugh at the expense of the trans-Atlantic Anglo-Oriental scholar.

I think it is not at all improbable that the Cæsar of the Isis, in delivering a judgment on the point whether an English -ay or -ey can ever be a phonetic representative of an Old French é, would refer to a standard work of authority not unknown to Dr. Murray where an instance of Eng. -ey=O.F. é actually occurs. In the New English Dictionary under "Attorney" we find that "attorneye, 'suffectus,' 'attornatus,'" occurs in the Prompt. Parv., and that attorneye is the phonetic equivalent of O.F. atorné, Vulg. Lat. atornatum. M. Paul Meyer in his valuable introduction to Les Contes Moralises de Nicole Bozon shows that in Anglo-French the two sounds é and ê "fell together" (as the Germans say), that is, became absolutely indistinguishable. This being so, it is interesting to note in this connexion that Eng. -ay or -ey, as the equivalent of O.F. é, is by no means an uncommon occurrence. Here are some examples: Alley=O.F. alée, op. M.E. the lilies of aleyes (Wyclif); causey=Anglo-F. caucée, op. M.E. causei (see New English Dictionary); chance-medley=A.F. chance-medlée, op. M.E. chaunce medley (Fabian); chimney=A.F. cheminée, op. M.E. chimenai, chymenay, schimnay, chemné, chymné, chymnee, chymnie, chimny (see N.E.D.); country=A.F. cuntree, op. M.E. contrée (Piers Plowman), contraí (see Mätzner), contres (Chaucer), cuntre (Prompt. Parv.); covey=A.F. covée, op. M.E. covey (Prompt. Parv.); journey=O.F. journée, op. M.E. jornay, jurneie, journey, journé (see Concise Dict. of Middle English, 1888), jurney (Prompt. Parv.); mottley=O.F. mattelee, op. M.E. mottelay (Catholicon), mottelée (Chaucer), mottelée (Chaucer), motte (Prompt. Parv.); valley=O.F. valée, op. M.E. valeie, valeye (Piers Plowman), valé (Barbour's Bruce), valayis, pl. (Barbour's Bruce); volley=O.F. volée. Conversely, English -y is sometimes the representative of O.F. -ai, for instance: very=A.F. verai=Vulg. Lat. veracum, op. M.E. very (Wyclif), verray (Chaucer). And finally, it may be to the point to note that é is often the Anglo-French equivalent (1) of an older ei (oi), op. monée (in Bozon)=O.F. monote=Lat. monēta, and (2) of an older ai, op. pees (in Bozon)=O.F. pais=Lat. pācem, and plée (in Bozon)=O.F. plai=Lat. placitum.

These facts will, perhaps, be sufficient to show that Dr. Murray in rightly rejecting the coquiné* derivation of "cockney" has used language on one point which requires some modification. An English -ay or -ey does sometimes represent an O.F. é, not as a phonetic equivalent perhaps, but in consequence of "Suffixe-Vertauschung." What absolutely disproves the French derivation from an é form in "cockney" is the fact that cockné (cocknie, cockny) does not occur in any Middle English text.

A. L. MAYHEW.

* The second passage in the Digby MS. is written in the margin in an upright hand that does not distinguish u and n. But the letter is unmistakably n in the first passage.

† Bosworth-Toller writes the word cōfa, the accents being hereabouts "far to seek," for we have on the same page cōl, "coal." The word is, however, also written cōfa by Sweet, O.E. Texts, p. 643. But the root-vowel is clearly short, as is proved by the related neut. pl. in-cōfu "penetrals" (Haupt's Gloss. 538), and also by its modern English descendant "cove."

* Mr. Sweet, Old English Texts, p. 621, has elcōfa, but I follow Dr. Murray in reading cleōfa. He considers the form elcōfa as the original one, regarding, apparently, the unliant to eo as arising from some contamination of the forms in the strong declension (cf. -eleofum, Vesp. Psalter, 149, 5).

Swanswick Rectory, Bath: May 12, 1890.

Dr. Murray in his admirable investigation of "cockney" has arrived at the conclusion that it meant "cock's egg," and he has raised the following supplementary question:

"But why did they say 'cock's egg,' and not 'hen's egg?' That I do not presume to answer, not having been there to ask. Perhaps it was in its origin a child's name; children think more of cocks than of hens."

I venture to suggest another consideration—"hen" was an ancient English word; "cock" was a new-fashioned word at the time in which the compound "cockney" was formed; and we may sometimes observe that the attraction of a new word has caused it to be employed beyond the area which logically belongs to it.

J. EARLE.

"FRANCE AND THE REPUBLIC."

Autun: May 12, 1890

The last number of the ACADEMY contains a review of Mr. Hurlbert's work with the above title, in which the reviewer, Mr. Markheim, appears to accept without question several of those misconceptions about the present condition of France which are current in other countries.

First, as to the origin of the Republic, Mr. Markheim says: "Proclaimed in Paris by a mob, it exists in the country by virtue of the control which its partisans have acquired of the central machinery of Government." May I remind your readers that this statement would have been perfectly accurate from the Fourth of September, 1870, to the election of the National Assembly, but that it is now nineteen years out of date? As soon as the National Assembly was elected, the control of the central machinery of Government passed into its hands; and it was not a Republican Assembly. Again, under Marshal MacMahon, who established a temporary oligarchy on the Sixteenth of May, the central machinery of Government was not in the hands of Republicans at all but of monarchists who used their influence to control the elections in a sense hostile to the Republic, yet were foiled by the national will and compelled to resign office. The fact is that the Republic has been established by force of circumstances; the first proclamation by a mob only shows the extreme weakness of the moribund Empire, as the mob was not in itself formidable. This force of circumstances is really the most substantial of all foundations, that of sheer inevitableness. The French Republic is there because it is there, and it remains there because no other Government can take its place. It is like a religion which does not exist as being more reasonable than any other, but because no other is able to supplant it. One reason for the existence of the Republic is the death of the monarchical sentiment. Compare France with England in this respect. The English Queen drives out; she stops her carriage to watch some performing bears; millions of readers are interested in the incident; the bear-leader rises to sudden celebrity, and from poverty to a regular income of forty guineas a week. In France this keen interest in royal persons is unknown. Before the recent escapade of the heir to the French throne, the peasantry did not know that there was a Duke of Orleans at all. They hardly know who the Count of Paris is, and they certainly do not know the name or title of his father. Now that the Duke of Orleans is in prison they do not stir a finger to deliver him. In a monarchical country such an incident would give rise to a civil war.

"The Republic," says Mr. Hurlbert, "is condemned by its irreligious creed to be a government of persecution." The expression "irreligious creed" is misleading. The Government of the Republic has no creed at all, whether religious or irreligious; its business is simply to keep the peace between the four mutually hostile religions which accept its pay. It has for some years been a part of the policy of the Church of Rome (the three others make no complaints) to represent herself as the victim of persecution; yet there is something inconsistent in her attitude. Diplomatic relations between the Republic and the Vatican are maintained with perfect courtesy on both sides; and during the President's recent tour the bishops and clergy have received him with a cordiality that gave him unaffected pleasure and which he met in the same spirit. Surely this would not be possible if there were any real persecution. The clergy of the four religions are regularly paid; they have complete liberty of religious action, but the Catholic Church (and she alone) appears to have committed the mistake of supposing that the Republic could not last and that her best policy, in view of a near restoration, was to join the aristocratic Opposition. The clergy are now awakening from this mistake, and the consequence is that the relations between Church and State are pleasanter than they have been for many years. The clergy have been extremely afraid of disestablishment, which would be the first step towards any real persecution. They are now beginning to perceive that there is no present danger of disestablishment, as the large majority of influential Republicans are opposed to it. As for laïcisation—concerning which the most preposterous exaggerations find ready credence in England—it has been generally disapproved by the same class of Republicans, and has not been carried out as a Government measure affecting the whole country, but only here and there by the special authority of particular boards. I asked the Bishop here what laïcisation had been done in his diocese; and he only mentioned one case, at Mâcon, in a hospital controlled by a sort of board of guardians. The Bishop told me he had asked the board if they would listen to him. They received him respectfully and heard all he had to say. He added that there has been no laïcisation at Lyons. I myself am on friendly terms with the chaplains of the college and hospital here, and I know that neither they nor the sisters of charity have ever been disturbed. The lycées are all directly under ministerial control, and the chaplains and sisters are maintained in them. Officers and soldiers frequently attend Mass, but their participation in religious functions is no longer compulsory. I may add that even in the laïcised hospitals, any patient may have religious ministrations if he expresses a desire for it. However, as I have said, moderate Republican opinion is against laïcisation, as it is against the disestablishment and disendowment of the recognised religions. All that it desires is to live at peace with the established Churches, provided that they, on their part, will refrain from attacking the established Government of the country.

P. G. HAMERTON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 12, 4 p.m. South Place Institute: "Finland," by Mr. Arthur W. Hutton. 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "St. Bernard," by Mr. N. Wedd.
MONDAY, May 13, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: Cantor Lecture, "Sugar, Tea, Coffee, and Cocoa, their Origin, Preparation, and Uses," IV., by Mr. Richard Bannister.
8 p.m. Victoria Institute: a Paper on "Flint Implements and the Antiquity of Man."
TUESDAY, May 14, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Art of Engraving," III., by Mr. Louis Fagan.
5 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Industrial Arts of Japan," by Mr. Lesenby Liberty.
7.45 p.m. Statistical: "The Position and Prospects of Industrial Conciliation," by Mr. L. L. Price.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: "The Keswick Water-Power Electric Light Station," by Messrs. Fawcett and Cowan.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "The Reported Discovery of Dodo's Bones in a Cavern in Mauritius," by Sir Edward Newton; "A new Toucan of the Genus Pteroglossus," by Mr. F. L. Sclater; "The Remains of some large Extinct Birds from the Cavern Deposits of Malta," by Mr. R. Lydekker; "Description of the Modifications of certain Organs which seem to be Illustrations of the Inheritance of acquired Characters in Mammals and Birds," by Dr. Hans Gadow.

WEDNESDAY, May 15, 8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Mannesmann Process for making Seamless Tubes," by Mr. J. G. Gordon.

8 p.m. Geological: "Micrometric Measurements with the Microscope," by Mr. E. M. Nelson.

THURSDAY, May 16, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Flame and Explosives," III., by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Electrical Engineers.

FRIDAY, May 17, 8 p.m. London Amateur Scientific Society: "Sirocobi and Vulcani," by Mr. L. W. Fulcher.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Manners and Customs of the Torres Straits Islanders," by Prof. A. C. Haddon.

SATURDAY, May 18, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Recent Excavations in Greece," III., by Dr. Charles Waldstein.

8 p.m. Linnean: Anniversary Meeting; Election of Officers and Council.

SCIENCE.

Organic Evolution as the Result of the Inheritance of Acquired Characters According to the Law of Organic Growth. By Dr. G. H. Theodor Eimer. Translated by J. T. Cunningham. (Macmillan.)

PROF. EIMER has written a long and confused book, whose chapters might as advantageously be curtailed as its title. Every English biologist will have to read it; but only a German biologist could ever have produced it in its present form. Hard study at last educes the fact that its author has really an idea in his head; the pity of it is, he doesn't know how to get that idea into other people's.

At bottom, Prof. Eimer is a thorough-going Spencerian. Yet, oddly enough, he never once acknowledges his obvious indebtedness to Mr. Spencer. His doctrine of acquired characters, and of the evolution of the living world as the result of function, is just a mere one-sided statement of the doctrine presented in the Principles of Biology. His theory of heredity is nothing more than the theory of Physiological Units under a new name. In fact, Eimer's answer to Weismann consists in flinging Mr. Spencer point-blank at his head—without acknowledgment. In Germany, this proceeding may perhaps pass muster without detection; in England, it is impossible not to wonder at its cynical frankness.

The chief point which Eimer makes is the one already suggested in the ACADEMY—the impossibility of reconciling psychological evolution with the continuity of the germ-plasm, and its necessary corollary, the non-inheritance of acquired characters. The section which deals with this difficulty is one of the fullest and best in the book; and it must succeed in bringing home to every evolutionary thinker the profound nature of the problems which Weismann's seductive but retrogressive doctrine leaves wholly unsolved.

Among the many important new points brought out by Eimer on the general question in its purely physical aspect is one which supplements that well-known crux of the Weismannesque school—the growth of entire fresh plants from the fragments of a begonia leaf. It seems that Vöchting took a piece from the middle of a thallus of Lunularia vulgaris, and cut it up with a knife into a fine pulp. When this pulp was spread out on moist sand, it soon began to produce from every part of its surface a perfect forest of vigorous young fronds. Now, such a case appears to reduce the doctrine of continuity of the germ-plasm to a pulp like itself. For, if the germ-plasm is indeed so universally diffused as the experiment suggests through all the somatic cells of the entire organism, it is difficult to see how we can even in thought separate the two, or attribute to the germ-plasm that independence of nature and character which the theory demands for it. The case seems rather to favour the extreme opposite Spencerian view, that the reproductive unit is nothing other than the common physiological unit of the organism, told off to build up a fresh individual, instead of being employed to reproduce a lost or worn-out part of the original body.

As a whole, the book is interesting, suggestive, one-sided, clumsy, learned, long-winded, logical, and inconclusive. It contains facts and ideas which it behoves every biological thinker to know; but it is full, at the same time, of half-metaphysical and almost mediaeval notions about organic growth, and it lacks the needful sense of allegiance to strict chemical and physical law. In this respect it sometimes almost suggests reminiscences of Mr. Samuel Butler with his "unconscious memory," which apparently makes the molecules of a developing ovum rearrange themselves without physical intervention by an effort of will in particular orders. Yet Eimer's work cannot be overlooked as a contribution to the development of thought on this profound question; and many of its suggestions have no small value as mental obstetrics. Mr. Cunningham's introduction contains some useful hints, and in particular sets forth a suppressed letter to Nature whose argument seems sound, and encloses a difficult nut for the Weismannites to crack.

GRANT ALLEN.

SOME CATALAN PUBLICATIONS.

DON JOSEPH BALARI Y JOVANY, professor of Greek in the university of Barcelona, has, in the intervals of his academic work, busied himself with the philology of his native Catalan tongue, and, in a few little pamphlets, put forth some interesting results, which, as they may be new to many Romance scholars in England, may well be noticed here.

In Etimologies Catalanas (Barcelona: Jepsús), the derivation of the curious word—anyor-ança (angor)—"la pesadumbre que causa en el ánimo la ausencia ó privación del objeto ó cosa amada que te desca y espera con vehemencia," an idea which the Portuguese express by the word saudade. Verdaguier uses the Catalan word in his well-known verses to the Infanta Maria de la Paz, now Princess of Bavaria.

"Sabessou lo Català
Sabrian que es anyoransa la malaltia dels cors transplantats a terra estranya, la que degueren sentir
quan lo vostre's transplantava espanyola flor gentil
a les boyres d'Alemanya."

The professor also gives the derivation of esquerdalench [excarinatincus*] = décharné, a word which only one of the five translators of the great Catalan epic Atlántida has translated correctly. He explains the origin of a common adage of the country, "alt com un Sant Pau," "as tall as St. Paul"—which, as the church tradition (see the life of St. Thecla, by Simeon Metaphrast) especially mentions Saint Paul as small of stature, ἄραχρον τὴν ἡλικίαν, was a puzzle—by a native mediaeval custom. At great feasts and festivals, the guilds walked in procession; and the "espaderos" carried the great sword of the city, the biggest and tallest man being selected to represent St. Paul with the instrument of his martyrdom.

In Estudi Etimològic y comparatiu (Barcelona: Giró) the words, cancar, cancelli, callar, calle, &c., are studied in an ingenious article which originally appeared in Spanish in the first number of España Moderna.

The little essay Influencia de la civilización Romana en Cataluña comprobada per la orografía (Barcelona: Verdaguier) is an excellent piece of work, and shows ingeniously how the arrangements of a Roman amphitheatre so impressed itself on the popular imagination that the names for certain natural features of the country were actually borrowed from them. The words balc (balteus), line of scarped cliff; grau (gradus), a shoulder or shelf; puig (podium), an isolated hill; circara (carceris), a confined valley; espina (spina), a ridge; mola (metula), a conical peak; areny (arenium), a dry flat; are instances of this. A study of the words used for "rock" is also included. The words cot (cotem, cautes), and petra, are shown to be regularly used in the territory between the Pyrenees and the Llobregat; pinna to be used outside this district; quer on the Ampurdanesa marsh; and roca to be found on both sides of the Llobregat. The forms Querbruno, or Korrobruno, Rochabrúna, and Petrabrúna are all applied in different documents to the same place. We look to Prof. Balari y Jovany for a complete study of Catalan local names. It would be a task worthy his powers and of no small historical importance.

It is a pity that so little of the excellent work, historical and literary, beginning to be done in Catalonia should be known in England.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A LATE BABYLONIAN TABLET OF ASPASINÉ.

British Museum: April 25, 1890.

By the kindness of Mr. W. Lucas, who allowed me to copy the tablet, I beg leave to place before the readers of the ACADEMY a tentative rendering of a Babylonian inscription of the time of a king called Aspasiné, which throws considerable light on the condition of Babylon at a late date:

"Who sought (?) Nabû-sum-mur, the se[lam of Ê-saggil] since he has Month Sivan,
13th day, year Aspasiné, king.

"(In the) month Iyyar, the 24th day, the 185th year, [Aspasiné], king, Bêl-mašar, the šalam of Ê-saggil, and the Babylonians, the congregation of Ê-saggil, took counsel together, and said thus: Itti-Marduk-balašu, the Gadû over the city of the Ubbudêtu (ministers or temple-servants) of the houses of the gods, the scribe of Anu (and) Bel, the son of Iddin-Bêl, who formerly [stood?] at the side of Aspasiné the king, who [relieved?] want in the gate of the king, and therefore thus it is [that?] Bêl-šarê-nur and Nabû-musêšik-urri, his sons, find all the keep for keeping (him). [It has been decided?] in the presence of this Bêlmašar and the Babylonians, the congregation of Ê-saggil, that "from this day, of this year, one man of silver, (for) the sustenance of Itti-Marduk-balašu, to their father, for Bêl-šarê-iddin and Nabû-musêšik-urri, from our need, we will give." The sustenance (?), whatever Itti-Marduk-balašu, their father, has taken, for (his) keep they shall keep, and they shall give (him his) due for this year.

"With Bêl-šunu; Nûr; Muranu; Iddin-Bêl; Bêl-šarê-šunu; the priest of Anu and Bel; and the second priest of Anu and Bel."

[Here follows a seal impression.]

I do not pretend to analyse the date given, "year 185th"—possibly the era of the re-inauguration of the temple; but the name Aspasiné might be the Babylonian form of Vespasian, the Aramaic being ܐܣܦܫܝܢܐ or ܐܣܦܫܝܢܐ. This would bring down the date of the Babylonian (Assyrian) language and script as late as A.D. 69-79.

I hope to publish shortly the original text, when I shall take the opportunity of trying to improve the tentative rendering here given.

THEO. G. PINCHES.

P.S.—Since writing the above, Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie has suggested to me another identification, namely, that Aspasiné is the same as "Hyspaspines" (or Spaspines), the Kharacanian king who began his reign in A.D. 129. This would make the era Seleucian, to which, it must be confessed, the style of the tablet points.

T. G. P.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the last meeting of the Mathematical Society, held on May 8, a resolution of cordial thanks was voted to Lieut.-Col. J. R. Campbell for his generous donation of £500. The gift was fettered by no conditions, but is to be invested, or otherwise made use of, in any way the council may judge best for the good of the society.

M. JANNETTAZ, of Paris, a high authority on precious stones, has communicated to the Mineralogical Society of France the results of his recent examination of the inferior kind of turquoise known in trade as turquoise de nouvelle roche. It is generally supposed that this consists of fossil bone, or ivory, coloured by phosphate of iron; but its exact composition has been somewhat doubtful. M. Jannettaz shows that his specimen consists of 72 per cent. of tribasic phosphate of lime, and 10.7 of carbonate of lime, with 16.82 of hydrated tribasic phosphate of iron. It is, therefore, clearly of organic origin, and owes its bluish-green colour to the presence of vivianite.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE issues of the Pali Text Society for the current year will be the third volume of M. Léon Feer's Samyutta, Prof. Windisch's Iti-vuttaka, and the usual Journal. Of these, the first is all in type, the second is quite ready for issue, and the third is at press. The Journal will contain an edition of the Saddhumma Sengaha, a complete alphabetical index to all the Jātaka stories, and a table of contents to the Visuddhi Magga.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS have published this week the new edition of Sabrinæ Corolla, upon which Dr. Kennedy, the survivor of the original "tres viri," is known to have spent the very last days of his life. The preface is signed by H. H., who himself almost belongs to Kennedy's generation; and by R. D. A. H., who represents the Epigoni at Kennedy's university. From this memorial preface we must be content to quote only the following extract:

"Illum igitur, talem virum, quisnam omnium, quibus huiusmodi carmina cordi sunt, non in omnem commendare memoriam velit, inter criticos et grammaticos primarium, inter poetas elegantissimum, inter præceptores omni laude maiorem?"

The book has been increased considerably in bulk from time to time since its first appearance in 1850, though it no longer contains the original woodcuts. It is now printed at the Obiswick Press with graceful initial letters; but the Greek type can only be called tolerable, being far inferior to what we have seen lately from Athens and from Christiania. Among the new pieces we observe a version in Greek iambs by R. D. A. H. of a fragment of Tennyson's "The Revenge," which is oddly called "The Armada," the same mistake being implied in the heading of the Greek. Nor do we care for the title of "St. Denis to St. Cupid," which is given on the same page to Lovelace's well-known lines to Lucasta. For "cui" in the corresponding Latin heading lege "qui." The entire set of these elegiacs seem to us below the standard; and, in particular, we are astonished that the editors should have sanctioned for the fourth couplet such a banal rendering as "si clipeo potius, si basis lungimus ensi, ardentique magis corde perimus ecum."

Hermathena, which continues to bear on its cover that it is "a Series of Papers on Literature, Science, and Philosophy by members of Trinity College, Dublin," has become almost as purely classical as the Journal of Philology or the Classical Review. The current number contains elaborate reviews—by Robinson Ellis (Hon. LL.D. of Dublin), of Owen's "Tristia"; by Prof. Tyrrell, of Verrall's "Agamemnon" (extremely severe), and of Tucker's "Suppliques"; by W. J. M. Starkie, of Ellis's and Postgate's "Catullus"; by L. C. Purser, of Haigh's "Attic Theatre"; and by Prof. Abbott, of Margolouth's "Ecclesiasticus." It is, no doubt, well that English scholars should thus receive praise or blame from outside; and no one will now charge the "silent sister" for not producing her own editors. But from a periodical with the pretensions of Hermathena we look for something more than textual criticism. Surely classical subjects may be found that demand the same kind of treatment that we find in the two theological articles, which happen also to be the longest in this number. These are Dr. Quarry's notes on the Clementine Homilies and the Epistles prefixed to them; and Dr. Gwynn's careful examination of the older Syriac Version of the Four Minor Catholic Epistles. We cannot forget that Prof. Allman's History of Greek Geometry from Thales to Euclid first appeared in the pages of Hermathena.

A Simplified Grammar of the Spanish Language. By W. F. Harvey. (Kegan Paul & Co.) This little Grammar of the Spanish language is not without its merits. The original Latin forms, with the particular case of each from which the Spanish words are derived, are given for the principal particles. This will render the Grammar of great service to many who cannot consult longer works. Equally worthy of commendation is the mention of some of the older Spanish forms; but this, unhappily, is done so irregularly and intermittently that it loses half its value. We have been quite unable to discover the principle on which the examples given have been selected. It would have been so easy to have made these examples specimens of the history of phonetic changes in Spanish, e.g., when giving hablar-fabulari, to have pointed out the general gradual change of the Latin f (and sometimes g) into h, till its present real extinction in the current spoken language, contemporaneous with its survival in some of the dialects. Of course, in a book of this kind much must be omitted; but there are omissions here which will be a sore stumbling-block to a young student, e.g., the verb estar has no paradigm at all. The assertion that Arabic "has left no traces of its influence on the grammar and pronunciation of Spanish," seems to us doubtful. Why is Valencian omitted among the dialects of Catalan? Still, if these negative defects were all, we should not have much to complain of. But, unfortunately, the book is disfigured by what we can only designate as culpable carelessness. Looking over a work of this kind we cannot help asking ourselves what is the office of an editor of such a series? Can Dr. Reinhold Rost have gone over the MS. or the proofs of this little book? It consists of only forty-nine widely printed pages—it does not contain more matter than an ordinary article in one of the larger reviews—yet it is full of misprints and blunders. We are quite unable to make out the "Conspetus of the Conjunct Pronouns" on p. 15. On p. 26 "aliento" is a misprint for "afiento"; and the differing forms of these verbs should have been explained, by showing that they really come from a different Latin root. P. 27, "guerer" is for "querer"; p. 35, "son amado, I am loved," for "soy amado"; p. 36, "anoche, it grows night," for "anochece"; p. 45, "comparison of equality," both rule and example are wrong. "Juan es tanto docto como Carlos" is not Spanish; it should be tan. P. 47, "Echar a pique" means "to be within an ace of"; "estuvimos á pique de perdernos, we were within an ace of being lost," is a most extraordinary slip. Of course, it should be estar. How could estuvimos have anything to do with echar? Even the specimen translation, p. 48, is blundered. Speaking of art "no tiene bastante materia para abultarlos, pero tiene industria para realzarlos," does not mean "has not sufficient matter to enlarge them (i.e., the passions of the soul), but has ingenuity to realise them," but "has not sufficient materials to give them, bulk or body, but has skill to heighten them." These mistakes are not all, but enough have been given to show the need of thorough revision before a second edition of this work appears.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Thursday, May 1.)

THE Rev. Sir Talbot Baker, Bart., in the chair.—Chancellor Ferguson read an interesting paper on "Some Dummy Picture-board Grenadiers from Carlisle."—Mr. J. Park-Harrison delivered the second part of his lecture on "Anglo-Norman Ornament Compared with Designs in Anglo-Saxon MSS." He said he had already mentioned in the first part of his paper (1) that the evidence obtained by Mr. J. H. Parker and M. Bouet at Caen showed conclusively that the style now termed Norman did not exist in Normandy at the date of the Conquest; and (2) that there were numerous architectural details in illuminated MSS. of pre-Norman date which, it could scarcely be doubted, were derived from existing buildings. Photographs were exhibited of Saxon churches which exhibited similar features. He believed Britton's view—that the Normans, when rebuilding English churches on a larger scale, adhered both from policy and choice to the severe style of architecture they brought with them—to be generally correct. While, however, Remigius built the three great portals at Lincoln in identically the same style as the Conqueror's church at Caen, the narrow arches on either side, if of contemporary date, afford an early instance of the adoption of the roll mouldings and ornamented labels which occur in the Saxon church at Stow, as well as in the picture of "Dunstan" in the Cottonian MS. Claudius A. 3, the date of which is circa 1000. Numerous features derived from Caedmon's Paraphrase, and other illuminated MSS. of the same period, were shown to correspond with details in Anglo-Norman churches. In Oxford cathedral this was especially the case; but, as the weathering of the majority of the choir-capitals contrasts with the sharper lines of the carving believed to be of twelfth-century date, this, Mr. Harrison said, would appear to afford sufficient proof that the interlacing stalks and other peculiarities in four of them, and the acanthus foliage in two (a revival of which, according to Prof. Westwood, took place in the tenth century), belong to the period which documentary evidence would lead one to select—viz., the beginning of the eleventh century. The "break of joint," which has been detected in more than one place in the eastern half of the cathedral, and the fact that vaulting ribs were not contemplated when the choir aisles were built, point to the same conclusion.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, May 7.)

FRANK PAYNE, Esq., in the chair.—A paper by Prof. Edward Dowden on "The Poetry of John Donne" was read. It is as the founder of a school of English poetry that Donne is ordinarily set before us. We are told that in the decline of the greater poetry of the Elizabethan period a "metaphysical school" arose, and that Donne was the founder, or the first eminent member, of this school. Prof. Dowden disbelieved in the existence of this so-called "metaphysical school." Much of the most characteristic poetry of Donne belongs to the flood-tide hour of Elizabethan literature; to the time when Spenser was at work on the later books of the "Faerie Queene," and Shakspeare was producing his early histories and comedies. There was no special coterie or school of "metaphysical poets," but this writer or that yielded with more abandon than the rest to a tendency of the time. It is not by studying Donne as the leader of a school that we shall come to understand him. We get access to his writings most readily through his life, and through an interest in his character as an individual. The story of his life is an Elizabethan romance, made the more impressive by the fact that the romance is a piece of reality. Prof. Dowden proceeded to criticise Donne's most characteristic poems, and concluded his paper by an analysis of the fragment (written in an elaborate stanza of his own) "The Progress of the Soul." We may lament that he did not carry out his complete design of this poem; for, though the poem could never have been popular, it would have afforded, like the Scotchman's haggis, "a hantle of miscellaneous feeding" for those with an appetite for the strange dishes set before them by Donne. There was scope in Donne's design for a history of the world; the deathless soul would have been a kind of Wandering Jew, with this advantage over Ahasuerus—that it would have been no mere spectator of the changes of society, but itself a part and portion of the ever-shifting, ever-progressing world of men.—The discussion which followed was opened by the chairman, and continued by Mr. James Ernest Baker, Mr. W. H. Cowham, Mr. Henry Hoare, Mr. W. Thompson, and other members of the society.

NEW SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Friday, May 9.)

DR. F. J. FURNIVALL in the chair.—Mrs. O. Stopes gave a short account of this year's Birthday Festival at Stratford, and mentioned that she was urging upon the Corporation the desirability of printing, in a cheap form, all the documents in their possession relating to Shakspeare and his time.—A paper upon M. Jusserand's book, "The English Novel in the time of Shakspeare"—shortly to appear in English form—was read by Miss L. Lee, its translator. M. Jusserand, at the outset, declares that his book is not a study of the novel with special reference to Shakspeare. This subject had usually only been treated with reference to the drama; but it was worthy in itself of separate study. Miss Lee, however, had selected those passages which had some connection with Shakspeare for special attention that evening. The history of the English novel was usually supposed to date from Defoe and Richardson. The demand, however, had set in much earlier; and in the Elizabethan period there were writers who even succeeded in making an income out of their novels, while they were translated freely into French. Many, as in our own day, dealt with contemporary life and character, introducing thinly-veiled likenesses of real personages. Of the English romance, "Beowulf" was the oldest example; but it is from the French occupation of these islands that the modern romance really dates. The story-telling of Chaucer had had little effect on the growth of the national novel. It is to be noticed that fiction occupies a large part in the catalogues of Caxton; and this brings us to the "Mort d'Arthur," the greatest romance, and most powerful for influence, of any time. Women then, as always, were the most omnivorous readers of novels, and called for and obtained a class of book written specially for them. Unquestionably the most popular of this sort were "Euphues" and the "Arcadia," the former continuing long to be a name to conjure with, inspiring imitations, continuations, &c. of every degree. After these come Greene and Lodge, Greene's stories being veritable "Scènes de la vie de Bohème." His well-known complaint of plagiarism is the ever-constant complaint of the novelist against the dramatist. Of his stories, "Pandosto," well known as the source of the "Winter's Tale," was the most famous. As to Sidney's "Arcadia," it was borrowed from by Richardson, who took from it both the name "Pamela," and also an incident. Besides romances, there were many realistic tales. Of these, Naah was the most important writer, his "Jack Wilton" being the most popular. The century that followed Shakspeare's death saw little progress in the development of the novel.—The chairman remarked on the interesting results which always came from a French mind being brought to bear on English work, as was seen also in the case of Taine.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, May 12.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—The subject originally announced for discussion having unavoidably fallen through, the president opened the evening's proceedings by reading a paper on "The Ego." The treatment of this question requires the combination of a philosophical analysis with a psychological one, an analysis of consciousness with an analysis of the conditions upon which its genesis depend. Consciousness, as we learn from philosophy, is the only evidence we have for the existence of anything whatever, including that of its own supporter or Subject. The difficulty of the Ego question consists in this, that the perception of an agent or agency as such is never an immediate but always an inferred or constructive perception. This is equally the case where the agent in question is our own Self. And this difficulty is merely veiled, not removed, by calling the agent or agency immaterial, spiritual, transcendental, or by some similar name. These and such like terms do not give us that immediate knowledge which is our real desideratum, though they seem to do so by the mere fact that the names have a popularly admitted connotation. Now the particular phenomena in which we trace the union of the two—the Subject and its Consciousness—are the phenomena of Volition, the consciousness of agency being rendered distinct only in and by the consciousness of a choice between alternatives, which are presented prior to the act which adopts one of them to the exclusion of the other. These are also the acts which (1) actually build up the character, (2) give us the sense of acting or not acting according to our better knowledge, and therefore (3) make us aware of our responsibility as moral beings, or Persons in the full sense of the word.

FINE ART.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM CATALOGUE OF GREEK COINS.—Pontus, Bithynia, and Bosphorus. By Warwick Wroth. (Printed for the Trustees.)

THE untiring authors of the British Museum Coin Catalogues have at last crossed the sea, and moved on into Asia, after spending so many years in completing the European section of their work. The present volume marks the fact that more than half the Greek coins are catalogued, and makes us realise that the laborious task will some day actually reach its end, and the long shelf of dark blue books cease to extend itself. The present volume is brought out by Mr. Wroth, and is the second of his contributions to the series; his Crete was noticed by us in 1888.

The coins contained in this volume are of a class in which the British Museum is not nearly so rich as in most sections. The regal series of the houses of Pontus and Bithynia are especially weak; in the former there are no coins in the Museum of Mithradates I., Mithradates III., Laodice, and Polemo I. In the latter the tetradrachm of Nicomedes I., the bronze of Ziaelas, and the gold stater of Nicomedes II, are missing. All these coins are, of course, rare—some indeed unique, but it is seldom that we find the Museum with so many desiderata in any one department. Still even here the coins represented are numerous enough to make a reference to the gaps in the cabinet rather invidious.

From the first the Museum has followed in its classification the system of Eckhel. The present volume brings out one of the few faults that can be charged against that father of modern numismatics. In accordance with the geography of his day, he made Europe cease at the Don, not at the Caucasus; hence he split in two the Greek cities on the northern shore of the Euxine, whose coinages are very closely connected, and put Panticapæum into Europe and Phanagoria into Asia, though both geographically and historically they had everything in common. To understand the numismatic history of the Cimmerian Bosphorus it is necessary to put together this volume Pontus, and the Thrace, &c., which came out more than ten years ago, before the present delightful phototype engravings were introduced into the Museum publications.

In consequence, too, of Eckhel's arrangement the coins of the long dynasty of kings of Bosphorus find their way into this volume, though those of their kindred and namesakes, the kings of Thrace, in the first century A.D., do not. Of the series of the Rhœmetales and Cotys and Sauromates family who reigned in Bosphorus, the Museum has a very fair selection, mostly acquired, as Mr. Wroth notes, in the Thomas sale of 1844. The series of their coins possesses considerable interest, as showing the state of civilisation on the borders of the Roman empire in the first four centuries of the Christian era. The earlier pieces, down to about the time of Hadrian, are creditably executed by workmen who were often quite up to the level of the Roman art of the day; but, for some unexplained reason, everything goes suddenly to ruin after the middle of the second century with a rapidity far exceeding the contemporary degradation of art within the empire. By the time of the kings who were contemporary with Severus the workmanship of the coins becomes quite barbarous; by the epoch of Diocletian they are rude lumps of copper with illegible inscriptions and hardly-human heads on obverse and reverse. Probably, however, we ought rather to wonder the kingdom of Bosphorus survived at all, when in the third century the barbarian tribes behind it in the inland were already in full movement, than be surprised at the decay of civilisation which had taken place within its boundaries.

Of the Greek towns on the south shore of the Euxine, Sinope alone began to coin early, and the types of that town were unfortunately rather uninteresting. There is a great dearth of large pieces all along the coast, drachms being much more usual than didrachms, while the tetradrachm is unknown till the time of Alexander. The Persian standard prevailed everywhere—except at Heraclea and Sinope, where the Aeginetan was in use; and of those places it was the former alone which issued didrachms. These didrachms of Heraclea, produced in the second half of the fourth century, are the only pieces in this volume which are of first-rate artistic importance. The coins of the tyrant Clearchus with the heads of Heracles and Tyche are especially pleasing. Heraclea at a later time had an issue of Attic tetradrachms, with the obverse copied from the Heracles' head on the coins of Alexander, which have considerable merit. Contemporary with these were some fine didrachms of Amastris, bearing a young head in a Phrygian cap, which the elder numismatists used to describe as the Persian Princess Amastris who founded the town. Mr. Wroth, however, is quite right in disowning this identification, and calls the personage represented Mithras. It is rather interesting to notice the way in which the kings of Pontus in the third and second centuries before Christ treated the Greek towns which fell within their sphere of influence. Like the Romans in later days, they generally suspended the silver municipal coinage, but permitted the copper to continue. Mithradates the Great issued no copper of his own, but made all the towns of his empire adopt uniform types, though they were not compelled to place the regal name on the coins. At Amisus, however, some silver was struck, probably by Mithradates III., which bore besides the town's name the inscription BA MI (Βασίλειος Μηραδάρον); but such issues were rather exceptional, and the Museum does not seem to own any of them.

The heads of the earlier Pontic kings are very characteristic portraits, and show a considerable family resemblance. Mithradates the Great, however, does not seem to have taken after his ancestors; he shows quite a different type of features on his earlier coins, which are obviously very faithful likenesses. On his later coinage, that with the stag on the reverse instead of the Pegasus, his head is idealised quite out of knowledge, and shows no signs of the advancing years which had come upon him since the first Mithradatic war; in B.C. 67 he looks rather younger than in B.C. 97.

The coinage of the kings of Bithynia is very inferior in interest to the Pontic series. Except Nicomedes I., the founder of the dynasty, they all, without exception, used the same types, their own heads and a standing Zeus. These monotonous issues lasted for 154 years on end, and had we not the dates it would be quite impossible to distinguish from each other the coins of the later kings. Nicomedes I used a type which has caused some dispute, an armed female figure, in which Mr. Wroth (following M. Reinach) sees the goddess Bendis, though other writers call it the personification of Bithynia.

The next part of the series will, we suppose, include the magnificent series of Cyzicene staters, which, for interest, surpass any of the other issues of Asia. They will go far to make up a whole volume to themselves.

C. OMAN.

THE ETCHED WORK OF WILLIAM STRANG.

To what level Mr. Strang will eventually rise as a designer of power and imagination it would be rash to prophesy; but this collected exhibition of his work shows that, technically, he can do pretty well what he chooses in black and white, and that he has a fertility and strength of invention which would equip half a dozen artists of an ordinary type. But he not only has invention, he is a humorist in the large sense, a very human artist always. His ticket (which is worth keeping) tells you this. "Walk up," it seems to say, "I will show you humanity as I see it. Here, as a sample, are a few human beings who interest me." It is evident from this "ticket" that it is not the rich and the gay, but rather the poor and the miserable that interest him in life; and that it is not the exquisite or the elegant, but the grave and characteristic that he strives after in art.

If we take the first page of his catalogue we shall find nothing more cheerful than "The Shepherd's Wooing" (3). This is rather a sedate business, in delineating which the heart and imagination of the designer appear to have been much less engaged than in the fine conception of "Job and his Comforters" (4); or the melancholy masterpiece of "The Soup Kitchen" (9), a subject not uncommon in modern art, but seldom, if ever, treated with such pathetic simplicity or such excellent skill.

Mr. Strang's "criticism of life" is not a cheerful one; but it is at least characteristic of its time, and is, in this respect, in somewhat strong contrast with his artistic style or styles, which remind one rather of the National Gallery than the Royal Academy. The fine mezzotint "Head of a Woman" (11) is almost equally suggestive of Millet and Perugino, while "The Dissecting Lesson" (10) looks like an illustration of one of Mr. Henley's hospital lyrics, by a pupil of Rembrandt. Such clashings of natural and artistic inspiration are common throughout Mr. Strang's work; but occasionally, as in his portrait of Mr. W. H. May (29), or in the fine studies of heads in "Taking the Oath" (7), he is content to be as modern in style as in sentiment.

Mr. Strang's subjects, so far as they extend at present, may be divided into (1) scenes from the Bible; (2) illustrations of ballads, &c., of a weird kind; (3) studies of modern life, including portraits. In the first of these he has frequently chosen to adopt the style of Rembrandt, which enables him to treat the subjects in a familiar manner, and to indulge in all sorts of bizarre effects of light and shade. To most of these the fine arrangement of the composition and the impressive chiaroscuro give a striking dignity, which even the outlandish costumes and unselected figures are unable to impair. Sometimes, as in "Manoah's Offering," the conception is so vivid and strange as to give the thrilling effect of a real vision; sometimes, as in "The Woman in the Temple" (73), the scene is conceived with singular freshness, pathos, and dramatic force. In others, like "The Last Supper" (133), while our admiration is given to the technique, the familiarity of the conception verges on the grotesque. On the whole, while the scenes from the Bible display most fully the range of Mr. Strang's imagination, they are also the most unequal.

In his illustrations to The Pilgrim's Progress

(57 to 69), Mr. Strang has a subject well suited to that quietude of treatment which is one of his characteristics even where his theme is most passionate. They are in the spirit of the author—simple, strong, and clear, but full of imagination. Apollyon is terrible enough, and Mercy in her home as peaceful as she can be; but the one is not strained nor the other tame. Greater play is given to his weird imagination by the ballad of "The Brownie of Blednock." Here Mr. Strang is thoroughly at home, and his conception of the Brownie is so strong that it is not likely to meet with a rival. The moonlight scene (20) is about as "uncanny" as it can be; and the figure of the woman laying "a mouldy pair of her ain man's breaks by the brose o' Aiken-drum" is remarkable for its fine free gesture and large design. Yet of his "illustrations" perhaps those to "Death and the Ploughman's Wife," a new ballad written by the artist himself, are the best, as they are the latest. Their chief fault is a mixture of styles. The first is almost like a German woodcut, the last is like the artist's "Soup Kitchen," i.e., as nearly "pure Strang" as it can be; and between the two there is more than one change. Nor does the "Ploughman's Wife" keep her individuality throughout the story. With these reservations, there is little to be said except in praise of the dramatic power with which the story is told. Especially fine are the scenes in which death plays his part. In execution they are also fine, though not beyond criticism. In the landscapes, though generally appropriate in sentiment, there is too great willingness to depend upon the conventions of others. They often degenerate into mere "scenery," and want that touch of his own personality which Mr. Strang nearly always manages to give even to the least original of his figures.

In his pictures of real life, such as "Taking the Oath" (7), "The Rehearsal" (30), "A Sale of Prints" (40), "The Preacher" (94), and "The Salvation Army" (100), you see an acute observer of human life, intent to seize and emphasise those expressions which are most earnest and full of character. Sometimes, as in "The Preacher," the emphasis borders on caricature; sometimes, as in "The Salvation Army," the interest of the artist is too much engaged upon the expression of the faces to pay sufficient attention to general aspect. Whatever may be the faults of the Salvation Army, its soldiers are at least neat and brisk. But, however he may fail here and there to do quite what we would wish, Mr. Strang's pictures of modern life are the most sincere and the most earnest that I know, penetrating far below the ordinary depth of the genre painter, and showing an insight into character and a width of sympathy which are rare indeed.

It is to be hoped that this collection of Mr. Strang's etchings will help to obtain a wider recognition for an artist who is not only a designer of unusual power and an etcher of unusual skill, but a true poet. If so, it will scarcely be from any great effort of the artist to meet the popular taste. On the contrary, he would seem at first sight to strive with all his might to hide his light under a bushel. He chooses subjects which to many will be unattractive, if not repulsive; and he treats them in a manner which is so often like that of some other well-known artist that his real originality of invention is obscured. I heard someone remark at the Exhibition that it was like Legros, Rembrandt, and Millet shaken up together in a bag; and I was not surprised, nor should Mr. Strang be surprised. The chief defect in the criticism was that it made no mention of many other artists in the bag, certainly not the least of whom is William Strang.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

RECENT EXCAVATIONS IN CYPRUS.

EXCAVATIONS have recently been conducted at Tomassos in Cyprus, on behalf of the Royal Museum at Berlin, by Mr. Max Ohnefalsch-Richter, who for ten years past has been active in archaeological work in the island. A large number of graves have been opened belonging to the transition period from the bronze to the iron age. Most of the vases found in these graves are hand-made, though some of the same size and form were turned on the potter's wheel. A mass of helmets, coats of mail, swords, lances, daggers, axes, knives, candelabra, kettles, buckles, &c., have been dug out. Among the iron swords are several gigantic specimens, whose hilts are adorned with ivory, and with bronze nails tipped with amber or silver heads. Golden armlets have also been found, similar to those discovered by Dr. Schliemann at Troy. Colossal iron spears, with hooks and wooden shafts, had been placed in the left corner of a grave, so as to form a pyramid. Evidence was obtained of horse and dog burial, which seems to point to a northern custom.

At a recent sitting of the Archaeological Society at Berlin, Mr. Furtwängler made a further communication referring to the most recent results of the researches of Mr. Ohnefalsch-Richter. On the site of two sanctuaries a series of votive gifts were unearthed—among them, a quadriga, with its charioteer, in half-life-size, done in chalk; a colossal statue; and two archaic bronze statuettes. Graves dating back to the bronze age were opened, in which no iron whatever was found, and all the pottery was hand-made. Richer results were obtained in the burial places of the subsequent Græco-Phoenician period, with their splendid stone architecture. In two of them, which probably belong to the first half of the sixth century B.C., parts of the architecture imitate a wooden structure of very archaic type. A grave chamber has dark doors, with an imitation of wooden locks. This points to a more ancient architecture in timber-work, as was argued by the late James Fergusson, in connexion with some parts of the Lion Gate at Mykené. Among other curious finds may be noted a helmet with a very complicated visor in hinges.

In a paper on "The Pre-Babylonian and Babylonian Influences in Cyprus," as well as in more recent writings, Mr. Max Ohnefalsch-Richter has expressed his belief that the oldest stratum of Cyprian culture was Phrygo-Thracian, kindred to that of ancient Troy. This pre-Phoenician and pre-Hellenic element he now unhesitatingly attributes to the great Germanic stock. The most primitive architecture of the island he holds to be of the same origin.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER has been elected a full member of the Royal Academy. His Associateship dates from June 1879, when—as he has himself recorded—Miss Elizabeth Thompson, now Lady Butler, ran him so close that he only got in by one vote.

A NUMBER of miscellaneous exhibitions will open next week. Mr. Thomas McLean will have on view, in the Haymarket, Mr. E. J. Poynter's new picture, "The Queen of Sheba's Visit to King Solomon"; at the Fine Art Society's there will be a series of sketches in Egypt, Algiers, and Tunis, by Mr. Ernest George; at Messrs. Dowdeswells', a large collection of old Indian and Persian pictures and MSS., formed by Col. H. B. Hanna; at Messrs. Howell & James', their fifteenth annual exhibition of paintings on China by lady amateurs and artists; in the building of the "Niagara" panorama, a series of sixty pictures of American and Canadian scenery painted by Mr. C. A. de L'Aubinière; and in the hall of the Armourers' and Brasiers' Company, Coleman Street, an exhibition of modern armour, blades, and work generally in brass, bronze, copper, and other kindred metals, manufactured by British subjects.

NOTWITHSTANDING the very large edition prepared of Royal Academy Pictures, 1890, Part I. is already nearly exhausted, and will not be reprinted. Part II. will be issued on May 16, and the third and concluding part will be ready before the end of the month.

A SECOND edition of Mr. Harry Farniss's Royal Academy Antics has already been called for, the first edition having been exhausted within a few days of its publication.

As the committee of the Society of Medallists made no award of prizes in April, another competition will take place in the autumn, when prizes of £20 and £5 will be offered for medals in metal or models of medals in plaster. Objects in competition should be sent to the hon. sec., Mr. H. A. Grueber, British Museum, by October 1.

THE next meeting of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland will be held at Kilkenny, the cradle of the society, from May 20 to 23. Besides the reading of papers, two excursions have been arranged: (1) to Gowran, Inistioge, and Jerpoint; and (2) to Freshford, Kilcooley, and St. Kieran. The objects of interest to be visited in these excursions include the Round Towers of Tullowherin and Fertagh, and the birthplace of Bishop Berkeley.

THE Belgian Government has bought for the Brussels Museum, at the price of 80,000 frs. (£3,200), the celebrated picture by Rubens representing four heads of negroes, which was formerly in the Demidoff Gallery.

THE last number of the American Journal of Archaeology (London: Trübner) consists almost entirely of papers by students of the American School at Athens, describing the results of recent excavations. Perhaps the most interesting is that containing the fragment of the preamble to Dicoletian's edict "De Rerum Venalium," which was found at Platea in April 1889. As stated in the ACADEMY of last week, another fragment, containing a portion of the text, was found this year in the same neighbourhood. In the introductory article, Prof. Adolph Michaelis, of Strassburg, suggests a new arrangement of the relief from Thasos, now in the Louvre, of the Nymphs and Graces with Apollo. The archaeological news and summaries of periodicals which make up the number are as full and as valuable as ever.

THE STAGE.

AT THE HAYMARKET.

EXCEEDINGLY interesting matinées have been given at the Haymarket on Wednesday last and on Wednesday in the previous week. I was at the first of the two, which, at all events, for one or two people concerned, had something of the excitement of an experiment; but the programme was the same on both occasions. A late arrival prevented me from seeing more than half of Miss C/o Graves's short one-act piece, called "Rachel," and said to be founded on an incident in the life of the great French actress. Perhaps I was not very greatly a loser. What I did see failed, at all events, to burden me with any sense of remorse on account of unpunctuality. An instinct told me—when Miss Laura Villiers

(as Rachel) was reading a letter, not very well, not very ill, but as people do read letters on the stage—an instinct told me I had not done wrongly in my tardy arrival; something better than that remained to be seen. Miss C/o Graves, as a writer, is ambitious, and probably has a right to be. She is not without the feeling—perhaps not wholly without the faculty—of a poetess. But "Rachel," it appeared, with its obvious improbabilities, with its unjustified departure from important facts, with its unrelieved and uninspired dullness, was not among the successes of this young and ambitious writer. The thing is a dialogue between the tragedian and her attendant, Rose (the pretty Miss Aylward, who had a monstrous bad cold). It is nearly all of it in the tragedian's hands—in other words, much is in reality monologue. Miss Laura Villiers was either well made-up or is by nature fitted to represent a person of Rachel's colouring and physique. And her "business"—I do not use the word technically—is thoroughly known to her. She has served an apprenticeship, and has no signs whatever of want of intelligence. Beyond that—having seen, as I said, but half of the performance—I will not venture to go.

Then came "The Ballad Monger"—to which, as I read lately in a newspaper for the educated, we are indebted (along, indeed, with Quentin Durward) for our knowledge of Louis XI. One would have thought that there had also been Casimir Delavigne—that he would have distinctly counted—he and his verse to begin with: he secondly, and the English adaptation of his play that Mr. Irving has appeared in so often during so many years. But no—that had been forgotten. None the less, however, is it pleasant to praise, and delightful to see, Mr. Walter Pollock's and Mr. Besant's adaptation of the "Gringoire" of De Banville—to "The Ballad Monger" we do undoubtedly owe much. And it was a good performance on Wednesday week. No one was ill placed; no one quite inadequate. Mr. Tree as Gringoire, admirable; Mrs. Tree, with no deep feeling, perhaps, in the tones of her voice, but full of tact, and quietly graceful—picturesque, unquestionably. Then there was Mr. Brookfield as Louis XI. A little bit of character-acting of singular neatness: a performance with a vein of sly humour, and devoid of that particular fault which besets Mr. Brookfield most particularly—a tendency observable in some of his parts to be immediately effective at all costs: to be telling, sometimes, rather than to be true. Mr. Allan, Mr. Hargreaves, and Miss Charlotte Morland too: no one was bad.

But the surprise of the afternoon was Gilbert's "Comedy and Tragedy"—rendered as it was, in its principal part, Clarice, by Miss Julia Neilson. The lady had, I believe, played the part before. If so, it must have been while she was yet quite in her immaturity. I had myself only seen Miss Mary Anderson in the character, and in comparison with Miss Neilson Miss Anderson had been as ice. Never probably before last Wednesday week had even the fairly experienced playgoer realised how much was in the part—how much was in the piece. The interest need not flag for a minute. The part, though performed within narrow limits of time, is, in compass of emotion, a great one. There is the opportunity—nay more, the demand—for subtlety in it. And there is the extreme of wild hysterical comedy, and the obligation on the part of the actress to sound the depths of the expression of dread. Miss Neilson, though she did not give us a performance finished with the imperceptible finish of ease, gave us one that was full of very unusual strength and of charm. Flexibility, if she did not absolutely attain it that day, was, she showed, clearly within her grasp. A splendid physique—a beauté essentially de théâtre: essentially available, every bit of it, upon the boards—was the greatest of helps to her; and she understood thoroughly what to do with it, and was in action admirably dramatic. Somewhere or other it has been said of her, by a professional critic, that she more or less exaggerated. I do not think so. For my own part I gave thanks for a performance large and ample—with a certain souffle in it; "the large utterance of the early gods," not the restricted performance of the comedians of the drawing-room. The success was frank and unmistakable; and Mr. Gilbert's early belief in Miss Neilson is amply justified, albeit the actress may not yet be a quite finished or quite independent artist. She will probably go far. And meanwhile at the Haymarket, as the heroine of somewhat violent romance, or of more or less pronounced melodrama, she will be not only "acceptable"—the word is a cautious one; but invaluable—the word has more pluck in it. Mr. Lewis Waller seconded Miss Neilson fairly well as the Regent of France; and Mr. Fred. Terry, with pleasant presence and commendable clearness of enunciation, was an engaging young husband. The other parts are very minor ones, and nothing in their performance invites my comment.

FREDERICK WEDMORE

DR. TODHUNTER'S PASTORAL AT BEDFORD PARK.

FOR several nights last week the little theatre at Bedford Park was crowded with the appreciative audiences who came to witness Dr. John Todhunter's Pastoral, "A Sicilian Idyll." It is pleasant to find that a play of this kind can exercise so much attraction in days when art—and especially, perhaps, the dramatic art—tends so much to become a form of nervous excitement. Dr. Todhunter has caught the true Theocritean spirit in this charming Pastoral. There is passion in it, there is thought, there is interest of character and of plot; but everything is strictly subordinated to grace—every thing comes to us through a medium which subtly alters the stern or exuberant outlines of reality to delicate forms of rhythmic beauty.

The plot is as follows: Daphnis, a shepherd, loves Amaryllis, a proud maiden who despises love because the commoner natures around her cannot fulfil her lofty ideals. He makes a confidante of the friend of his love, Thestylis, who pleads his cause with Amaryllis, but in vain. Then one Alcander comes on the scene, a shepherd from a distant region, who has heard of the beauty of Amaryllis, and whose heroic and ardent nature is fired by the thought of winning the pearl of womanhood. He finds Amaryllis, woos her in imperious fashion, and on being disdained snatches a kiss by violence and leaves her, with the words:

"I am your fate, remember, and you mine."

An interval of three days is supposed to elapse, and then the second scene shows us Thestylis in conversation with Alcander. The latter is tormented with shame and self-reproach for his rude treatment of Amaryllis, whom he now loves with a passion which has entirely tamed his audacity. Daphnis, who has been captivated by the sympathy and sweetness of Thestylis, is now seen approaching; and Thestylis, with artful coquetry, makes Alcander pretend to woo her, and sends him off to fetch her an offering of love. The effect on Daphnis is all that can be desired; but this mock wooing is also witnessed by Amaryllis, whose heart has been conquered by the rough manhood of Alcander. She feels herself humiliated and slighted, and seeks revenge by performing a midnight sacrifice to Selene, whose aid she implores in an incantation like that of the beautiful sorceress in Theocritus:

"Hear me, Selene, for to thee I sing!
Calling on thee by thy most dreadful name,
Hecate; thou who through the shuddering night
Pacest where black pools of fresh-offered blood
Gleam cold beside the barrows of the dead;
Dread goddess, draw him dying to my feet!

Hear me, Selene, for to thee I sing!
The deep moans of thy coming, and the pines
Murmur and shed their pungent balm; scared wolves

Howl in the glens, and dogs, with bristling hair,
Whine as thou standest in the triple way:
Dread mother, draw him dying to my feet!

Here me, Selene, for to thee I sing!
Around this bowl I have tied in scarlet wool
Witch-knots against Alcander. Let him feel
As many pangs in his false heart, who kissed
My lips in mockery and disdains me now:
Dread goddess, draw him dying to my feet!

Here me, Selene, for to thee I sing!
I cast this barley on the fire, and say:
'Even so I scatter strong Alcander's bones!'
I fling these laurel-leaves upon the fire,
And say: 'So let his flesh be shrivelled up!'
Dread mother, draw him dying to my feet!

Hear me, Selene, for to thee I sing!
I love him, I love him, him who loves me not,
And that is shame. O, turn his heart to me,
Or smite him dead, and let me die with him,
And hide me in the grave from my own scorn.
Dread mother, draw him only to my feet!"

The spells do their work, and Alcander is brought in helpless and dying. Amaryllis, smitten with compassion, undoes her enchantment even before the explanation which finally unites the lovers; and the scene closes with a choric song.

The parts of Alcander and Daphnis were taken by amateurs—Mr. H. M. Paget and Mr. "John Smith"—whose want of professional training was hardly to be detected, except by the unusual refinement and appreciation with which they delivered Dr. Todhunter's delicately-modulated verses. Miss Linfield's delivery was not quite so good, yet she made a very charming Thestylis, and her dance in the vintage festival was admirable. But the honours of the performance certainly belong to Mrs. Emery, who acted the part of Amaryllis with a depth of poetic feeling which realised to perfection the intention of the character and the piece. The moonlight scene in which she pronounces the vengeful incantation to Hecate was one not easily to be forgotten.

It may be added that one more performance is to take place—a matinée at 3 p.m. on Saturday, May 17.

T. W. R.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. HENRY IRVING is finishing the season at the Lyceum with a short round of revivals. He is playing "Olivia" and "Louis the Eleventh"—or rather he will be performing the latter piece next week. The small part of the heroine of "Louis the Eleventh"—but a heroine she really can hardly be called—is to be played by Miss Coleridge; while, in "Olivia," the public has the advantage of seeing both Miss Ellen Terry and Miss Annie Irish.

WE were unable to be present at the performance of "The King and the Countess"—an episode from "Edward the Third"—on the day curiously chosen—the private view day at the Royal Academy. But we understand that, as is likely to have been the case with a piece rehearsed under the direction of Mr. Poel, the performance was one of unusual smoothness and appropriateness; while, as regards the individual performers, it would seem that both Miss Mary Burke and Mr. Rawson Buckley greatly distinguished themselves. May we entreat Mr. Poel to take steps to repeat, as speedily as may be, a performance alike bold and interesting, and in appointing the date of it to have a little tolerance for those weaker brethren who are not above liking to see pictures and to talk to people. Seriously, the "episode" must be done again.

MUSIO.

GLUCK'S "ORPHEUS" AT CAMBRIDGE.

IN the opera "Orfeo ed Euridice," produced at Vienna in 1762, Gluck commenced the revolution which he sought to effect in dramatic music. Abuses had crept into Italian opera, and for this vain singers and too compliant composers were responsible. His preface to the score of "Alceste" may be regarded as the foundation-stone of the modern musical drama. It is now more than a hundred years ago since Paris was so excited about Gluck's reformations and about the works in which he sought to put his art-theories into practice. His operas are seldom performed now; and, indeed, "Orpheus" has not been given on the stage in London since the year 1860. Was Gluck overpraised by his contemporaries, and is the present neglect an equal excess in the opposite direction? We should feel disposed to give a negative answer to both these questions. Gluck was a deep thinker and a bold doer, and it would be difficult to award him too great praise. It would be absurd to deny that he did occasionally make concessions to popular taste; but at Paris he was surrounded by difficulties, and it is extraordinary how little he yielded to temptation. In the first act of this very opera we have an instance of surrender. Legros, the famous tenor, who sang the part of Orpheus at Paris, probably accepted the role on condition that he should have a showy song. This is the only way in which we can explain the Aria "Amour, viens rendre à mon âme." This piece, by the Italian composer Bertoni, is utterly at variance with the rest of the music. Although included in the full score published at Paris in 1774, Dr. Stanford wisely omitted it in his Cambridge performance. The present neglect of Gluck may easily be accounted for. Times have changed. Since Gluck we have had Mozart, Beethoven, Weber, and Wagner; and besides, marked improvements have been effected in the constitution of the orchestra. Certain trained musicians may be able to a certain extent to attune their ears to the strains of the past, but the public are incapable of such adjustment: hence Gluck is no longer popular.

The version of "Orpheus" followed at Cambridge, where the play was produced under the direction of Dr. Stanford on Tuesday evening, was that of Dr. Dörffel. This able musician compared the two published scores known as the "Italian" and "French," and probably consulted also the version prepared by Berlioz, when the work was revived at Paris in 1859.

The overture, which we believe was omitted or replaced by another one at the Paris revival, is not interesting. The overture to "Iphigénie en Aulide," proves to us that Gluck could, when so disposed, write one preparing "the spectators for the character of the piece they are about to see." In the first act the chorus of the mourners around the tomb of Eurydice is sombre, and the grouping on the small stage at Cambridge was good. The simple recitatives and aria for Orpheus were sung by Mrs. A. Bovill, who is an amateur; and it was soon evident that justice would not be done to this important part. The graceful songs for Eros were sung with fair success by Miss Margaret Davies, who looked well in the part. The second act of "Orpheus" is often quoted as Gluck's masterpiece. The Choruses of Furies at the gates of Hades and the intervening recitatives of Orpheus are highly dramatic. The Dance of Furies was played as an entracte. The scene in the Elysian Fields with its lovely Ballet airs, solo, and choral music, is most impressive. Mrs. Hutchinson, was the Eurydice, who sang with taste, but her voice was not in the best order. Considering the smallness of the stage, the Furies were fairly appalling, and the Blessed Spirits looked well "amidst the shadowy amaranth bowers. The third act, in which Orpheus and Eurydice return from Hades, was on the whole carefully rendered. The Ballet music at the end of the opera, which Gluck wrote to meet the requirements of the Parisian stage, was properly omitted.

The English words used were those of Mr. Henry F. Chorley, with certain modifications. Dr. Stanford deserves praise for the care and intelligence with which he conducted. The play was to be given every day this week.

J. S. SHERLOCK.

RECENT CONCERTS.

AN Orchestral Suite, "Scene Veneziane," written by Signor Mancinelli, was the novelty at the fourth Philharmonic Concert on May 8. The composer has pictured in tones a tale of two lovers. They meet amid the revels of a Venetian carnival, where noisy jesters and tender lovers naturally form elements of contrast. The movement is clever and well scored. The love-music of the Adagio is pleasing, though its beauty may be only skin-deep. The Scherzo, representing the flight of the lovers, is short and taking. This movement was much applauded; but the composer might have saved the lovers the trouble of a second flight. The Gondola movement and the "wedding" Finale are not, in our opinion, equal to the earlier sections of the work. The composer, who conducted, was received with much enthusiasm. The Suite is bright and pleasing, but at a Philharmonic Concert one expects something more important. Mr. Leonard Borwick, a young pianist, pupil of Mme. Schumann, made a first appearance. His reading of Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto was, as one would expect, nearly in all points like that of his respected teacher. It would be difficult from a single performance to judge exactly of Mr. Borwick's individuality as a player, but he undoubtedly possesses gifts of a high order. He has a sympathetic touch, excellent mechanism; and he seems able and willing to work for art rather than for self. At the close of the performance he was recalled three times. He likewise played Brahms's Rhapsody in B minor with much passion and power, and Rubinstein's Etude in C with neatness and skill. The Overture, "Leonora," No. 3, was admirably played under the direction of Mr. F. H. Cowen. Miss Macintyre sang "O Peaceful Night," from Mr. Cowen's "St. John's Eve," and "Dove sono." There was a want of classic simplicity about her rendering of the latter song.

M. Paderewski, a Polish pianist, who comes to us from Paris with a great reputation, gave the first of four recitals at St. James's Hall on Friday afternoon, May 9. If this artist did himself full justice on this occasion, we cannot understand the fuss that has been made of him. He has good technique, but there are many pianists now before the public of which this can be said. M. Paderewski played Schumann's "Fantasia" Op. 17, in a noisy and jerky manner. In some pieces by Chopin he tried to display his individuality at the expense of the composer; the "Nocturne" in B (Op. 62, No. 1), was, however, beautifully rendered. With his own compositions he was naturally more successful; but they are more showy than solid. He ended with Rubinstein and Liszt. He is a virtuosic player, but apparently not of the highest order. He has strong fingers, and, at times, makes tyrannous use of them. Not satisfied with this, he makes liberal use of the soft pedal in soft passages, so as to produce striking effects of contrast. If M. Paderewski will only give up trying to astonish, he may please; for he certainly feels what he plays. He ought to interpret the great masters with the simplicity and reverence which become all true artists.

Mme. Theresa Carreno gave a pianoforte recital at Prince's Hall on Saturday afternoon. Her reading of Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata was, on the whole, a good one. There was not enough repose about the middle movement, and in the finale the passage before the return of the principal theme was unduly drawn out. In some Chopin solos the lady proved that she could overcome the technical difficulties, but her reading of the music was anything but poetical. Mme. Carreno is essentially a virtuosic player, and it was in pieces by Liszt that she astonished her audience. Her technique is exceedingly fine, and her power immense. Her performance of the Paganini-Liszt "Campanella" Etude was remarkable.

On the same afternoon the Bach Choir gave a performance of Brahms's "Requiem," followed by Dr. Stanford's "Revenge." We were only able to hear the latter work, to which, in spite of the hard work they had gone through, the Choir did justice.

The first Richter concert was held at St. James's Hall on Monday evening. The eminent conductor was received with great cordiality. The programme opened with the "Meistersinger" Overture. Schubert's unfinished Symphony was wonderfully played. Had the tone of the strings been equal to that of the Philharmonic orchestra, it would have produced a still more powerful impression. The "Parsifal" Prelude was followed by Liszt's "Rhapsodie hongroise" No. 3. The latter is a characteristic and effectively scored piece, but it is quite out of place immediately after the Prelude just named. Beethoven's Symphony in C minor concluded the concert, and the performance was in every way satisfactory. The hall was crowded.

Mme. Adelina Patti made her first appearance since her return from America at Mr. Kuhe's concert at the Albert Hall, on Wednesday evening. The prima donna, of course, attracted a large audience, and sang familiar songs with her usual success; but—and this deserves special notice—no encores were accepted. Mr. Sims Reeves was unable to appear. Mr. Iver McKay sang the tenor part in the "Miserere" duet from the "Trovatore." Mme. Patey sang "Che Faro," and for an encore one of Schumann's songs. Miss Kuhe played Mr. Wingham's Concert Caprice. The orchestra was under the direction of Mr. Cusins.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Letters from Wagner to Uhlig, Fischer, and Heine, recently issued by Breitkopf and Härtel, are being translated into English by J. S. S., and will be published by Messrs. H. Gravel & Co.

In 1 vol., Imperial 16mo, cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d.

A NEW NOVEL by the AUTHOR of "THE GATES AJAR." THE MASTER OF THE MAGICIANS. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS and HERBERT D. WARD.

At all Libraries and Booksellers.
THE FIRST REVIEW.

"The 'Master of the Magicians' must be accounted a triumph of fictive art, for the great city of Babylon in which the scene is laid, has been drawn with a graphic force which sets the whole magnificent Orientalism of the surroundings clearly before the reader; while the men and women whose action is portrayed are human beings of like passions and weaknesses with ourselves, yet differentiated skilfully and consistently in accordance with the demands of their age and environment. Again and again, indeed, one must pause in reading this novel, in order to appreciate more fully the remarkable penetration and insight shown in it, and the frequent subtle indications of profound psychological study which it presents. For art, power, flexibility, wealth of imagination and fidelity to that human nature which changes so little in the course of ages, 'The Master of the Magicians' must be considered a brilliant success, and one of the very few really admirable productions of its kind."—New York Tribune.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

DEIGHTON, BELL, & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

THE PSALM of HABAKKUK: a Revised Translation with Exegetical and Critical Notes on the Hebrew and Greek Texts. By ROBERT SINKER, D.D., Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.

THE "ASAPH" PSALMS, in their connection with the Early Religion of Babylonia. The Hulsean Lectures for the year 1889, delivered before the University of Cambridge. By EDWARD G. KING, D.D., Sidney Sussex College.

Nearly ready.

PASTOR PASTORUM: or, the Schooling of the Apostles by our Lord. By the Rev. HENRY LATHAM, M.A., Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge. Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL, & Co. London: G. BELL & SONS.

Now ready, crown 8vo, 342 pages, cloth 10s. 6d., or bound in calf limp for the pocket, 11s. 6d.

A HAND-BOOK of EUROPEAN BIRDS

For the use of Field Naturalists and Collectors. By JAMES BACKHOUSE, Junr.

Containing descriptions of Plumage, Dimensions, Distribution and Habits of the various species.

GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, PATERNOSTER-ROW (Mr. VAN VOORST'S Successors).

PRICE SIXPENCE.

THE PARENTS' REVIEW:

A MONTHLY MAGAZINE OF HOME TRAINING AND CULTURE.

Edited by CHARLOTTE M. MASON.

MAY 1890.

"Education is an atmosphere, a discipline, a life."

CONTENTS.

STAR MAP for the MONTH. By Mr. L. D'A. LIPSCOMB.

EDITORIAL—

ART for CHILDREN. By T. G. ROOPER (one of H.M.'s Inspectors of Schools).

THE TWO ROSES. From the German of ERNEST VON WILDERBRUCH. Translated, with the Author's permission, by Mrs. F. STIMMAL.

TERRESTRIAL and SUNLIKE PLANETS. By J. E. GORE, F.R.S.E. NURSERY FRENCH. By Mrs. FRANCES EFFS.

THE MONTH of BLOSSOMS. By Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., F.G.S., Editor of "Science Gossip."

FROM TWO POINTS OF VIEW. By Mrs. L. T. MEADE, Editor of "Atlantis."

A HOLIDAY in LAKELAND FIFTY-NINE YEARS AGO. By M. H. OUR DAUGHTERS.—II. Kindergarten Nurses.

THE EVENING SKY. By Mrs. L. D'A. LIPSCOMB.

BOOKS. By NEMO, &c.

BY THE WAY. By Miss EMILY SHIERREFF, Miss MARY BARTON, &c.

NOTES and QUERIES—PRIZES—PARENTS' EDUCATIONAL UNION NOTES.

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO-PLACE, S.W.; and at CALCUTTA.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.

G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C., and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery-lane, W.C.

BAEDEKER'S TOURIST GUIDE BOOKS.

Illustrated with numerous Maps, Plans, Panoramas, and Views. 12mo, cloth.

LONDON and its ENVIRONS. 6s. GREECE. 10s. BELGIUM and HOLLAND. 6s. GREAT BRITAIN. 10s. NORTHERN GERMANY. 7s. THE RHINE. 6s. SOUTHERN GERMANY, AUSTRIA, HUNGARY, and TRANSYLVANIA. 7s. CENTRAL ITALY and ROME. 6s. THE EASTERN ALPS. 8s. SOUTHERN ITALY and SICILY. 6s. NORTHERN ITALY. 6s. NORWAY and SWEDEN. 6s. NORTHERN FRANCE. 7s. PARIS and its ENVIRONS. 6s. SWITZERLAND. 8s. PALESTINE and SYRIA. 20s. LOWER EGYPT. 16s. THE TRAVELLERS' MANUAL of CONVERSATION in ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, and ITALIAN. 3s. CONVERSATION DICTIONARY in ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, and ITALIAN. 3s. DULAU & Co., 37, Soho-square.

THE THOROUGH GUIDE SERIES.

Illustrated with numerous Maps and Plans.

Edited by M. J. B. BAEDERLEY, B.A., and C. S. WARD, M.A. THE ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. 6s. SCOTLAND. Part I. The Highlands. 7s. SCOTLAND. Part II. Northern Highlands. 3s. 6d. SCOTLAND. Part III. The Lowlands. 4s. NORTH DEVON and NORTH CORNWALL. 3s. 6d. SOUTH DEVON and SOUTH CORNWALL. 4s. THE PEAK DISTRICT. 2s. 6d. NORTH WALES. 5s. THE EASTERN COUNTIES. 2s. 6d. SOUTH WALES. 3s. 6d. IRELAND. Part I.—Northern Counties. 4s. IRELAND. Part II.—Southern Counties. 5s. ORKNEY and SHETLAND. 1s. 6d.

.. Detailed List on Application.

DULAU & Co., 37, Soho-square.

JUST PUBLISHED.

MODERN IDEAS of EVOLUTION: as

Related to Revelation and Science. By Sir J. WILLIAM DAWSON, C.M.G., LL.D., F.R.S., &c., Author of "Acadian Geology," "The Chain of Life in Geological Time," "Egypt and Syria: their Physical Features in Relation to Bible History," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth boards.

In this volume Sir William Dawson discusses in a calm and philosophic spirit the leading positions of the rival modern theories of evolution. He shows by conclusive evidence that we are by no means compelled to admit that the case for evolution is established. He shows that while science has reason to be grateful for the facts ascertained, revelation has as yet nothing to fear from the mutually destructive views of the present followers of Darwin.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Uniform with "English Pictures," "Those Holy Fields," "Russian Pictures," &c.

LONDON PICTURES: DRAWN WITH PEN AND PENCIL.

By the Rev. RICHARD LOVETT, M.A., Author of "Norwegian Pictures," "Irish Pictures," &c. Profusely illustrated. Imperial 8vo, 8s., cloth boards, gilt edges; 25s., morocco, elegant.

This work carries out the purpose that has long been entertained of adding a well-illustrated book on London to the "Pen and Pencil" Series. Obviously, only the best known buildings and most familiar phases of London life can be included in the limited space of one of these volumes. No labour has been spared to obtain correct illustrations, and to ensure accuracy in the letter-press. The desire of the author has been to produce, not a guide-book, but a pleasant and entertaining volume, which shall direct the mind of the reader to the many rich and varied historical associations of London buildings, and to some of the fruitful suggestions furnished by the ever-shifting panorama of its life.

LONDON: THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY, And of all Booksellers.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRASURE,

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by HOLL, R.A.; OULSES, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS.

Crown 8vo, 350 pp., cloth, 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA: a Wife's Love Story.

By Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS. Author of "The Mammon of Unrighteousness," "Pharisees," "In Sheep's Clothing," "Loyella," "A Tantalus Cup," "His Story and Hers," &c.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMULTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

Now ready, price 5s.

THE JOURNAL of the ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.

Vol. XIX., No. IV., MAY, 1890.

Contains Papers by S. B. J. SKETCHLEY, Dr. H. RINK, EDWARD BEARD-MORE, and Professor A. C. HADDON; Anthropological Miscellanea. This page and index to Vol. XIX.

LONDON: TRUBNER & Co., Limited.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS HAYESBROOK, Manager.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (138 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,

Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER'S

PARIS PRIZE MEDAL

IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Children's	1s. 3d.	HEMSTITCHED—
Ladies'	2s. 4½d.	Ladies' : : : 2s. 11½d. } per doz.
Gent's	3s. 6d.	Gent's : : : 4s. 11d. }

Embroidered Handkerchiefs in all the Latest Styles, from 1s. to 60s. each.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Belfast.

Samples and Price Lists post-free. (Please name this Paper.)

To H.R.H. the PRINCE OF WALES.BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,*SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and*POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other*SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11 LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT*MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1863.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Free Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER

415, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

THEATRES.ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.

This Evening, at 8,

THE GREEN BUSHES.

Messrs. Frank Cooper, J. D. Beveridge, J. L. Shine, W. L. Abington, Lionel Rignold, Arthur Styan, Howard Russell, Marshall Moore, James East, J. Northcote, &c.; Mesdames Mary Burke, Ada Ferrar, Kate James, Brunton, Clara Jacka, &c.

Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, MISS CINDERELLA.

At 9,

Messrs. George Alexander, Nutcombe Gould, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Gratton, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lily Young, and Fanny Brough.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. C. H. HAWTREY.

Every Evening, at 9,

APRIL SHOWERS.

With powerful cast, including Miss Annie Hughes, Miss E. Brunton, Miss Maude Millett, &c.; Mr. Walter Everard, Mr. E. Dagnall, Mr. Nutcombe Gould, Mr. Reeves Smith, &c.

Preceded, at 8, by the one-act Comedy, THE BEGGAR.

Mesdames Ellaline Terriss, E. Brunton; Messrs. Lugg, Bulet, and Dagnall.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDDEIGH.

To-Night and Every Evening, at 8, will be acted an Original Farce, by Mr. A. W. Piesco, called

THE CABINET MINISTER.

CRITERION THEATRE

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.

Saturday, 10th inst., Oliver Goldsmith's celebrated old Comedy,

SHE STOOFS TO CONQUER.

Young Marlow, Mr. Charles Wyndham; Hardcastle, Mr. Wm. Blakely; Sir Charles Marlow, Mr. F. Atterley; Hastings, Mr. W. Draycott; Tony Lumpkin, Mr. Geo. Giddens; Digory, Mr. S. Valentine; Mrs. Hardcastle, Miss M. A. Victor; Miss Neville, Miss E. Layshon; Miss Hardcastle, Miss Mary Moore.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. AUGUSTUS HARRIS.

Every Evening, at 8.30 (by arrangement with Mr. William Terriss), a powerful four act play, by Steele Mackaye, entitled PAUL KAUFMAN, the most successful drama ever produced in the United States of America, where it has been running to crowded houses, for the last four years. Received with enthusiasm at Drury Lane.

Preceded, at 7.45, by the celebrated farce, THE MARRIED BAKE.

GARRICK THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. JOHN HARR.

Every Evening, at 8.30, A PAIR OF SPECTACLES, adapted by Sidney Grundy.

Messrs. John Hare, Groves, and Miss Kate Rorke.

Preceded, at 8, by

DREAM FACES,

by Wyan Miller.

Mr. J. Forbes Robertson, Miss Carlotta Addison (specially engaged).

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERBORN-TREE.

This Evening, at 8.15, A VILLAGE PRIEST.

Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Allan, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Norreys, Mrs. Gaston Murray, Mrs. Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Henry Irving.

THE BELLA,

MAY 17th, and also 24th and 26th, at 8.50.

MATHIAS (his original part), Mr. IRVING.

Preceded, at 8, by THE KING and THE MILLER.

LOUIS XI.,

MAY 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, and 23rd.

LOUIS XI., Mr. IRVING.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE

Every Evening, at 8, THEODORA.

Messrs. W. H. Vernon, Charles Cartwright, Cecil Morton Yorke, George Barnage, George W. Cockburn, Alfred B. Cross, H. de Solia, H. Sturge, Charles Lander, G. L. Grange, and Leonard Boyne; Mesdames Dolores, Drummond, Clarice Trevor, Marie Stuart, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGWICK.

Every Evening, at 8.15, MANJORIE.

Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville.

Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

THEATRES—continued.SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART, Lessees and Managers.

This Evening, at 8,

THE VIOLIN MAKERS.

M. Willard.

DICK VENABLES.

Mr. Willard, Messrs. A. Bishop, Garden, Elwood, H. Cane, H. V. Edmond, R. Keith, E. W. Thomas; Mrs. Canninge, Miss Ance Rose, Miss A. Hill, and Miss Olga Brandon.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Managers, Mrs. LANGTRY.

Every Evening, at 9, ESTHER SANDRAZ.

Messrs. Chas. Sugden, A. Bouchier, Everill, De Lange, E. Lewis, &c.;

Mesdames Langtry, Chas. Calvert, M. Lea, G. Benton, L. Meyers, E. Williams, &c.

Preceded, at 8, by

THE TIGER.

Messrs. Charles Colnaght, W. F. Stirling, and J. G. Taylor.

TERRYS THEATRE.

Managers, Miss GRAHAM.

Every Evening, at 9, NEW LAMPS FOR OLD.

Messrs. W. S. Penley, F. Kerr, B. Gould, and W. Lestocq; Mesdames

Gertrude Kingston, Houston, and Cissy Gramma.

Preceded, at 8.15, by FOR HER CHILD'S SAKE.

Messrs. Oscar Adye, A. Ellis, and J. Nelson; Mesdames M. A. Giffard and Helen Layton.

TOOLE'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE BUNGALOW.

By Frederick Horner. The 203rd Time. The most laughable play of the century. "Another 'Private Secretary.'"—Daily Telegraph.

Preceded, at 8.15, by ON TOAST.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.

Every Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.

Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe,

O. York, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames Winifred Emery, Hanbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.

Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free.

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J.

ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT

(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,

with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on

DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself

to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete . . . 1s.

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete . . . 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete . . . 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic . . . 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,

27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

MEMORY. A LOISETTE'S

SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to

Memory which your Lectures in Cambridge opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer

(Jan., '90). "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew

Wilson (April, '88). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '89). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—

Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—

Capt. J. B. Haye, R.N.—Apply 57, New Oxford

Street, London.

FRY'SPURE CONCENTRATEDSir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."COCOA

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE."
THE ENGLISH NOVEL IN THE TIME OF SHAKESPEARE.

By J. J. JUSSERAND.

Translated by ELIZABETH LEE; Revised and Enlarged by the AUTHOR.

Illustrated by Six Hellogravures by Dujardin, of Paris, and Twenty-one Full-page, and many smaller Illustrations, executed in facsimile.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, price 21s.

[Next week.]

The Book is divided into Seven Chapters:—I. Before Shakespeare; II. Tudor Times—the Fashions and the Novel; III. Lyly and his "Euphuës"; IV. Lyly's Legatees; V. Sir Philip Sidney and Pastoral Romance; VI. Thomas Nashe: the Picaresque and Realistic Novel; VII. After Shakespeare.

Now ready, Volume IV. of "THE CAMEO SERIES."

IPHIGENIA IN DELPHI.

With some Translations from the Greek,

By RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D.

Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, parchment back, illustrated, 8s. 6d.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

A MARIAGE DE CONVENANCE.

By C. F. KEARY.

2 vols., cloth, 21s.

"A very powerful study."—Manchester Guardian.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, with Map, 7s. 6d.

THROUGH ABYSSINIA:

An Envoy's Visit to the King of Zion.

By F. HARRISON SMITH, B.N.

"Mr. Smith's narrative may be read with satisfaction by all who enjoy the records of travel in out-of-the-way places."—Yorkshire Post.

Volume I. of the "ADVENTURE SERIES."

ADVENTURES OF A YOUNGER SON.

By E. J. TRELAWNY.

With Introduction by EDWARD GARNETT.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, elegant, 5s.

"Yet another 'library,' but, happily, one which can be sincerely welcomed.....This is a literary resurrection in which all lovers of good literature will delight, for Trelawny's work is emphatically good literature.....It is admirable, full of vigour and variety, spirit and entrain, graphic and picturesque from first to last.....The binding is excellent."—Globe.

Volume II., "ROBERT DRURY'S ADVENTURES in MADAGASCAR," will shortly be ready.

Now ready, the Twenty-fourth Volume of the "STORY OF THE NATIONS."

THE JEWS UNDER ROMAN RULE.

By W. D. MORRISON.

Index, Illustrations, and Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

Volume II. (CONO-FY) ready next week.]

[Part VIII. ready next week.]

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY.AN ENCYCLOPÆDIC LEXICON of the ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Edited by Professor W. D. WHITNEY, Ph.D., LL.D. (Yale University).

PROFUSELY AND ARTISTICALLY ILLUSTRATED.

Complete in 6 vols., cloth gilt, sprinkled edges, price £2 7s. each; half-morocco, cloth sides, marbled edges, £2 16s. each. Also in Twenty-four Monthly Parts, limp cloth, price 10s. 6d. each.

The Athenæum on Volume I.: "The 'Century Dictionary' bids fair to be far and away the largest and best general and encyclopædic dictionary of the English language.....To judge from the volume before us, this great work will be characterised throughout, and in every respect, by a lavish expenditure of labour and capital, of rare ability and technical skill, all turned to the best advantage by careful and capable attention to the uniform realisation of a thoroughly judicious plan."

PROSPECTUSES POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLERS, 37, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NEW VOLUME OF VERSE.

Now ready, complete Edition, in handsome crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. post free.

The Poems of William Leighton.

Illustrated by JOHN LEIGHTON.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"Considering the youth of the author it may be questioned if there is a more remarkable volume to be found in the entire collection of Scottish poets."—North British Daily Mail."He has known how to express brightly, cheerily, and gracefully, many of the thoughts and sentiments of the mass of men."—Graphic."Beautiful and redolent of hope and happiness, the fresh, joyous, untutored expressions of swiftly developing genius."—Whitehall Review."We strongly commend the volume. Note-worthy on account of their purity, grace and earnestness."—Guardian."Have been long valued for their simp'o, earnest, inspired gracefulness."—Life."All are marked by delicacy, finish, excellent taste, and a high moral tone."—Public Opinion."Sweet, tender, unobtrusive, and full of the noblest sentiments, the poems of William Leighton will live and grow in the hearts of English-speaking people."—Homilist."An air of tender, meditative piety, of holy aspiration, and of sweet and kindly sentiment ex-hales from every line."—Wesleyan Methodist Magazine."An exquisite volume of poems."—Temperance World."A gifted young Scotchman."—Quiver."A prolific writer of melodious and graceful verse."—Church Bells."Pure, tender, and thoughtful."—Christian Advocate."Charming poems."—Fairplay."Every lover of true poetry will welcome the volume."—Lt.yd's Weekly London News."A sumptuous volume, but the mounting is only a fitting frame for some of the daintiest gems of poetic thought to be met with in the English language."—People."The Leaf of Woodruff proved to be in its way a masterpiece. There is something in it that recalls Hood, something that suggests Whittier, and it would have added a jewel to the crown of either of these poets."—Literary World."Page after page is filled with the most beautiful thoughts, easily expressed in free, flowing verse."—Family Churchman."A gift book that is sure to please any pure-minded affectionate nature."—Sunday School Chronicle."Lovers of sacred melody will here find a rich storehouse."—Word and Work."Will be admired for its indications of native talent and poetic feeling, and not less for the beauty, tenderness, and purity which distinguishes it from first to last."—Queen."Full of poems of fine religious feeling and good taste, breathing at the same time the spirit of piety and poetry."—Christian Life.A gifted singer."—South London Press."How few are they who at the age of 28 can show a record as bright and pure and full of lofty musings as his was."—Liverpool Daily Post."A book to be warmly recommended." The poems certainly deserve the beautiful setting now given to them."—Liverpool Mercury."Many exquisite pieces."—Glasgow Herald.

"His genius was of a high order."

—Dundee Courier and Argus.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER-ROW, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 942.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
JULIAN CORBETT'S LIFE OF MONK, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	347
TURNER'S MODERN NOVELISTS OF RUSSIA, by W. R. MORFILL	348
THE "BADMINTON" VOLUME ON GOLF, by G. R. MERRY	349
THREE VOLUMES OF ESSAYS, by the Rev. U. J. ROBINSON	350
TWO COLLECTIONS OF PHILOSOPHICAL PROBLEMS, by the Rev. J. OWEN	351
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	351
SOME BOOKS ON COLONIAL LIFE	353
NOTES AND NEWS	354
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	355
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	355
ORIGINAL VERSE: "FLOS FLOREUM," by M.	355
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	355
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Ninth International Congress of Oriental Scholars, by Prof. Max Müller and Prof. Sayce; The English Diphthong "ay," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	357
RIBBON'S HISTORY OF ROMAN POETRY IN THE AUGUSTAN AGE, by Prof. WILKINS	357
SCIENCE NOTES	358
PHILOLOGY NOTES	358
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	359
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, II., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS	359
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	361
RECENT CONCERTS, &c., by J. S. SHEDLOCK	361
MUSIC NOTES	361

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Forthcoming Examination.—ASSISTANT KEEPER IN THE ART BRANCH of the South Kensington Museum (18–30) 6th JUNE.
The date specified is the latest at which APPLICATIONS can be RECEIVED. They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars from the Secretary, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and

SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governesses Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Compositors, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent-street, F.W.

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

LIMITED OWNERS' RESIDENCES

ACTS, 1870–71.—Board of Agriculture.—Landed Proprietors wishing to restore or improve their mansions and other buildings under the above Act can CONSULT Mr. JOHN BIRCH, Architect, who re-built Inge's Hall and other large country houses.—Address F, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

MATINÉE of "IN a DAY," a Poetic

Drama by AUGUSTA WEBSTER, and Debut of the Author's Daughter.—FRIDAY, MAY 30th, at 2.30. Doors open at 2.—TERRY'S THEATRE.

CATALOGUES.

Just published.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE NEW

ORIENTAL CATALOGUE. The Languages, Religions, Antiquities, and Literature of the East. Post free one stamp, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and 20, South Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

THÉOPHILE BELIN, 29, Quai Voltaire,

Paris. Livres anciens et modernes rares et Curieux. Catalogue Mensuel envoyé sur demande.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.

New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application. DULAU & Co., 37, Soho-square, London.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG,

PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY and LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines, Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

Small Advertisements continued on pages 362 and 363.

Just published.

ALL HE KNEW.

By JOHN HABBERTON,
Author of "Helen's Babies," &c.
Price TWO SHILLINGS and SIXPENCE.

A NOVEL COMMENDED BY MR. GLADSTONE.
Preface by Dr. GEORGE MACDONALD.

FOR THE RIGHT.

NEW CHEAP EDITION.
Price THREE SHILLINGS and SIXPENCE.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 5s.

THE ART OF AUTHORSHIP.

LITERARY REMINISCENCES, METHODS OF WORK, AND ADVICE TO YOUNG BEGINNERS.

Personally contributed by LEADING AUTHORS OF THE DAY. Compiled and Edited by GEORGE BAINTON.

Among other Contributors to this Book may be mentioned:—

Sir EDWIN ARNOLD, Mrs. A. E. BARR, WILLIAM BLACK, ROBERT BROWNING, Mrs. CHAILE, J. A. FROUDE, W. S. GILBERT, OLIVER W. HOLMES, TOM HUGHES, JEAN INGELW, Canon LIDDON, Sir J. LUBBOCK, EDNA LYALL, JUSTIN MCCARTHY, Cardinal MANNING, Dr. JOSEPH PARKER, E. F. ROSE, SAMUEL SMILES, C. H. SPURGEON, Rev. J. G. WOOD, CHARLOTTE TONGE.

These are merely a selection from the names of Contributors; many others, equally well known with the above, relate their experience.

"The interest of the book lies in the autobiographical details in which it abounds, and in the views of stylites upon the attainment and preservation of style which it contains."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Mr. Bainton summarises the result of an appeal which he had made to several well-known authors for their personal experiences and counsels with regard to literary labour."—Daily Graphic.

"Contains much entertaining autobiographical matter, contributed by persons as to whom the reading public is curious. It is, in fact, to a great extent, an author's confessional table."—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

"Much of it is extremely interesting and valuable."—Echo.

"The book is to be commended to the earnest attention of all beginners who are not averse to taking advice when it is tendered to them by those who have achieved distinction in the path they themselves have commenced to tread."—City Press.

"Authors record their own habits and customs as lovingly, and with the same earnest good faith, as did White of Selborne those of woodpeckers and chaffinches."—Speaker.

Price FIVE SHILLINGS.

London:

JAMES CLARKE & Co., 13 and 14, Fleet-street, E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE,

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl, R.A.; Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY.

EDITED BY EDMUND GOSSE.

To travel in a foreign country is but to touch its surface. Under the guidance of a novelist of genius we penetrate to the secrets of a nation, and talk the very language of its citizens. The present series is intended to be a guide to the inner geography of Europe. It presents to our readers a series of spiritual Baedekers and Murrays. It will endeavour to keep pace with every truly characteristic and vigorous expression of the novelist's art in each of the principal European countries presenting what is quite new, if it is also good, side by side with what is old, if it has not hitherto been presented to our public. That will be selected which gives with most freshness and variety the different aspects of Continental feeling, the only limits of selection being that a book shall be, on the one hand, amusing, and, on the other, wholesome.

There is no Continental country that has not, within the last half-century, felt the dew of revival on the threshing-floor of its worn-out schools of romance. Everywhere there has been shown by young men, endowed with a talent for narrative, a vigorous determination to devote themselves to a vivid and sympathetic interpretation of nature and of man. In almost every language, too, this movement has tended to display itself more and more in the direction of what is reported and less of what is created. Fancy has seemed to these young novelists a poorer thing than observation; the world of dreams fainter than the world of men. They have not been occupied mainly with what might be or what should be, but with what is, and, in spite of all their shortcomings, they have combined to produce a series of pictures of existing society in each of their several countries such as cannot fail to form an archive of documents invaluable to futurity.

One difficulty which must be frankly faced is that of subject. Life is now treated in fiction by every race but our own with singular candour. The novelists of the Lutheran North are not more fully emancipated from prejudice in this respect than the novelists of the Catholic South. Everywhere in Europe a novel is looked upon now as an impersonal work, from which the writer, as a mere observer, stands aloof, neither blaming nor applauding. It is not difficult, however, we believe—it is certainly not impossible—to discard all which may justly give offence, and yet to offer to an English public as many of the masterpieces of European fiction as we can ever hope to see included in this library. It will be the endeavour of the editor to search on all hands and in all languages for such books as combine the greatest literary value with the most curious and amusing qualities of manner and matter.

EDMUND GOSSE.

* * Each volume will contain an Introduction specially written by the Editor, and will be issued in crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d., or limp cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES ARE IN THE PRESS.

Volume I. Ready in June.

IN GOD'S WAY: a Novel. By BJORNSTJERNE BJORNSON. Translated from the Norwegian by ELIZABETH CARMICHAEL.

Volume II. In July.

PIERRE and JEAN. By Guy DE MAUPASSANT. Translated from the French by OLARA BELL.

Volume III. In August.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE. By EMIL FRANZOS. Translated from the German by MILES CORBET.

Other Volumes will be announced later.

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN,
21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR JUNE, 1890.

- I. ALAS! By RHODA BROUGHTON. Author of "Nancy," &c. PART I. CHAPS. XXI.—XXIII.
- II. LINES ON MR. ANDREW LANG'S "GIFFORD LECTURES" ON NATURAL THEOLOGY.
- III. THE ROMANCE OF HISTORY—IX. WILLIAM IV. LIFE—OR DEATH. [LITHGOW.]
- IV. A TRANSVERSAL OF SIX.
- V. THE LEGION OF HONOUR.
- VII. A NOBLE GAME OF LAWN TENNIS.
- VIII. CHARACTERISTICS OF RUSSIAN LITERATURE.
- IX. LLOYD COURTENAY'S BANISHMENT.
- X. THE GODS OF GREECE.
- XI. SOME PECULIARITIES OF SUSSEX.
- XII. PEARL-POWDER. By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDS, Author of "Ought We to Visit Her?" &c. CHAPS. XXV.—XXVIII.

POPULAR NOVELS.

BY the AUTHOR of "AN ILL-REGULATED MIND."
MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE. By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "A Dreamer," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY the AUTHOR of "THE GARDEN OF EDEN."
HER THREE LOVERS. By Alice M. DIEHL. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"THE FAILURE OF ELIZABETH" (3 vols.) is a pleasing, wholesome story, and Miss POYNTER's carefully-drawn distinctive characters can never fail to arouse interest. Elizabeth herself belongs to that charming type of unspoilt girlhood which Miss Poynter knows well how to depict.—Athenaeum.

"HUGH WESTBURY has written one of the best historical novels since 'The Last of the Barons' and 'The Last Days of Pompeii.' Writers in this branch of literature are apt to be ponderous. In 'ACTE' (3 vols.), however, there is real humour—not merely elaborate jesting after the supposed manner of the times, which surely never could have amused anybody. The author has seized in almost a remarkable way on the leading features of that strange time, and the attitude of the ancient world towards various questions of morality. He has known how far to go in many directions and never wearies his readers. He has written a very interesting book, and we shall look forward some day to hearing of him again."—Saturday Review.

"THE EMANCIPATED" (3 vols.) is a story of independent characters, mutually influencing each other, of sympathies and antipathies, mistaken interpretations of behaviour, one deplorable act of rashness on the part of an innocent girl, and some pathetic scenes of patient suffering. Mr. GISSING's latest work is one of his best, and we commend it to discriminating readers."

Illustrated London News.

"Title and story are in strict keeping with each other in 'ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS' (3 vols.). The burdens are unequally distributed; but that is true of life, and especially some phases of married life. Miss MANN has depicted such a case, an extreme one, perhaps, but still a possible one. In point of conception, of character drawing, and of directness and clearness of telling, the story is good throughout."

Academy.

NOTICE.—The New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s., of MISS MARIE CORELL'S popular Novel, "ARDATH: The Story of a Dead Self," may now be obtained at all Booksellers and Railway Stations. The novel in this form becomes the latest addition to BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS, in which series the same author has three other novels, viz.: "A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS," "VENDETTA," and "THELMA."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

DAVID NUTT,

270, 271, STRAND.

THE TUDOR LIBRARY.

NOW READY.

GIOVANNI PICO DELLA

MIRANDOLA: his Life by his Nephew, FRANCESCO PICO; also three of his Letters—His Interpretation of Psalm xvi; His Twelve Rules of a Christian Life; His Twelve Points of a Perfect Lover; and his Deprecatory Hymn to God. Translated from the Latin by Sir THOMAS MORE. Faithfully reprinted from the rarest edition printed by Wynkyn de Worde, and Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by J. M. RIGG. Royal 8vo, xi+95 pages. Printed at the Clarendon Press, on laid paper, with wide margins, in limp covers, 10s. 6d. net; in roxburghs, 18s. 6d. net.

Of the Tudor Library, 500 copies are printed on small, 50 on large, paper; of the latter all are taken up; of the former, the majority. The Publisher reserves the right of raising the price of the last 50 copies.

THE SECOND VOLUME OF THE "TUDOR LIBRARY"—

DAPHNIS and CHLOE: the Shepherds' Holiday. A faithful reprint of the rarest edition of Amyot's version of Longus. Edited with literary and Bibliographical Introduction by JOSEPH JACOBS, will be ready early in June. The Subscription price (7s. 6d. net) is valid up to date of publication, after which the price will be raised to 10s. 6d. net.

Prospectuses on application.

D. NUTT has recently published the following limited issue Edition:—

WORDSWORTH and COLE-

RIDGE.—LYRICAL BALLADS. Reprinted from the First Edition of 1793. Edited by EDWARD DOWDEN, LL.D., Professor of English Literature in the University of Dublin. 18mo, xxvi+328 pages, 1890, half-vellum, boards, 7s. 6d. (500 Copies Small Paper, 60 Large Paper. The latter are all sold.)

The Nation (New York).—"A pure delight without and within."

Spectator.—"We heartily thank Professor Dowden for setting up for us this great literary monument of one of the greatest spiritual growths of our own times."

AN INEDITED WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "ROBINSON CRUSOE."

DANIEL DEFOE. The Compleat

English Gentleman. Edited for the first time from the Author's Autograph Manuscript in the British Museum, with Introduction, Notes, and Index, by KARL D. BUELBING, M.A., Ph.D. Medium 8vo, lxxxiv+296 pages, cloth, 1890, 500 copies, 12s. (50 copies on Large Paper, of which a few copies are left, at 21s. net.)

Scotts Observer.—"This handsomely printed volume..... is here given to the world for the first time with all the pomp and circumstance which are wont to surround an edition of some famous classic."

Manchester Examiner.—"Certainly Defoe's work deserved to be published sooner. It is not one of those works which are merely interesting because they are curiosities. A word must be said in praise of the manner in which Dr. Buelbring has fulfilled his editorial task. Besides detailing the history of the MS., he has given some very valuable notes on the education of the geny at the time the book was written, and on the history of the word gentleman. The publisher has performed his part no less satisfactorily than the editor."

AN HISTORICAL SKETCH of the CONFLICTS BETWEEN JESUITS and SECULARS in the REIGN of QUEEN ELIZABETH. With a Reprint of CHRIST. BAGSHAW'S "True Relation of the Faction begun at Wisbech," and Illustrative Documents by T. G. LAW, Librarian. Signet Library. Demy 8vo, cloth, 17s. pages, 1890, cloth, 15s.

*. Only 500 copies printed.

The Guardian.—"An important contribution to ecclesiastical history."

Dr. RAURICH, the eminent Old Catholic theologian, in the Theol. Literaturzeitung.—"In diesem Buche wird ein kleiner, aber interessanter Abschnitt aus der Geschichte der Englischen Katholiken, mit Benutzung vieler, meist sehr seltener gedruckter und ungedruckter Quellen ausführlich und gründlich und in ansprechender Darstellung behandelt."

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Stories at all Booksellers.

THE STORIES of the THREE BURGARS. By FRANK R. STOOKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange," "The Hundredth Man," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

*. The First Edition was exhausted on the day of publication. Second Edition now ready.

THE STORY of the GADSBYS. By RUDYARD KIPLING, Author of "Soldiers Three," "Plain Tales from the Hills," &c. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 1s.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By E. BENTON ESLER. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

WITH FIRE and SWORD: an Historical Novel of Poland and Russia. By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ. Translated from the Polish by JEREMIAH COURTIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count PAUL P. Edited by FRANK HARKUT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s. "There is no lack of startling incident and sensational adventure in this record of Russian oppression and Polish intrigue. The interest of the story seldom flags."—Speaker.

NEW ADDITION TO LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

SIX-SHILLINGS SERIES.

SPRINGHAVEN: a Tale of the Great War. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. With numerous Illustrations by Alfred Parsons and F. Barnard. Small post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The story is one of Mr. Blackmore's best. A fine touch of romance reveals the author of 'Lorna Doone' on almost every page."—Saturday Review.

JAMES D. DANA'S NEW WORK.

CHARACTERISTICS of VOLCANOES, with Contributions of Facts and Principles from the Hawaiian Islands. By JAMES D. DANA. Fully illustrated with Maps and Diagrams. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE INFLUENCE of SEA POWER upon HISTORY. 1660—1783. By Captain A. T. MAHAN, U.S. Navy. Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

ANONYMS: a Dictionary of Revealed Authorship. By WILLIAM CUSHING, B.A., Compiler of "Initials and Pseudonyms." 2 vols., Royal 8vo, cloth, 52s. 6d.

SAVAGE LONDON: Lights and Shadows of Riverside Character and Queer Life in London Dens. By Mrs. MUSGRAVE, Author of "Our Flat," "Illusions," &c. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Now ready, price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

JUNE NUMBER.

COMMENCING A NEW VOLUME.

CONTENTS:

PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrations. TARTARIN. ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 24 Illustrations, Drawn by Luigi Rossi, F. de Myrbach, and others.

THROUGH the CAUCASUS. VICOMTE EUGENE MELCHIOR DE VOUGÉ. 12 Illustrations, Drawn by T. de Thulstrup and H. D. Nichols.

THE AMERICAN BURLESQUE. LAURENCE HUTTON. Fully Illustrated.

THE ENEMY'S DISTANCE. Range-finding at Sea by Electricity. PARK BENJAMIN, Ph.D. With 3 Diagrams.

FURST BISMARCK. GEORGE MORITZ WAHL. With Full-page (Plate) Illustration.

THE BEST GOVERNED CITY in the WORLD. JULIAN RAUPH. Illustrated.

THE YOUNG WHIST-PLAYER'S NOVITIATE. Professor F. B. GOODRICH.

SIX HOURS in SQUANTICO. F. HOPKINSON SMITH. Illustrated.

&c. &c.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED), St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 24, 1890.

No. 942, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

"ENGLISH MEN OF ACTION."—Monk. By Julian Corbett. (Macmillan.)

MONK is one of England's least remembered worthies. He was not a man of extraordinary parts; he incurred the dislike, in an age of violence, of all who held extreme political views; he has been censured or ridiculed by the best chroniclers of the stormy era in which his lot was cast. But he was a soldier of remarkable powers. Though scarcely a statesman, he baffled statesmen of the highest order by his sense and foresight; and he restored his country to settled government when she seemed on the verge of the abyss of anarchy. Unselfish, right-minded, and, above all, honest, he had much in common with the more renowned Washington; and he had eminently two of the best English qualities—profound reverence for existing order, and capacity to see facts, not fancies, in the sphere of government. A real biography of Monk is still wanting, but this brief sketch of his life and career, from the accomplished pen of Mr. Julian Corbett, in some measure supplies the deficiency. It contains a succinct but able résumé of the eventful era of the Civil War, of the rule of Cromwell, and of the Restoration, in which Monk was the conspicuous figure; and it sets his personality clearly before us in distinct relief and in true proportion. We dissent from the author in one or two points. His style, too, is occasionally strained and jerky; but, on the whole, we can highly commend his volume.

Monk was born in 1608—a scion of an ancient house of Devon, which could boast of royal and princely lineage. The associations of his boyhood, perhaps, drew him towards what became afterwards the party of the king; though many who joined the ranks of the Parliament were men of noble descent and blood. An accident sent him to sea in the descent on Cadiz. He made a journey through France, of extreme peril, to assist the army at the Isle of Rhé; and he greatly distinguished himself in the Low Countries, especially at the siege of Buda, where he led a forlorn hope with heroic courage. He had risen to the grade of colonel when Charles I. embarked in the famous Scotch war, which revealed the weakness of English royalty; and it is remarkable that Monk's name was mentioned, even before that of Ormonde, as fit to command the forces which were to put down rebellion in Ireland in 1641-2. He made his mark, as a subordinate, in this arduous service; but he refused—probably from a fine sense of honour—definitely to pledge himself to the royal cause, when Charles had begun trading with Irish traitors, that fatal policy which was to cost him his head, and his son and successor, James, his throne. Monk, however, was won over by smooth talk at Oxford. He commanded a regiment for the king at Nantwich, and was taken prisoner in the battle that followed; and, for some time, happily, perhaps, for himself, he was a prisoner in the Tower while the last acts of the drama of 1647-8 were being played. When all was practically over, he took service in the Parliamentary army; and, returning to Ireland, he made himself conspicuous in his command in Ulster as a soldier of real skill and worth. The Civil War had now broken out afresh. Presbyterian Scotland was in arms for Charles II; two-thirds probably of Catholic Ireland was in league against Cromwell and the Long Parliament; and Owen Roe O'Neill—a Nationalist in the true sense, a gentleman, and a great soldier—was watching events to strike for his country. That Monk negotiated with this brilliant chief is certain; but we much doubt if, as Mr. Corbett contends, Cromwell was privy to these underhand dealings. If he was, the conduct and policy of the Protector to Catholic Ireland was even worse than it has usually been described in history.

Monk had no part in the vengeance inflicted on Ireland by the Cromwellian conquest—a fitting retribution, in Puritan eyes, for the massacre of the English and Scotch colonists. But he was the right hand of Cromwell in the campaign in Scotland which preceded the "crowning mercy" of Worcester. He covered the retreat of the army on Dunbar; and it has been said that the skilful manoeuvre which led to the rout of Leslie's forces was an inspiration of Monk, and not of his chief—a statement which we summarily reject, for it was exactly one of the strokes of Cromwell. Monk commanded in Scotland when Cromwell marched southward. He directed the assault against Dundee—a dark incident of the Civil War; and he penetrated into the depths of the Highlands, where there was now no Montrose to lead the clans. Soon after this, he was transferred, like Blake, from service on land to the sea; and though he was not the equal of the renowned admiral, he holds an honourable place among our naval worthies. He displayed heroic courage and constancy in the desperate engagements with the Dutch fleets which marked our sternest struggle for the empire of the seas; and he fought, not unsuccessfully, against Van Tromp, the most scientific mariner of the age. By this time the three kingdoms had been subdued. Monk held high office, under the rule of Cromwell, being in chief military and civil command at Scotland; and in this capacity he completely reduced the Highlands and their wild tribes to obedience. There can be no doubt that, in these years, he was a loyal supporter of the Protector's regime, though he treated the adherents of the fallen monarchy with humanity, justice, and even kindness. He was in no sense of the word a time server; but he had the strong feeling for established order, and for accepting a de facto government, which is characteristic of the English nature. He served Cromwell with complete good faith; though he had little in common with the modes of thought and the genius of that extraordinary man, and he was, perhaps, unconsciously a cavalier at heart.

Until the Protector passed away, Monk was only known as an eminent soldier, and an able and accomplished provincial ruler. He was slow to exhibit the peculiar qualities which enabled him to steer the vessel of the State to a haven of safety through storms and shoals, and to save his country from long years of trouble. When the feeble hand of Richard had proved unequal to maintain the settlement made by Oliver, there seemed a prospect that order would perish in England, and that military tyranny, or the strife of factions, would destroy the functions of law and government. The army was all-powerful, but its chiefs had no head, and were divided by mutual hates and jealousies; the field of politics was filled with visionaries, with enthusiasts, with mere selfish schemers; authority had collapsed when the man of genius, who had made it respected, passed from the scene; revolution had sapped the power of tradition, of usage, of all that holds men together; and though the great body of Englishmen were even now royalists, they had no leaders, and were still unable to move. In this state of affairs Monk gave the weight of his name and his army to what had now become the sole depository of national right in the realm. He upheld the remains of the old Parliament, and endeavoured to rally the country around it; he sternly resisted military revolt, and attempts at factious intrigue and violence; and yet he prepared the way for a better order of things by insisting that England should herself pronounce on her future destiny "in a free Parliament." By thus clinging to the constitution, wreck as it was, and holding but to what was alone legitimate, Monk rescued England from civil war and anarchy; and there never was nobler or more patriotic service. It seems certain, however, though no thought of personal ambition crossed his mind, that nearly to the last moment he had no fixed resolve to place Charles II. on his ancestral throne. He would have accepted the verdict of a free parliament on any mode of government it thought fit to set up, and have given it full and sincere support. Two circumstances no doubt determined his purpose, and made him restore the Stuart monarchy—England broke out into a flame of loyalty which nothing could for the time resist, and the Restoration assured her an influence abroad which she could not possess under any other regime. How he baffled Mezzarin and Louis de Haro, who really wished to keep this country weak, is well narrated in this volume. The conduct of Monk in this great conjuncture was, from first to last, marked with single-minded honesty and with sagacity and wisdom of no ordinary kind.

It has often been laid to the charge of Monk that he did not impose terms on Charles II., and save England from cavalier reaction, when he was master of the situation in 1660. Very possibly the scion of the noble house of Devon felt the divinity that hedges a king too strongly when he knelt down to welcome his restored sovereign; but the country was in a hot fit of loyalty, and it would have been impossible at the moment to set bounds to monarchy. Monk, however, did a great deal to check the policy of vengeance dictated to Charles, and insisted on by the cavalier Parliament:

and Mr. Corbett has conclusively shown that he was absolutely guiltless of betraying Argyle, the worst accusation that has been made against him. The veteran soldier and the high-minded patriot, who had rescued England from the worst kind of tyranny—the violence of soldiers and of savage factions—was destined to the lot which has often befallen the moderate and the just in a revolutionary time. He was raised to the highest rank in the peerage; but he was treated at court with contempt and distrust, as a follower of the accursed usurper, and a trimmer, who had taken fortune at the flood. And he has been held up to odium by Pepys and Clarendon: by the first, in the interest of a rival, Sandwich; by the second, because he had served the Commonwealth. On the other hand, he was hated and denounced as a traitor to the cause by the remains of the Puritans, and by the surviving adherents of Cromwell; and the Presbyterians of Scotland never forgave him because he did not force the Covenant on Charles II. Yet he did England noble service to the last, and for this alone we should revere his memory. He fought like a hero against De Ruyter, and when the Dutch sails appeared in the Thames; and he was one of the founders of the British army, on which he has stamped, so to speak, his nature—indomitable courage, and a strong sense of duty. He died, before his time, in 1670; but, had he survived to the Revolution of 1688, he would have been pre-eminent among its foremost worthies, none of whom, indeed, are to be compared to him. His successor, however, was a dishonour to his name, and history has not done Monk justice.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MERRIS.

The Modern Novelists of Russia. By Charles Edward Turner. (Trübner.)

PROF. TURNER has in a previous work shown so true an appreciation of many of the phases of Russian life that English readers will be prepared to give him a hearty welcome. The present book has all the pleasing qualities of the former; the same power of seizing the characteristics of an author and putting them clearly before us, and the same hearty sympathy with his subject—a subject, let us remember, growing every day more popular.

In his first chapter he sketches the rise of the novel in Russia, which, indeed, has pretty much followed the fortunes of the European romances, which it has always more or less imitated. Last century we have sickly sentimental stories in the style of Marmontel or the less to be admired parts of Sterne, whose emotional language found a faithful echo in the pages of Karamzin. By the way, the novel of this author, cited by Mr. Turner on p. 4, should be "Poor Lisa" (Biednaya Lisa), or Elizabeth, and not Louisa. The Russians, however, during the latter part of last century got hold of some better things; we find translations of Fielding and Richardson, among others. It was Nicholas Gogol (1809-1852) who first imitated the English realistic school of novelists, which is now triumphant throughout Europe, as the English historical novel was previously.

The sketch given of the writings of Goncharov, who is still living, will give an excellent idea of the style of that popular novelist, who has not, however, yet succeeded in making his name much known outside of Russia. Far different has been the fate of Turgueniev, who till recently, to the majority of English readers, was the sole representative of Russian literature. Prof. Turner gives us a slight sketch of the wonderful "Nobleman's Retreat" (Dvorianskoi Gniado), one of the most pathetic stories ever written. No author has given the world a finer page than that in which Lavretski returns to the old house in which he had first seen the woman he loved, then for ever torn from him, and hears the joyful voices of the new generation that has arisen, and feels, as so many have been compelled to feel, that his own life is practically closed. There is also an excellent account of the powerful novel "Smoke" (Dim). In it Turgueniev satirised the dreams which occupy the Russian mind—dreams which appear now as far from being realised as ever.

The chapter on Dostoevski will probably be found by the English reader one of the most interesting, because the strange career of that remarkable man is so little known among us. Having unfortunately joined a band of young revolutionary enthusiasts, he became involved in their punishment. The government became aware of their proceedings in consequence of a noisy dinner in memory of Fourier, at which one of their number, Petrashevski, wound up his speech by declaring that it was time to put into execution the death sentence which they had pronounced on the Government and society (!). The meeting was followed a few days later by the arrest of thirty-four of the members of the club, including Dostoevski, although he was not present at the dinner. This, we must remember, was in 1849, under the rule of Nicholas. The prisoners were sentenced to death, and on December 22 of that year they were conveyed to the Semenovskii Place; but finally their sentences were commuted to banishment, when all preparations had been made for their execution. They first began to feel a faint hope that they would not be put to death under the following circumstances, which shall be told in Mr. Turner's own words:

"One of them, Kashkin, a young government clerk, who had not yet completed his nineteenth year, was struck with the strange fact that, though he had confessed, Shaposhnikov was not allowed to receive the Sacrament. He happened to be placed at the extreme corner of the platform, and, availing himself of his position, leaned down to where Galakhov, the policeman, was standing, and hurriedly asked him in French: 'Is it possible that the priest can hear our confession and, at the same time, refuse us the Sacrament?' 'Mais vous serez tous pardonnés,' the general whispered in reply."

The circumstances of his four years' sojourn in Siberia have been narrated by Dostoevski in his "Memorials of the House of Death" (Zapiski iz Mertvogo Doma). They were indeed terrible. A pathetic anecdote of our author is told by Prof. Turner on p. 95 of his book: he shows that Dostoevski, in spite of his grievous sufferings, could never be induced to say anything against the persons who caused them. He was a religious and gentle-hearted man. The sketch given of the novel, "Evil Spirits" (Biesi), is extremely interesting, because in it there is an analysis of the sources of that Nihilism which has eaten into the heart of Russia. The word is said to have been coined by Turgueniev, but we seem to have met with it earlier in the memoirs (Bloss a Dumé) of Herzen. In "Evil Spirits" the career of a certain Nechaev was described. This man deluged Russia with political pamphlets advocating extreme views, and at the same time swindled the secret societies to which he belonged. On the fraud being denounced by a student of the university of Moscow, Nechaev assassinated him and fled to Switzerland, but was very properly surrendered by the Swiss Government. The writings of Dostoevski are beginning to grow famous among us by means of translations. We remember some two or three years ago reading an English review in which the anonymous critic praised him as a rising young author, whose style would probably improve in course of time. Dostoevski died in 1881, aged fifty-nine.

Prof. Turner devotes his fifth chapter to Count Leo Tolstoi, whose strange religious and political views have made his name famous throughout Europe. The remarkable opinions of Tolstoi have already formed the subject of several notices in the ACADEMY. His brilliant pictures of the great war of 1812, his pathetic stories of peasant life, his socialistic ideals, have been discussed on various occasions. We may therefore hurry to the concluding chapter of Prof. Turner's volume and speak of two less known authors, Garshin and Korolenko. The former terminated a short life of thirty-three years by his own hand in the early part of 1888. He was a man of considerable talent, perhaps even genius, but subject to paroxysms of insanity. His patriotic zeal led him to join the Russians in their war for the deliverance of the Bulgarians; and he has described with great power the terrible scenes of which he was a witness. In his sketches we are forcibly reminded of the realistic pictures of Verestchagin, who has painted war under such hideous aspects, and shown what it really is when stripped of the false pomp and glitter which surround it—mere vulgar manslaughter.

There is great truth in what the French critic, M. de Vogüé, says, that the Russian thinker goes at once to the foundation of things, sees the contradictions, the vanity, the nothingness of life; and if his artistic temperament urges him to reproduce it, he does so with a didactic simplicity, sometimes with a calm despair, most often with the inherent fatalism of the Oriental part of his soul. Korolenko is still alive, and some fine extracts showing his skill in nature painting are given by Prof. Turner (p. 196). In his forest pictures we are reminded of the descriptions of the Lithuanian woods in the beautiful poem of Mickiewicz, "Pan Tadeusz." Some of the tales of M. Korolenko recall to us those of the Bohemian author Halek—strange, mystic compositions.

At the present time a real national spirit seems to be evolving itself in Russian literature. The prophecy of Bielinski, the clever Russian critic, appears in a fair way of being fulfilled:

"The time will come when education will be abundant in Russia, and the intellectual phy-siognomy of the nation will show itself; then our artists and authors will impress on all their works the stamp of the Russian mind."

W. R. MORFILL.

"THE BADMINTON LIBRARY."—Golf. By Horace G. Hutchinson. With contributions by Lord Wellwood, Sir Walter Simpson, A. J. Balfour, Andrew Lang, H. S. C. Everard, and others; and Illustrations by Thomas Hodge and Harry Furniss. (Longmans.)

EVERY golfer, be he expert or duffer, will heartily welcome this charming book, which is a most valuable addition to the literature of golf. The caddie who ventured to inform a learned professor more celebrated for his knowledge of the classics than for his skill in the ancient game that "onbody could learn Latin and Greek, but it took a heid to play gowf" may, in his ignorance of the humanities, have somewhat over-estimated the difficulty of the game. We have no doubt, however, that the devotee of golf who has a lively recollection of his days of sorrow and humiliation during the duffer stage, and who is still prone, when "out of form," to practice "agriculture," will side with the caddie and welcome a treatise on "Golf made Easy." This volume has been written to point the way to success to those who are ignorant of the science of golf, and who have no friend to help or coach them; and, certainly, if the student can thoroughly master the "thirty-nine articles" of the game so ably expounded by Mr. Hutchinson, and can put them into practice on the links, he is destined to become an adept at golf, and, perhaps, "Cock o' the Green."

Mr. Andrew Lang drives off with a brief but racy sketch of the history of the game. He is followed by Lord Wellwood, who, feeling that he is in the wake of very exhaustive writers, contributes his general remarks on the game on the distinct understanding that he is to have a "clear green," and that he is not to be held responsible for the accuracy of his history or his science. An exhaustive history of the game has yet to be written; and the youth, for he must be a youth, who would aspire to be the "Gibbon of Golf" must spend a lifetime in ransacking the whole field of "the history, literature, and legislation of Scotland from the beginning of time." This is hardly a task to be undertaken by one who has devoted his youth and manhood to literature, and who has won his spurs, but we are thankful to the "archaeological duffer" for the interesting chapter he has written. The origin of the game and the derivation of the word are alike unknown. Mr. Lang is inclined to believe the word is Celtic, and shows that the game may have had its origin in Holland. At any rate, we know from historical records that the game was popular in Scotland about the middle of the fifteenth century; for prohibitory laws were enacted at that time against both football and golf, because these pastimes were found to interfere with the practice of archery. The invention of gunpowder, however, checkmated the superior skill of the English archer, and left the Scot free to lay aside the bow and resume the driver. It would appear that the game had such a fascination for the fifteenth-century Scot that he ventured occasionally to ply the cleek on Sunday, even at the risk of having to expiate his offence on the stool of repentance. He must have been a golfer of a very different type from Tom Morris, the venerable "high priest of the hierarchy of professional golf," who—as Mr. Everard tells us in his admirable chapter on "Some Celebrated Golfers"—would never consent to handle a club even on a Fast Day. Tom's determination "to keep the Fast Day" was due to honest conviction, for which we honour him, and not to the dread of the seat of repentance in the town kirk of St. Andrews, "an inestimable relief, which many a long driver, many a fell putter, must have consecrated by his weight."

Lord Wellwood's remarks on the game will delight the heart of the golfer. They are as fresh and invigorating as a sea-breeze on the links in summer, and have a whiff of genuine humour about them that is not felt in the perusal of the chapter specially devoted to the "Humours of Golf." With pleasure we roam with him over the whole field of the science and ethics of the game, and we are sorry when he holes his last putt. As a golfer Lord Wellwood is a rank socialist.

"No one," he says, "can understand what land-hunger means until he has played, or tried to play, on a green which is too small for the number of players. Whatever his political views on other matters, he will become a rank socialist as to this, and will loudly call for the allotment of those stretches of shore ground which are crying aloud to be converted into golfing greens."

With regard to women's rights, he is not prepared to give them the full franchise; but they are to be liberated from the degrading slavery to which they were subjected in the days of our golfing forefathers when they were allowed to sit brooding at home, or, if they ventured to approach their lords and masters while engaged in the serious business of the day, were driven from the links by the terrible cry "Fore," shouted from the stentorian lungs of unscrupulous caddies. The ladies are to be relegated to a golfing green specially laid out for their use, where, like Nausicaa of old, they may sport with the ball and be out of the way.

Of the fifteen chapters in the book ten are contributed by Mr. Horace Hutchinson, "who, though an Englishman born and bred, has done more than any other golfer to popularise the game on both sides of the Tweed and to raise the standard of amateur play." In his deeply interesting and instructive essays on Elementary Instruction, Style, Nerve and Training, Etiquette and Behaviour, he shows clearly that he can wield his pen with the same graceful ease and power with which he can wield his club. Though the study of Mr. Hutchinson's "didactic treatise" may fail to improve the play or the temper of the confirmed duffer, he will be compelled to acknowledge that the fault lies with himself and not with his instructor. If he would enjoy the high pleasure of hitting the ball clean from the tee, or the still more supreme delight of laying the ball dead on the green with an iron wrist-shot, let him faithfully carry out the instructions of Mr. Hutchinson and his bliss is assured. But, alas! the golfer is born and not made. Being painfully aware that he has a bad style and that he adds considerably to the expense of the game by frequently breaking his club on his shoulder or a divot, he cons the rules laid down by the mentor of golf and addresses the ball. His addresses are persistently rejected, and he betakes himself to his old way of wooing, though his candid partner and irreverent caddies may aver that his attitude in playing bears a striking resemblance to a "stuffed bird" or the wielder of a sledge-hammer. He consoles himself, however, by the reflection that after all his own style may be "a style of genius," and, though less elegant than the style of a Hutchinson or a Leslie Balfour, it matters little so long as he hits the ball.

There is certainly no game which is a severer test of nerve than the game of golf, and if the game is to be played as it ought to be played, the golfer must pay good heed to the maxim, "Mens sana in corpore sano." "It is not good to eat too much or to drink too much, but he must eat heartily or he will find his nerve all gone if he tries to play on an empty stomach." Golf abhors a vacuum. If your partner's luncheon should consist of a beef-steak and a pint of champagne, you may rest assured he will prove a more formidable antagonist than if he should merely toy with a biscuit and sip a glass of sherry. But an immoderate use of the "vin de pays" must be avoided, otherwise the golfer may find himself in the position of the veteran who was surprised that, although he saw two balls, he could hit neither of them. It is true that it is one of the many virtues of golf that it is "an old man's game." Indeed, it has been said that if a man wishes to spend a healthy and a happy old age he must make a point of learning golf and whist in his youth. A round of the links, however, is a pretty severe strain on the physical powers; and he who makes golf the serious business of his life, and who stakes his reputation and his peace of mind on a cleek-shot or a putt, must never allow "his muscles to get flabby" or his hand to lose its cunning. He must swing his club at an imaginary ball in his bedroom after his morning bath, and practice putting on the lawn in dry, and on the drawing-room floor in wet weather. We are inclined, however, to regard golf as a pastime, though we are not prepared to go the length of the bard who sang:

"We putt, we drive, we laugh, we chat,
Our strokes and jokes aye clinking,
We banish all extraneous fat
And all extraneous thinking."

The poet who penned these lines was a rank heretic, for there is no creature, not even your partner's wife when she goes the round to keep your partner's score, more obnoxious than the chatterer who will persist in discussing Home Rule when you have a hanging ball to deal with, or in counting your strokes aloud when you are delving in a bunker. Moreover, joking is sternly prohibited, for a joke has been known to spoil a match. If you play to win you must observe a religious silence; and though your partner be a pleasant fellow, you must remember that, however unchristian it may look, you must "cherish a silent hatred of him and try to treat him as a nonentity."

Mr. Everard gives an interesting account written in terse and vigorous English of the heroes of golf, and a record of the battles they have lost and won. His brief biographical sketch of "old Tom Morris, on whose handsome sunburnt face nobility of character is written in letters as clear as day," is much more to our liking than the garrulous autobiography which closes the book. Tom is never garrulous, though he is a master of his mother-tongue—a fact which the style of the autobiography would lead us to doubt. Nor have we ever heard of Tom, "who was born in the purple of courteous habits," suggesting "a pint o' black strap" for his own use, though we have heard that on one occasion he suggested that his partner was sorely in need of a little refreshment. Tom was playing with a veritable duffer whose exertions had proved too much for his physical energy. "Ye wad be nane the waur o' a black strap, sir," said Tom. "Certainly," replied his partner, "my performances are so miserable that I feel you cannot chastise me enough with any sort of strap." "You mistake me, sir," replied the courteous Tom. "I didn't mean that; I mean ye wad be nane the waur o' a pint o' porter." May Mr. Everard's graceful and well-earned tribute of praise warm the heart of the veteran in the evening of his life, and prove an incentive to every professional to follow in his footsteps!

G. R. MERRY.

THREE VOLUMES OF ESSAYS.

The Trials of a Country Parson. By Augustus Jessopp. (Fisher Unwin.)

Joints in our Social Armour. By James Runciman. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

Idle Musings. Essays in Social Mosaic. By E. Conder Gray. (W. Heinemann.)

THREE years ago Dr. Jessopp republished in separate form, under the title of Arcady, for Better for Worse, some entertaining essays relating to country life in East Anglia. The book met with large and well-merited success; but the author assures us that the impression produced upon many of its readers was the very reverse of that intended. They thought—wrongly, it seems—that the learned doctor, having given up school-work in a big town with the belief that he should find in the repose of a country parish everything that was charming, and had been grievously disappointed. The rustic character, since he had been brought in contact with it, had deteriorated sadly. The villagers had lost their simplicity, their courtesy, and their kindness; and the prospect of spending his declining years among them was, for a man of culture and refinement, a depressing one. However, it appears that he did not mean all that he said, and that further acquaintance with his surroundings has enabled him to recognise much in them that is full of interest and that calls forth his warmest sympathy. Everyone will be glad that Dr. Jessopp has made this discovery, and that it induced him to give to the world another volume of essays, equally delightful and, for the most part, equally valuable.

"In Arcady," he says, "I have drawn, as best I could, the picture of the life of the rustics around me. In this volume I have sketched the life of a country parson trying to do his best to elevate those among whom he has been called to exercise his ministry."

Of course he meets with trials and difficulties in his lot; but, on the whole, he declares it to be a very happy lot, and the worries and annoyances to which it subjects him are no worse than other folk have to encounter. A country parson's income nowadays is, it is true, smaller and more precarious than heretofore; but then a man who possesses Dr. Jessopp's skilful pen can always add something to it, and also find in literature and research an escape from those little worries which are more hard to bear than the greater trials of life. Isolation, of which our genial author complains, is a hardship not peculiar to the clergy in Norfolk. Other people there—unless they are rich enough in friends and money to have their houses always full—suffer from it; and if the occasional visitors are neither numerous nor agreeable, the unattractiveness of the locality may have something to do with it. Then, as to the fixity of the country parson's position, is it altogether true? No doubt there is always a tendency to suppose that people occupying big places are necessarily big people, but merit even in obscure positions is sometimes recognised. At any rate, a country parson is in this respect no worse off than a country doctor or a country lawyer, and he can often effect an exchange with far less difficulty. As to the retirement of the aged and incapable, there cannot be two opinions; and the matter has not only engaged the attention of the heads of the Church, but has already been dealt with by a promising scheme for clergy pensions, of which we are surprised Dr. Jessopp has not heard. The difficulties in the way of making such a scheme compulsory seem insurmountable; and, unless there be, as is the case with the Clive Fund, a nucleus of revenue derived from other sources, the self-help of the clergy—an essential principle—would probably be ineffectual. The last and least interesting paper in this volume is entitled, "Why I wish to visit America." It would, we venture to think, be far better for Dr. Jessopp to carry out his wish than merely to write about it; for he may be pretty sure (and his publisher will help him in his calculations) that his readers will be so glad to hear what he has to say about "the great American people" that the expenses of his visit will not trouble him.

There is nothing of that leisurely dallying with his subject which is the characteristic of most essayists about Mr. Runciman. He is intensely earnest, and directs his arrows with force and precision against those "joints in our social armour" which his keen vision detects. On the subject of Drink he may be thought to express himself in terms that need some qualification; but he writes strongly because he feels strongly, and, moreover, because his feelings have been stirred by what he has actually witnessed. Statistics of drunkenness probably never made a man sober, nor converted a reader into an apostle of temperance. Upon this point Mr. Runciman is very decided in his language, and goes almost so far as to say that none but those who have passed through the temptation to drink can be of much use to the tempted. Scarcely less vigorous is he in dealing with that miserable malady of modern life which is absurdly called "Sport." In the old-fashioned and proper sense of the word, sport meant certain outdoor pastimes, which implied and promoted skill, courage, and endurance. But nowadays—at least, among a large class which embraces alike the sharper and the shopboy—it is exclusively applied to a morbid interest in the fluctuations of the betting ring. As a rule, those who bet know as little of the points of a horse as of his pedigree. They would not back Eclipse himself on the score of merit. All that leads, or more often misleads them, is some supposed "tip" sold, or presumed to have been sold, by a purveyor of stable secrets, whose venality has escaped detection. We should be glad if Mr. Runciman's scathing remarks had the effect of arresting the progress of this social evil. It may be said that turf betting is no worse than Stock Exchange speculation. In its best form it may not be so; but in its lowest form—and that, unhappily, is the most prevalent—it would be hard to find any vice more ignoble or more disastrous. "The Ethics of the Turf"—to which Mr. Runciman devotes an essay—have to do with "every shade of vice, baseness, cupidity and blank folly"; and the writer exhausts his copious vocabulary of denunciation upon the heads of these so-called "Sportsmen," their parasites and their plunderers. But Mr. Runciman can write in another vein than that of invective. When he has to speak about "Lost Days," "The Fading Year," or "Behind the Veil," he betrays no little tenderness and religious sentiment. Though his terminology be not quite the same as that adopted by Sir G. Stokes in his recent lecture, yet the professor and the essayist arrive at the same conclusion—namely, "that the essence which each of us calls 'I' must exist for ever." There is a purpose in all that Mr. Runciman says; and although one cannot always share his enthusiasm or accept his conclusions, it is impossible to doubt his sincerity as a moral reformer and his zeal in the cause of philanthropy.

We have not the least idea what "social mosaic" may be, but we can certify to the fact that Mr. E. Conder Gray's musings are entitled to the epithet "idle." No one will be the worse for anything he reads in this pretty volume, nor perhaps much the better. Here and there an apt expression or a felicitous quotation make it not difficult to believe that Mr. Gray could do something better than idly muse; but his mind has been largely nourished on poetry and light literature, and, therefore, its outcome is not likely to be very substantial until the mental fare is changed. Given a vacant hour, an easy chair, and an unharassed mind, Mr. Gray's company might be fairly acceptable. It would not be exciting. We doubt not that—to use his own phrase—"he has fallen in love with his own work," but he must not expect others to share the warmth of his parental affection. Self-satisfaction is fatal to progress, and the reviewer's duty is to check the one in order to promote the other.

CHARLES J. ROBINSON.

TWO COLLECTIONS OF PHILOSOPHICAL PROBLEMS.

Problems of the Future. By S. Laing. (Chapman & Hall.)

Fundamental Problems. By Dr. Paul Carus. (Chicago: The Open Court Publishing Company.)

"PROBLEMS" are either questions "set" in order to be answered, or questions which, after discussion, are declared to be, for the time being, unanswerable. In one sense they may have the signification of dogmas, in the other of open questions. Each of these meanings is represented by the works above named.

Taking them in the order of their literary form and importance, Mr. Laing's book is an exceedingly thoughtful and interesting account of questions which seem in the future to await a solution, as well as of the steps which up to the present time tend towards such a solution and possibly adumbrate its character. It deals with most departments of research which at present excite the energy and curiosity of thoughtful men. There is, therefore, little method or order in the consecutive chapters. Their one principle of connexion, the reason of their existence, is that they possess alike certain elements or phases of thought which "pass man's understanding"—at least, at this particular stage of the nineteenth century. The result is a certain heterogeneity—an aspect of intellectual patchwork—which, in an age so versatile and desultory as our own, will probably be regarded as a recommendation. The man accustomed to consecutive thought, or whose attention is largely confined to one department of research, must however experience a somewhat abrupt solution of continuity when he is required to pass from the consideration of "the missing link" to "Animal Magnetism," or from the "Creeds of Great Poets" to "Armed Europe" and "Taxation and Finance." But any strain such a reader may feel on his intellectual flexibility is more than compensated by Mr. Laing's cautious and undogmatic tone. He is not asked to sit down to a banquet wherein the individual peculiarity of each dish is intensified by cooking to an extreme incompatibility with all the rest, but wherein the cooking is skilfully adapted to assimilate, for purposes of common digestion, the varied dishes of which it consists. Whatever the problem treated, and how varied soever the information which the treatment discloses—for with all his versatility it cannot be supposed that Mr. Laing should be equally well posted in all the subjects which he reviews—we find the same characteristics of care, caution, fulness of research, and moderation in the statement of conclusions. No doubt the specialist who has made one or other of Mr. Laing's philosophical themes the study of a lifetime may find occasion of dissent; but the ordinary cultured reader who has glanced from time to time at most of these problems will admit that he finds in Mr. Laing a philosophical guide and friend, whose suggestions are worth consideration even when they cannot wholly command approval.

Not the least valuable feature of the book is the light it reflects on contemporary thought and culture in England. Mr. Laing's eminence as a man of business is at least equal to his fame as an author and thinker. It is clear, therefore—and Mr. Laing is by no means the only illustration of the truth—that the habits of accuracy and industry developed by business pursuits are quite compatible with a profound interest and genuine intellectual appreciation of the different issues in philosophy, science, and religion which are being mooted among us. Of a book so well adapted to the needs and thoughts of our time, the success is, of course, assured. Whatever else may be doubtful in his Problems of the Future, this, at least, is not problematical.

Passing to Dr. Carus's Fundamental Problems, we find ourselves in a new region of thought. Here are problems which, as I have hinted, are in reality dogmas; and, what renders the matter worse, they are sometimes treated in an arbitrary and dogmatic spirit. The author is kind enough to spare both reader and reviewer the task of reading the whole of his book by presenting them with a syllabus of its conclusions. Thus he tells us:

"The philosophy which 'The Fundamental Problems' present is Monism. Monism holds that all existence is One. The foundation of Monism rests upon and is original in the formal constitution of the human intellect. . . . The author objects to Supernaturalism as well as Agnosticism. The method of his philosophy is a systematic arrangement of knowledge. Knowledge is the possession of certain truths; truth the conformity of cognition to reality, and reality the sum total of all that is. So that the conception in which this system culminates is positive, and based upon the data of reality."

After this authoritative exposition little remains to be added. The book consists of a series of essays which appeared in a Chicago publication called The Open Court. An arena better befitting the consideration of "Problems" than such a court seems inconceivable, though, judging of its proceedings by this work of Dr. Carus—which, notwithstanding its thoughtfulness, is vitiated by arbitrary conclusions and a pretentious style—the "court" is "open" only to one species of philosophy, and its judgments are as dictatorial and ex cathedra as if they emanated from an infallible Pope.

JOHN OWEN.

NEW NOVELS.

Syrlin. In 3 vols. By Ouida. (Chatto & Windus.)

In Her Earliest Youth. In 3 vols. By Tasma. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

Hauntings: Fantastic Stories. By Vernon Lee. (Hinemann.)

Mariá. By Jorge Isaacs. From the Mexican. (Harper.)

Los Corvitos. By Gertrude Franklin Atherton. (New York: Lovell.)

Stic to One. By Edward Bellamy. (Putnam's.)

Miss Mephistopheles. By Fergus Hume. (White.)

Boyhood and Youth. By Count Tolstoi. Translated by C. Popeff. (Elliot Stock.)

If Syrlin were a first work, it would be one of the most puzzling books to estimate. It is so brilliantly clever in parts, so scathingly keen and bitter, and shows frequently such close observation and trenchant diction on the part of the author, that one would be tempted to predict a "future" for the young novelist. But even then the most casual of critics could not fail to perceive the radical shortcomings of the book—its hopelessly wrong twist of the skeins of life, its occasional ludicrous shallowness of insight, its weak and inartistic construction, and, above all, its superabundant vulgarity. The sentiment of most readers, during perusal of Syrlin, must be one of profound thankfulness that—if Ouida's account of the ways of thought, speech, and daily life of our aristocracy be even approximately true—they are themselves born to that state of middle-class existence toward which the popular novelist has such a scornful indifference. Of course, if aristocratic society actually existed as Ouida depicts it, she would deserve all praise for her unflinching realism; but though the present writer is only an obscure unit among the insufferable middle-class of England, he has no hesitation in declaring that aristocracy à la Ouida does not exist, never did, and never will. No human society, however limited numerically, can be uniformly vile and stupid; nor could it be proved, on the other hand, that the salvation of a country depends nowadays upon its aristocracy. Ouida paints the highest class of English society as rotten to the core, and even when she condescends to write of anyone below the rank of an earl she is unsparing in her corrosive acids. Yet, withal, she loves aristocracy, particularly her much abused English aristocracy, so absorbingly, that one would believe she belonged to the hated and despised middle-class, who, though they have no titles, no pedigree to speak of, pay their debts, live clean and honourable lives, and do not conduct themselves in the presence of "their women" like ill-bred bores, are yet (we are assured) so fascinated by the glory of their social superiors that they are incapable of any other sentiment than one varying from reverent pride to idolatrous worship. Nevertheless, it is to be hoped that the rich Australian or millionaire American, who has come over to drop some of his "pile" in the old country, will not accept Ouida's version of the life of our highest society as credible. Her Dukes and Marquesses, and all the other "haughty peers" and peeresses, are an insufferably vulgar set, who require only to be called Mr. Stiggins, the greengrocer, and Mrs. Huggins, the washerwoman, and Miss Woggles, the cook, to appear in their true light. One of the personages in Syrlin, who is meant to be a model of the worthiest type of British nobleman, the Duke of Beaufront, urges a lady to become his wife: when Mrs. Consuelo Lawrence gently declines, from the most generous and unselfish motives, this modern Bayard looks at her "with harshness and impatience and scepticism": then, "'Women can live on their own d——d empty sentiment as they live on ice-cream and a cup of tea,' he said savagely." As for the refined style of conversation of the upper classes, one example will serve: "Who is Syrlin?" asks the Countess of Avillion of her cousin the Duke of Beaufront, at the luncheon-table. "Nobody asks who artists are," interrupts Lord Avillion. "What the deuce does it matter what hole they come out of? It's all one, whether the butcher, the baker, or the candlestick-maker had the honour of their procreation." Unfortunately, Ouida's acquaintance with the "lower orders," whom she occasionally condescends to introduce into her aristocratic pages, is on a par with her knowledge of the refined manners of the crème de la crème, to adopt one of the myriad French phrases with which she sprinkles her novels. On the second page of the first volume of Syrlin there is an impossible butcher's boy, who cries out, concerning one of the dowagers driving to a Drawing Room at Buckingham Palace, "There goes an old ewe decked lamb fashion." As for Syrlin himself, he is ridiculous, impossible, incroyable. He is meant to be an artistic type: he is really a silly caricature. Rarely does he say a manly thing or do a manly act—as when he stammeringly apologises to Lady Avillion, whom he has endeavoured to seduce; or, when, with the help of a revolver, he dissipates in a puff of smoke all his overweening vanity and colossal silliness. Yet, even Syrlin, as may be gathered from various episodes in the first volume, occasionally displays a character as truly fine as his genius is brilliant: and, in this respect, he is typical of the novel which is called after him—which is ever and again clever beyond nine-tenths of the annual flood of fiction, and yet is, in the main, untrue, stupid, and wearisome.

The lady who, under the pseudonym of "Tasma," writes such pleasant tales of Australian life, has produced in the book entitled In Her Earliest Youth the cleverest as well as the most ambitious novel she has yet written. It is none the less colonial in sentiment because "the kangaroo business" is never obtruded; and this comparative colourlessness will perhaps interfere with the enjoyment of readers who expect Australian novels to afford them entertainment similar in kind to that embodied in Henry Kingsley's Geoffrey Hamlyn or Marcus Clarke's His Natural Life. On the other hand, it will be an attraction to those who have had experience of life at the Antipodes, and know that a day in Melbourne or Sydney is very like a day in London or Manchester, and that "life" up-country is not radically different from life in any remote county in the United Kingdom. The real interest of In Her Earliest Youth is centred in the love affair between Pauline Draffen and Sir Francis Segrave, though not improbably the sympathies of many readers will be with the latter rather than with Pauline's husband, a weak, boisterous, slangy, horsey colonial of a frequent but most undesirable type. The story is really a profound indictment of ill-mated marriages, though the author probably does not mean it so, literally. Tasma shows in this novel her fine faculty of characterisation; and if her men are somewhat unreal now and again, her women are true studies from life. Pauline, the heroine, is a charming woman, a high type indeed, and yet (despite Ouida) no uncommon one.

Vernon Lee is so accomplished a writer that one wonders at finding her prefacing her collection of four beguiling stories with a manifesto in which she declares her absolute scepticism in the matter of beguys. This is as though a spiritualist were to invite you to a séance, and just as you were getting your nerves ready to thrill be were to dissipate all mysterious expectations by the announcement that apparitions, and raps, and all the rest of it were mere clap-trap. All the same, Vernon Lee's Hauntings are quite genuinely ghostly in effect; her "sprites of the distempered mind," indeed, charm the attention much more than if they clanked their chains at midnight, or groaned, or dropped blood, or extended clammy hands, or wailed a banshee wail, or, in a word, were conventional spectres. Three at least of the Hauntings have appeared before, one, "Oke of Okehurst," as a shilling novelette, under the title of The Phantom Lover. I remember reading it a couple of years ago, but do not find that it is so interesting on re-perusal as I had anticipated. It is too obviously a tale of mere madness; an objection that, in a still more marked degree, militates against the last of the four narratives, "A Wicked Voice," which, moreover, is inferior in literary craftsmanship. "Dionea," a story of a modern reincarnation of Venus, and "Amour Dure," a strange tale of the recreation by mental fantasy of certain tragic circumstances of the past, are both very well worth re-reading: the latter for its mediaeval horror and savage, fantastic romance—so happily conveyed—and the former for a certain remote and yet poignant beauty, which, once apprehended, must haunt the imaginative mind in most pleasant fashion. It is a masterpiece; while "A Wicked Voice" is neither a winsome tale of fantasy nor a genuine ghost-story. But, as a matter of fact, the four stories do not go well together: artistically, their collection in one volume is a mistake.

The name of Jorge Isaacs, one of the foremost of Spanish novelists and the chief literary glory of Southern America, is almost unknown in this country. Yet his Mariá is one of those classics which are universal in their appeal, though intensely national. It is a beautiful story beautifully told; and so admirable does the translation seem to be that the reader is unconscious of a single alien note from first to last. The value of the book in its present dress is greatly increased by a sympathetic and interesting account of the literary fortunes of Mariá and of its author. This prefatory causerie is by Mr. Thos. A. Janvier, one of the ablest of the younger American writers, whose knowledge of Mexico, moreover, and of Mexican life and literature, is at first-hand. To adopt a commonplace phrase, Mariá is certainly a book which every lover of literature ought to read.

The next book on my list is also, in a sense, a Mexican romance; that is to say, it deals with Mexican California, and is from the pen of one who has not only lived on a Californian rancho, but who knows the strange half-Americanised "free squatters" and their stranger language, which is really a mongrel dialect with almost phenomenal licence in its variety. Last summer Mrs. Atherton's Hermia Suydam was reviewed in the ACADEMY. There could hardly be a greater contrast than between that book and Los Cerritos. The first is a story of an American woman, at once the eager representative and the victim of the "malady of the age" which Guy de Maupassant and M. Paul Bourget indicate when they use that elastic word modernité. The second is a romance of picturesque half-savage life in a part of the world practically unexploited by the literary pioneer—and this with all due respect for and admiration of Mr. Bret Harte's half-imaginary, half-real transcripts from nature. Carmelita, the heroine, is as striking as she is original a creation; and the story of her wayward, passionate, poetic life, with all its dramatic episodes, and its strangely interblent tragedy and happiness, is not one that the most casual reader will easily forget. There are passages of remarkable beauty, there is narrative and dramatic power of no common order, and there is genuine and unmistakable art in Los Cerritos. But the story has one notable artistic flaw—the too facile disposition of the protagonists, Castro, Carmelita's savage Mexican lover, and Mrs. Tremayne, the wife of the hero, her potent rival. Their terrible doom is told with vivid succinctness, though perhaps with exaggerated reticence of detail; but the impression left upon the mind has not that inevitableness which it is the aim of the true novelist to convey. Hermia Suydam had crudities of manner as well as of thought, able and suggestive book though it was; but it is pleasant to note the marked advance in purity and grace of diction which Mrs. Atherton displays in her latest romance. Having discarded what may be called the Franco-American style of the younger Transatlantic realists, her danger would appear to be a too uncontrolled exuberance of language. Los Cerritos only occasionally sins in this respect; perhaps it would be fairer to say that there are occasional hints of a too wayward eloquence. The book will unquestionably add greatly to the author's growing reputation.

Here is yet another novel from overseas. Mr. Edward Bellamy is so well-known by his Looking Backward that one naturally takes up Six to One, his new book, with interest. It is, as he calls it in his sub-title, "A Nantucket Idyl," and is a pleasant enough, unexciting, and distinctly "thin" narrative of how a young man spent his holiday, in agreeable company, during the dull season at a watering-place, and in what manner he gained a wife. I should imagine the book to be a much earlier production than Looking Backward, were it not issued as a new work.

The best that can be said for the new story by the young Australian author of The Mystery of a Hansom Cab is that it is less vulgar than its predecessor, and written with more ease if not with grace. In Miss Mephistopheles, Mr. Fergus Hume works along the line now of Miss Anna Katherine Green, now of M. Gaboriau, though both those skilled plot-weavers would laugh to scorn the ridiculously easy cipher which puzzles Naball, the detective. The story is interesting, and the plot is evolved with ingenuity; but Miss Mephistopheles has absolutely no claim to be considered as literature.

Count Tolstoi's Boyhood, Adolescence, and Youth has already been noticed in the ACADEMY, so it is unnecessary to add more than that this edition comprises in one volume what has hitherto been issued in two or three; and that in point of style—and, so far as it is possible for one unacquainted with the language of the original to judge, in the matter of literalness—it is indubitably the best English version of the Russian novelist's remarkable autobiographical, or semi-autobiographical, work.

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME BOOKS ON COLONIAL LIFE.

New Zealand for Emigrant, Invalid, and Tourist. By John Murray Moore. (Sampson Low.) This is an excellent and comprehensive account of New Zealand by a doctor who has resided at Auckland for nine years. He appears to have gone there for his health, which has been renovated by "the health-giving New Zealand air." His advice to intending emigrants is as follows:

"It is well to point out that by the latest private and official sources of information the only classes of immigrants required in the colony are: (1) Female domestic servants; (2) farmers with capital; (3) agricultural labourers; (4) shepherds and herdmen. No assistance in paying any part of the passage-money is now given by the government, which is carefully retrenching its expenses. All other trades, occupations, and professions are now so full in the colony that it is difficult for a new arrival to find work. Certain facts are forgotten sometimes by too eloquent emigration agents; for instance, (1) that the birth-rate in New Zealand is very high, amounting in some years to 38.5 per cent., and that the colony will complete its first half-century in 1890. It follows, as a consequence, that there are hundreds of New Zealand boys and girls, all of very fair education, ready and eager to fill situations, to enter offices, learn trades, and to get into the large civil service of the government, which also practically includes the great education department. Lawyers, teachers, clerks, governesses, lady-helps, clergymen, artists, and even musicians, are not well advised to go out just now to settle in New Zealand."

Naturally the most interesting portion of Dr. Moore's book is that which relates to his own profession. He is loud in his praises of the mineral springs of New Zealand, unsurpassed in number, variety, and medicinal value by those of any other inhabited country. In his practise in New Zealand he has never met with a case of true typhus fever, but typhoid is common owing to the unsanitary state of the towns in the colony. Asiatic cholera is unknown; and small-pox has been so effectually excluded from the islands that it does not appear at all as a cause of death in the mortality records of the quinquennial period 1881-1886. On the other hand, croup and diphtheria are deplorably common in the towns, and may be attributed to the emanations from the heaps of animal and vegetable refuse which are allowed to decompose unremoved. Dr. Moore remarks that the teeth of the European population decay very early, and this he attributes to the want of lime in the water. How then does he account for the beauty and durability of the teeth of the Maoris, which is one of the characteristics of the race? It is plain that something more than the absence of lime is required to account for this defect.

A Journey to Lake Taupo: and Australian and New Zealand Tales and Sketches. By Percy Russell. (Petherick.) This daintily-printed volume consists half of tales and half of sketches (for the latter word read "essays"), but all concerned with Australasian men, manners, and customs. The first story, "A Journey to Lake Taupo," and its sequel, "An Austral Theocracy," are of somewhat alight texture; but in the two succeeding tales, "The Treasure Tree," and "A Mad Passion," Mr. Russell shows very remarkable powers of plot construction. For delicate ingenuity of conception, combined with bold rapid execution, "The Treasure Tree" would be bad to beat. This, by the way, is a romantic tale of a hunt after hidden treasure through the wilds of Queensland, introducing us to a villain of rare vigour, who appropriately enough ends in smoke, being blown to smithereens by a gunpowder magazine as he flourishes a horse-pistol of regulation size. Of that part of this book which deals with fact, not the least interesting feature is a sketch of the life and work of Edward Gibbon Wakefield, to whom, more than to any other man, Great Britain is indebted for the colony of New Zealand. Be it remembered that in those days France had cast a longing eye in the direction of Australasia, and that, as a matter of fact, the expedition organised by Wakefield (in the teeth of official opposition) only forestalled a French fleet by a few days in seizing hold of the southern isle of the New Zealand group. The author of this book is evidently a strong protectionist, and he finds a powerful text in the material development of Victoria in the past two decades, during which period that colony has been subject to the Berry protectionist tariff. It is possible that the great duel between Free Trade and Protection may after all resolve itself into a question of time and place; and if it was expedient to close the Victorian markets to goods of foreign manufacture in 1870, it does not at all follow that Free Trade was not a crying want of Great Britain in the forties. The study of Victorian economics is agreeably relieved by a chapter on "Australian Art," which is full of beautiful word-painting, but leaves on the mind the idea that hitherto our Antipodean colonies have been more fruitful in landscape painters than in great delineators of life and manners.

A Winter Tour in South Africa. By Sir Frederick Young. (Petherick.) This pleasant narrative of a three months' tour in South Africa is enlarged from a paper read at the Royal Colonial Institute in November last. Sir Frederick gives an interesting account of Kimberley and its diamond mines. Diamonds, he states, are still rising in value, notwithstanding the large quantities found—such quantities, indeed, that they seemed to him "as plentiful as blackberries." The profits of the miners must be large; for he, with five companions, worked for an hour or two in picking diamonds from the heaps of small stones just brought up and laid out from the day's washing. The value of the diamonds so found was £1,200. The mines, however, differ much in richness. For instance, the average value of each truck-load of stuff from the Bullfontein mine is said to be about 8s., while from the De Beers it is 28s. or 30s. Rapid as has been the rise of diamond Kimberley, it is far surpassed by golden Johannesburg. Our author spent a week there, much interested in the gold-mines and the wonderful crushing machinery, some of it automatic. He is satisfied of the permanence of these goldfields. The furthest point reached by Sir Frederick was Waterbury, in the north of the South African Republic. He was struck, as other travellers have been, with the paucity of game in that country. In returning, he visited the battle-fields of Laing's Nek, Majuba Hill, and Ingogo. It is impossible, he writes, to estimate the damage done to British influence, prestige, and power by the political consequences resulting from that miserable fiasco, the retrocession of the Transvaal to the Boers. His chapter on the political situation is important, but not very hopeful. He is a strong advocate for imperial federation.

West-Nor'-West. By Jessie M. E. Saxby. (Nisbet.) This is a record of a summer's trip made by a mother to see her sons, who are settlers in the vast plains to the North-West of Canada, and to spy out the land. It is not a manual for emigrants, so much as a book to help stay-at-home parents to realise the conditions of emigrant life. Mrs. Saxby lightly surveys the country towards Qu'Appelle and Winnipeg, and beyond in the direction of British Columbia; and she pleasantly describes "the woods" which lie between the territory of Quebec and the North-West prairies. Everywhere she finds Scotchmen, and everywhere a great lack of Scotchwomen. Nothing, it seems, is wanting in this Western Paradise but women. "I believe," she says, "the old country could confer no greater boon upon this fine young nation than by sending it thousands of our girls to soften and sweeten life in the Wild West." Again and again Mrs. Saxby returns to this fact like an apostle of matrimony. Everywhere she sees selfishness and irregular living, owing to the absence of practical, sensible girls. She rails upon idle stay-at-home damsels in no measured terms: "it spoils their hands to do a little kitchen work at home, but they never mind scrubbing church brasses and kneeling on cold stones at the bidding of a parson," whatever that may mean, and its very vagueness intensifies its awfulness. She gives a capital account of a Presbyterian Sabbath in the far West, and a chapter is devoted to the portrait of a typical Canadian M.P. There is much sympathy with nature too, as might be expected from the authoress, and with every form of goodness. It is curious that, as she points out, the forms and ceremonies of the English Church suit the genius of the Red Indian better than the naked simplicity of Scotch worship.

Beyond the Argentine: or, Letters from Brazil. By May Frances. (W. H. Allen.) This is a cheery account of a six months' residence, from September 1887 to March 1888, on the Touro Passo, a tributary of the Uruguay River. The name of the book is, perhaps, misleading, for the part of Brazil through which the Touro Passo runs lies parallel to the Argentine Confederation, divided by it by the Uruguay. The writer went out to join a brother, who was district engineer on a pioneer railway. She had to rough it, but never makes a complaint. She gives a graphic account of the country and its inhabitants—an account we are very glad to have, for it is a part of the world not much known, and certainly little written about. The "estancieros"—equivalent, we presume, to landowners—were kind and friendly, but are a strange, half-civilised set of people. It seems they can read and write, but "their homes are not much more than barns, generally built of mud and bamboo, and roofed with what is known on English lawns as pampas grass; they are entirely without anything approaching the ornamental, either inside or out. They are, of course, always one-storied, and contain one living room, in which are a table and a row of chairs. Beyond are bedrooms, somewhat better furnished, the bed linen edged with home-made lace. I have seen an English advertisement of lager-beer nailed on the wall as a picture in one house; but, as a rule, floors and walls are of mud, and if the latter were ever whitewashed it is rarely done a second time. Pigs, dogs, and chickens wander in and out as they will; the children go barefoot, and even their elders only wear stockings on great occasions. When we go to return a call, the women always instinctively sit together on one side of the room and the men on the other, and maté is brought in."

The writer never tasted maté; she had no fancy to drinking out of the tube, called the bomba, common to all. Maté is said to be an antidote to the quantity of meat consumed by all classes; but this excess in meat-eating seems to arise rather from their being nothing else to eat than from gluttony. Our author was in Brazil before the final emancipation of the slaves; and it is easy to see what must have been the effect on these indolent, easy-going people when their servants were set free. If she was rightly informed, religion is extinct in this part of Brazil:

"The state of religious affairs in this country is almost incredible. The lives of the priests are not to be spoken of. Some years ago, about a hundred of the Jesuits—who have left their memorials everywhere in ruined churches, ancient bells, and the schools—were all banished, and the present priests have all been excommunicated by the Pope, and openly refuse to recognise his authority. But the result of all is a state of things about as bad as it can possibly be: the sin is wilful, and not ignorant."

We must say that this little book, with less than 150 pages, is a model tourists would do well to follow. The letters of which it consists are published just as they were written, and the editor has omitted all details of the voyage to Buenos Ayres. The result is that all is new and interesting. We are not told why the publication has been so long delayed.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. H. OSKAR SOMMER, the editor of Sir Thomas Malory's Le Morte Darthur is now engaged on a reprint of that curious work, The Kalender of Shepherdes, whence Spenser borrowed the title of his cycle of eclogues. This book, which was first printed at Paris in French under the title Compost et Calendrier des Bergiers (1493),

"was calculated," says Warton, "for the purposes of a perpetual almanac, and seems to have been the universal magazine of every article of salutary and useful knowledge. It is a medley of verse and prose, and contains, among many other curious particulars, the saints of the whole year, the movable feasts, the signs of the zodiac, the properties of the twelve months, rules for blood-letting, a system of ethics, politics, divinity, physiognomy, medicine, astrology, and geography."

In 1503 the first English edition of this book appeared also at Paris, entitled The Kalendar of Shyppars. The language in which it is written has been styled "Anglo-Scoto-Gallio." It certainly bears a strong Scotch stamp, but requires to be more closely examined before it can be properly named. Of this original edition only one perfect copy is known to exist. It was bought in 1812 for the Chatsworth Library at the Roxburghe Sale for £186. Another copy, very imperfect, is at Althorp. The Duke of Devonshire has kindly lent his treasure to the British Museum for Dr. Sommer's use. The forthcoming edition will consist of a photographic facsimile of the Chatsworth copy, including a great number of curious woodcuts, which were used for almost a century afterwards in the English editions; the French text from the edition of 1493 (Grenville collection); and a later English translation by Robert Copland, printed for the first time by R. Pynson in 1506 (Grenville collection). The deficiencies of this latter copy will be supplied from the unique copy of Wynkyn de Worde's edition of 1508 in the library of Magdalen College, Oxford. And, finally, there will be a critical bibliography of all the French and English editions, an index, and a glossary.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week The English Novel in the Time of Shakspeare, by M. J. J. Jusserand, author of "English Wayfaring Life." This originally appeared in French in 1887, having formed the introductory portion of a course of lectures delivered by the author during the previous winter at the Collège de France, as supplément for M. Guillaume Guizot. The principal subjects dealt with are Lyly and his Euphuës; Sir Philip Sidney, as the representative of pastoral romance; and Thomas Nash as the representative of the picaresque novel. The original has now been revised and enlarged by the author, and has been translated into English by Miss Elizabeth Lee. The volume will be handsomely printed, and illustrated with six heliogravures and other full-page plates in facsimile.

MR. DAVID NUTT has issued this week the first volume of his new series, the "Tudor Library," which is to consist of reprints of rare English books of the sixteenth century. This is Sir Thomas More's translation of the Latin Life of Pico della Mirandola (printed by Wynkyn de Worde, circa 1510), with introduction and notes by Mr. J. M. Rigg. The second volume of the series, to appear in June, will be a reprint of Daphnis and Chloe: the Shepherds' Holiday, being Angel Day's translation of Amyot's version of Longus. Mr. Joseph Jacobs will write a literary and bibliographical introduction.

MESSRS. RIVINGTONS will shortly issue a collection of Select Epigrams from the Greek Anthology, edited and translated by Mr. J. W. Mackail.

UNDER the title of A Climber's Handbook, Mr. W. M. Conway is preparing a new edition, in two volumes, of the well-known "Zermatt Pocket Book." The first volume, which is about to appear, will describe all ascents of peaks and passages of passes lying between the Great St. Bernard and the Theodul Pass. The second volume, to be issued next year, will cover the area between the Theodul and the St. Gotthard. Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will be the publisher.

Maahal: or, Hebrew Poetry Revived, is the title of a new book by Mr. Castle Cleary, announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock. The work will present the original lines of the poetical books of the old text in Roman type, with a literal translation and transference into corresponding English measures and cadences.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN & Co. have in the press a manual on The Boarding Out System, by Mr. Henry F. Aveling, clerk to the Paddington Board of Guardians. It will deal with all modern legislation relating to the protection of children and infant life, and will be written for the use more particularly of poor law guardians, boarding out committees, and practical workers in philanthropy.

MR. SPENCER BLACKETT announces the following for early publication: A one-volume novel, by Mr. W. E. Norris, entitled The Baffled Conspirators; a shilling book, entitled Laying down the Cards, by the Hon. Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh; a shilling book by Mrs. Alexander, entitled Forging the Fetters; and a new and cheap edition in one volume of Mr. L. B. Walford's Dick Netherby.

THE next volume of Messrs. Rivingtons' "Episodes from Modern German Authors" will be a selection of stories from the Schwabwälder Dorfgeschichten of Auerbach.

THE first edition of Mr. Joseph Hatton's novel By Order of the Czar has been exhausted within three weeks of publication. A second edition will be ready in a few days.

BRADFIELD COLLEGE was, we believe, one of the first schools to act Greek plays. It is now going to venture on a yet more original enterprise—nothing less than a performance of the "Antigone" in the open air, in a chalk pit, moulded so as to form an exact representation of a Greek theatre. All the actors will be masters and boys, with the head-master—who has also been his own architect—for coryphæus. The play will be given twice—on Tuesday, June 24, and Thursday, June 26. The actual hours have not yet been fixed; for, until the stage buildings are completed, it is not easy to calculate what time of day will best prevent the spectators having the sun in their eyes. Against the chance of rain no provision can be made.

THE Oriental Institute at Woking was the scene of an interesting gathering on Wednesday, May 21. It was the day of the I'd, which follows the month's fast of the Ramazan. There is a mosque in connexion with the institute, and so the pious Muhammadans gathered from various parts of England to perform their prayers in it. They afterwards dispersed for a picnic on the grounds, and visited the museum, library, and residential quarters which Dr. Leitner has provided for those Easterns who desire to combine modern studies with ancient oriental learning, while strictly observing their religion and maintaining their national food and dress.

ON Tuesday next, May 27, Mr. Andrew Lang will begin a course of three lectures at the Royal Institution on "The Natural History of Society." His first lecture will deal with the social habits and instincts among animals, showing that there are traces of progress even in these; will examine certain theories of the origin of society; and will describe savage societies. The second lecture will deal with "higher barbarism," including, under that term, the civilisations of the oriental and classical world, and of the middle ages. The third lecture will discuss the causes of discontent in modern society, and the future prospects of mankind.

AT the meeting of the Browning Society to be held at University College, Gower-street, on Friday next, May 30, a paper will be read by Mr. Revell on "Browning's Work in Relation to Modern Life." The chair will be taken by the Rev. G. Hawker.

A PROJECT has been started to provide a common meeting-place for members of learned societies, under the title of the Philosophy Club, with provisional quarters at 26 Suffolk Street, Pall Mall.

MR. STOFFORD BROOKE has published a pamphlet, entitled Dove Cottage (Macmillan), in which he appeals for a national subscription to purchase the house at Grasmere in which Wordsworth lived and wrote during his most inspired period from 1800 to 1808. The cottage, it may be as well to state, takes its name from having previously been the inn, with the sign of the Dove and Olive Bough, associated with "The Waggoner"; and after the Wordsworths left it, it was for twenty-seven years in the tenancy of De Quincey, its interior being described in an historic passage in The Confessions of an Opium Eater. The cottage, with the adjoining field of nearly one acre, can be purchased for £850; and, with an additional £350, it is proposed to "set the place in complete order, plant and beautify the garden, clean and arrange the house, and put enough old furniture into it to give it a pleasant air of occupation." Hereafter, a Wordsworth museum and library of a simple cottage kind might be built in the adjoining field. Permanent expenses would be provided out of a charge of sixpence for admission. With regard to management, &c., it is proposed to follow the precedent of the trust under which Shakspeare's birthplace at Stratford-on-Avon is held. It cannot be doubtful that the money required will be readily subscribed, in this country and in America; and this little pamphlet will always be treasured as a pleasing record of literary associations. Lord Coleridge and Lord Selborne have already promised their support. The hon. secretaries are Prof. Knight, of St. Andrews; and Mr. W. G. Brooke, 14, Herbert-street, Dublin; and the hon. treasurer is Mr. G. Lillie Craik, of Messrs. Macmillan's firm.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE June number of Scribner's will contain the only magazine article which Mr. Stanley has written about his recent journey, illustrated with a sketch made by him of Mount Ruwenzori, and with a photograph of the "pygmies."

Prof. Driver, of Oxford, is to contribute a memorial article on the late Dr. Franz Delitzsch to the June number of The Expository Times.

THE forthcoming number of the Fortnightly Review will contain a reply by Mr. Beerbohm Tree to Mr. Oswald Crawford's recent article on "The London Stage," and also a rejoinder from Mr. Crawford.

THE forthcoming number of the Art Review will contain a series of illustrations from the works of M. Roll, who is at the head of the Impressionist school in Paris. The series will include "La Grève," one of the earliest works of the artist, and also a sketch specially reproduced in colour. The same number will contain the first of a series of articles upon "Notable Houses in England and Scotland," treating of Hopetoun House. The text is by Mr. J. M. Gray, curator of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, and the drawings are by W. G. Burn Murdoch. There will also be an illustrated article upon the Sicilian idyl which has just been produced by Dr. John Todhunter at Bedford Park.

AMONG the contributors to the June number of the United Service Magazine will be the Dukes of Rutland, who writes upon the Military Exhibition, and the Marquis of Lorne, who has a paper on the Canadian Militia. Lord Charles Beresford contributes an article on National Insurance, following the lead of Sir George Tryon and Mr. Rudyard Kipling. There will also be an article on the Channel Tunnel, with letters of Sir A. Alison and Lord Wolseley; and a statement recently made in prison by the Duc d'Orleans, which the latter asked a personal friend to lay before the English public.

The forthcoming number of the Century will contain an article by Miss Amelia Gore Mason on the "Women of the French Salons," with profuse illustrations; also "Homer and the Bible," by Mr. William Cleaver Wilkinson; and a paper on "Irish Kings and Brehons."

THE June number of the Bookworm will contain an article (with two facsimiles) on "Peter Wilkins," by Mr. W. Roberts; and an "In Memoriam" notice of the late William Blades, accompanied by a portrait.

PROF. R. K. DOUGLAS has written an article on "The Origin of Chinese Culture and Civilisation," which will appear in the June issue of Lippincott's.

MR. LEWIS F. DAY contributes an illustrated paper on "Religious Art at the May Exhibitions" to the June number of the Newbury House Magazine, which will also contain articles on "Gambling" by the Rev. Harry Jones, and on "Lux Mundi and the Neo-Alexandrian School" by the Rev. Dr. S. J. Eales.

"MR. GLADSTONE'S Disestablishment of the Greek Pantheon"—referring to his recent lecture at Oxford—is the title of an essay by Karl Blind which will appear in an early number of the National Review.

Tinsley's Magazine for June will contain a portrait of the Hon. Roden Noel, with a biographical sketch.

London Society, for June, will contain an article by Mr. Alexander Gordon, entitled "Helping the Trawlers," in which, among others matter, will be found a statement of the reasons that have induced the council of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen to resume trawling on most of their vessels.

A NEW serial story will be commenced in the June number of Cassell's Magazine, entitled "Woman-like," by the Author of "King or Protector." The same number will contain a novel suggestion for the settlement of the ever-present "servant question"; and an illustrated article detailing the progress that has been made in the matter of "Aerial Photography," by a son of Mr. Woodbury, the well-known photographic inventor.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE following is the list of those upon whom the University of Cambridge proposes to confer honorary degrees on Thursday, June 12: Doctor in Law—Prof. Jowett, Canon Liddon, Sir Andrew Clark, Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson, Mr. George Richmond, Mr. Henry M. Stanley; Doctor in Science—Dr. John Evans and Prof. Sylvester; Doctor in Letters—Mr. Alexander John Ellis. Three of these, it will be observed, either are or have been professors at Oxford; and three are the presidents respectively of the College of Physicians, the College of Surgeons, and the Society of Antiquaries.

MR. HENRY IRVING and Miss Ellen Terry have offered to give a reading of "Macbeth," with the accompaniment of Sir Arthur Sullivan's music, at Oxford, on Monday, June 23, in aid of the fund for the redecoration of the Union.

THE candidates for the vacant regius professorship of divinity at Cambridge include the present holders of three other chairs in the university—Profs. Lumby, Kirkpatrick, and Stanton; Dr. Swete, of King's College, London; and Dr. Cunningham, of Trinity. Dr. Hort has not offered himself.

THE Junior Scientific Club at Oxford will hold a conversation in the New Museum on Tuesday next, May 27, when Sir R. S. Ball has promised to give a lecture entitled "An Astronomer's Thoughts on the Recent Eruption of Krakatoa."

THE Whitsuntide excursion of the Geologists' Association will be to Oxford, under the guidance of Prof. A. H. Green. The places specially to be visited are Charlbury, near Woodstock, and Shotover Hill.

THE Council at Cambridge propose the following regulations for the Clerk Maxwell Scholarship, founded by the widow of Prof. Clerk Maxwell, who bequeathed for that purpose her residuary estate, amounting to about £6,000, subject at present to a charge of two sums of £10 a year each for the maintenance of her two surviving dogs. The scholarship is to be for the advancement by original research of experimental physics, and especially of electricity, magnetism, and heat. The electors are to be guided by the promise shown by the candidate of capacity for original research. The student is to devote himself, under the direction of the Cavendish professor, to original research within the university; and he may not systematically follow any business or profession, or engage in any educational work which would interfere with his duties. The tenure is for three years, without re-election; and power is specially reserved to remove a student who, for any cause, is not fulfilling the conditions of the scholarship.

PROF. J. S. BLACKIE, in his lecture on "Modern Greek," delivered last week at Oxford, concluded by urging three practical proposals: (1) to found travelling fellowships for classical students in Greece and the Levant; (2) to require from the professors of classical Greek a competent knowledge of Modern Greek and its chief dialects; (3) to keep a Modern Greek journal in the reading-rooms of university institutions where modern languages are taught and their collected literature is represented.

At the meeting of the London University Convocation, on Tuesday last, May 13, it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. T. Tyler, seconded by the Rev. John Gerard, Prefect of Studies at Stonyhurst, that the following changes with respect to the matriculation examination should be referred to the annual committee for further consideration and report:

(1) "The abolition of the present honours division, and the arrangement of the successful candidates in three divisions, each in alphabetical order; (2) The appointment of special examiners; (3) The requirement that the examiners shall send to the university, together with their proposed papers, answers and solutions fully written out and translations of the passages set for rendering from English into Latin; and (4) The appointment of moderators, who should be, if possible, London graduates, and whose duty it should be to review carefully the papers received from the examiners, and, when necessary, to make such suggestions as may prevent the papers set from being either above or below the standard."

Allusion was made to the fact that, at a recent examination, "He holds the eel of science by the tail," was among the sentences set for translation into Latin; and it was alleged that problems had been given requiring a knowledge of co-ordinate geometry, though this subject is outside the programme. So far as members are concerned, the examination is growing in importance. We hear that there are likely to be from 2,000 to 3,000 candidates at the half-yearly matriculation next month.

THE Council of Owens College, Manchester, invite applications for a lectureship in English Literature, at a minimum guaranteed salary of £250, who will perform that branch of the duties formerly combined by Principal Ward with those of the chair of history.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

FLOS FLORUM.

One only rose our village maiden wore;
Upon her breast she wore it, in that part
Where many a throbbing pulse doth heave and start
At the mere thought of Love and his sweet lore.
No polish'd gems hath she, no moulded ore,
Nor any other masterpiece of art;
She hath but Nature's masterpiece, her heart;
And that show'd ruddy as the rose she bore.
Because that he, who sought for steadfastness
Vainly in other maids, had found it bare
Under the eyelids of this maiden fair,
Under the folds of her most simple dress.
She let him find it; for she loved him too
As he loved her: and all this tale is true.

M.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- COENZ, A. Die attischen Grabreliefs. 1. Lfg. Berlin: Spemann. 80 M.
DUBOIS, Marcel. Précis de la géographie économique des cinq parties du monde. Paris: Masson. 6 fr.
GAUVAIN, P. Législation rurale. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 6 fr.
GUILLON, Ant. Pendant la Terreur: le poète Boucher, 1745-1794. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 5 fr. 60 c.
GUILLON, E. L'ornementation des manuscrits au moyen âge. Paris: Renouard. 3 fr.
HAUPT, A. Die Bankunst der Renaissance in Portugal von den Zeiten Emmanuel's d. Glücklichen bis zu dem Schlusse der spanischen Herrschaft. 1. Bd. Lissabon u. Umgegend. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Keller. 18 M.
KOLDEWAY, R. Die antiken Baureste der Insel Lesbos. Berlin: Reimer. 80 M.
LIPPMANN, E. O. v. Geschichte d. Zuckers, seiner Darstellung u. Verwendung, seit den ältesten Zeiten bis zum Beginne d. Rübenzuckerfabrikation. Leipzig: Hesse. 6 M.
LOIZ, P. Le roman d'un enfant. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 60 c.
PAGNÈRE, L. Charles Gounod: sa vie et ses œuvres. Paris: Nauwelaere. 5 fr.

WIELICKI, H. v. Vom wandernden Zigeunervolke. Bilder aus dem Leben der Siebenbürger Zigeuner. Hamburg: Richter. 10 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

DARVES, G. M. Analecta hymnica mediæ ævi. VIII. Sequentiæ ineditæ. Leipzig: Reclam. 7 M. 10 Pf.
HARNACK, A. Lehrbuch der Dogmengeschichte. 2. Bd. Freiburg i. B.: Mohr. 17 M.
FRITZ, F. Christi Predigt an die Geister. (1 Petr. 3, 19 ff.) Göttingen: Vandenhoeck. 1 M. 80 Pf.
VOLKES, D. Die Komposition der paulinischen Hauptbriefe. I. Der Römer- u. Galaterbrief. Tübingen: Heckenhauser. 2 M. 40 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

BRIDIER, l'abbé. Mémoires inédits de l'internonce à Paris pendant la Révolution (1790-1811). Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
CORRESPONDENZ. politische, Kaiser Wilhelm's I. Berlin: Steinitz. 1 M.
HAUSEN, O. Erhr. v. Vallen-Geschlechter der Markgrafen zu Meissen, Landgrafen zu Thüringen u. Herzoge zu Sachsen bis zum Beginn d. 17. Jahrh. 1. Hälfte. Berlin: Heymann. 6 M.
KUNZ, H. Die Feldzüge d. Feldmarschalls Radetzky in Oberitalien 1848 u. 1849. Berlin: Wilhelm. 3 M.
MARMOCTAN, P. Le Général Pierre-Jacques Fromentin, 1764-1830. Paris: Charavay. 3 fr. 50 c.
PRIEBATOW, F. Die grosse Braunschweiger Stadtfehde (1499-1498). Braunschweig: Priebatsch. 3 M.
VILARIN, Mémoires et correspondance du comte de. Paris: Perrin. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

ASTRAND, J. J. Hulfstaten sur leichten u. genauen Auflösung d. Kepler'schen Problems. Mit e. Einleitg. v. H. Bruns. Leipzig: Engelmann. 6 M.
HESB, E. Beiträge zur Theorie der räumlichen Configurationen. Leipzig: Engelmann. 3 M.
RIBBE, O. Beiträge zur Lepidopteren-Fauna d. malayischen Archipels. Rhopalocera der Insel Gross Ceram. Dresden: v. Zahn. 4 M.
TICHNER u. SCHMIDT, V. Ritter v. Das Steppen-Puhn (Syrrhaptes paradoxus Pall.) in Oesterreich-Ungarn. Graz: Leuschner. 1 M. 80 Pf.

PHILOLOGY.

DIERKE, O. De sermone Thucydidis quatenus cum Herodoto congruus differat a scriptoribus atticis. Leipzig: Gräfe. 1 M. 10 Pf.
HIEZE, W. Zum altenglischen Gedicht Andraht. 1. Th. Berlin: Gertner. 1 M.
POWICKAU, R. B. De Isocratis Demonioea. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 30 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTAL SCHOLARS.

Oxford: May 20, 1890.

I have been requested to state, for the information of Oriental scholars in England, that nothing could have been further from the intention of many of those who, in reply to a private and perfectly legitimate circular, declared their predilection for Paris, London, or Oxford, as the place for the next meeting of the International Congress of Oriental scholars, than to express thereby any disapproval of the resolutions passed at the last Congress at Stockholm and Christiania. They supposed that any formal invitation from Paris, London, Oxford, or any other place would be forwarded to the Ex-Presidents, and be submitted by them to the International Committee.

Prof. Ohwolson, of St. Petersburg, whose name has been so often quoted as an active supporter of the malcontent party, has requested the Secretary of the last Congress to publish the following letter:

"I declare hereby on my word of honour that, on receiving what seemed to me a perfectly innocent inquiry, whether I wished the next Congress to take place at Paris or in London, I declared for London. Other papers which contained offensive remarks about the last Congress were never signed by me. Nay, I sent a private letter to M. L., advising him to write to the Committee which was appointed at Christiania, and thus to preserve the continuity of our Congresses. I authorise you to make any use you like of this declaration; nay, I wish that you would have the kindness to publish it in some paper that is read at Stockholm."

May I add in my own name that the invitation from Oxford has not yet been officially accepted. Not till it has been thus accepted would it be competent for any one to elect the President and Vice-Presidents for the next Congress.

It was, of course, a mere accident that what Prof. Ohwolson calls the "innocent inquiry" was never addressed to me and other members of the late Congress. But even if it had been addressed to all the 720 members, 250 could hardly be called a majority.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

President of the Aryan Section at the last Congress at Stockholm and Christiania.

Oxford: May 17, 1890.

The letter of the three distinguished Oxford residents, explaining their position in regard to the proposal to hold an Oriental Congress in Oxford, demands a reply.

The President of the French Committee of the Ninth International Oriental Congress of 1891 has characterised the invitation in which they took part as an "inexcusable" act. I wrote a letter, one object of which was to show that the act was excusable, having been committed through ignorance. My three distinguished friends, however, now protest against my defence of their conduct, though at the same time they admit that when they sent the invitation they did not know that there was "disagreement among the members of the [last] Congress." But their own letter contains more than sufficient proof that the defence I set up for them and their colleagues was correct.

They quote a resolution said to have been passed at the meeting of delegates at Christiania, and state that it "was unanimously adopted." This was not the case. The majority of the delegates were hostile to the propositions of the acting committee; no votes were taken; and the scene that occurred is one over which an Englishman would gladly draw a veil. Prof. Cordier on behalf of France, myself on behalf of England, protested against the composition of the proposed committee; but as we spoke in French and in English, we were not even listened to. The meeting broke up without determining when or where the next Congress should be held.

In accordance with the original statutes of the Congress, the right of directing and controlling it now reverted to the surviving members of the Comité de Permanence International of 1873. The following resolution was accordingly passed on October 10, at a meeting convened by Baron Textor de Ravisy, founder of the first Congress, declaring the resolutions said to have been passed at Christiania null and void, and empowering the formation of a committee in London. The resolution was as follows:

"Les signataires de la protestation contre les agissements du Comité qui s'est nommé à la fin du Congrès de Christiania, déclarent nulles et contraires aux Statuts toutes les résolutions prises à cette occasion; reconnaissent, au contraire, la légalité du Comité anglais de Londres, lui en donnent acte et s'en remettent à lui du soin de convoquer le prochain Congrès à Londres en 1891."

Finally on March 31, 1890, the general assembly of the founders and signatories of the Paris declaration reaffirmed the resolution that the constitution of the committee nominated at Christiania is "illegal and contrary to the statutes of 1873," and further pronounced as illegal and contrary to the statutes "l'élection de M. Landberg comme Secrétaire-général, le dit M. Landberg n'appartenant pas au pays où doit se tenir la prochaine session."

A. H. SAYCE.

[We have also been asked to print the following document:

"Le Comité National Français pour le Neuvième Congrès International des Orientalistes de Londres.

"Vu la déclaration de quelques membres de Congrès des Orientalistes de Stockholm et de Christiania, critiquant à titre collectif et privé la convocation du Congrès des Orientalistes à Londres en se référant à des décisions prises à Christiania;

"Attendu que ces honorables savants reconnaissent loyalement la validité des statuts et décisions de Paris de 1873, et avouent que ces règlements ont été violés par les résolutions visées par eux;

"Considérant que l'administration des Congrès Scandinaves, à laquelle personne ne marchandait l'hommage dû à sa généreuse hospitalité, a tenté de substituer aux réunions libres une association fermée, et qu'elle ne s'est pas occupée de désigner le lieu de réunion du Congrès suivant, ainsi que cela s'était fait réglementairement aux Congrès de Paris, de Londres, de Saint-Petersbourg, de Florence, de Berlin, de Leyde et de Vienne;

"Que cette omission contraire aux statuts existants a créé seule les difficultés présentes, qui étaient très-faciles à éviter et auxquelles les fondateurs des Congrès, dans l'intérêt de la vitalité de leur œuvre, ont eu le devoir de remédier;

"Considérant que ceux qui voulaient écarter les statuts et autres décisions de Paris devaient au moins les connaître, et que nul n'était obligé de les renseigner sur le texte des règlements ou de les avertir des conséquences de leurs agissements;

"Sans insister sur le fait que le libellé publié postérieurement ne reproduit pas avec la précision désirable les décisions prises à Christiania;

"Opposant avec un sincère regret au blâme consigné dans la déclaration, l'avou même de ses auteurs constatant que le comité irrégulièrement constitué à Christiania n'a pas réparé en temps utile l'étrange mesure qui excluait d'un conseil orientaliste la France, l'Angleterre, la Russie, et l'Italie en se complétant sans retard par les représentants de ces grands pays, quoique cette adjonction s'imposait comme la plus urgente des décisions à prendre;

"Sans s'arrêter pour le moment aux autres récriminations injustifiées qu'une sagesse conciliante aurait également dû ne pas soulever, d'autant plus que les faits allégués, quand même ils seraient avérés, ne touchent en rien à la question qui nous occupe,

"Visant et confirmant d'ailleurs son vote du 31 mars,

"Déclare:

"1°. Les résolutions de Christiania, que les auteurs de la déclaration aux mêmes condamnent comme illégales, sont à juste titre réputées caduques;

"2°. Les statuts et autres décisions de Paris ne peuvent être modifiés que conformément à ces mêmes statuts, c'est-à-dire si le neuvième Congrès décide que la révision sera réalisée par la dixième session;

"La convocation du neuvième Congrès des Orientalistes à Londres commandée par les nécessités impérieuses de la situation est absolument légale, ne peut froisser aucune ambition légitime, doit concilier tous les esprits et met fin à tous les incidents.

"Delibéré à Paris le 29 avril, 1890.

"Signé: au nom du Comité tout entier,

"Le Président, J. Oppert,

"Le V.-Président, G. Maspero,

"M. de Croizier,

"Le Secrétaire, G. Ed. Madier de Montjau."]

THE ENGLISH DIPHTHONG "-AY."

Oxford: May 19, 1890.

I regret that my friend and neighbour Mr. Mayhew, in raising a little side-issue on a certain statement in my article on "Cockney," did not whisper to me his perplexities about the English diphthong -ay before proclaiming them in the ACADEMY. I could so easily have shown him where he was going off the track, and have prevented him writing a somewhat irrelevant letter. To put the whole matter in a nutshell, I was dealing with a phonetic fact. I thought this was plain; but Mr. Mayhew has apparently thought I was dealing with mere spellings, and, having thus entirely missed my point, he makes for a point of his own, on which he brings his fire to bear. My syllogism was: (1) the rimes, from Chaucer onwards, incontestably show that cokenay ended in the English diphthong -ay (as in day, say, array, &c., pronounced in M.E. like na in English Greek); (2) it is known to everybody that this English diphthong -ay had nothing to do phonetically with French -é; (3) therefore cokenay could, on the face of it, have nothing to do with an imaginary French coquiné*, which some people had frivolously declared to be "phonetically satisfactory." I did not stop to prove the second premiss. It has been known to everybody who cared to know, for more than twenty years, since Mr. Ellis began his investigation of Early-English pronunciation. I referred to it as a piece of universal (and useful) knowledge familiar even to many an extension student.

And what is the demurrer to this established phonetic fact? That attorneye occurs in one MS. of the Promptorium Parvulorum as the phonetic equivalent of O.F. atorné. Not so fast, my friend, it does nothing of the kind! MS. Harl., 221, is not a phonetic document—very far from it, indeed. The phonetic form of the word will be found in MSS. H., K. and add. P, written aturne, of which a-turne is only an unphonetic spelling, perhaps of about 1490, in any case, not earlier than 1440. It is well known that from the fifteenth century onward—and even from an earlier date in northern or north-midland usage—unphonetic spellings are common enough. There are few words with the unaccented ending now written -y, and in M.E. -é, which do not in the interval show -eye, -ey, and many other unphonetic scribal or typographic variants. We have, for example, cille, and even sytle, as well as the normal series cité, citie, city. Attorney is one of several in which the erroneous spelling has been established in modern use. But what have these to do with my statement? Nothing whatever: they are not examples of "the English diphthong -ay." They are not examples of any diphthong at all; only of the simple vowel which was in M.E. short close -é, and has now sunk into the still closer short -i, commonly spelt -y. Of course, if my first premiss had not been established—if we had not known that cokenay ended in the English diphthong -ay; if it never occurred in rimes; if, in short, the word was only known by turning up in a late fifteenth-century non-phonetic text as cokeneye—we might have doubted whether its -eye stood for the English diphthong -ay or the simple vowel -é. But, happily, these conditions of nescience are all absent, we know that it had the diphthong -ay; and I can only marvel that Mr. Mayhew should refer to attorneye as in any respect parallel.

As to the list of words in -ey=ee, which occupy one-half of his letter, I might dismiss them at once with the remark that when anyone maintains that cokenay came from an O.F. coquiné*, I am quite ready to deal with that mythical female. Till then, they are even more irrelevant than attorneye. In that case, I should have to show that, so far as spelling goes, O.F. é and O.F. ée have not, in all circumstances, the same history in M.E. But for present purposes it is enough to say that, however spelt, these words had not "the English diphthong -ay." The Chaucer Rime Index has thirty-six columns of them, riming to words like he, me, see, flee, free, tree, agree, but never to the diphthong -ay.

These facts will, I think, be sufficient to show that my language required no modification—only consideration and apprehension. Mr. Mayhew concludes that: "What absolutely disproves the French derivation from an é form is the fact that cockné does not occur in any Middle-English text." This cannot be admitted for a moment. This negative evidence is indeed valuable, so far as it goes; but, like all arguments founded on a universal negative, it labours under the fatal weakness that the turning up of a single instance of cockné would overthrow it. What absolutely disproves the coquiné* myth, is not negative evidence, but the positive argument, which I have tried to set forth, that cokenay is shown by the rimes to have had the English diphthong -ay, and that the English diphthong -ay never phonetically represented O.F. -é. A M.E. cockné is not merely not found, it is phonetically impossible; and if it occurred, could only be a blunder of some kind of no phonetic significance.

In conclusion, I have to thank Mr. Mayhew for appealing to the New English Dictionary as an arsenal of weapons in all such discussions. I could only wish that he had added the caution that it does not undertake to teach English phonology. It is a splendid chest of edged tools; but, as with the best of tool-chests, the workmen must bring to it the knowledge how to use its contents. With good tools one may carve a panel or one may cut one's fingers.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, May 25, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Milton, the Apostle of Freedom," by Dr. Stanton Colt.
TUESDAY, May 27, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Natural History of Society," I., by Mr. Andrew Lang.
THURSDAY, May 29, 3 p.m. Royal Institution: "Flame and Explosives," IV., by Prof. Dewar.
FRIDAY, May 30, 8 p.m. Browning: "Browning's Work in relation to Modern Life," by Mr. Revell.
9 p.m. Royal Institution: "Astronomical Telescopes," by Mr. A. A. Common.
SATURDAY, May 31, 2 p.m. Society for Preserving Memorials of the Dead: Annual Meeting.
3 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Balled Music of the West of England," with Musical Illustrations, I., by the Rev. S. Barnes-Gould.
3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

RIBBECK'S HISTORY OF ROMAN POETRY IN THE AUGUSTAN AGE.

"GESCHICHTE DER RÖMISCHEN DICHTUNG."—Vol. II. Augusteisches Zeitalter. By O. Ribbeck. (Stuttgart)

PROF. RIBBECK'S History of Roman Poetry has naturally been awaited with feelings of high anticipation. His own contributions to the critical study of the Latin poets have been so important, and his mastery of the subject matter from Naevius to Juvenal has been so well attested, that he seems specially marked out for the historian of Roman poetry. The field which he aims at occupying was certainly still open to him. There are excellent histories of Latin literature for the scholar, who can desire nothing better than his Bernhardt and his Teuffel; and brief popular manuals of various degrees of merit. But what Prof. Ribbeck has endeavoured to give has been a history full enough to be complete, but popular in its style and in the absence of all learned apparatus. In two volumes, containing more than 700 pages, he brings his account down to the death of Augustus.

Perhaps the first feeling of an English reader is one of disappointment at the space which is filled with a mere descriptive analysis of the works of the authors in question, with few, if any, critical remarks. One is tempted to doubt whether so full an account can be of much service to those who cannot read the original, while it is hardly necessary for those who can. This is naturally felt most when the author is most familiar, as in the case of Vergil and Horace. It is not unfair to say that a dozen pages by Prof. Sellar, Prof. Nettleship, or Mr. Myers would contain more really helpful criticism than ten times the amount of such description as is given by Prof. Ribbeck. There may, of course, be some readers for whom such lengthy description of the contents of each poem is needed; and it is certainly done well in its way. But it is only right to warn the reader of what he is to expect. The defect, if it be such, is one less felt when the writers under consideration are less generally known, or such as, like Propertius, require their writings to be re-grouped before the design can be readily grasped; and perhaps it is one which is inseparable from Prof. Ribbeck's plan. Still it must be repeated that the English reader, if tolerably familiar with the ground, in comparing Prof. Ribbeck's work with that of Prof. Sellar, feels that the latter is incomparably more suggestive and instructive.

It is also in accordance with the author's preface that no reference whatever shall be given, even in footnotes or appendix, except to the author immediately under discussion. A practice which would be perilous with most writers is less risky in the case of an author so fully commanding his subject matter; but even Prof. Ribbeck sometimes makes assertions for which the evidence is not only not adduced, but is inadequate. Horace's friend Sallustius is described as a mine-owner, doubtless on the strength of the fact that Pliny nearly a century later mentions a Spanish mine called the Sallustianum, which at most makes the suggestion a plausible one. There is still less excuse for calling Torquatus "a bigoted hypochondriac," which he may or may not have been. The ingenious author of Die Römische Tragödie has not, it will be seen, quite abandoned a somewhat dangerous if brilliant habit of "combination." The editor of Horace's Epistles still maintains the transpositions which he suggested twenty years ago, though they have not found general favour (Kießling, for instance, ignoring them); and he does not seem acquainted with the strong arguments for assigning a comparatively early date to the Epistula ad Pisones. It is hard to see why he adopts the form Tullus Antonius, which is so weakly supported in Horace, while all other evidence seems to point to Julius. In dealing with the various flames of Horace, Prof. Ribbeck is less decided than one might desire in pronouncing upon the purely literary existence of the great majority. But he makes up for this by the trenchancy with which he decides that Ovid's "Corinna" was only an Augustan Mrs. Harris; and that even the narratives of personal adventure are merely literary exercises according to the rules of the schools. If this be an error, it is at least an error in the right direction. Ovid is undoubtedly a favourite with his present critic. He receives a larger amount of space than either Vergil or Horace, and Prof. Ribbeck is specially careful in tracing the sources of his various works. Indeed, he is everywhere very happy in dealing with the filiation of poems. It may be noted that the writer without question identifies the Vergilius of Horace (Carm. iv. 12) with the poet, which seems to me really impossible, that he sees no reason for dividing Propertius into more than four books, and that he contributes an argument as to the date of the death of Propertius which has escaped Dr. Postgate's vigilance. If "he was certainly living" in B.C. 14 when Ovid did not include him among the great dead in Amor. i. 15, this carries him a couple of years further down than is generally supposed. But is the date of the elegy well established? Prof. Ribbeck himself would not argue from the date of the publication of the book (not before B.C. 15), as he has shown by his treatment of Horace iv. 12. In saying that there is nothing to hinder us from identifying Atticus, the friend of Ovid, with Curtius Atticus, Prof. Ribbeck has overlooked the arguments of Graeber, which, if not fatal to this theory, are strong enough to give us pause. But such omissions are very rare. As a rule, one feels in the presence of a master, who, if he gives you less than you might desire, does so not from poverty but of set purpose.

The style is clear, vigorous, and often lively. The book is a pleasant one to read; and if it is less heartily welcomed in England than in Germany, this will only be because Englishmen have for once been more fortunate than Germans in having their wants so admirably supplied. But when are we to have the other Augustan poets from Prof. Sellar?

A. S. WILKINS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the last meeting of the Cambridge Philosophical Society, held on Monday, May 26, Mr. S. F. Harmer exhibited some living specimens of a Land-Planarian (Rhynchodermus terrestris, O. F. Müller), found in Cambridge. This animal was first described as a native of England by Rev. L. Jenyns (Observations in Natural History, London, 1846), who discovered it in abundance in the woods of Bottisham Hall. In the present instance, a search in the same locality resulted in the discovery of a few specimens; and it was ascertained subsequently that R. terrestris is by no means uncommon in Cambridge (King's College, Botanic Gardens). It may readily be found by examining the damp lower surface of logs of wood which have been lying for some time on the ground. Since the first discovery of the animal in England, it seems to have been very seldom found; but from its wide distribution in Europe generally and in England, and from the fact that it is not very likely to be found unless it is specially looked for, it is probable that it is much commoner than is usually supposed. Several egg-capsules of R. terrestris were discovered on May 15, on examining fragments of rotten wood among which some specimens of the animal had been kept for a week.

We have received the parts of the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal for 1889, illustrating various branches of natural science. The first part contains a catalogue of the Insecta of the oriental region of the family of the tiger beetles (Oicindelidae), containing nearly 300 species, by E. T. Atkinson, who has also contributed a most exhaustive catalogue of the Cimicidae family (Cimicidae), including all the hitherto described species, occupying not less than 174 pages. A botanical memoir gives descriptions of additional species of Pedicularis (seventy species are indicated or described), by G. Prain. Two ichthyological memoirs by A. Alcock contain a list of the Pleuronectidae obtained in the Bay of Bengal in 1888 and 1889, and descriptions of some new and rare species of fishes from the same sea. A memoir on the Ethiopian and oriental representatives of the Mantodean sub-family Vatiidae, by J. Wood-Mason; a memoir on the tortoises described as belonging to the genus Chaibassia, with two plates by R. Lydder; descriptions of twenty-four species of spiders collected in the Himalayas by Messrs. Oldham and Wood-Mason are published by M. Simon; notes on forty-seven species of Indian Rotifera, by H. H. Anderson are given with three plates. In botany, there is an extended article entitled "Materials for a Flora of the Malayan Peninsula," by Dr. George King. In Lepidoptera, an article on "Certain Lycoenidae from Lower Tenasserim," by William Doherty (of Cincinnati), contains notes and descriptions of 105 species of these beautiful little butterflies. And a supplemental part contains tables of metric weights and measures, prepared for the use of the photographic and lithographic offices of the Survey of India, by Col. J. Waterhouse.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

At the annual meeting of the Royal Asiatic Society, held on Monday, May 19, the Earl of Northbrook was elected president for the current year, in succession to Sir Thomas Wade.

The fourth meeting of the Neuphilologen will be held at Stuttgart next week, from May 27 to 29.

We understand that M. Cagnat, professor of Latin epigraphy and Roman antiquities at the Collège de France, is engaged on an important work dealing with the Roman army in Africa under the Empire.

The seventh volume of the Ephemeris Epigraphica (Berlin: Reimer) contains Mr. F. Haverfield's collection of Roman inscriptions discovered in Britain since 1879, which forms a new supplement to Prof. Hübner's Corpus Inscriptionum Britannicarum. It comprises about 300 inscriptions, a large number of which Mr. Haverfield has himself examined. This is, we believe, the first instance in which an English scholar has taken direct share in either the Corpus or its supplement, the Ephemeris.

The current number of Trübner's Record contains an article by Prof. Georg Bühler, describing Dr. Aurel Stein's discovery of a Jain temple described by the Chinese pilgrim Hsien Tsiang. During his last Christmas vacation, Dr. Stein, principal of the Oriental College at Lahore, made a visit of archaeological exploration to the Salt Range in the Punjab, with the object of identifying the Singhapura of Hsien Tsiang, and the Jain temple described by him as being 40 or 50 li to the south-east of it. The temple he found first, on the hill of Murti, where there is an immense heap of ruins, and also numerous fragments of sculpture. Some of these sculptures are distinctly Jain in type, though unfortunately many of them have been utilised to supply materials for modern temples and for a government bridge. The site of the neighbouring town of Singhapura is fixed at Ketas, where Sir A. Cunningham was also at one time disposed to place it. Another interesting article gives an account of the archaeological work carried on in Burma by Dr. Forchhammer, whose premature death is an irreparable loss to learning. It is satisfactory to learn that he had made photographs and drawings of the ancient buildings and sculptures at Pagan, and had taken squeezes of the inscriptions. He had also had copied a large number of rare palm-leaf MSS., and had himself catalogued the Nyaungyan Prince's library, now at Rangoon. The number further contains important reviews of oriental works, and obituary notices of Gildemeister, Peter de Jong, and Pavet de Courteille. We may also notice the first instalment of an Armenian bibliography for 1888.

THE two latest numbers of the Classical Review consist almost entirely of reviews. In that for April we may also mention an interesting article on the game of harpastum or pheninda, by Mr. G. E. Marindin; and four versions—two in Greek and two in Latin—of Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar." The May number opens with some emendations of Manilius, by Mr. Robinson Ellis, in advance of the "Nootes Manilianae" which he hopes to publish in the course of this year.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, May 5.)

PROF. T. McK. HUGHES, president, in the chair, —Mr. F. Latchmore, of Hitchin, exhibited a collection of Roman coins. The metal of the coins is of gold, silver, copper, and tin. The localities where they have been discovered are near the following places:—Huntingdon, Hitchin, Holwell, Standon, Leagrave, Shefford, Clifton, Arlesey, Langton, Girtford Bridge, Sandy, and Potton, in Beds, and Haslingfield, near Cambridge. I will commence with the inscribed gold coins, and the references I shall make will be to the valuable work by Dr. Evans on Ancient British Coins. Nos. 1 and 2 AV are from Leagrave, near Luton. The former has for obverse the legend TASCIO ARCON, on a tablet composed of corded lines; on reverse no legend, a horseman to left with sword and shield. No. 2 AV has for obverse an ornament composed of two crescents, back to back; and on the reverse a horse, to the right, trampling on a bough; legend, ADDOMAROS. The coins of these two kings, Tasciovanus and Addedomaros, are frequently discovered together. With them was ploughed up in the same field a specimen of the type figured as No. 5 AV, with a plain obverse and on the reverse a rude, disjointed horse; no legend. No. 3 AV was found near Potton, and is a well-known type of Cunobeline, obverse an ear of barley or wheat with the legend, CAMV (Adenav); reverse, a horse galloping; legend below, CVN. No. 4 AV is uninscribed, and was found near Huntingdon; obverse, rude, laureated bust; reverse, disjointed horse. This type is widely distributed through the southern counties, and presents as debased an imitation of the gold staters of Philip of Macedon as can be imagined. Dr. Evans considers these rude types of gold and silver as among the latest in the British series. I have another which has not been published, and which was recently found at Shefford, Beds. On this specimen the wreath has almost the appearance of an ear of wheat. No. 6 AV is also uninscribed. A specimen resembling this was found at Sandy, and came into my hands. The obverse was not quite plain, but had the appearance, upon a raised band, of two letters. It was thought by the authorities of the British Museum to be a connecting link between the inscribed and the uninscribed series. Dr. Evans, however, in whose possession it now is, writes me: "There are no real letters on the coin, and I have not ventured to assign it to any British king." On many of these coins there is on the obverse, in place of a raised band, a sunk tablet, on which part of the king's name appears. No. 7 AV belongs to the Iceni, whose coins are generally found in Norfolk and Suffolk, sometimes in Cambs. This was sent to me from Hertford, and said to have been found at that place. It is uninscribed, and strongly resembles some Gaulish coins I have seen. Some of these silver coins are inscribed, and use has been made of the legs of the horse to form the letters in a sort of monogram. The inscribed British copper coinage is of excellent fabric, but the metal is frequently much corroded. The coins of Cunobeline are not uncommon in this district. No. 1 A has on the obverse head of Cunobeline; legend, "Cunobelinus Rex." Reverse, "Tasciovanus R" and a centaur blowing on a horn. This specimen is from Sandy. I have had no less than three others from near here—from Baldock, Arlesey, and Langford—of this type. On the specimen from Baldock the head of Cunobeline strongly resembled an old head of Tiberius on a denarius of that emperor. No. 2 A. A specimen of this interesting coin was brought to me from Walsworth, near Hitchin, by a labourer, who found it in his garden adhering to a root of horse-radish. Obverse, helmeted head; legend, CUNOBELINVS. Reverse, a sow; legend, TASCIOVANVS. A flat horse-shoe, of the type frequently found in Roman camps, was dug up at the same place. An old road joining the Icknield Road passes the spot. No. 3 π . I have two specimens of this type, one from Sandy, in perfect state, the other from Clifton, Beds, much corroded. Obverse, a horse and rider, with spear and shield; legend, CVNON. Reverse, a soldier standing with spear and buckler; legend, TASCIOVANTIS. I had another of the same type from Sandy. No. 4 π is also from that place. Obverse, VERLAMVS, in the angles of a star-shaped ornament; reverse, a bull. This is in a very poor state. The type has been described by Akerman and other writers, who consider it to have been struck at Verulam. This type and also many others of the series are no doubt derived from well-known reverses of the early Roman emperors. A bull was a favourite subject with the moneyers of Augustus. No. 5 π was found at Langford, near Biggleswade. Obverse, rude head; reverse, a hippocampus, beneath the letters "VITA." Dr. Evans considers this also to have been minted at Verulam. No. 6 π was found at Haslingfield, near Cambridge, last autumn. The bull butting on the reverse is done with spirit; and the general style of this type is equal, if not superior, to Roman imperial coins of the period. Obverse, head of Cunobeline; legend, "Cunobelinus Rex." Reverse, "TAR," a bull butting. No. 7 π is also inscribed, but on the various specimens that have been examined the legend is not legible. This coin is much dishd, and strongly resembles one of the small coins of Alexander the Great, with head-dress of lion-skin. On the reverse also the figure seated might pass for Jupiter, as on coins of that king. Nos. 8 and 9 π on my card are of very similar type. I have had several specimens of each from Sandy. The one now in my collection is from Holwell, Beds, near Hitchin, and is No. 8. Dr. Evans thinks that this and several more of the apparently uninscribed series may, after all, turn out to have legends, as in many cases the die has been much too large for the metal of the coin. Scarcely two coins in this way are alike, devices appearing on one which are quite out of the field on the other. No. 9 is a coin of tin, or some metal in which tin predominates, and was found at Girtford Bridge, Sandy. This curious looking coin resembles a button or ornament, and has been cast probably in a mould of wood. This is the rudest of the whole series, and has for obverse a helmeted head and an animal of some sort, which, if a horse at all, is most akin to that upon which clothes are hung. I had a precisely similar specimen from Sandy, and several others have been discovered near this place. What relation they bore to the coinage in the other metals is an interesting question. That they were in circulation at the same time, and also among the latest used before the Roman invasion, is certain. No. 10 π is one of the commonest coins of Cunobeline. Obverse, Pegasus; legend, CVNO. Reverse, Victory slaying a bull; legend, TASCIO. This was found near Arlesey, Beds. No. 11 π is also a well-known coin of Cunobeline. Obverse, head of Cunobeline; legend, CUNOBELINVS. Reverse, a figure seated with a hammer at work on a vase; legend, TASCIO. This is in very fine condition, and the fabric is fine also. It was found near Biggleswade, and has been engraved and described by Camden and all the old writers. No. 12 π was found at Stondon, near Shifford, and is not now in my collection. The curious feature about this small coin is the clumsy proportions of the horse on the reverse. I must here mention a coin in gold. No. 7 AV, which I have omitted. The obverse is of a very uncommon kind in the British series,—a flower of four pointed leaves. The reverse has a horse prancing, but no legend. This was found at Girtford Bridge, Sandy, and is of very red gold, much dishd and about twenty grains in weight. From numismatic evidence, Sandy must have been an important place in the Roman times, but not much evidence exists of an early occupation (Roman) of this British station. In the sand-pit at the railway station were discovered some years back a heap of round stones, which had been carefully selected and were of equal size. They are supposed to have been used as sling-stones. They were buried some feet below the surface. The greater number of Roman coins picked up at Sandy are from the reign of Valens to that of Arcadius, a great many of them in brass, but mostly in very poor condition, from the friction of the sandy soil. In conclusion, I may point out that, in nearly every instance, my coins have been found in the localities in which they previously circulated during the reigns of Cunobeline, Tasciovanus, and Addedomarus, whose subjects must have possessed a degree of civilisation which they certainly have not been credited with by modern historians. The Britons who used the coins we are constantly finding on their ancient stations were not naked savages, and were at least as civilised as their neighbours, the Gauls. Since writing the above another British copper coin has come into my hands, which may be seen in Plate G, No. 9, Evans's British Coins. I think that only one other specimen is known, which is in Dr. Evans's collection. The head on the obverse is a singular one, and described as almost Peruvian in type. The reverse has an eagle devouring a serpent. It is uninscribed, and was found near Baldock.—Mr. E. G. Wood, commenting on the alleged formation of Ely diocese out of that of Lincoln, said:—The theory he desired to maintain was that the ancient diocese of Ely as existing until the present century, and comprising Cambridgeshire and the Isle of Ely, could not with accuracy be said to have been formed out of the diocese of Lincoln. Reference to the charter of Edward the Confessor showed that no bishop could exercise any spiritual jurisdiction over or on any of the possessions of the monastery, either within or without the Isle. Unquestionably the whole Isle was exempt. Other considerations would reduce the possible northern limit of the jurisdiction of the bishops of Dorchester to the Devil's Dyke, and even with great probability to the Fleam Dyke. Certainly Lincoln (Dorchester) had no lands north of the latter as shown by Domesday; while even south of Fleam Dyke Ely possessed lands and manors. A probable estimate would be that while over 350,000 acres the bishops of Dorchester exercised no jurisdiction, they possibly did do so within the remaining 166,000, though not exclusively by any means. Hence the possible extent of territorial jurisdiction exercised by Dorchester was very small compared with that of the exempt jurisdiction. That Remigius, the first Norman bishop, under whom the see was removed from Dorchester to Lincoln, did endeavour to exercise jurisdiction, not only without but within the Isle, is of course quite certain. But it is submitted that this was a usurpation. Certainly, as the Liber Eliensis discloses, Abbot Simeon's submission to the claim of Remigius to have the right of consecrating him excited great indignation at Ely. His successor, Abbot Richard, successfully resisted the encroachment, and was so far from recognising Lincoln that he selected Herbert of Losinga (Bishop of Norwich) to perform the solemn dedication of the new shrine of S. Etheldreda. It was undoubtedly that the idea of making Ely the see of the new bishop originated with Abbot Richard. He obtained the king's (Henry I.) consent; and messengers were in fact on their way to Rome to obtain the Pope's bull of confirmation, when Richard died and the proceedings were suspended. Hervey, bishop of Bangor, having fled from his see owing to the turbulence of the Welsh, was appointed by the king to take charge of the monastery. The next steps are recorded in a series of documents, whose genuineness has on several grounds been assailed both by Selden and by Wharton, but defended by Bentham. These documents are (1) a letter from S. Anselm to Pope Paschal II. reciting that, the diocese of Lincoln being too extensive for one bishop to efficiently perform his duty, it was desirable to found a new bishopric whose see should be Ely—no mention made of territory. He suggests that compensation should be made to Lincoln "pro his quæ assumuntur de...ecclesia [Lincolniensi] ad instaurandum novum episcopatum." And he says that Robert Bloet, the bishop of Lincoln, was quite willing. (2) Reply of the Pope assenting and reciting S. Anselm's words as to the size of Lincoln and commending Hervey to him. (3) Bull establishing the see, and leaving the delimitation of territory to the king, the archbishop, and the bishop of Lincoln. (4)

Charter of Henry I. dated at Nottingham on S. Etheldreda's day 1108, founding the see and describing the extent of territory, and adding that the manor of Spaldwick in Huntingdonshire with its appendants Somersham and Bluntisham, heretofore belonging to Ely, was given to Lincoln, "pro subiectione et omnibus episcopalis consuetudinibus," and that this was done by the advice and consent of Pope Paschal. Upon these documents he submitted: first, that the statement of S. Anselm was (though undoubtedly made in good faith) misleading—it was probably suggested to him by the promoters of the scheme in order to save the amour-propre of Lincoln; next, that it is inconsistent with the statements of the chroniclers that Robert Bloet was violently opposed to the scheme; then, that, if the real motive had been that stated, the obvious remedy was to erect some of the far distant parts, e.g., Oxon and Berks and Bucks, into a new see, rather than the comparatively near territory indicated, the detaching (if it were really a detaching) of which could not have appreciably relieved Lincoln; lastly, that S. Anselm being a foreigner would be exceedingly unlikely to be acquainted with the peculiar position of Ely. On the charter it was submitted that the averment as to Spaldwick was suspicious, (1) no such advice is contained in the Bull, (2) the terms used are very different from S. Anselm's—the latter suggest merely an exchange of lands and revenues, the former compensation for loss of spiritual jurisdiction, and savours unpleasantly of simony. It was suggested that, inasmuch as the hidage of Spaldwick with Somersham and Bluntisham was almost exactly equal to the hidage of the lands of Lincoln in Cambridgeshire as shown by Domesday, the exchange was simply temporal and proves nothing with regard to jurisdiction. This is confirmed by the fact that the Hundred Rolls show that in the time of Edward I. Lincoln had no lands in Cambridgeshire. Peter de Blois and Giraldus are neither of them trustworthy; still their opinion of the origin of the see was that it was due to political causes, the king feeling that he could deal more influentially with a bishop at Ely than with an abbot. Take it for what it is worth, it is inconsistent with the statement of the documents. The more accurate way of stating the origin of the see would seem to be that it was formed by the conversion of the abbatial jurisdiction of Ely into that of a bishop, having his see at Ely; and that to the territory over which the abbots had heretofore exercised such jurisdiction there were added portions of the county of Cambridge, over which certain bishops, including the bishop of Lincoln (and possibly the old bishop of Dorchester), had wielded episcopal authority.—A memoir upon the same subject by Precentor Venables was read, in which he quoted Eadmer, Robert de Monte, and other early annalists, as supporting the more commonly received opinion.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

II.

THERE is to be observed this year a curious falling off in the number of pictures dealing with what may be styled romantic genre, save in the branch of military subjects; and in like manner the interest in, and the supply of, rustic subjects, except in so far as they treat the life of fisherfolk and the inhabitants of the coasts, appears to have diminished. We cannot affect to regret the gradual extinction of the former style, since romanticism in art never in England asserted itself in more than a half-hearted fashion. The purely anecdotic and literary side of the movement was here developed to the extinction of such wider scope and deeper passion as were exhibited by its French pioneers; and it has long ceased to be in accord with the more vital elements either in our life or in the literature which reflects it.

The solemn tragedy of Charles the First's execution, which even to his enemies has ever appeared a grave and tremendous event, has apparently not much moved Mr. Ernest Crofts.

His "Whitehall; January 30th, 1649" (216) shows the supreme moment—but as the last act in the drama of the puppet show, enacted in the distance of a picture, the entire foreground of which is occupied with an animated mass of armed men, for the delineation of which the painter has reserved his best efforts. Where, too, do we find in Mr. Andrew C. Gow's "Waterloo; Sauve qui peut" (123)—a representation of the headlong retreat after the final overthrow of the vieille garde—that passionate breadth and energy which alone can make such a subject interesting?

Mr. Orchardson's diploma work, "On the North Foreland" (338), is the study of a young girl in modern dress standing windblown on a breezy headland—her thoughts evidently in dreamland. The conception has an unaffected and very delicate charm; and it is moreover realised, though less elaborately than usual, yet with much of the master's admirable skill. His pronounced mannerism asserts itself in the scheme of colour and in the too sharp and definite outline of the figure. "Portraits" (235), by the same painter, partakes both of genre and portrait, since it groups together in a richly furnished interior, with at least a semblance of subject, what is evidently a series of studies depicting members of one and the same family. Wrestling with difficulties obviously very great, Mr. Orchardson has shown skill in the arrangement of his picture, but he fails to impart to it his usual charm. His rusty colour-scheme, with its too great predominance of mustard colour, russet-brown, and kindred hues, is more pronounced than ever, while the heads of his subjects are treated rather from the point of view of the draughtsman than that of the colourist—that is, with an over-emphasising of outline and feature.

Subjects which have something in common are treated by Mr. Pettie and Mr. Edwin Abbey—the latter sending his first work in oils at Burlington House. The Scotch artist contributes "The World went very well then" (302)—a rustic idyll of to-day, showing two gaily-dressed village beauties demurely, but by no means without self-consciousness, tripping along the high road, while after them trudges an equally smart village youth armed with a posy: for whom this new Paris destines his offering does not clearly appear. The American painter in his "May-Day Morning" (109) depicts in the earliest light of sunrise a couple of Puritan lovers setting forth to join the festivities of the day. The scene is conceived with that quaint old-world charm which makes of Mr. Abbey the Austin Dobson of painting; but it is imperfectly realised. The atmosphere effect of the rising sun is but timidly indicated, while the two heads, painted in greyish half-shadow and relieved, too, on a ground of grey shadow, detach themselves insufficiently.

Mr. Hubert Herkomer's "Our Village" (143) is a large canvas which might be classed either as a landscape or as a piece of rustic genre. Under either aspect it is, however, far from convincing; and it is wanting, too, in cohesion from a technical point of view. The landscape is treated somewhat in scenic fashion, yet without the decorative brilliancy and balance of parts which such a standpoint calls for; while the groups of villagers are too palpably and consciously posing, and fail to suggest that they form an integral and inevitable part of the whole. It is curious to note in these figures that Mr. Herkomer has not yet outgrown the influence of the late Frederick Walker, which so strongly coloured all his earlier efforts. This influence is, however, far more openly shown in Mr. Walter Urwick's "A Worcestershire Hop-Garden" (805), in which are skillfully served up a whole series of Walker's favourite motives. The execution of this curious—and, in its way, interesting—work is clever, though it suffers from a bluish-grey tone which is by no means the refreshing hue of modern French art.

One of the shining lights of the young Newlyn school—Mr. Frank Bramley—is this year altogether absent; but another—Mr. Stanhope Forbes—has never done so well as in "By Order of the Court" (1146). Here, making the best use of his solid foreign technique, he does not, as on some former occasions, give his personages a foreign aspect, but reveals a deep and sincere study of true English types. The scene is a homely auction held in the dwelling of some unfortunate rustic or townsman who has come off second best in the battle with the world. A crowd, evidently including many friends and acquaintances, fills the room, and hangs upon the lips of the auctioneer as he incites its members to bid for the miserable yet evidently much treasured goods of the bankrupt. Great power of observation and real pathos of a restrained order are shown in the subtly varied types of which the humble assembly is composed. On most of these is stamped a business-like eagerness, tempered, nevertheless, by a shadow of genuine pity and regret. Mr. Forbes has, however, adopted an unnecessarily sombre grey tone, seeing that—as is shown by a charming peep of sunlight through the low window—the time is bright day. Moreover, even this grey tone might have been used as Mr. Forbes's favourite models use it—with more powerful and decorative effect.

Akin in tone and method of execution to Mr. Stanhope Forbes's work—or, it may be, derived like his from French models—is Mr. Chevallier Taylor's "The Last Blessing" (758), showing unobtrusively, and yet not without a vein of sentimentality, the deathbed of a young peasant, to whom a priest administers extreme unction, while his sorrowing parents kneel at the foot of the bed. A mixture of genre and landscape is again Mr. Robert Macbeth's "The Cast Shoe" (19)—a rustic scene framed in a sunny landscape, which—for reasons which we must own escape us—has been purchased "by the President and Council of the Royal Academy under the terms of the Ohantray Bequest." With the best will in the world, it is difficult to single out anything in this canvas for hearty praise, unless it be the pellucid though hard effect of the sunlit atmosphere.

Mr. Alma Tadema's "The Frigidarium" (324) has not the brilliancy or the daring of colour which marks the examples shown by him at the New Gallery. It is, as usual, a fine and solid piece of work, difficult, however, like all the Dutch master's productions, to describe. Most noticeable in it is the voluptuous languor expressed in the face and the whole figure of a fair Roman dame who appears standing passively in the foreground, as a lightly-clad female attendant wraps her after the bath in a splendidly embroidered blue bathing-robe.

The Neo-Venetian school—or, to speak more accurately, the school which busies itself with the humanity and the outward aspects of modern Venice—is still pretty fully represented, although it is rapidly losing the prestige and the factitious importance which Herr Van Haanen and a number of skilful if not very convinced practitioners of his school have lent it. Works of this class, however high their picturesqueness and their technical charm, can but rarely, when produced, as these mainly are, by foreigners, contain the elements of a serious and enduring school. The true pathos, the sympathetic power of observation, without which realism—whether amiably tempered, as in the present instance, or resolutely documentary—is an empty thing, can hardly in these works (destined to charm an alien public) be present in sufficient measure. Mr. Luke Fildes is careful and thorough, after his wont, but not moving, in "A Daughter of the Ghetto" (20), while Mr. Henry Woods will no doubt satisfy his numerous admirers with "In the Shade of the Senola San Rocco" (51) and "La Promessa Sposa" (278). The comparatively large canvas, "Scandal" (1062) by M. Eugène de Blaas, is a mere skilful dishing up once more of materials already too often used. The "Drifting with the Tide: Venice" (1051) of Mr. Ralph Curtis—an American artist better known to Paris than to London—is his best performance up to the present time. He cannot be classed with the group just discussed, but is rather in technique a French luminariste dealing, however, mainly with Italian subjects. The present work is a gondola scene of a pleasant and reposeful harmony of tone, in which the peculiar dark blue, relieved with yellow, of the hangings makes a piquant and original combination with the grey-green of the Venetian waters, and with the white figure in half-shadow of a lady in modern summer costume. Certainly, as regards general strength and harmony of ensemble and unlaboured dexterity of execution, though not perhaps in matters of deeper import, the Americans have shown themselves apter in assimilating the better qualities of the modern French school than ourselves.

The irrepressible M. Van Beers again comes to the front, with two small works which have attracted perhaps more than their fair share of attention. "A Smile" (886) is a little study of a lady in a costume approaching that of the Directoire merveilleuse, which has been much admired since it transpired that on the opening day of the exhibition it was bought for a large sum. It is, however, a Van Beers of the usual quality—dexterous but empty, and showing an inartistic contrast between the porcelain-like execution of the face and the peculiar chic which marks the rendering of the rest. Far better in every respect, and really strong in characterisation, is the "Henri Rochefort" (879), a portrait of the noted Parisian journalist.

Mr. James Sant in his "Oliver Twist—he walks to London, chap. viii." (507) makes a curious new departure—depicting in the grey hues peculiar to modern French landscape his little Oliver trudging across a common, overhung and half-hidden by mists, which reveal more or less obscurely a flock of sheep through which the hero is passing. Though the execution is thin, and the conception reveals sentimentality rather than a true pathos, we may admire the courage displayed by a veteran in thus striking out a new path.

Mr. J. R. Reid appears to have given up the flaming harmonies in which during the last three or four years he has striven—and striven in vain—to acclimatise himself; for he now returns to the more sober tonality of the works which made his reputation. In the rendering of the freshness and sparkle of plein air effects Mr. Reid may be said to show an advance on earlier efforts, but in all other respects—in truth of observation and sympathy of interpretation, as in general concentration of purpose—he discloses a marked falling off. His most important contribution is an undigested piece of realism called "The Young Squire" (804), showing an uninteresting specimen of the British landed gentry standing in a turnip field, in the act of taking aim at invisible birds, while admiring groups of rustics and beaters look on.

Mr. William Logsdail abjures the seductions of Venice and the more sober attractions of Antwerp in order to depict, as he did once before with effect, the unattractive and unpictorial realism of modern London. "His Ninth of November" (1028) represents with much power and breadth, but with a kind of stolid precision which declines to make any sacrifices, the seething crowd of a Lord Mayor's Day, with the garish splendours, state coach, and its accompanying footmen. This, standing opposite the Mansion House, forms the central motive of the picture—if picture we must call it—and is undeniably drawn and painted with remarkable skill. No subject is too realistic, too repellent in its lack of obvious pictorial qualities, to be painted, provided it furnish elements which are typical of some phase of modern life, or of humanity in general. But a deliberate rendering of what is not only hideous in outward aspect, but accidental and in no way deeply or strikingly significant, appears to us a signal overstepping of the true boundaries of art.

What is to be said of Lady Butler's aggressive piece of controversy in paint, styled "Evicted" (1893)? It shows, with a theatrical emphasis closely bordering on the ludicrous, a sturdy Irish peasant-wife appealing to the heavens, as she stands in front of a cottage very completely unroofed and disembowelled by the evicting party, which is seen in the distance, slowly retiring through a beautiful narrow pass in the hills. We could have forgiven the too evident political bias of the work—much as such a display is out of place in a work of art pure and simple—if only the picture had been better.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. ALFRED GILBERT has been commissioned to execute the Joule memorial at Manchester.

MR. TALFOURD ELY is preparing for Messrs. Grevel & Co. a short Manual of Archaeology, which will be ready in the autumn.

THE exhibitions to open next week include: (1) a collection of water-colours by Mr. Nelson Dawson, at the Royal Arcade Gallery in Old Bond Street, where Mr. W. J. Stacey will also have on view a number of Dutch and other modern oil-paintings; (2) two "society" pictures—"The Lobby of the House, 1884," by Mr. F. W. Lawson; and "A Saturday Evening at the Savage Club," by Mr. W. H. Bartlett—at Messrs. Dowdeswell's in New Bond Street; and (3) two bronze statuettes—"The Sluggard," by Sir F. Leighton, and "Peace," by Mr. E. Onslow Ford—with other sculpture, at Mr. Arthur S. Collie's, also in Old Bond Street.

THE eighth annual meeting of the Society for Preserving Memorials of the Dead will be held in the Lambeth parish schoolroom, on Saturday next, May 31, at 8 p.m., when the retiring president, Mr. G. W. Granville Leveson-Gower, will deliver an address. Subsequently, the rector of Lambeth, the Hon. F. G. Pelham, will read a paper on "The Monuments in the Church"; and at 4.30 p.m. a visit will be paid to Lambeth Palace.

ON Thursday next, May 29, Messrs. Sotheby will sell a valuable collection of English and colonial coins from two or three different properties.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY'S eighth annual exhibition of drawings in black and white will be opened on June 5 at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. The exhibition will include original drawings by the following, among many other artists:—W. F. Yeames, J. E. Hodgson, J. MacWhirter, E. Blair Leighton, Alice Havers, Emile Bayard, Mary L. Gow, Jane Deasley, M. I. Dicksee, W. Hatherell, A. Hopkins, J. Fulleylove, E. T. Compton, W. and H. M. Paget, the late J. O'Connor, W. C. Symons, and A. Stocks.

MR. FELIX JOSEPH has made yet another donation, representing English art in the early part of the present century, to the Castle Museum at Nottingham. This is a collection of about 500 drawings and designs by Thomas Stothard, arranged in sixty large frames, including several of the original sketches for the Wellington shield at Apsley House.

WE have now received Mr. Henry Blackburn's Illustrated Catalogues to the Grosvenor and to the New Gallery (Chatto & Windus); and also Part II. of Royal Academy Pictures, 1890 (Cassell).

MR. WILLIAM STRANG'S etchings, noticed in the ACADEMY of last week, are to be seen at Dunthorne's Gallery, in Vigo Street.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS, ETC.

OF pianists and pianoforte recitals there is no lack this season. Herr Stavenhagen gave a recital last Friday week at St. James's Hall; but as he has often shown proofs of his skill and artistic taste a few words will suffice. His performance of Liszt's Sonata in B minor was brilliant, but his reading of Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (op. 110), though good, was not the best we have heard from him. The Haydn Variations in F minor were played with much charm and delicacy. The programme also included pieces by Chopin and Liszt.

Mme. Madeline Schiller gave an orchestral concert at Princes' Hall on Saturday evening last. It is more than ten years since this lady has played in London; she comes now to us from Australia. Of Chopin's Concerto in E minor she gave an affected reading; but her neat style of playing, and her delicacy of touch, may be commended. Her performance of Mendelssohn's lively Charakterstück (op. 7, no. 4) gave much satisfaction. In Liszt's Phantasy on Hungarian melodies she was also successful. The orchestra, under Mr. Henschel's guidance, played Gade's "Ossian" Overture, and a Torchlight Dance by I. Brüll. Mrs. Henschel sang a Max Bruck song, and, with her husband, two of his effective vocal duets.

Herr Richter gave his second concert on Monday. The programme included a Triple Concerto in A minor for flute, violin, pianoforte, and orchestra, by Bach. The first and last movements are based on a Prelude and Fugue in the same key, and the middle one is an extended version of the slow movement of an Organ Sonata in D minor. The solo performers were Mr. Vivian, Mr. Schiever, and Mme. Hopekirk, and the work was well played. Mr. Henschel sang excerpts from the "Götterdämmerung" and "Die Meistersinger." The concert ended with Schumann's Symphony in C (op. 61). The hall was crowded.

M. Paderewski gave his second recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. We may at once say that the pianist made a far more satisfactory impression than at his first recital. In the Schubert Menuet in B minor there were traces of affectation; and in Liszt's transcription of the March from Schubert's Divertissement à la Hongroise for four hands, the noise was somewhat unpleasant. But in Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Beethoven's Sonata in D (op. 28), and Chopin's Ballade in F minor and Nocturne in C minor, he displayed all the qualities of a great artist. The technique was finished, the tone pure and full and (with one exception in the Bach Fugue) never hard; and the readings were of marked interest. The interpretation of the Chopin pieces was poetical in a high degree, and the performance of the Nocturne reminded one strongly of Rubinstein. M. Paderewski was not in good form last week, and had we heard him only that once we should scarcely have believed anyone who had written as we now write about him.

Mme. Carreño gave her second pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Thursday afternoon. We can only notice her performance of Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques." The technique was superb. The tempi of some of the variations was hurried, but the important Finale was interpreted with marked feeling and without a trace of exaggeration.

Mr. Augustus Harris commenced his season of Italian opera at Covent Garden on Monday evening, May 19, with Gounod's "Faust." Mme. Nuovina, the new Marguerite, was evidently nervous; and one could tell this even by her manner in crossing the stage in the second act. The middle notes of her voice are of pleasing quality. The high ones were taken with too much effort, and the tone was not pleasant; she may, however, not be accustomed to sing in so large a building. M. Jean de Reske, as Faust, satisfied all demands. He was, indeed, admirable both in voice and appearance, and was decidedly the "star" of the evening. M. E. de Reske, being unable to sing, was replaced at the last moment by Mr. O. Darvall. His singing was better than his acting; but, under the circumstances, it is not quite fair to criticise. Mme. Scaldi achieved her usual success in the part of Siebel, and Sig. D'Andrade was a good Valentino. The chorus and the orchestra, under the conductorship of Sig. Bevignani, discharged their duties in an excellent manner.

"Carmen" was given on the following evening. Mlle. Zélie de Lussan, in the title-rôle was most sympathetic and pleasing. Mlle. Colombati, a new Michaela, was fairly satisfactory. Sig. Valero, a new José, made a successful début.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE Rev. S. Baring-Gould will, on Saturday next, May 31, begin a course of three lectures at the Royal Institution, on "The Ballad Music of the West of England," with musical illustrations. He will maintain that the traditional airs of the West of England ballads are different from those elsewhere known, some being akin to the Welsh and others of native origin. He will also classify ballads, dealing particularly with the garlands and the broad-sides.

ON Tuesday afternoon there was a private view of the loan collection of musical instruments in the music gallery of the Royal Military Exhibition. The object is to show the gradual development of military music from the earliest times. The collection has, therefore, been arranged in chronological order. It is one of great interest. Many instruments have been lent by the Conservatoire de Musique of Brussels. Among the reed instruments is a facsimile of a Roman or Greek tibia found at Pompeii in 1876. A Highland bagpipe, with Celtic ornamentation of the fifteenth century, a chalumeau (the precursor of the clarinet) from Nuremberg, some old "serpents," drums, and tabours attract special attention. One of the greatest curiosities of the collection is, perhaps, the wooden contra-bassoon made for Handel, and played at the Marylebone gardens by J. F. Lampe in 1739. From an announcement made in the London Daily Post of August 6, 1739, we learn that two "grand or double bassoons" were made by Stanesby for the composer. The instrument at the collection is one of these two, and it was discovered in Ireland some fifteen years ago. The other has not been traced.

MR. HAGGARD'S NEW NOVEL.

BEATRICE.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, price 6s.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND LIBRARIES.

The MODERN MALADY; or, "Sufferers from Nerves."

By CYRIL BENNETT, Author of "The Massage Case," &c. With an Introduction by HERBERT TIBBIS, M.D., F.R.C.P., Founder of the West End Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System, &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo. 6s.

LAMB'S ADVENTURES OF ULYSSES. With an

Introduction by ANDREW LANG. A Map of the Wanderings of Ulysses, an Index of Proper Names, and a few brief Explanatory Notes are appended. This volume will be found well adapted for Prizes, or for use in reading circles and schools. Cloth, square 8vo., 124 pages. 1s. 6d. Also specially bound for Prizes and Presents, gilt edges. 2s. 6d. [Now ready.]

EGYPTIAN SKETCHES. By Jeremiah Lynch. Formerly

President of the San Francisco Geographical Society, and Member of the Californian State Senate. With sixteen full-page illustrations. 1 vol., demy 8vo. 10s. 6d.

"The independent testimony of a shrewd and competent observer."—Spectator.

AN ILLUSTRATED HISTORY of the UNITED STATES.

By Professor EDWARD EGGLESTON. Cloth, square 8vo, 410 pp. 7s. 6d.

This beautiful volume contains hundreds of fine illustrations, and stands unsurpassed as a masterpiece of pictorial art.

MY WIFE'S POLITICS. An Amusing Sketch for

Holiday and Seaside reading. By HORACE HUTCHINSON, Author of the Badminton volume on "Golf." 1s. [Ready in June.]

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 18, WARWICK SQUARE, E.C.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

A Monthly Review and Family Magazine for Churchmen and Churchwomen.

ILLUSTRATED, Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS FOR JUNE.

- UX MUNDI and the NEO-ALEXANDRIAN SCHOOL. By Rev. S. J. KALES, D.C.L.
 ANTED! A SCHEME of SYSTEMATIC CHURCH FINANCE. By A PRIVILEGED REPORTER.
 AMBLING. By Rev. HARRY JONES, M.A.
 A VIEW from S. MARTIN'S, CANTERBURY, and the MIRACLES of HISTORY. By Rev. O. F. MACLEOD, D.D.
 PILGRIMAGE to OBER-AMMERGAU.—II. Illustrated. By AUSTIN CLARK.
 THE BISHOP'S BIBLE. (Concluded.) By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY and H. BREMAN.
 ACK HAMBLE. (A Short Story.) By H. G. FARRANT.
 WELLS and GEMS.—II. The Diamond. By Rev. J. E. VAUX, M.A.
 RELIGIOUS ART at the MAY EXHIBITIONS. (Illustrated.) By LEWIS F. DAY.
 POPULAR ASTRONOMY. (Illustrated.) IV. The Moon. By H. CLEMENTS.
 SWEET CONTENT. (Concluded.) Illustrated. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH.
 Common Outlines—Instructions on the Creed—Biblical Questions—Result of Half-yearly Competition—Sunday Evening Chats—Editor's Letter, IV.
 —Reviews—Correspondence, &c., &c.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London.

EAST AND WEST.

A MAGAZINE FOR ALL.

NEW SERIES, No. 2, JUNE, 1890.—Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

- WENTWORTH'S IDEA. Chaps. III., IV. By W. E. NORRIS.
 BENEATH the BELFRY. By MAXWELL GRAY.
 CHRISTOPHER PLANTIN. By GILBERT S. MACQUOID.
 TROCIRES of the RUSSIAN EXILE SYSTEM. By "STEPHAN."
 BACHELOR'S GARDEN. By VIOLET HUNT.
 MR FORTH! Chaps. IV.—VI. By E. STUART PHILIPS and Rev. H. D. WARD.
 RILLON'S STAKE. By STANLEY J. WEYMAN.
 MY NEST in GRAV'S INN. By C. C. ROBINSON.
 ARE and THERE. A Miscellany.
 LOST RECENT BOOKS.

London WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford-Street, W.C.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in CHEMISTRY at a Salary of £120 per annum. Applications, with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 9TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

CHAIR of MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.
 The Council are prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of MECHANICAL ENGINEERING in the new Engineering Department. The stipend of the Professor will be £300 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 10TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

OWENS COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the LECTURESHIP in ENGLISH LITERATURE.
 The stipend is £150 per annum together with two-thirds of the fees paid by students attending the classes of the Department. The Council guarantee a minimum income of £250 per annum (exclusive of Evening Class fees). Application with testimonials should be sent not later than JUNE 1ST, under cover to the REGISTRAR, from whom a full statement of duties, &c., may be obtained. HENRY WM. HOLDSER, Registrar.

GLENALMOND.—FIVE ENTRANCE

SCHOLARSHIPS, of which one (for exceptional merit) will be of £70, the others of £50, will be offered for competition in JULY, age, 11 to 15. Candidates can be examined in England. For particulars apply to WARDEN, Glenalmond, Perth.
 The College, placed in singularly healthy site, at foot of the Grampians, has classical and modern side, and prepares directly for Universities and Public Services. Junior school for boys between 9 and 13.
 Warden, Rev. J. H. SKIRNE.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

TUESDAY NEXT (MAY 27), at 3 o'clock.—ANDREW LANG, Esq., FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "THE NATURAL HISTORY of SOCIETY." Half-a-Guinea the Course.
 SATURDAY (MAY 31), at 3 o'clock.—The Rev. S. BARKING-GOULD, M.A.—FIRST of THREE LECTURES on "THE BALLAD MUSIC of the WEST of ENGLAND" (with Musical Illustrations). Half-a-Guinea.
 Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

HIGH-CLASS BOARDING SCHOOL for GENTLEWOMEN.—Foreign Languages and Accomplishments

Specialities. A most pleasant intellectual Home for Ladies who wish to continue certain studies only.
 Miss ESKER, Rockfield, Lansdowne-road, Croydon.

CRICKET. By W. G. GRACE. With Portraits. See

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For JUNE, profusely illustrated, price 6d., by post 8d. Contents—

- 1.—W. G. GRACE. After a Portrait by A. STUART WORTLEY. Frontis piece.
- 2.—GERMAN GIRLHOOD. LADY BLENHEIM-HASSETT (née COUNTESS LYTTON).
- 3.—CRICKET. A Review of the Game, Past and Present, in Australia, Canada, the United States, India, and England. W. G. GRACE. With Portraits of prominent players selected by the Author.
- 4.—CROSSING the BAH. Poem by ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON. Music by Prof. C. VILLIERS STANFORD.
- 5.—LACEMAKING in IRELAND. ALAN S. COLE. With Illustrations.
- 6.—THE POETRY of BULLY-PRUDHOMME. With Translations in English Verse. E. and R. E. PROTHERO.
- 7.—TO BLOSSOMS. A Decorated Page. HENRY RYLAND.
- 8.—A CASTLE on MOUNT ETNA. HAMILTON AIDE. With Sketches by the Author.
- 9.—TO WORDSWORTH. MARY LUCY BLACK.
- 10.—JUNE. A Decorated Page. H. SUMNER.
- 11.—THE GLITTERING PLAIN; or, The Land of Living Men. Chaps. I.—VI. WILLIAM MORRIS.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE,

Price 1s. No. 268, for JUNE, contains:—

- 1.—KIRSTEEN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chapters XXXV.—XXXVIII.
- 2.—DE QUINCY. By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.
- 3.—THE TRADITIONS of GERMAN COLONIZATION. By HAROLD A. PERCY.
- 4.—CAN WOMEN COMBINE? By E. P. WYLD.
- 5.—IN the VALLEY of the TEME. By C. PARKINSON.
- 6.—ON the CHARACTER of NERO.
- 7.—LEAVES from a NOTE-BOOK.
- 8.—WITHOUT BENEFIT of CLERGY. By RUDYARD KIPPLING.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

THE NIBELUNGENLIED.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE NIBELUNGENLIED: the Fall of the Nibelungers, otherwise the Book of Kriemhild. An English Translation, by W. M. LETTSOM.
 WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, London; and Edinburgh.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING

for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.
 G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C. and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery-lane, W.C.

Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner, & Co.'s NEW BOOKS.

NEW VOLUME in the "INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES."

THE COLOURS of ANIMALS: Their Meaning and Use. Especially considered in the case of Insects. By EDWARD MAGNALL POULTON, F.R.S. With Chromolithographic Frontispiece and 66 Figures in Text.

With 5 Maps, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TOIL, TRAVEL and DISCOVERY in BRITISH NEW GUINEA.

By THEODORE F. BEVAN, F.R.G.S.

"Contains much valuable information." Scottish Leader.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

TALKS with RALPH WALDO EMERSON. By CHARLES J. WOODBURY.

Medium 8vo, 7s. 6d.

VISITATIONS of ENGLISH CLUNIAN FOUNDATIONS.

Translated from the Original Records in the National Library of France. By Sir G. F. DUCKETT, Bart.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HERMES STELLA;

Or, Notes and Jottings on the Bacon Cipher. By W. F. O. WIGSTON, Author of "A New Study of Shakespeare," "Bacon, Shakespeare, and the Rosicrucians."

Elzevir 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

ON VIOL and FLUTE: Lyrical Poems. By EDMUND GOOSE. With Frontispiece by L. Alma-Tadema, R.A., and Tailpiece by Hamo Thornycroft, R.A.

8s. 6d.

STANLEY: a Drama. By J. L. THORNELEY.

LONDON:

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

FOLKLORE SOCIETY.

The NEXT EVENING MEETING will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, W., on TUESDAY, MAY 27th. The Paper will be read by the Hon. J. ABERCROMBY, on "MARRIAGE CUSTOMS OF THE MORDVINS."
J. J. FOSTER, Hon. Sec.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission is. Catalogue is.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

LONDON LIBRARY, St. James's-square,
S.W.—The FORTY-NINTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Members will be held in the READING-ROOM on THURSDAY, the 27th MAY, at 3 p.m. The Rt. Hon. Sir MONTAGU GRANT DUFF in the Chair.
ROBERT HARRISON, Secretary and Librarian.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO., have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and
of all descriptions. Legal Documents, Specifications, Plans, &c., COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in Shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARRAN 4, Southampton-street, Strand, London.

WILL BE READY ON THE 1st JUNE.

At all Libraries and Booksellers. 1 vol. super royal 8vo, cloth boards, 21s

KURRACHEE: Past, Present, and Future.

By ALEXANDER F. BAILEY, F.R.S., M.R.A.S., Author of "A Paraguayan Treasure," &c., with numerous Plans and Illustrations.
London SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMPTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.
Calcutta: THACKER, SPIKE, & Co.
Bombay THACKER & Co., Limited.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is
OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. B., 100 Mercey-road, Tufnell Park, N.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHARING CROSS, S.W.
Established 1782.
Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.
Liberal Loss Settlements.
Prompt Payment of Claims.
Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.
LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.
The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Dividends, and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.
THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one some beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe, and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER'S

PARIS PRIZE MEDAL

IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Children's	1s 3d.	HEMSTITCHED—
Ladies'	2s. 4d.	Ladies' : : 2s. 11d. } per
Gent's	3s. 6d.	Gent's : : 4s. 11d. } doz.

Embroidered Handkerchiefs in all the Latest Styles, from 1s. to 60s. each.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Belfast.

Samples and Price Lists post-free. (Please name this Paper.)

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MORDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1864.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Free Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MORDER

246, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
THE GREEN BUSHES.
This Evening, at 8,
Proceeded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, MISS CINDERELLA.
At 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Nutoombe Gould, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Lesclapod, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Konward, Lily Young, and Fanny Brough.

CRITERION THEATRE

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Saturday, 10th inst. Oliver Goldsmith's celebrated old Comedy,
SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.
Young Marlow, Mr. Charles Wyndham; Hardcastle, Mr. Wm. Blakeley; Sir Charles Marlow, Mr. F. Atherley; Hastings, Mr. W. Draycott; Tony Lumpkin, Mr. Geo. Giddens; Diggory, Mr. S. Valentine; Mrs. Hardcastle, Miss M. A. Victor; Miss Neville, Miss E. Leysdon; Miss Hardcastle, Miss Mary Moore.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE

Every Evening, at 8, THEODORA.
Messrs. W. H. Vernon, Charles Cartwright, Cecil Morton Yorke, George Bernage, George W. Cockburn, Alfred B. Cross, H. de Solla, H. Sturge, Charles Lander, G. L. Grange, and Leonard Boyne; Mesdames Dolores Drummond, Charles Trevor, Marie Stuart, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
Every Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Proceeded, at 7.30, by ALL ABOARD.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manageress, Mrs. LANGTRY.
Every Evening, at 9, ESTHER SANDRAZ.
Messrs. Chas. Sugden, A. Bourchier, Everill, De Lange, E. Lewis, &c.; Mesdames Langtry, Chas. Calvert, M. Lea, C. Benton, L. Meyers, E. Williams, &c.
Proceeded, at 8, by THE TIGER.
Messrs. Charles Colnaghi, W. F. Stirling, and J. G. Taylor.

TERRYS THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, NEW LAMPS FOR OLD.
Messrs. W. S. Penley, F. Kerr, B. Gould, and W. Lestocq; Mesdame Gertrude Kingston, Houston, and Clasy Grahame.
Proceeded, at 8.15, by FOR HER CHILD'S SAKE.
Messrs. Oscar Aylie, A. Ellis, and J. Nelson; Mesdames M. A. Giffard and Helen Leyton.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe, O. Yorke, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames Winifred Emery, Hanbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
Proceeded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

At all Libraries, demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE NEW SPIRIT. By HAVELOCK ELLIS
(Editor of "The Mermaid Series" and of "The Contemporary Science Series").
Containing Essays on Diderot, Heine, Walt Whitman, Tolstol, and Ibsen.
With Introduction and Conclusion.

"Mr. Ellis has produced a book which will be hotly discussed, no doubt, for it is nothing if not initiative, we might almost say revolutionary; but it is not a book to be disregarded. It has sincerity and it has power, and sincerity and power compel at least attention."—Speaker.

"The last word upon so suggestive and finished a piece of work should be one of ungrudging praise."—Academy.

"They [the Essays] are all vivid and interesting, and are excellent examples of appreciative criticism of an exceedingly interesting series of authors."—Scottish Leader.

SIXTH and POPULAR EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

MEMORIALS of the Hon. ION KEITH-FALCONE, late Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, and Missionary to the Mohammedans of Southern Arabia. By the Rev. ROBERT SINKER, B.D., Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. With Portrait and Map.

FIFTH EDITION, Revised, fcap. 8vo, 6s.

A HANDBOOK to the WORKS of ROBERT BROWNING. By Mrs. SUTHERLAND ORR.WATERLOO.—The DOWNFALL of the FIRST NAPOLEON: a History of the Campaign of 1815. By GEORGE HOOPER, Author of "Wellington," "The Italian Campaigns of General Bonaparte," "The Campaign of Scudan," &c. With Maps and Plans. New Edition, Revised. 2s. 6d.

"This reprint of Mr. Hooper's most excellent account of the Waterloo campaign ought to be very welcome."—St. James's Gazette.

"An able monograph on Waterloo."—Athenaeum.

EDUCATION from the CRADLE: a Book for Young Mothers and all who have to do with Children. By Princess MARY OUBOUSSOW. Translated by Mrs. FIELDING. Wide fcap. 8vo, handsomely bound in white and gold, 4s. 6d. CHEAPER EDITION, cloth, 2s. [Ready shortly.]SABRINÆ COROLLA in HORTULIS
REGIÆ SCHOLÆ PALOPIENSIS CONTEXUERUNT TRES VIRI
FLORIBUS LEGENDIS. Editio Quarta, large wide post 8vo, 10s. 6d. [Now ready.]NOTES on ROULETTES and GLISSETTES. By W. H. BESANT, D.Sc., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Second Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 5s. [CAMBRIDGE MATHEMATICAL SERIES.]THE WORKS of FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS.

Whiston's Translation, thoroughly Revised, by the Rev. A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. With Topographical and Geographical Notes by Colonel Sir O. W. WILSON, K.C.B. In 5 vols., each 8s. 6d. [BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY.]

BRYAN'S DICTIONARY of PAINTERS.

New Edition, thoroughly Revised and Enlarged. By WALTER ARMSTRONG, and others. In 2 vols., imp. 8vo, buckram, 25 8s.

"A book which no collector and no public library can possibly do without."—Times.

TEUTONIC MYTHOLOGY. By JACOB GRIMM.

Translated from the Fourth Edition, with Notes and Appendix, by JAMES STEPHEN STALLYBRASS. Demy 8vo, 4 vols., 25 8s.; or separately Vols. I. to III., each 16s.; Vol. IV., 18s.

"The best extant introduction to the studies of mythology and folklore. A handbook for travellers abroad and observers at home."—Mr. F. York Powell, in the Academy.

"These three volumes [Volumes I., II., and III.] are a store of curious learning."—Spectator.

"This volume [Volume IV.] is a wonderful compilation, and abounds in erudition."—Western Antiquary.

"In a volume so thickly built up of facts, it is hardly possible to say where we have derived the most instruction, as every page has been valuable to us."—In a Review on Vol. IV., Notes and Queries.

A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY. Containing Concise Notices (upwards of 15,000) of Eminent Persons of all Ages and Countries. With Supplement to 1893. By THOMPSON COOPER, F.S.A., Editor of "Men of the Times," &c. 2 vols., each 6s. [REFERENCE LIBRARY.]

A NEW and COMPLETE CATALOGUE of WORKS published by Messrs. BELL sent post free on application.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

THE ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE; Occasional Essays and Addresses. By E. RAY LANKESTER, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. 8vo, 10s. 6d.THE GOLDEN BOUGH. A Study in Comparative Religion. By J. G. FRAZER, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2 vols., 8vo, 28s.ANCIENT ATHENS, MYTHOLOGY and MONUMENTS of; being a Translation of a portion of the "Attica" of Pausanias. By MARGARET DE G. VERRALL. With Introductory Essay and Archaeological Commentary by JANE E. HARRISON. With Illustrations and Plans. Crown 8vo, 16s.DOVE COTTAGE, WORDSWORTH'S HOME, 1800-1808 (Dec. 21st, 1799, to May, 1808). By STOPFORD A. BROOKE. Fcap. 8vo, sewed, 1s.

27TH ANNUAL PUBLICATION. REARRANGED THROUGHOUT.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK. A Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the Civilised World, for the Year 1890. Twenty-seventh year of publication. Revised after Official Returns. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, Librarian to the Royal Geographical Society. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS.

THE MINER'S RIGHT. By Rolf Bolderwood, Author of "Robbery under Arms," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

The Athenaeum says:—"It is distinguished by very much the same qualities as those which singled out the earlier narrative from its contemporaries.... The picture is unquestionably interesting, thanks to the very detail and fidelity which tend to qualify its attractiveness for those who like excitement and incident before anything else."

THE HERIOTS. By Sir Henry S. Cunningham, K.C.I.E., Author of "The Cornutians: a Vacation Idyll," "The Chronicles of Dustypore," "Wheat and Tares," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

The Times says:—"This novel will confirm the good opinions which 'The Chronicles of Dustypore' and 'The Cornutians' had won for their author.... Sir Henry has a neat turn for epigram, which makes his synopsis of smart people sparkling and sometimes racy; he is brimful of the wit of the French cynos, and can cap it on occasion with his own.... Lady Heriot is a charming old lady whom it is a privilege to have met even in a novel."

The Guardian says:—"It is an eminently readable novel, as well as a singularly clever one."

MACMILLAN'S 3s. 6d. NOVELS.—New Volume.

MAROONED. By W. Clark Russell, Author of "The Wreck of the Grosvenor," &c. New and Cheaper Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. The Athenaeum says:—"The story is exceedingly interesting, and Mr. Clark Russell has rarely done better work than in this narrative of mutiny, murder, and hair-breadth escapes."ST. PAUL. By Frederick W. H. Myers. New Edition. Globe 8vo, 7s. 6d.THE HISTORY and PROGRESS of DISTRICT NURSING, from the Commencement in the year 1859 to the Present Date, including the Foundation by the Queen of the Queen Victoria Jubilee Institute for Nursing the Poor in their own Homes. By WILLIAM RATHBONE, M.P. Dedicated by permission to her Majesty. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.A GENERAL VIEW of the CRIMINAL LAW of ENGLAND.

By Sir JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN, K.C.S.I., D.O.L., Hon. Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; a Corresponding member of the French Institute; a Judge of the Supreme Court, Queen's Bench Division. Second Edition, 8vo, 14s. The First Edition of this work was published in 1878. The New Edition is substantially a new work, intended as a Text-Book on the Criminal Law for University and other Students, adapted to the present day.

CHARLES KINGSLEY'S SERMONS.

In response to suggestions received from various quarters, Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have determined to complete their "Three-and-Sixpenny Edition" of the Works of Charles Kingsley (which has met with unqualified success) by the publication of his Sermons in the same style and at the same price as the twenty volumes of his Novels and Miscellaneous Writings now in the market. The first volume is now ready. The Series will be continued monthly, as follows:—

Village Sermons and Town and Country Sermons.	[Ready.]	Discipline, and other Sermons.	[Oct.]
The Water of Life, &c.	[July.]	Sermons on National Subjects.	[Nov.]
The Good News of God.	[Aug.]	The Pentateuch; and David.	[Dec.]
Sermons for the Times.	[Sept.]	Westminster Sermons.	[Jan.]
		All Saints' Day, and other Sermons.	[Feb.]

THE WAY out of AGNOSTICISM; or, the Philosophy of Free Religion. By FRANCIS COLLINGWOOD ABBOT, Ph.D., late Instructor in Philosophy in Harvard College. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.NOTES on AMERICAN SCHOOLS and TRAINING COLLEGES. Reprinted from the Report of the English Education Department for 1889-90, with permission of the Controller of H.M.'s Stationery Office. By J. G. FITCH, M.A., LL.D., one of H.M.'s Chief Inspectors of Training Colleges. Globe 8vo, 7s. 6d.NAUTICAL SURVEYING. By the late Vice-Admiral SHORTLAND, LL.D., late Fellow of Pembroke College, Cambridge. Published by his Widow and Children. 8vo, 21s.LITERATURE and HISTORY PRIMERS.—New Volumes. QUESTIONS and EXERCISES in ENGLISH COMPOSITION. By JOHN NICHOL, M.A. Oxon., LL.D., late Professor of English Literature in the University of Glasgow, and W. S. M'CORMICK, M.A., Lecturer in English Literature in Queen Margaret College, Glasgow 18mo, 1s.INDIAN HISTORY, ASIATIC and EUROPEAN. By J. TALBOYS WHEELER, late Assistant Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, and late Secretary to the Government of British Burma. Author of "History of India from the Earliest Ages," including the "Maha Bharata" and "Ramayana," "A Short History of India," &c. 18mo, 1s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 943.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

W. H. ALLEN & CO.'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FOUR YEARS in PARLIAMENT with HARD LABOUR. By C. W. RADCLIFFE COOKE, M.P.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE HEALTH SPRINGS of GERMANY and AUSTRIA. By F. O. BUCKLAND, M.D.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

SUPPLEMENT to RONEY'S "TRIGONOMETRY." By THOMAS RONEY.

LAST NEW VOLUME OF THE "STATESMEN SERIES."

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

GAMBETTA. By FRANK MARZIALS.

SECOND EDITION, fcap. 4to, 2s. 6d., paper; 3s. 6d., cloth.

THE PASSION PLAY at OBER AMMERGAU. With the Whole Drama Translated into English and the Songs of the Chorus in German and English. Containing a Map of the Neighbourhood, Plan of the Theatre, Hints as to Rentes, Lodgings, &c., &c. By the AUTHOR of "CHARLES LOWDER."

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

CAMP and STUDIO. By IRVING MONTAGU, late of the "Illustrated London News," &c., &c., Author of "Wanderings of a War Artist." With Portrait and 102 Illustrations, from Sketches by the Author.

"Mr. Montagu's pen has the raciness and buoyancy born of good spirits and a wandering life, and since adventures come to the adventurous, there is no lack of comic and tragic personal incidents.....Needless to say, he has many tales of horror to relate. But the humorous side of campaigning has more attractions for Mr. Montagu."—Scotsman.

Fcap. 4to, 3s. 6d.

SATURDAY SONGS. By H. D. TRAILL, Author of "Recaptured Rhymes," &c.

"A book of satires not inferior to any which have seen the light since the time of Præd, and not unworthy to be ranked alongside the Anti-Jacobin.....Some of the most brilliant of many brilliant verses contributed to the 'Saturday Review.'"—St. James's Gazette.
"They are more than clever enough to deserve collection into a book."—Scotsman.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d., with 6 Full-page Woodcuts from Drawings by O. Whymper.

STRAY FEATHERS from MANY BIRDS. By CHARLES DIXON.

"One cannot well have too much of the naturalist's notes which Mr. Dixon records."—Scotsman.

"This is another of those delightfully-written books full of the natural history of country life.....The whole work should become very popular."

"Numerous illustrations, by Mr. Charles Whymper, add to the attractions of the book."—Morning Post.
Bell's Weekly Messenger.

Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

EGGS: English and Foreign Ways of Cooking them. By Mrs. H. C. DAVIDSON, Author of "Dainties, English and Foreign."

"Mrs. Davidson's 'Eggs, and Ways of Cooking them' is a useful little manual."—Saturday Review.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

IN FAR DAKOTA. By Mrs. LOCKE. The New Volume of a Series of Sketches for Settlers in the Colonies, America, &c.

"Mrs. Locke's story is brightly written and interesting throughout."—Saturday Review.

NEW EDITION, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HALF-HOURS in GREEN LANES: a Book for a Country Stroll. By J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., &c.
Illustrated with 300 Woodcuts. SIXTH EDITION.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.—NEW EDITION, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HALF-HOURS at the SEASIDE. Illustrated with 250 Woodcuts. Fifth Edition.

NEW EDITION, crown 8vo, 5s.

WILD FLOWERS WORTH NOTICE. A Selection of some of our Native Plants which are most attractive for their Beauty, Uses, or Associations. By Mrs. LANKESTER. With 108 Coloured Figures by J. E. Sowerby.

NOW READY.—EIGHTH YEAR, 1890.—PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

ACADEMY SKETCHES, including various Exhibitions. Edited by HENRY BLACKBURN.

W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.; AND AT CALCUTTA.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.		PAGE
NETTLESHIP'S ESSAYS ON BROWNING, by T. W. ROLLESTON		363
CUNNINGHAM'S GROWTH OF ENGLISH INDUSTRY, by Miss TOULMIN SMITH		364
GREEN'S AMONG THE SELKIRK GLACIERS, by Dr. R. BROWN		365
GARNETT'S IPHIGENIA IN DELPHI, by E. D. A. MORSEHEAD		366
HENRY OF NAVARRE, by F. T. MARZIALS		367
NEW NOVELS		367
RECENT THEOLOGY		369
NOTES AND NEWS		370
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES		371
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS		371
ORIGINAL VERSE: "MEETING AND FAREWELL," by MICHAEL FIELD		371
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS		371
THE BEATRICE EXHIBITION AT FLORENCE, by Miss PANTIN		372
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS		372
CORRESPONDENCE:
The Next Congress of Orientalists , by Dr. G. W. Leitner, and one of the English Delegates; Chaucer , by E. Gunthorpe; "Hansel and Gretel" , by Dr. H. Logeman; The Nevilles in Domesday , by J. H. Round; French Jews and their Republican Persecutions , by P. G. Hamerton		372
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK		374
WHARTON'S ETYMOLOGY, by F. HAVESFIELD		374
JENSEN'S COSMOLOGY OF THE BABYLONIANS, by O. B. CURRIENT		375
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE		376
CORRESPONDENCE:
The Antonius and Sallustius of Horace , by Prof. W. M. Ramsay		376
SCIENCE NOTES		376
PHILOLOGY NOTES		376
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES		376
THE GROSVENOR GALLERY, by COSMO MONKHOUSE		377
CORRESPONDENCE:
Perrot and Chipiez on the Art of Judaea , by W. M. Flinders Petrie		378
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY		378
STAGE NOTES		379
OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN, by J. S. SHEDLOCK		379
MUSIC NOTES		379

BRITISH MUSEUM.—FOUR LECTURES
on "THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF THE BABYLONIANS" will be delivered by Mr. G. BERTIN, M.R.A.S., at 3.30 p.m., on TUESDAYS, JUNE 3, 10, 17, and 24. Tickets may be had from E. A. CHALKER, Stationer, 38, Museum-street, or before the Lectures from the LECTURER.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—MRS. TIRARD
(Miss HELEN BELOE) will give a COURSE OF LECTURES TO LADIES on "THE TOMBS AND TEMPLES OF ANCIENT EGYPT," commencing JUNE 9TH. Syllabus, &c., by letter only, from Miss A. LESLIE, 20, Cardigan-road, Richmond, Surrey.

TO AUTHORS, EDUCATIONISTS, and other LITERARY PEOPLE.—Ladies and Gentlemen who are likely to be interested in a MOVEMENT for CHEAPER PRINTING and PUBLISHING, will oblige by forwarding their names and addresses to M. A. (Oxon), 117, Chancery-lane, London, W.C.

ARABIAN NIGHTS.—The BOOK of the THOUSAND NIGHTS and a NIGHT, Englished by RICHARD F. BURTON, with Supplemental Nights, 16 vols., complete set.—For price apply W. A. L. ELDRIDGE, Norris-street, Haymarket, S.W.

SIGNOR L. DENZA.

SIGNOR L. DENZA'S ANNUAL GRAND
EVENING CONCERT, PRINCE'S HALL, SATURDAY, MAY 31st, at 8 o'clock. Signorina Elvira Gambogi, Miss Teresa Blum, and Mlle. Lella Dufour; Mr. Hirven Jones, Mr. Harry Williams, Mr. Franklin Olive, Mr. Charles Loder, and Signor Carpi. The Fraser Quintette—Vocalist, Miss Violet; Cello and Piano, Miss Ida; Alto and Piano, Miss Ethel; Violins, Misses Mabel and Stella. Conductors, Signor Tosti and Signor Denza. Stalls, one guinea; reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; unserved seats, 5s.; balcony, 2s. 6d. To be had of Chappell & Co. Ricordi & Co., at the Hall, and of Signor Denza, No. 6, Harley Place, N.W.

A LADY, of great literary experience and scholarly attainments, is prepared to READ MSS. of all descriptions, and to advise Authors as to the best form and mode of Publication.—For terms address (Mrs.) A. M. GORDON, 29, Ellerslie-road, W.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—
Forthcoming Examination.—ASSISTANT KEEPER IN THE ART BRANCH of Kensington Museum (18–23) 6th JUNE.
The date specified is the latest at which APPLICATIONS can be RECEIVED. They must be made on forms to be obtained, with particulars from the Secretary, Civil Service Commission, London, S.W.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and
SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent-street, S.W.

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

LIMITED OWNERS' RESIDENCES
ACTS, 1870-71.—Board of Agriculture.—Landed Proprietors wishing to restore or improve their mansions and other buildings under the above Acts can CONSULT Mr. JOHN BIRCH, Architect, who re-built Ingestre Hall and other large country houses.—Address 8, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is
OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100 Mercer's-road, Tufnell Park, N.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14,
HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO., have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

MR. HAGGARD'S NEW NOVEL. BEATRICE.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, price 6s.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"This is a tale of passion, and the passion is felt and real.....It is probably the best of the author's novels in which we are not in Africa."

SCOTSMAN.—"Everyone who likes the excitement of a quick succession of pictures of strong feeling, will read this book with a keen enjoyment, and no one will read it without often pausing to admire its author's power to imagine and skill to entertain."

NONCONFORMIST.—"Beatrice" is a fine, consistent, and powerful character.....The story is in many points highly sensational. It is wrought out with great skill, and with great imaginative power."

MANCHESTER EXAMINER.—"A book displaying a quite unusual amount of dramatic imagination and literary skill. The story is so powerfully conceived, and is told with such strong, yet restrained, pathos, as to give one a new idea of the extent of the author's range."

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

PROHIBITED BY THE RUSSIAN CENSOR.

This day, at all the Libraries, a SECOND EDITION of JOSEPH HATTON'S NEW NOVEL, BY ORDER OF THE CZAR.

"The story is cleverly told."—Athenaeum.

"The cleverest, compactest, and sensationallly most effective story Mr. Hatton has published. A book which is sure to be read and enjoyed."—Academy.

 FIRST EDITION EXHAUSTED WITHIN THREE WEEKS OF PUBLICATION.

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO., 25, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

Now ready, demy 8vo, 2 vols., cloth, 38s.

BRETT'S COMMENTARIES ON THE PRESENT LAWS OF ENGLAND.

By THOMAS BRETT, B.A., LL.B.,

Author of "Leading Cases in Modern Equity," and joint-Author of "Clerke and Brett's Conveyancing Acts, 1881-2."

The main idea of this book is to bring into special prominence the present and living law, and only to deal with past law, or that which is practically obsolete, so far as it is necessary to enable the reader to understand the present.

LONDON: WM. CLOWES & SONS (Limited), 27, FLEET STREET.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.

New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, Soho-square, London.

THÉOPHILE BELIN, 29, Quai Voltaire,

Paris. Livres anciens et modernes rares et Curieux. Catalogue Mensuel envoyé sur demande.

ALL RECENT PURCHASES.

MATTHEWS & BROOKE'S NEW CATALOGUE OF BOOKS, comprising First Editions of Rare Works, Library Editions of Standard Authors, a fine collection of Works on Conchology, Natural History, &c., post free from Sun Buildings, Bradford, or 15, Bear Lane, Leeds.

NOW READY.

CATALOGUE of CHOICE and RARE BOOKS (24 pp.), comprising for the most part FIRST EDITIONS of Esteemed Authors, and other carefully selected Second-hand Books.—NICHOLS, Bookseller, Sheffield.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 to 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

THE NEW REVIEW.

JUNE.—Price Sixpence.

THE SOLDIER'S TENT: a Roumanian Ballad. By H.M. the QUEEN of ROUMANIA (CARMEN SYLVA).

SWEATING—THE TWO REPORTS.

SULTAN ABDUL HAMID. By Professor VAMBERY.

ON BIMETALLISM. By Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P.

MODERN ART and OLD CRAFTSMEN. By Lady LINDSAY.

THE FEDERATION OF LABOUR. By H. H. CHAMPTION.

HYPNOTISM. By Dr. MILNE BRAMWELL and Dr. LLOYD STORR DEST.

THE PASSION PLAY at OBER-AMMERGAU. By Lady BURTON.

POLIOS and FOOTLIGHTS. By L. F. AUSTIN.

THE WORLD'S DESIRE. Chaps. VI., VII. By H. RIDER HAGGARD and ANDREW LANG.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in CHEMISTRY at a Salary of £120 per annum. Applications, with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 9TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

CHAIR OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.
The Council are prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of MECHANICAL ENGINEERING in the new Engineering Department. The stipend of the Professor will be £300 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 10TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

GLENALMOND.—FIVE ENTRANCE

SCHOLARSHIPS, of which one (for exceptional merit) will be of £70, the others of £50, will be offered for competition in JULY, age, 11 to 15. Candidates can be examined in England. For particulars apply to WARREN, Glenalmond, Perth.
The College, placed in singularly healthy site, at foot of the Grampians, has classical and modern side, and prepares directly for Universities and Public Services. Junior school for boys between 9 and 13.
Warden, Rev. J. H. SKRINE.

THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROFESSORSHIP OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.
The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above PROFESSORSHIP, vacant by the death of Professor Karl Dammann, Ph.D.
Applications, accompanied by ten copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than the 24TH JUNE, 1890.
The successful candidate will be expected to enter upon his duties on the 30th of September, 1890.
Candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing. Further particulars may be obtained from GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY, COLLEGE DUNDEE. ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY.

CHAIR OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.
The Council of University College, Dundee, invite APPLICATIONS for the CHAIR of ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE. The appointment will be made in accordance with the terms of the Agreement under which the College now forms part of St. Andrew's University.
The salary will be £400, with two thirds of the fees.
All information may be had from the Subscriber, with whom applications, accompanied by twenty-five copies of testimonials and references, must be lodged on or before TUESDAY, 1ST JULY.
G. W. ALEXANDER, M.A., Secretary.

Ready immediately, at all the Libraries, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME.

BY A FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great Ex-Chancellor.

Just ready, at all the Libraries, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth 10s. 6d.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS OF THE COURT OF THE TUILERIES.

THE EVE OF AN EMPIRE'S FALL. Before the Franco-German War. By Madame CARETTE, Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

Third Edition, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, 6s. Authorized Translation.

MY MISTRESS, THE EMPRESS

EUGÉNIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries. By her Private Reader, Madame CARETTE (née BOUVET). "We recommend every one who admires good work to buy and read it."—Morning Post.

Cloth gilt, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; post free, 2s. 8d.

STANLEY; AND HIS HEROIC BELIEF OF EMIN PACHA.

By E. P. SCOTT. With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations. "Mr. E. P. Scott, himself an African traveller, gives a clear, readable, and interesting narrative of the rescue Expedition, to which he has prefixed an account of Stanley's early career."—Vanity Fair.

London: DEAN & SON, 160a, Fleet Street, E.C.

NEW READY.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS. Crown 8vo, 350 pp. 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA.

SAINT MONICA.

SAINT MONICA. A Wife's Love Story. By Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS, Author of "The Mammoth of Unrighteousness," "Pharisees," "In Sheep's Clothing," "Loyalty," "A Tantalus Cup," "His Story and Here," &c.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH. London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILLTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES, BANGOR.

The Senate are desirous of appointing a TEMPORARY LECTURER in LATIN to take charge of the Latin Department of the College for the six months beginning September 30th, 1890. The payment made will be £120. Applications, accompanied by written copies of not less than three, or more than six testimonials, should be sent to the SECRETARY of the College not later than JUNE 10th next.

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has REMOVED to PIXHOLME, DORKING, and has now space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays especial attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus, and the boys have daily practice. Inclusive terms 80 or 100 guineas a year according to age.

References permitted to Miss Buss, North London Collegiate School, N.W. Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE,

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl, R.A.; Onleas, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

WALTER SCOTT'S NEW BOOKS.

IBSEN'S PROSE DRAMAS.

Edited by WILLIAM ARCHER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. per volume. (In Four Volumes.) First 2 volumes now ready.

Vol. I. contains—

A DOLL'S HOUSE. THE LEAGUE OF YOUTH. THE PHILARS OF SOCIETY.

With Portrait of the Author and Biographical Introduction by WILLIAM ARCHER.

Vol. II. contains—

GHOSTS. AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE. THE WILD DUCK.

With an Introductory Note by WILLIAM ARCHER.

Vol. III. contains—

"LADY INGER OF OSTRAT." "THE VIKINGS at HELGELAND." "THE PRETENDER."

Illustrated Volumes, containing between 300 and 400 pages.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. per vol.; half-morocco, 6s.

CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

Now ready.

By Prof. PATRICK GEDDES and J. ARTHUR THOMSON. With 104 Illustrations and 322 pp.

ELECTRICITY IN MODERN LIFE. By G. W. DE TUNZELMANN. With 78 Illustrations.

THE ORIGIN OF THE ARYANS. By Dr. Isaac Taylor. With numerous Illustrations.

PHYSIOGNOMY AND EXPRESSION. By Prof. P. MANTEGAZZA. Illustrated.

EVOLUTION AND DISEASE. By J. Bland Sutton. 136 Illustrations.

THE VILLAGE COMMUNITY. By G. Laurence Gomme. With numerous Maps and Illustrations.

THE CRIMINAL. By Havelock Ellis. With numerous Illustrations of Criminal Heads, Faces, &c.

READY EARLY IN JUNE.

SANITY AND INSANITY. By Dr. Charles Mercier. Numerous Illustrations.

WORKS OF COUNT TOLSTOI.

In MONTHLY VOLUMES, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt, 3s. 6d. per vol.; half-morocco, 5s. Latest Volume,

Vol. 10. ANNA KARENINA. In 2 vols., 2s. 6d. per vol.

Vol. 12. WHAT TO DO?

WAR AND PEACE. In 4 vols., 2s. 6d. each.

Vol. 17. THE LONG EXILE, and other Stories for Children.

Vol. 18. SEVASTOPOL.

Uniform with Count Tolstol's Works.

IMPRESSIONS OF RUSSIA. By Dr. GEORG BRANDES. With Portrait of the Author. 353 pages, crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

STEPNIK'S NEW NOVEL.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE CAREER of a NIHILIST: a Novel. By STEPNIK, Author of "Underground Russia," "The Russian Storm Cloud," "The Russian Peasantry," "Russia under the Tsars," &c.

"One expects a Nihilist romance by Stepnik to be full of the actualities of the situation, to display the genuine and intimate sentiments of revolutionary society in Russia, and to come out not a few of the impressions formerly gathered from novelists who only knew that society by hearsay and at second-hand. The reader will not be disappointed in this expectation. No one can read this story... without deep interest."—Athenaeum.

LATEST VOLUME IN THE GREAT WRITERS.

LIFE OF BYRON. By the Hon. Roden NOEL.

LATEST VOLUME IN THE CAMELOT SERIES.

NORTHERN STUDIES. By Edmund GOSSE. With a Note by ERNEST RHYE.

LATEST VOLUME IN THE CANTERBURY SERIES.

GREAT ODES: English and American. Selected and Edited, with an Introduction, by WILLIAM SHARP.

4to, cloth, elegant, emblematic design on cover, gilt edges, 6s. May also be had in a variety of fancy bindings.

THE MUSIC of the POETS: Musicians' Birth-day Book. Edited by ELEANORE D'ESTERRE-KEELING.

Against each date are given the names of musicians, together with a verse-quotations appropriate to the character of their different compositions. A special feature of the book consists in the reproduction in facsimile of autographs and autographic music of living composers. Three sonnets by Mr. Theodore Watts, on the "Fante" of Berlioz, Schumann, and Gounod, have been written specially for this volume. It is illustrated with designs of musical instruments, &c.; autographs of Brahms, Dvorák, Grieg, Mackenzie, Villiers Stanford, &c.

JUNE PART NOW READY.

VOL. I. THE ART REVIEW. No. 6.

A MONTHLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE OF ART, MUSIC, AND LETTERS.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

"THE STRIKES," "THE STORM," and SKETCH IN COLOUR. By ROLL.

"HOPETOUN HOUSE" (Seat of the Earl of Hopetoun). Numerous Illustrations by W. G. BURN MURDOCH.

Illustrations of the recent Dramatic Performances at Bedford Park, "A SICILIAN IDYL."

&c. &c.

ARTICLES, &c.

THE WRESTLING OF CHARON, by A. WERNER; M. ROLL and his WORKS; HOPETOUN HOUSE—II., by J. M. GRAY; A SICILIAN IDYL; THE GRAY BOOK OF LANGLEY—II., by COLIN FERGUSON. Edited by ERNEST RHYE; ON THE STATUE OF NIKE OF APTELOS, by EUGENE LEE HAMILTON; ACADEMY and GROSVEOR NOTES.

&c. &c.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE, PATERNOSTER ROW.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Nearly Ready, COMPLETE EDITION, in tasteful crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d., post free.

The Poems of William Leighton.

Illustrated by JOHN LEIGHTON.

"Considering the youth of the author it may be questioned if there is a more remarkable volume to be found in the entire collection of Scottish poets."

North British Daily Mail. "The Leaf of Woodruff" proved to be in its way a masterpiece. There is something in it that recalls Hood, something that suggests Whittier, and it would have added a jewel to the crown of either of these poets."—Literary World.

"Will be admired for its indications of native talent and poetic feeling, and not less for the beauty, tenderness, and purity which distinguishes it from first to last."—Queen.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound, price 3s. 6d., post free.

Songs of Siluria, to which is added Fluvius Lacrymarum. By M. E. and J. S. With an Historical Introduction by Miss SOUTHALL, and Appendix containing some genealogical data respecting Silurian Families.

CONTENTS—

By the River Side.
The Vale of Usk.
The Marches.
The Vale of Glamorgan.
Gower.

The Vale of Neath.
Scotia and Cambria.
To My Country.
Fluvius Lacrymarum.
Notes and Appendix.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. post free.

Poems.

By GEORGE THOMAS COSTER. New Edition. Revised, with Additions.

CONTENTS—

Early Days.
The Village.
Our Nest.
Our Harold Yonder.
Early Poems.
Miscellaneous Poems.

Pieces for Children.
Poems on Sacred Subjects.
Hymns.
Poems on Whitty.
Sonnets.
Remembered Preachers.

"We heartily commend this volume to all lovers of simple, tender, gracious poetry."—Literary World. "Simple and natural, and often forceful, with a sweet, delicious fragrance as from fields and hedgerows, and bracing at times as the keen mountain air and pleasant sea breezes."—Freeman.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., post free.

The Proving of Gennad.

A MYTHOLOGICAL ROMANCE.

By LANDRED LEWIS.

CONTENTS—

The Decree of Zeus.
The Oracle.
First Plot of Athens.
The Storm Brewing.
The Storm.
Labour and Ease.
Fawn—The Pirate's Chase.
Reverence.
Gennad Prepares.
Second Design of Athens.
The Gorgon Slain.

Scene in Olympus.
On the Seashore.
First Terror Scene.
Second Terror Scene.
Last Trial of Gennad.
Third Design of Athens.
The Deadly Sleep.
The Lethargy at Work.
Craft of Apollo.
The Heavens do Rule.
A Revelation.

"A remarkable poem."—Sunday Times. "The minstrel sings the long history of the struggle, the victory, and the decline in graceful and flowing verse."—Eccelesiastical Gazette.

I crown 8vo, neatly bound, price 2s. 6d., post free.

Lostara; a Poem.

By SOPHIA LYDIA WALTERS.

In tasteful demy 16mo, cloth, price 2s., post free.

Sorrows of Anglo-Indian Life.

By A SUFFERER. With Eight Wood Engravings.

"Anglo-Indian life has sorrows of its own, or the sorrows of home-land intensified. And the writer has, no doubt found consolation in recording in verse the vicissitudes of his life. This little volume may enable others to retrace a similar story."—Evangelical Magazine.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now Ready, Price One Shilling.

THE

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

for JUNE, 1890, contains, among other articles of interest:—ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Nancy," &c. Part I. Chaps. XXI.—XXIII.—THE ROMANCE of HISTORY—IX. WILLIAM LITHGOW—A TRANSVERSAL of SIX—THE LEGION of HONOUR—CHARACTERISTICS of RUSSIAN LITERATURE—LLOYD COURTENAY'S BANISHMENT—SOME PECULIARITIES of SUSSEX—PEARL POWDER. By Mrs. Annie Edwards, Author of "Ought We to Visit Her?" &c. Chaps. XXV.—XXVIII., &c.

NEW WORKS of FICTION.

BY the AUTHOR of "AN ILL-REGULATED MIND."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE. By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "A Dreamer," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY the AUTHOR of "THE GARDEN OF EDEN."

HER THREE LOVERS. By Alice M. DIEHL. In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"In 'THE FAILURE of ELIZABETH' (3 vols.) the heroine is drawn with all the kindly knowledge and gentle experience which characterise Miss Poynter's art, and who, failure though she be, yet carries the sympathy of her reader with her to the end. The description of the sordid life in a German boarding-house reveals a humour for which we had not given Miss Poynter credit."—World.

"HUGH WESTBURY has written one of the best historical novels since 'The Last of the Barons' and 'The Last Days of Pompeii.' Writers in this branch of literature are apt to be ponderous. In 'ACTE' (3 vols.), however, there is real humour—not merely elaborate jesting after the supposed manner of the times, which surely never could have amused anybody. The author has seized in almost a remarkable way on the leading features of that strange time, and the attitude of the ancient world towards the various questions of morality. He has known how far to go in many directions and never wearies his readers. He has written a very interesting book, and we shall look forward some day to hearing of him again."—Saturday Review.

"MR. GISSING's book is clever and amusing. 'THE EMANCIPATED' (3 vols.) is a work of genuine interest, full of careful character studies, and subtle touches of humour."—Morning Post.

"In 'ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS' (3 vols.) MRS. MANN has brought together the necessary materials for an excellent story, and employed them with undaunted ability."—Morning Post.

NOTICE.—The New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s., of MISS MARIE CORELLI's popular Novel, "ARDATH: The Story of a Dead Self," may now be obtained at all Booksellers and Railway Stations. The novel in this form becomes the latest addition to BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS, in which series the same author has three other novels, viz.: "A ROMANCE of TWO WORLDS," "VENDETTA," and "THELMA."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO.

THE MOST INTERESTING BOOK AT THE LIBRARIES.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY of the NEW R.A., PROF. HERKOMER.

Prof. HERKOMER'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY occupies 100 pages of "From HANDEL to HALLE."

A New Volume of Artistic Autobiographies and Biographies by Dr. ENGEL, just published. Large 8vo, 12s. The Limited Edition de Luxe, containing 13 Etchings and engraved Plates, together with Facsimiles, &c., is also ready, 4to, uniquely bound, price 21s., until 31st inst.

NEW (11th) VOL. OF "SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES," 2s. 6d.

PRINCE BISMARCK and STATE SOCIALISM. An Exposition of the Social and Economic Legislation of Germany since 1870. By W. H. DAWSON.

NEW (11th) VOL. OF "SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES," 2s. 6d.

POLITICAL JUSTICE (on Property). By WM. GODWIN. Edited by H. S. BALY.

The other Vols. already issued (price 2s. 6d. each) are—

1. WORK and WAGES..... Prof. THOROLD ROGERS.
2. CIVILISATION: its Cause and Cure..... EDW. CARPENTER.
3. QUINTESSENCE of SOCIALISM..... Dr. SCHAFFLE.
4. DARWINISM and POLITICS..... D. G. RITCHIE, M.A.
5. RELIGION of SOCIALISM..... E. BELFORT BAX.
6. ETHICS of SOCIALISM..... E. BELFORT BAX.
7. DRINK QUESTION..... Dr. KATE MITCHELL.
8. PROMOTION of GENERAL HAPPINESS..... Prof. MACMILLAN.
9. ENGLAND'S IDEAL, &c..... EDW. CARPENTER.
10. SOCIALISM in ENGLAND..... SIDNEY WEBB, LL.B.

COUNTERPART to SIR J. LUBBOCK'S "PLEASURES of LIFE," SCHOPENHAUER'S WORKS, Translated by T. B. SAUNDERS, M.A.

1. THE WISDOM of LIFE ("Aphorisms zur Lebensweisheit," Part I.). With a Prefatory Essay. 2s. 6d. "Schopenhauer was a more than a merely abstract thinker; he was a practical moralist. Mr. Saunders's introductory essay adds much to the value and interest of this singularly suggestive volume."—Manchester Exam.

2. COUNSELS and MAXIMS (Ditto, Part II.). 2s. 6d.

Also, by the SAME AUTHOR and TRANSLATOR (uniform), 2s. 6d.

3. RELIGION: a Dialogue; and other Essays. From the "Parerga and Paralipomena." Second Edition. "A vigorous translation of Schopenhauer's minor, but at the same time most popular, writings. Excellent and suggestive."—Scotsman.

CIVILIZATION of the RENAISSANCE in ITALY, By J. G. BURCKHARDT. Edited by S. G. C. MIDDLEMORE. New Edition. In 1 vol., 8vo, 15s. "Has already gained a European reputation. The translation is admirably done."

DE QUINCEY'S WORKS. Owners of the 16 vol. Edition can now complete their Sets by purchasing Mr. HOGG'S "UNCOLLECTED WRITINGS of DE QUINCEY." 2 vols., 12s. Uniform with the 16-Volume Edition, and consisting entirely of Essays not included therein, each being duly authenticated in Mr. Hogg's Introduction. "Two most welcome volumes."—Yorkshire Post. "Mr. Hogg has placed all lovers of De Quincey under an obligation."—Academy.

WITH ILLUMINATED PLATES, TINT PLATES, and 36 CUTS.

COURT LIFE UNDER the PLANTAGENETS.

By HUBERT HALL, F.S.A. Large 8vo, 15s. "Really a delightful book. Handsomely illustrated."—J. of Education. "A successful reproduction of life in the reign of Henry of Anjou. Of striking interest and genuine value."—Scotsman.

A NEW AUSTRALIAN NOVEL.

FOR SO LITTLE: the Story of a Crime.

By HELEN DAVIS. 6s. "May be trusted to interest and hold the reader."—Yorkshire Post.

THROUGH the WORDSWORTH COUNTRY.

By Professor W. KNIGHT. With 56 Original Illustrations of Lake Scenery by HARRY GOODWIN. 5s. India paper (50 copies only), 7s. 6d. "The illustrations are charming, and admirably characteristic of the scenery."—Times. "This handsome and attractive volume... Nothing could be better than Professor Knight's commentary."—Saturday Review.

HISTORY of PHILOSOPHY.

By Dr. J. E. RUDMANN. Translated by SEVERAL ENGLISH and AMERICAN SCHOLARS, and Edited by Professor W. S. HUGH. I. ANCIENT and MEDIAEVAL, 15s. II. MODERN, 15s. III. SINCE HEGEL, 12s. "A splendid monument of patient labour, critical acumen, and admirable methodical treatment."—Pall Mall Gazette.

OFFICIAL TOUR through BOSNIA and HERZEGOVINA. By J. DE ASBOTH. Imp. 8vo, 21s. "A most valuable work. Profusely illustrated."—Athenaeum. "Very readable and attractive."—Academy. "A happy combination of historical facts and vivid pictures of life and customs."—Literary World.

A QUEEN among QUEENS. By

CAMERON MACDOWALL. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s. "The Queen among Queens is Zenobia, and the book describes the siege of Palmyra, its fall, and Zenobia's captivity. Some of the scenes dwell on the memory."—Overland. "A dramatic and impressive tale, of considerably more than average excellence."—Pall Mall Gazette. "A readable and interesting book.... There are two powerful scenes."—Athenaeum.

THE DISEASES BESETTING BUSINESS MEN.

HABIT and HEALTH: a Book of Golden Rules for Middle Age. By GUY BEDDOES. 2s. 6d. "In these days, amid the rush and worry of an active business life, this book is calculated to exercise a great influence for good upon business men."—City Press.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co., Paternoster-sq. London.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Stories at all Booksellers.

BY FRANK R. STOCKTON.

THE STORIES of the THREE BURGARS. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange," "The Hundredth Man," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

* The First Edition was exhausted on the day of publication. Second Edition now ready.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

THE STORY of the GADSBYS. By RUDYARD KIPLING, Author of "Soldiers Three," "Plain Tales from the Hills," &c. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By E. RENTOUL ESLER. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

WITH FIRE and SWORD: an Historical Novel of Poland and Russia. By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ. Translated from the Polish by JEREMIAH CURTIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count PAUL P. Edited by FRANK HARKOT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. "There is no lack of startling incident and sensational adventure in this record of Russian oppression and Polish intrigue.....The interest of the story seldom flags."—Speaker.

NEW ADDITION TO LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS. SIX-SHILLINGS SERIES.

SPRINGHAVEN: a Tale of the Great War. By R. D. BLACKMORE. Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. With numerous illustrations by Alfred Parsons and F. Barnard. Small post 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The story is one of Mr. Blackmore's best. A fine touch of romance reveals the author of 'Lorna Doone' on almost every page."—Saturday Review.

CHARACTERISTICS of VOLCANOES, with Contributions of Facts and Principles from the Hawaiian Islands. By JAMES D. DANA. Fully illustrated by Maps, Diagrams, &c. Demy 8vo, cloth, 18s.

ANONYMS: a Dictionary of Revealed Authorship. By WILLIAM CUSHING, B.A., Compiler of "Initials and Pseudonyms." 2 vols., Royal 8vo, cloth, 52s. 6d.

SAVAGE LONDON: Lights and Shadows of Riverside Character and Queer Life in London Dens. By Mrs. MUSGRAVE. Author of "Our Flat," "Illusions," &c. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

BEETHOVEN. By H. A. Rudall. Being the New Volume in the "Great Musician Series." Edited by the late Dr. F. HUEFFER. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, 8s.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s. 1 cloth, uniform, 2s. 6d.

LORNA DOONE. By R. D. BLACKMORE. FAR from the MADDING CROWD. By THOMAS HARDY.

SENIOR PARTNER. By Mrs. RIDDELL.

CLARA VAUGHAN. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

HER GREAT IDEA, and other Stories. By Mrs. WALFORD.

SOME ONE ELSE. By Mrs. CROKER.

THE MAYOR of OASTBRIDGE. By THOMAS HARDY.

ADELA OATHOART. By GEORGE MACDONALD.

THE CASTING AWAY of Mrs. LECKS and Mrs. ALESHINE; and THE DUSANTES. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange."

ORIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

TRUMPET-MAJOR. By THOMAS HARDY.

DRED. By Mrs. BRONCHER STONE.

THE VASTY DEEP. By STUART CUMBERLAND.

DAISIES and BUTTERBUPS. By Mrs. RIDDELL.

GUILD COURT. By GEORGE MACDONALD.

MARY ANERLEY. By R. D. BLACKMORE.

* To be followed by others.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED), St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, MAY 31, 1890.

No. 943, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Robert Browning: Essays and Thoughts. By John T. Nettleship. (Elkin Mathews.)

PART of this book (about one half) was published some twenty years ago, and the remainder has been gradually added between 1882 and the present day. The last work of Browning's of which it treats is Parleyings with Certain People. It is not a systematic commentary, like Mrs. Orr's Handbook, but, as the title implies, a collection of essays and thoughts upon the particular poems, and the general characteristics of the poet's genius, which have chiefly attracted Mr. Nettleship during the course of his long and ardent study of Browning. When an individual work is dealt with, nothing can be more searching and elaborate than Mr. Nettleship's analysis, and to that analysis those works which have done most to justify the common charge of obscurity have been forced to yield up their meaning. A high and penetrating intelligence was needed for such a task; and something more than intelligence was needed to make us realise, as Mr. Nettleship has done, the true depth and breadth of the philosophy which underlies the vast and varied body of Browning's poetical work. It is not often that so solid and genuine a piece of thinking is produced in literary criticism. It is to be regretted, indeed, that Mr. Nettleship does not show a stronger sense of artistic structure in language. His writing has, of course, none of the faults of feebleness—it is never ambiguous, never illogical or tautological; but it is certainly cumbrous. In spite of this, however, he has the art of making the reader share not only his judgments, but also his feelings about Browning. He will win for the poet more true Bacchanals than thyrsus-bearers, and will never be popular among the large class of readers who take criticism as a substitute for the direct study of the original author. To criticise in detail a work so packed with thought is impossible here, so I shall content myself with a few observations on points which invite controversy.

Mr. Nettleship's criticism is mainly interpretative; upon the manner, as opposed to the substance of the poet's utterance, he has very little to say. And something that he does say, at the beginning of a discussion of "Sordello," seems decidedly open to question.

"We all know," he writes, "that Robert Browning is rugged and obscure. . . . It seems to me that we may find good reasons for the existence of these defects, so called. He evidently considers that his first duty as a poet is to give us direct from the fountain head, either his perceptions, so far as they can be expressed in language, or his thoughts; that his toil should be spent in digging straight from its hiding place the pure unalloyed perception or thought for men to see. Hence much, if not all, of his ruggedness and obscurity will be found amply compensated, after a little trouble, by the wonderful purity and directness of the idea when once that is grasped; just as one would be better satisfied at the possession of an unshapely nugget of pure gold than at the possession of that same nugget trimmed into a globe, or of the same weight of beautiful-coined sovereigns."

This is surely going too far. We must, it is true, take our poet as we find him. If he has something to say which it much concerns us to hear, it is the critic's business to help us to hear it, not to cavil at obscurities. But it is not his business to argue that the poem is the better for any obscurities which the subject did not necessitate. Browning himself may be quoted against Mr. Nettleship. Better than the nugget, he holds, is

"The rondrous brave, the lilted loveliness,
Gold as it was, is, shall be evermore:
Prime nature with an added artistry—
No carat lost, and you have gained a ring."

Great poets, in the writings which give them their title to greatness, are often unavoidably obscure, for the more profound the attraction of the subject the deeper they will pierce below its more obvious aspects. The poem may be lucidity itself, so far as diction is concerned; but if we regard it closely, we may find ourselves looking through it into a gulf of thought. Now, if the medium through which we look is broken or contorted, a certain interest may attach to its refracted lights and strange forms—at least, where these are seen to express some powerful and native impulse of the poet's temperament—but surely the presentation of the theme can never thus gain in purity and directness?

If the remarks above quoted from Mr. Nettleship had not been made with special reference to "Sordello" they would not have been so obviously open to question. The diction of "Sordello" is often elliptical and involved to a point of all but impenetrable obscurity; but in Browning's subsequent works this particular difficulty is not so severely felt. His demands upon the attention and mental agility of his readers are, however, always great. With his extraordinary gift of psychological analysis his method is to the last degree synthetic; the thought is an image; and it matters little how recondite and obscure an image, if it will only hold the required volume of compressed meaning. Concentration, which is force, he will have at all costs; and, of course, both lucidity and melody are apt to suffer from this determination. But his mind was always sun-clear; and nothing can surpass the liquid music of lines, passages, and poems, which now and then gush out amid his ruggedness like a flowing spring among the crags of a rough mountain side. To read Browning as he ought to be read is a noble athletic training for the intellect, and he has prizes to offer which are worth a wrestle.

There is no part of Mr. Nettleship's book to which lovers of Browning will turn more eagerly than its chapter on "Childe Roland." The explanation given of this marvellous poem seems occasionally too specific in its interpretation of details. We now know on Browning's own authority that it is no allegory, that it is a mere "fantaisie," suggested by the sight of certain objects which conveyed to him an impression of weird horror—a horse in a piece of tapestry, a singular old tower in the Carrara mountains, a line of Shakspeare, and so forth; and in the interpretation which finds in the poem a reference to an American Childe Keely, who claims to have discovered a method of moving machinery by sound, we have a warning which might give pause to the most abandoned of allegory hunters. But, as Mr. Nettleship rightly judges, there is no reason why the readers of "Childe Roland" should content themselves with merely enjoying the fascination of its mysterious and appalling imagery. Never, assuredly, was such a poem written save out of the impassioned contemplation of some genuine object of tragic thought. Fantaisie or not, it is a poem thoroughly at one with itself; and what is the secret of this unity? Mr. Nettleship, encouraged by George Eliot's saying, "The words of genius bear a wider meaning than the thought which prompted them," sets forth at much length the wider meaning which he finds in "Childe Roland." The Dark Tower, he thinks, may stand for "some strange, seemingly fantastic end," which, when attained, "stands up in hideous prosaioness amid the tragic signs around it of the toil, warfare, and struggle through which it was won." No doubt the poem may be read as an imaginative description of the close of a quest after some delusive and inhuman ideal; but it is surely a descriptive, not (as Mr. Nettleship holds) a didactic work. When we are asked to take the episode of the malignant cripple who points the knight to the dismal close of his adventure as a warning against rejecting "help offered by a false hand," we cannot but think of Mr. Nettleship's own vehement protests (pp. 326-338) against the habit of regarding Browning more as a teacher than an artist.

Among other writers, Mr. Nettleship has attempted a classification of Browning's poems. But this classification, published in 1882, is only reprinted here in order to be "gibbeted" as an "awful example" (the phrases are Mr. Nettleship's) for the warning of others who may be disposed to undertake so undesirable a project as he now thinks this to be. Mr. Nettleship's classification is not always intelligible to me. "The spiritual element in man and the attributes of his soul"—can this heading cover a distinct province in Browning's poetry? Doubtless the main use of a classification of Browning is to him who makes it; but to him, at least, such an undertaking ought surely to be of the highest benefit. Classification, in some form, is an essential part of the serious study of any great subject, though it is certainly more important to get hold of a sound principle of division than to carry the classification to full completion.

Now the epilogue to Dramatis Personae suggests a principle which should be helpful in the study of Browning's poems. The world, for Browning, "a universe that feels and knows," seems, he writes, to gather round each man as though it were bending its forces upon him in order to draw from him whatever of spiritual worth he had to give it. It is a vast disciplining or educating process, which may turn out well or ill for us in this life, but which we are led to believe must in the end elicit the deepest truths of our nature and compel us to live by them. Now a first division may be made between poems which distinctly illustrate this action of the universe upon the soul, and those which do not. The former class may then be subdivided according to the nature of the influences—passions of various kinds, art, religion, and so forth—which are exhibited either directly or per contrarium in their action upon this or that personality. Take, as an example, the Guido section in "The Ring and the Book." Here everything leads up to that last wild involuntary cry, "Pompilia, will you let them murder me?" which the stress of mortal anguish wrings from Pompilia's murderer. A moment before that outcry Count Guido could not have believed himself capable of it, although he was intellectually quite aware of his wife's meritorious qualities. But deep at the bottom of his heart, and wholly undreamt of by himself, lay that vital and redeeming belief in her divine goodness, to which this appeal witnesses. It is as when the persecuted creature in "Instans Tyrannus" "caught at God's skirts and prayed." To this the extremity of his agony forced Count Guido, and he never could have been the same man again.

Another influence, working in a far other way, is shown to us in such a poem as "Andrea del Sarto." Here it is his art, which, with quiet merciless insistence, is forcing upon the man the bitter but necessary knowledge of the corrupt place in his soul.

From the poems which deal with religion, an interesting group of three may be detached. In "Cleon" we are shown a lofty and refined nature suffering from the want of that spiritual revelation which is just brought near enough to be misconceived and rejected. In "Karahish" this revelation comes into closer contact with a more mundane nature, which it profoundly agitates and troubles. In "Ned Bratts" two most unpromising types of humanity are shown under the influence of a sudden spiritual conviction, one of them, at least (Tab), being truly possessed, purified, and redeemed by it.

But this is not the place to enter at length upon a subject of this kind; nor, indeed, have I any ambition to set up a companion and impenitent malefactor beside Mr. Nettleship's gibbeted classification. "The song is to the singer, and comes back most to him."

T. W. ROLLESTON.

The Growth of English Industry and Commerce during the Early and Middle Ages.
By W. Cunningham. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THIS book is not merely a second edition of the author's Growth of English Industry and Commerce (1882). He explains that it is so far re-cast and re-written that it may be regarded as a new work, although retaining its original purpose and plan. These were to give such an account "as may be easily followed by readers who are but slightly acquainted with the history of the country, and who have no knowledge of political economy," and to direct attention to the continuity of the stages of our national life, and especially to "the interdependence between our industrial and our political history." The book is much enlarged; later studies on Banking and on Usury published by the writer have been utilised, old matter has been discarded, and much that is new embodied, even to the appendices. We shall therefore treat the present volume on its own merits.

At the outset, we may say that this should rank as a capital work, marking a distinct advance on previous teachings in political and social economy. Prof. Ashley's excellent little book on English Economic History and Theory (ACADEMY, September 22, 1888) within a limited range introduced the student to the same method which Dr. Cunningham here applies over a comprehensive field—viz, the method of historical inquiry and evolution. He also cautiously uses comparative illustration with good effect. The importance of historical research and knowledge on all the great subjects of a nation's life, political and social institutions, the government, the occupations and trades by which men exist, literature, nay, their very speech itself, has received in these later years recognition, tardy, indeed, but of increasing power and significance. The historic spirit is penetrating every corner of genuine human science—the spirit which seeks out the facts of the past, the reasons and causes that actuated them, and contemporary motives and ideals—which hushes hasty condemnation or trial by modern standards in changed circumstances. It was thus that Toulmin Smith threw light on the principles underlying the English constitution and common law; it is thus that the apparent and oft-abused anomalies in English language and pronunciation are receiving brilliant explanation as the pages unfold of Dr. Murray's great Oxford Dictionary. So it is that Dr. Cunningham now boldly adopts a method "which frankly and fully recognises that the economic institutions and ideas of each age are relative to their political and social environment."

It is to this breadth of treatment and independence of judgment, irrespective of theories, that the book owes its peculiar value. The author combats the usual idea "that facts about industry and commerce can be easily distinguished from the rest, and dealt with in separate chapters." He takes a large and generous view, holding "that there is no fact in our nation's history but has some traceable bearing on the industry of the time," and accordingly his pages contain an admirable though condensed survey of the crowd of institutions and events of all kinds. Macpherson's Annals is a fine storehouse of facts; not only, however, have a vast mass of materials relating to the earlier periods become available since that work appeared, but Dr. Cunningham's aim is something more.

"Economic history is not so much the study of a special class of facts, as the study of all the facts of a nation's history from a special point of view. We wish to draw from the records of the past all that bears upon the maintaining and prolonging of human life in any form, whether corporate life in the family or town or nation, or individual existence as a private citizen."

Nor is he led away to exaggerate the importance of the economic point of view, affirming that "political, moral, and industrial changes are clearly interconnected, and re-act on one another; but we shall understand the industrial changes most truly if we regard them as subordinate to the others. . . . Political greatness and high civilisation imply the existence of industrial prosperity and of sound industrial conditions if they are to be at all stable. But after all, the life is more than meat; each nation takes its place in the history of the world, not merely by its wealth, but by the use that it makes of it; industrial prosperity does not in itself produce national greatness; political views not only control the application of national wealth, but affect its increase."

The whole of the introductory essay, from which this passage is taken, deserves careful study, going straight to the principles at the basis of economic institutions. Skilful energy and patient foresight, the resources of the individual, are shown to be the factors also of more extended industry; and the author thus works round to the necessity for certainty and security being provided by the frame-work under which we live. Growth and decay and gradual change to new forms are the laws which have attended the existence "of a series of different economic organisms, as they were in turn affected by political, moral, or physical conditions"; and a well-timed protest is entered against those who, judging mediæval methods by modern conditions, fail to do them justice. The author endeavours to place himself abreast of the ideas of the time when any change has been initiated, most justly guarding himself against the "danger of reading modern doctrines into ancient records"—adding, what seems indeed a truism, but cannot too much be insisted on, that "it is most important that we should endeavour to make sure that our explanations are congenial to the spirit of a bygone age."

It will be seen from what has been said that Dr. Cunningham belongs to the new school of economists, who treat their study not as a creation of rules and formulas, the dry bones of theory more or less true, but as a living collection of breathing facts, in short, as a science really human.

The present volume embraces the early and middle ages, beginning with the semi-nomadic condition of the English in Frisia, as described by Cæsar, down to 1558, the end of Queen Mary's reign. These sixteen centuries are dealt with in five books, the first ending with the Norman Conquest, the others corresponding to four politically-grouped periods—viz, the "Feudal System," 1066-1272; "Representation and Legislation," 1272-1377; "Lancaster and York," 1377-1485; "The Tudors," 1485-1558. The chapters take up the salient subjects incident to each period, carrying on the story in continuity. After discussing the life of our ancestors while still in Germany, the condition of Roman Britain when they arrived here is described; the question of the survival of Roman civilisation in that which followed, and of Roman traces in the feudal system, is carefully examined and weighed, the conclusion against Mr. Coote and Mr. Seebohm being that "the historical evidence seems on the whole to show that the subsequent English civilisation was almost entirely a native growth, though elements of Roman lore and skill were indirectly introduced among our countrymen at a later date by Christian missionaries and travelling merchants from the Continent."

It is in such a book as this, where every available source of modern research is consulted, that we feel how miserably poor and dark is our knowledge of much of that first thousand years, during which two great civilisations arose and flourished in this island; when two peoples passed through changes as important in their way as any that have happened since, as is forcibly brought out in these pages by the contrast between the condition of the English in Frisia and that of their descendants a thousand years later at the time of the Domesday survey.

The traces of trade in these early chapters are but few. The systems of tillage, the food supply, village life, journeys to Rome, King Alfred's noble description of king-craft, are some of the features which occupy attention. In the chapter on the Danes, Dr. Cunningham enforces his sense of the importance of their accession to our stock by narrating their discovery of Iceland, Greenland, and Vinland in the ninth and tenth centuries, facts which are still extraordinarily little known. The rise of towns in England under the Danes is a point of much interest in the present inquiry. The chapter on "Economic Ideas and Structure," including property and exchange, sketches the state of things which grew up and prevailed during the latter portion of the first period as far as existing authorities permit. Recent studies of Domesday Book and of ancient charters do much to supplement the light thrown on the structure of society by the ancient laws.

The book is packed with facts, marshalled with a skill of narrative that irresistibly draws the reader on. It is impossible to touch on a tithe of the special matters of interest that contribute to its historical value, many of them founded on inquiries freshly made of late. The position occupied by the Jews in England, and the nature of their callings, on which as well as their history here, the publications in connexion with the Anglo-Jewish Exhibition have shed much light, is one of these. Dr. Gross pointed out that "in the latter part of the twelfth century a special court, the exchequer of the Jews, was erected for the purpose of regulating their affairs both fiscally and judicially"; and it is satisfactory to learn that, even with much cruelty and bitterness against them, they had in England "on the whole a more favourable position than they enjoyed in other lands." In treating of husbandry and manorial economy, Dr. Cunningham brings up in testimony several nearly forgotten Anglo-French treatises of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, by Walter de Henley, Grostête, and another. He also prints in an appendix several extracts from manorial records, extents, compoti, and court rolls of high interest, bearing upon the important part which the manor and its incidents so long played in the early stages of English society. The action of municipal life and the relations of towns with gilds, the course of the great woollen trade with its dependents, the staple and the weavers; merchant adventurers, voyages, and shipping; early assizes of bread, ale, wine, and cloth; the story of money and coinage; the rise and course of taxation and revenue; the change of opinion as to usury and interest—these and many more find their due account under the masterly groupings of the subject. In particular, the purpose and place that merchant-gilds and craft-gilds took in the sphere of organised industry is carefully traced and elucidated. Their rules and ordinances are shown to have accorded with the morality of their day with a true policy that certainly made for progress. In contradiction to the view of Brentano and others, that gilds were formed by artisans in self-defence in order to resist the richer citizens and merchants, the author emphatically declares, "But there is no evidence whatever of oppression by the richer classes, or of artisan opposition to them." For the fresh treatment of the merchant-gild hitherto but little understood he owes himself indebted to Dr. Gross, whose original work and views on that institution still await publication. For craft-gilds he draws his facts, we think, too exclusively from the London companies; those in other towns also deserve consideration.

It is too much to expect every detail; but we did hope to find something said about "cocket," and eagerly turned to the London Assize of Bread of Henry II., here printed, we believe, for the first time, if haply it might be there. But "cocket-bread," which is a puzzle to the learned, is not mentioned (nor several other sorts, see "Ordinances of the Bakers of York," Archæological Review, April and May, 1888). Cocket, the seal, but not the document, used in customing goods is referred to. We should like to know how it came by that name.

The book is furnished with a good index and a full list of authorities, in which, if we miss a few that might have been consulted, such as Father Gasquet's Monasteries, or the publications of the Surtees Society, it is perhaps no wonder. And we greatly commend the practice of dates at the top of every page, and of a running marginal analysis of the text—both great helps to the reader in keeping his ideas clear.

LUCY TOULMIN SMITH.

Among the Selkirk Glaciers: being an Account of a Rough Survey in the Rocky Mountain Region of British Columbia. By William Spotswood Green. (Macmillan.)

THAT pariah of literature—"the general reader"—must by this time be almost surfeited with Alpine books and tours along the Pacific Railroad, which, though through, can scarcely be described as in, British Columbia. The former are not very appetising, with their inflated talk about "cols" and "arêtes" and "couloirs," their exaggerated notions of the importance of the trifling additions to geography which are made by the generality of them, and that insufferable air of superiority characteristic of the entire tribe; while the tourists' notes of what they saw out of the carriage windows while running through a region, for the exploration of which a lifetime would be too short, are, as a rule, entertaining only for their absurdity.

But Mr. Green's little volume, through Alpine and British Columbian, is a very different literary product from the stuff of late shot out by the publishers. Anyone acquainted with his book on the New Zealand Alps will remember him not only as an adroit mountain-climber but—what is far more important—a skilful naturalist, photographer, and surveyor, with a pen so modest that he does not always succeed in doing justice to his enthusiastic labours in upland topography. Mr. Green is a specialist, and he crossed the Rocky Mountains for a special purpose. He confined himself, in the first place, to a small area; and, in the second place, he and his companion Mr. Swanzy determined, so far as six or seven weeks in the July and August of last year would permit, to "polish off" (in the classic phraseology of Saint Martin's Place) the heights on which they had fixed. These were those spurs of the Rocky Mountains—a sort of Fore Alps, which extend into British Columbia. They are now intersected by the railway, but until a few years ago they were among the most inaccessible and least-known parts of a province still hard to penetrate, and, naturally, little explored.

The scenery of this area is unquestionably fine; but that it is finer than many spots in the loftier Cascades, or in the region further North, is a point on which there might be some difference of local opinion. For our part, we regret that Mr. Green did not devote the time, money, skill, and labour he lavished on the Selkirks to an examination of the far more important range nearer the coast, or even to the highlands of Vancouver Island, where there are summits, like Victoria Peak, between 7,000 and 8,000 feet in height. Now, the loftiest of the Selkirks is only 10,622 feet, and Mount Lefroy, the highest in the Rocky Range, does not exceed 11,660 feet, while they rise from valleys, at their base, 7,000 to 8,000 feet in height, thus giving the actual peak a very moderate elevation. But though the Vancouver Island mountains noted are several thousand feet lower, they ascend from bases only a few hundred feet above the adjoining sea; and the dormant volcanoes of the Cascades, covered with perpetual snow and scored by glaciers—which, not many years ago, were thought not to exist in the North-West—though not much loftier than Mount Bonney, and, so far as the Canadian ones are concerned, lower than Mount Lefroy, are really more striking, since they shoot almost straight into the air.

However, though we may have our opinion as to whether the tasks Messrs. Green and Swanzy set before them were better worth doing than some which they left undone in the same region, there is no denying that they did their work well. Indeed, in spite of Mr. Green deprecating his excellent map as the outcome of a "rough" survey, there are few portions of the North Pacific Slope, away from the immediate neighbourhood of towns, half so accurately portrayed. But a map is of value simply as an allocation of facts relating to the country; and these—geological, botanical, zoological, and what may be termed, from lack of a better name, Alpinistic—are found in abundance, and stated with a care which, speaking from some experience, is quite unique in the annals of British Columbian travel. Mr. Green, however, keeps very closely to his central subject. The only journey he took, except what were necessary in order to reach his point, was a run along the railway to the "city" of Vancouver, which less than ten years ago was not even dreamt of. On this trip he notes the general features of the country; but, curiously enough, he makes no mention of the Cascades which he crossed. Yet in their influence on the physical geography of North-west America they are far more important than the Rocky Mountains. He does not even notice Mount Baker, the great snowy peak ever before the eyes of the Vancouver residents. New Westminster, the capital when British Columbia was a separate colony, it is curious to find described as having "the air about it of an old settled town" (p. 119). In 1863, when I saw it for the first time, the citizens were indulging in great expectations and, scandal affirmed, were compelled, under pain of being stigmatised as deficient in public spirit, to all flock to the wooden wharf when the Victoria steamer arrived, in order to impress the residents in that much abhorred rival with a sense of the town's importance. Nevertheless, without any sense of the ludicrous—which rarely strikes the humorous Western folk when their interests are at stake—the mayor and corporation were advertising for tenders to hew down "the standing timber" off Lytton Square, Argyle Crescent, and a host of other streets—then, and perhaps still, on paper only.

But, if we get here and there pleasant little vignettes of the gold miners and their habits, and of the way the new race of Columbians live, Mr. Green reserves his best chapters for the mountains. His headquarters were at the Glacier House, a little hotel on the Pacific railroad, at an elevation of 4,112 ft. above the sea level. From this point his ascents were made under difficulties which, considering the comparatively short climb, will appear strange to tourists accustomed to have their paths made easy in the European Alps. In the Selkirks guides are unknown, and even porters are hard to engage, the best available man declining to accompany the party on the plea that in the presence of two parsons he would require to "knock off swearing" for a longer period than was conducive to his verbal comfort. One ascent, with some variation of details, is very like another; so that Mr. Green may be left to tell his own story. Fallen timber, wild torrents, and swarms of mosquitoes, were the chief obstacles in the way, and an occasional grizzly bear or a surprised mountain goat the principal novelties noticed. Yet the mountains clothed in primeval pine, the purple peaks, the silvery ice, the cloudless sky, and the delicious, almost Italian air, combine to render British Columbia "a perfect Alpine paradise." The reviewer can agree with the author in his enthusiasm. For, with memories extending over years of lonely tramps through the endless jungle of fir and picea and pine and maple, and of camps beside nameless brooks, where the tap of the woodpecker, the whiz of the humming bird, the amble of a deer through the undergrowth, or the cry of a marmot were the only sounds to break the silence, it seems, looking back to those halcyon times that wandering far afield in the days of our youth, we lit happily upon the forest of Arden, and fled the years as men did in the Golden Age.

Glimpses of this joyous life may be found in Mr. Green's pleasant pages. Though railways and hotels have ruined part of the country a few miles north and south of these intruders, the world still wags much as it did in the romantic period of British Columbian history. It is true that the feeling of remoteness, of being in an unknown land among primitive folk, can never return again. For the old picturesque pioneers are going or are gone. The Indians are even getting gathered on "reservations," and the new men in the shape of Canadians (who, in my day, were loved but moderately) have swarmed into their pleasant places.

Having said this much in praise of Mr. Green's book—which must always have a distinct value as the pioneer of its class—we may be permitted to indulge in a little fault-finding. Exception might, for instance, be taken to the names he has given to the mountains on his map. For it is not in the best of taste to dub the peaks of British Columbia after Alpine Club notabilities who have not, and never had, the faintest connexion with British Columbia. Only this mischief has been done already, the railway surveyors, in their eagerness to flatter the powers that were, having bespattered the map with the prosaic patronymics of all manner of undistinguished plutocrats in the Montreal and Toronto monied world. Why also—and this is more to the point—does Mr. Green refer to "icebergs" going adrift "as they do now from the Great Humboldt glacier in Greenland" (p. 26), as if the Greenland icebergs proceeded solely, or in any marked degree, from that ice face? He is also not very clear in describing the origin of the Chinook wind and of the föhn, which is identical with it; and, though it may perhaps be scarcely worth correcting exaggerations regarding the extravagancies of the early gold digging days, is it not a little over the mark to say that a needle was sold for a dollar? I have heard of a Jew demanding a shilling for one, and then explaining that it was not the value of the needle but "the cash money paid for the freight" which rendered his ironmongery so costly in Cariboo. Lastly, while the map is beyond praise, the "process" illustrations are (with one or two exceptions) not at all equal to the text, or worthy of the noble scenery which they are supposed to picture. And there is no index!

ROBERT BROWN.

Iphigenia in Delphi. By Richard Garnett. (Fisher Unwin.)

THIS is an attempt to complete, by a brief dramatic poem of some thirty-five pages, the legend of Iphigenia. The shade of Achilles, still angered for the loss of his promised bride by the sacrifice at Aulis, is brought by Hermes to await at Delphi that reunion of their love which is only possible now by the death of Iphigenia. She herself, after her departure from Tauris, is priestess of the Delphian shrine; and thither comes Electra, knowing nothing of Orestes' safe return, nor of the identity of Iphigenia, to lay upon the altar the blood-rusted axe whereby first Agamemnon and then Clytemnestra was slain:

"Well pleased, I lay thee now where ne'er shall Uplift thee for our misery again.

Another word was mine, O axe, what time
I gave thee to Orestes' hand, and said,
'Seest thou this rust? it is thy father's blood,
Till thou efface it with another stain'!
And now it is my mother's; and whose next?"

The question is pathetically answered before long. Eurycles, a fugitive from Orestes' crew, who knows nothing of the escape of Orestes, but deems that he has been sacrificed at the Tauric shrine, identifies the unknown priestess at Delphi as the supposed murderess of Orestes; and Electra, thinking that the cruel gods have at length granted her the boon of vengeance, smites down Iphigenia at the altar with the dedicated axe. At that moment Orestes enters, to behold the sister who had saved him in Tauris expiring by the hand of the sister who had saved him at Argos. Electra finds that all her previous sorrows are but light compared to the new sorrow she has incurred by her vengeance. It is now Orestes' turn to assuage her distraction as she had once assuaged his:

"Thou shalt be purified, or I will not.
But yield thee to my will, resist no more;
For neither will I suffer thee to die,
Nor quit thee while thou breathest upon earth."

Here Apollo appears, and speaks purification and forgiveness to Orestes and Electra; while in the background the shades of Achilles and Iphigenia depart together for their union in the spirit-world.

"For know, it hath been all-constraining Love's Ancient and solemn counsel, that the bride
Kept from Achilles erst, he should regain,
And rule with her the sacred island-realm
Invisible, inviolate, the home
Of innocent sprites and hero-shades august,
Screened in the secrecy of western seas."

Scholars, I think, will regret that so admirable a plot should have been treated so slightly by Dr. Garnett, who has given us rather one prolonged scene than a drama, and has not ventured to reproduce the choric element of Greek tragedy, while he deals somewhat copiously in the less lovely "stichomuthia," or battledore and shuttlecock dialogue, as Mr. Lowell somewhere calls it. It is seldom that a book seems too short to a critic; but this one does. It is an opportunity only half-grasped. There are fine lines in it—e.g., the description of Achilles' silent shade at Delphi:

"In these omniscient halls
Hovering a shade all-seeing and unseen;
And, witting of the issue, not the way,
To wait on destiny's accomplishment,
Expectant, yet, as suits the scholar of Death,
Serene in observation unperturbed."

Or, again (p. 20):

"Too well I know
Sooner a girl shall slay a weaponed man
Than man love woman with a woman's love."

Here and there the versification, which for the most part rather lacks variety, slips into discord—e.g., p. 23:

"Bearing the urn thou feign'd'st to contain thy dust,"

Or doubtful grammar like (p. 28)—

"But why curse Artemis? 'tis her I serve."

The translations at the end are mainly from the Iliad and from Theocritus. To the present writer the latter seem superior. Dr. Garnett renders the idyllic mood gracefully; while in selecting the most famous passages from the Iliad he puts his powers to a severe test, and matches himself with the greatest translators—e.g., p. 58 :

"But they, full of high thoughts, by battle's gate,
Burning huge fires, all night encamping sate;
As when the bright stars gloriously gird
The radiant moon, and Æther sleeps unstirred.
And boldly stand forth headland, cliff and grove,
And heaven immeasurable is rent above."

This is readable, but it is not very good.

E. D. A. MORSEHEAD.

HENRY OF NAVARRE.

The First of the Bourbons, 1595—1610. By Catherine Charlotte, Lady Jackson. (Bentley.)

Henri IV. : Le Roi, l'Amoureux. Par H. de La Ferrière. (Paris: Calmann Lévy.)

"As a descendant of Henry IV., I claim to be allowed to serve as a private soldier"—such were the terms in which the Duke of Orleans appealed to the President of the French Republic on the 8th of February last. Clearly among the young prince's ancestors, the "Béarnais," dead now with almost three hundred years of death, was yet the one great living figure. What Frenchman but would hesitate before refusing sword or rifle to the recruit in whose veins flowed the gay Gascon blood of the conqueror at Ivry?

A superb vitality without question that can thus defy, or almost defy, the insidious attacks of time and change. And truly Henry was alive to the finger-tips. It is impossible to read the story of his career, however told, and not to recognise that in him we are brought face to face with a genuine man—a man who lived his life largely, bore adversity with an undaunted courage, was not spoilt by fortune's favours, enjoyed danger and the clash and excitement of battle, loved his loves—for they were many—if not wisely, yet with a spark of chivalry and romance that redeemed his amours from utter grossness, and withal was one of the first statesmen of his time, having extended political views and a real love of his country and his people. And with the recognition of all this, a recognition that only came tardily during his lifetime, he took and has kept his place as the popular hero. To him the French monarchist can point as to a king who was indeed a king.

So, as Lady Jackson rewrites the old story once more, one reads it, if but for its subject, not altogether unprofitably or unpleasantly. She opens her book at the point where her earlier book, The Last of the Valois (reviewed in the ACADEMY, October 5, 1889), had left the history of France; tells of Henry III.'s death and of Henry IV.'s accession, if accession it can be called, which was an accession only to warfare against rebel faction of the bitterest and most venal kind. Then she tells of her hero's wars and successes, his tardy acknowledgment as really King of France, his loves and his labours, down to the fatal May 14, 1610, when the knife of Ravallac put an end to the great king's life.

"Book-making" is the term which adverse criticism has applied to such works as this of Lady Jackson. But, after all, in a world where so many things are privileged to live, surely book-making ought not to be regarded as vermin. Nay, considering how impossible it is to exactly define where book-making ends and book-writing begins, considering, further, that even book-making, when adequately done, has its uses in the spread and popularisation of knowledge, there is no reason at all why the term should necessarily be one of reproach. It may even be a term of honour if the materials used in the "making" are of the soundest and newest kind.

Now, in reading these volumes it is impossible to avoid being struck with the free use made of the Economies Royales and Mémoires of Sully. Thirty or forty years ago this would have been right enough. Writing in 1853, Sainte-Beuve said:

"There is no work of greater value than that which bears his [Sully's] name as helping us to a full knowledge of the real Henry IV. in his familiar every-day life, and whether as man or hero; and to Sully himself it is possible to fashion forth a statue even out of the superabundant and somewhat common material with which he himself supplies us."

Michelet, too, used Sully's Economies freely; and with regard to such a matter, for instance, as the death of Gabrielle, he accepted his account without question, and did not hesitate to believe, as Sully clearly meant we should—the suggestion throws a strange light on the morality of the time—that he was at least privy to the design of poisoning the royal mistress and so preventing the infatuated monarch from raising her to the throne of France.

But in these later years the character of Sully for veracity has been seriously impugned, not to say altogether shaken. "The good lord of Rosny," "our own true Maximilian," as Macaulay calls him in the well-known lines, was clearly neither as good nor as true as might be desired. His Economies, and even more his Mémoires—for the latter are the work of a later time—belong to that order of authority which will pierce the historian's hand if he leans upon it unduly. They—the Economies I mean—were compiled by his too obsequious secretaries at a period when he was old, in disgrace, seriously embarrassed—he the keen man of business—by the prodigalities of his eldest son, and by a series of law-suits. They were compiled, therefore, under circumstances which rendered a serene impartiality almost impossible. But, beyond this, they were clearly compiled with an utter absence of scruple. In the desire to glorify Sully, to show that he had throughout been Henry's good angel, his guide, philosopher, friend, the adviser of all that he had done well, the honest contemner of all that he had done evil—in the desire to do this the four secretaries, and presumably Sully himself, seem to have stuck at nothing. Their statements are often demonstrably false, their documents utterly untrustworthy. Towards Gabrielle, in particular, the old man seems to have entertained a malignant enmity. Why, is not so clear. She had helped him to a coveted seat in the Conseil des Finances, and though afterwards she had obtained for her father the post of Grand Maître de l'Artillerie, which Sully wanted for himself, and though Sully was, quite rightly, opposed on political grounds to her elevation to the throne, yet neither the earlier benefit, nor the subsequent disappointment, nor the reasons of state, are sufficient to account for a hatred so envenomed and persistent. In any case, there can be little room for doubt that Henry never, except in Sully's imagination, declared to Gabrielle that, "if he were reduced to the necessity of losing one or the other, he would more willingly go without ten mistresses like herself than one servant such as Sully"; while, as to Sully's account of Gabrielle's death, one may, without compunction, regard it as being—in the main features—apocryphal. And if anyone wishes to see the subject treated in greater and very interesting detail, he cannot do better than refer to a valuable article by M. Desclozeaux, in the Revue Historique for 1887, entitled "Gabrielle D'Estrées et Sully."

These are things of which the book-maker of 1889, if one may say it gently, ought not to have been ignorant.

But I have left myself scant space in which to describe M. de la Ferrière's book, and yet it is a book which raises several interesting questions, and of which one can speak with honour. Three subjects does the author discuss: the ill-starred marriage of Henry with Marguerite de Valois; the abortive mission of the Duc de Luxembourg to Rome in 1589, 1590, to obtain from the Papacy a recognition of Henry's rightful accession to the throne; and Henry's amours with the Marquise de Verneuil—"she wur a bad-un, shea"—and other frail beauties. But the story of the "Vert Galant's" later loves would carry me too far afield. If it be true, as M. de la Ferrière asserts, that "Henry IV. enjoyed this singular privilege, that while he was alive, and since his death, his amorous weaknesses, so far from lowering him in the general estimation, have only added to his popularity," yet very evidently the king's senile amours exercised a deleterious effect on his own character, as well as on State affairs. In reading the story of them, I confess that the image of Balzac's Baron Hulot occasionally comes into my mind.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

NEW NOVELS.

Acta. By Hugh Westbury. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Two False Moves. By Jean Middlemass. In 3 vols. (White.)

An Unfortunate Arrangement. By John Hill. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Concealed for Thirty Years: being the Narrative of one Edward Grey. (Remington.)

Laura Montrose; or, Prejudice and Pride. By Adela May. (Digby & Long.)

My First Love. By Mrs. Riddell. (Hutchinson.)

THE writer who chooses to be known as Hugh Westbury has achieved mastery of his tools in the course of a very brief apprenticeship. His first book, Frederick Hassledon, published, if I am not mistaken, less than three years ago, was a clever but unequal novel—a story which has full of promise, but hardly less full of indications that in the technique of his art the author had a good deal to learn. It would seem as if in the comparatively brief interval which has elapsed between the appearance of the two books he has managed to learn it; for Acte is not a mere promise, but a true performance: it is a romance which obeys the laws of symmetry and proportion, which has the impressive unity of a work of finished art, and which possesses, moreover, the interest secured by truthfulness of character, variety of incident, and dramatic picturesqueness of situation. It would, indeed, not be extravagant to say that among the many historical stories which have appeared during the past ten years there are only two which can be credited with that all-round excellence which satisfies both the critical and the general reader. These two are Dr. Conan Doyle's Micah Clarke and Hugh Westbury's Acte; and as it is, on the face of it, a much more difficult thing to produce a faithful, interesting, and realisable picture of the Rome of Nero than of the England of Charles I., one may, without casting any slur upon the perfection of Dr. Conan Doyle's art, award the palm to the book last named. I have mentioned some of the positive qualities which make Acte attractive, but it owes much of its charm to a negative quality—the entire absence from its pages of that aggressively laborious local colouring which has the look of being the result of wholesale "cramming." What local colour Hugh Westbury really needs for his artistic purpose is to be found in his picture. And as it is always truthful, the book can be read by the scholar without any of the irritation excited by ignorant or careless inaccuracies; but it can also be read by the utterly unscholarly person without any of that other kind of irritation excited by the continual recurrence of words and allusions which are to him utterly unintelligible. It is perhaps right that Nero's Greek mistress Acte should give a name to the romance; for, with the exception of the young soldier Titus, she is certainly the most winning of Hugh Westbury's characters, though Nero himself is by far the most impressive figure on the canvas. Often as the bad mad emperor has been utilised for purposes of romance, this latest presentment of him will compare favourably with any of its predecessors. The writer has got a firm imaginative grasp of the curious anomalies of Nero's character—its combination of gross profligacy with a keen appreciation of ideal art, of utter general baseness with occasional gleams of kingly magnanimity; and he has painted his portrait with such cunning touches that the man lives and breathes before us. The figure of Poppaea, with her voluptuous beauty, her insatiable ambition, and her utter villainess, is equally lifelike; and few situations in historical romance are more striking than the scene in which Poppaea, relying with implicit confidence upon the magic of her beauty, calmly enters the presence of Nero wearing the stola of that Tyrian purple which was sacred to Caesar. Of the nobler figures that of Seneca is the most successful; and if St. Paul, who is introduced a little mechanically to effect the conversion of Acte to Christianity, be a comparative failure, it may at any rate be said for the writer that he fails where few, if any, would have succeeded. Apart altogether, however, from its solid and skilful handling of character, Acte fulfils all the conditions of successful romance. The incidents are admirable in invention, and natural—indeed, inevitable—in sequence. As a presentation of the salient features of the inner and outer life of Nero's Rome, the romance is scholarly without being pedantic. It unites the broad picturesqueness of good scene-painting with the careful finish of work which demands, and will repay, the closer observation we give to a cabinet picture by Mr. Alma Tadema. Most important of all, from the general reader's point of view, the writer has proved that he can construct and tell a story which is from first to last rich in absorbing interest.

As the majority of the personages in Miss Jean Middlemass's new novel spend the greater part of their time in making false moves, it is by no means easy to identify the couple of false moves which have suggested the title. It may be assumed, however, that one of the two is the marriage of Miss Dorothy Meade to that very objectionable person, Mr. Lewis Bellingham, as from this event spring the "woes unnumbered," to the recital of which three volumes are devoted with a doleful conscientiousness worthy of a better cause. This particular move by which not only Dorothy herself, but all her friends and acquaintances are made to suffer great discomfort, is not only a false move, but an inexplicable move as well; for Mr. Bellingham is not rich, he is the reverse of attractive, he is obviously in love with the lady's money rather than with the lady herself, and, what is most important of all, the fair Dorothy is not in love with him, being consumed by a devouring passion for "another"—a certain Derek Home. Derek, too, is not irresponsible. He has "confessed a mutual flame"; but, as Bellingham has made him the victim of a particularly mean forgery, and as the playing of one dirty trick suggests the desirability of following it up by a second, the forger informs Miss Meade that her Derek has eloped to the continent with her friend, Miss Ruth Churchill. Being a person in a minor novel, it is needless to say that the fair Dorothy accepts this statement without doubt or inquiry, and at once marries Bellingham, probably as an expression of her gratitude for this welcome intelligence. Then Derek reappears, and there are explanations, followed by a good deal of risky philandering, which, again, is succeeded by a severe misunderstanding caused by Derek's rash attempt to improve the morals of a fair but frail opera-singer. Finally, Derek transfers his affections from Mrs. Bellingham to Ruth Churchill, who has been in love with him all the time, and the pair get married and live happily ever afterwards—an event which brings to a close a novel which, in spite of its glaring unrealities, is not much worse than the average product of the circulating library.

Alan McEwan, the hero of An Unfortunate Arrangement, is a transcendently noble ne'er-do-weel, who, after a youth and early manhood of romantic impecuniosity, comes into a fortune which brings him £4,000 a year. Previously to this accession of wealth, he has fallen in love with Miss Nellie Potter, a charming but fickle young lady, who throws McEwan over for his friend Harold Stanton. Stanton's conversation is of selfish cynicism all compact, and there is nothing whatever in his conduct to give it the lie; but McEwan, who is represented as being a shrewd and clever person, is so convinced of the moral beauty of his character, that he offers him half his income in order to enable him to marry poor Nellie—a very unfortunate arrangement indeed, as the girl, though not faultless, hardly deserves to be tied to a scoundrel who first makes her life a misery, and then endeavours to bring it to an end by poisoning a cup of coffee. Luckily Stanton's attempt is so clumsy that it is detected by his victim, who naturally runs away from him; and as McEwan not less naturally withdraws the £2,000 a year, the defeated villain does for himself what he had intended to do for his wife, leaving behind him a characteristically cynical document for the consideration of the coroner's jury. Given thus in skeleton, the story will seem absurd enough, and absurd of course it really is; but absurdity does not preclude cleverness, and An Unfortunate Arrangement is a very clever book indeed. The descriptions, especially the continental descriptions, are bad to beat; the conversations, at least those in which McEwan and Stanton are the interlocutors, bristle with humorous epigram that is a great deal more natural and spontaneous than the epigram of fiction is wont to be; and though one would not pin one's faith to the lifelikeness of either of the epigrammatists, the portrait of Mr. Potter suffices to prove that Mr. Hill has an eye to see character and a hand to render it. True, Mr. P. is at once an R.A. and a Philistine, but even this is not, perhaps, an impossible combination.

Concealed for Thirty Years is one of those oddly grotesque inventions which seem of late to have been creeping into public favour. The hero is wrecked in the South Pacific, and cast half-alive on the shore of an island which he discovers to be populated by an English colony, the descendants of men and women who in the year 1630 had formed part of the general body of Puritan emigrants who left the Mother Country that they might worship God—and, it may be added, compel other people to worship Him—in their own fashion. There is nothing very unusual in the manners of the inhabitants of Solterra, as they have called their island—nothing apparently that would attract attention in a nineteenth-century drawing room; but they atone for this conformity to modern conventions by an undeniably strange garb, and by a dialect of which the following is a pleasant sample:

"Withouten further amiable complimenting, I do truly say that I greet thee with a greet which lacketh no wit in sinceriment and charment, and will hold thee to be true outside friend to be innitted in brief space, I doubt me not, as inside friend of the heart."

After the first twenty pages or so, this kind of thing loses the charm of novelty, and it has no other charm to speak of; but the reader who has courage to persevere will find a good deal that is interesting, and something that is even mildly exciting in Edward Grey's story of the revolution in Solterra.

If the revival of interest in Jane Austen is to have for its result a crop of imitations like Laura Montrose—at once servile in intention and ludicrously ineffective in execution—that revival will not be a thing upon which we can unreservedly congratulate ourselves. Miss May's attempt to create a new Darcy and Elizabeth Bennet is such a ludicrous failure that we really should not know it had been made were it not for the broad hint given in the sub-title. It is devoutly to be wished that Laura Montrose; or, Prejudice and Pride may not be followed by "Belinda Fairfax; or, Sensibility and Sense."

Mrs. Riddell's new story, My First Love, can be bought for a shilling; but it has no other connexion with the shilling shocker. There is not, indeed, a single shock to be found in its 142 pages, which are devoted to the record of the youthful love affair of the middle-aged barrister who tells the tale, and who is a great deal more gushing and sentimental than middle aged barristers are at all apt to be. There is rather too little story, and there are rather too many sentences beginning with "Oh!"—"Oh, happy past!" "Oh, banks, woods, and hedgerows!" "Oh, dear, true heart!" and the like—to say nothing of Mrs. Riddell's old and now apparently incurable habit of indulging in eloquent but commonplace moralising on the slightest possible provocation. My First Love is not stimulating; but, as an opiate, it might be found effective.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

A Historical Companion to Hymns Ancient and Modern. Edited by the Rev. R. M. Moorsom. (Parker.) We cannot praise too highly this admirably planned little volume. It is just such a companion to the hymn-book as all persons interested in the history of hymns have been longing for. The originals of all translated hymns are printed in a chronological order, together with the names of all authors and translators, and the first lines of all the English hymns. Each author is tersely described, and his religious position indicated, together with the dates of his hymns, if they are known. There are handy little glossaries of "some less common" Greek and Latin words at the end of the book. Mr. Moorsom adds a note after his indices asking for the Greek originals of four well-known hymns by Dr. Neale. Perhaps his inquiry may elicit a response from some student of the Greek service books. The longer these originals remain undiscovered the stronger becomes the presumption that Dr. Neale himself composed the hymns; if not original, they are, at all events, very free paraphrases. Mr. Moorsom says modestly in his introduction that a second edition of the Rev. L. Outier Bigge's work would have made his own book unnecessary; but readers of the Historical Companion will not agree to this. Mr. Moorsom is a model editor, troubling his readers with no superfluous comment, but selecting and compressing his mass of facts with accurate care, and arranging them with excellent judgment.

The Hymn Lover. By W. Garrett Horder. (Ourwen.) This "account of the rise and growth of English Hymnody" may be described as a popular history of English hymns. Mr. Horder has performed a difficult task well. He has decided to include in his text illustrative specimens; and while the wisdom of this decision may be challenged, there can be no doubt of the excellence of the selection he has made. He unites several qualities rarely found together, but quite essential to the successful compilation of his book. He understands that hymns must first of all be religious, that they cannot be criticised from the agnostic point of view; but his literary faculty is practised and keen, enabling him to separate religious doggerel from religious poetry. In addition, he displays in the accumulation of his facts, and in their arrangement and statement, a scholarly accuracy without which his history would be a failure. The book is the best which has appeared on the subject.

Romance of Psalter and Hymnal. By Rev. R. B. Welsh and F. G. Edwards. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Very few readable books about hymns are produced, because the authors do not succeed in avoiding the danger of compiling a mere fragment of a dictionary of hymnology. The Voice of Christian Life in Song, by the author of "The Chronicles of the Schönberg Cotta Family," occurs to us as one successful effort; but in that case success was attained by a wise restraint, which the authors of the Romance of Psalter and Hymnal have not imitated. Their part ii., on the Hymnal, is scrappy, and contains nothing which has not appeared in previous volumes. Part i., on the Psalter, will not be of much use to any real student, and will soon be laid aside by the reader in search of romance. The third part on composers of hymns is the best and most coherent section of the book. It collects information which will be read eagerly by all interested in hymns and the music of hymns, and does not attempt the impossible feat of exciting readers about a man or a poem in eight or ten lines.

Repertorium Hymnologicum. Catalogue des Chants, Hymnes, Proses, Séquences, Tropes en Usage dans l'Eglise Latine depuis les Origines jusqu'à nos Jours. Par le Chanoine U. Chevalier. 1^{re} fascicule. (Louvain.) This is an alphabetical list, with an indication of the festival for which each piece was composed, of the number of verses and their presumed author, with references to liturgical books and other works, as well as to MSS. in which they are to be found. It appears to have been compiled with great care, and will be an invaluable help to students of ecclesiastical poetry. This first part contains no less than 4539 incipits, although it only comes down to Deus tuorum militum virtus. Even this list is probably far from complete; but it is an immense step forward. And we hope that the learned canon may not only speedily terminate the list, but that some scholar, or association of scholars, will do for hymns what M. Gautier is doing for the Tropes, and MM. Misset and Weale for Proses.

The Lesser Hours of the Sarum Breviary. Translated and arranged according to the Kalendar of the Church of England. (Sonnen-schein.) This little book professes to be "a faithful and fearless rendering of the whole service" [i.e., of Prime, Terce, Sext, Nones, and Compline] "as our forefathers in the faith of Christ used the same, without any recognition of private fancies." As a manual of devotion intended for the use of Anglicans, we are not concerned with it here. But it will serve to give the general reader who is unable to consult Messrs. Procter and C. Wordsworth's edition of the Breviarium ad usum Sarum some notion of those of the daily services of the mediæval Church of England which are not represented at all, or (like Prime and Compline) represented only in a fragmentary way, in the Book of Common Prayer. The fact that the book is an attempt to adapt the services of the Breviary for actual use may perhaps be taken as an excuse for the rendering of persona excellentior by "a priest" (p. 79). But "bid a blessing" in the same place for benedictio is unfortunate. Why is Domine vobiscum, "The Lord is with you," at p. xv., and "The Lord be with you" at p. 2 and elsewhere. We say with confidence that the elaborate rules of the "Pie" which regulate the services here contained will be fatal to the acceptance of the book as a practical manual, even were there no objections of another kind to its use. The editor tells us that his "chief aim has been to avoid the Anglican Charybdis of private judgment"; yet he admits that he has exercised his private judgment in deleting the antiphon for St. Brice's day. But why? Many a time has an infant been wrongly fathered on an innocent man. But it is not every day that an infant a month old clears the innocent by addressing the supposed father, and calling out before all, "You are not my papa." If we want to understand how "our forefathers in the faith" were edified, let there be no eclecticism.

Q. S. F. Tertullian Apologeticus adversus Gentes pro Christianis. Edited with Introduction and Notes by T. H. Bindley. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) The "young theological student," whose wants Mr. Bindley seeks to supply, will doubtless find this edition of Tertullian's Apology useful; but it will disappoint scholars, and be of little assistance to advanced students. Mr. Bindley scarcely improves upon Dr. Woodham. He makes very little effort to detect and illustrate the peculiarities of Tertullian's Latin, although help in this direction will be most necessary to his "young theological student." He is content to translate difficult phrases and passages, instead of clearly stating their grammatical construction—a plan ruinous to the scholarship of junior students. We may instance the third note on page 5, if only to point out that in this case the translation given is obviously wrong. Such translations may be allowed occasionally to conclude a note, and they are always to the point if the difficulty is the neat expression of an idiom. Mr. Bindley is occasionally happy in his versions; but too often we have such confessions of failure as "not from the mere fact of the existence of the hatred, but from cognizance of the merits of the case." The historical and literary notes are careful, but too scrappy, and too crowded with references to books which Mr. Bindley knows very well that the "young theological student" will not refer to. The introduction is interesting and well written; it would be more complete if it gave some account of the relation of Tertullian's Apology to the Octavius of Minucius Felix.

The Apology of Tertullian for the Christians. Translated by T. H. Bindley. (Parker.) This translation is from Mr. Bindley's own text. It compares favourably with the versions in Clarke's "Ante-Nicene Library," and in the "Library of the Fathers," but does not distinctly rise above them. To convey to an English reader an adequate idea of the force and pregnancy of Tertullian's style is a harder task than any of these translators seem to think it. They do not realise that redundant paraphrase must, at all costs, be avoided. The translator who aspires merely to avoid baldness and clumsiness, who shrinks from strong idioms and refuses to recast the construction of his original, cannot hope to reproduce Tertullian's fire and force. His work cannot be more than a useful and accurate crib.

THE Clarendon Press has issued an edition of the New Testament in Greek, of which the importance is hardly indicated either by the title-page or by the lettering on the back. The former merely adds to the title of Bishop Lloyd's edition (1827) the words "accessunt tres appendices"; the latter says "Novum Testamentum, Lloyd and Sanday." It is in these appendices, for which Prof. Sanday is responsible, that the peculiar value of this edition consists. The first appendix contains a collation of the text of Wescott and Hort with the textus receptus, which has been prepared mainly by the Rev. H. J. White, of Salisbury, and the Rev. F. A. Overton. The second appendix—which has been Prof. Sanday's own special care—consists of a selection of noteworthy variant readings, from the Greek MSS., from the old Versions, from the Fathers, and from modern editions. It is hardly necessary to say that the novelty of this selection lies in the position assigned to the Versions and the Fathers. As regards the MSS., little can be added to Tischendorf, except for the few (such as the codex Rossanensis) which have come to light since his time; while Scrivener has already published an exhaustive collation of the modern editions. But for the Fathers, Prof. Sanday has himself verified the references and consulted the most recent editions. For the Versions, again, yet more has been done. The Vulgate and other Old Latin texts have long formed the chosen field of work of Bishop Wordsworth and Prof. Sanday himself; the Syriac or Peshitto has been studied in the same way by the Rev. W. H. Gwilliam; the Armenian and Aethiopic have been specially examined for the present work by Prof. Margoliouth, "linguarum orientalium nullius non peritus;" and the Memphitic or Coptic by the Rev. A. O. Headlam. Indeed, the labours of these two last have been so elaborate as to form by themselves the subject of the third appendix. We have, therefore, here compressed into some two hundred pages an apparatus criticus for the text of the Greek Testament, which cannot fail to satisfy the wants of all ordinary scholars. At the same time, the book has been so printed and bound by the Oxford Press as to form almost a pocket volume—a pleasure to the eyes, and no less pleasant to handle.

We may also notice, in connexion with the preceding, the new large type edition of their "Variorum Bible," which Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode have published recently, though the preface is dated September, 1888. Besides minor changes in respect of printing, &c., the notes have been revised, in view of recent commentaries. For the Old Testament, the editors are the same who first undertook the task nearly twenty years ago—Profs. Cheyne and Driver—and their portion of the work is, no doubt, the most valuable. For the text of the Old Testament stands in a very different position to that of the New, as may be seen from the fact that, among the authorities quoted for the former, there is no single critical edition. The editors for the New Testament are the Rev. R. L. Clarke (who died before the work was published), and Prof. Sanday. The system adopted in both cases is the same—to give in footnotes the variations that have won general acceptance (1) of renderings and (2) of readings, with references to the authorities. The "Variorum Bible" of Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode, therefore, differs from the "Sunday School Teacher's Bible" of the Clarendon Press, in that its scope is confined to textual questions; and for these it supplies all the material that the ordinary reader can require.

Studies on the Epistles. By F. Godet. Translated by Annie Harwood Holmden. (Hodder & Stoughton.) A popular consecutive account of the Pauline Epistles, treating them as a whole, and summing up vividly and clearly their history and teaching, is a help much desired by the unlearned reader of the New Testament, and not easily met with in English. These Studies supply the want admirably. They have already appeared in the Expositor, and are republished with only slight alterations. The translation is easy and idiomatic, and gives to English readers a thoroughly interesting and readable book, which is at the same time learned and thoughtful. Professional students will learn much from Dr. Godet. His survey of the Epistles is brief and rapid, but nevertheless picturesque and readable; and his learning is neither thrust on one side nor unduly insisted upon, but used discreetly and easily. The title of the volume is somewhat misleading. The only non-Pauline Epistle treated of is the Epistle to the Hebrews.

The Ministry of Preaching: an Essay on Pastoral and Popular Oratory. By Mgr. Felix Dupanloup. Translated by Samuel J. Eales. (Griffith, Farran & Co.) The Bishop of Orleans' little book on Preaching is well known—we should have fancied too well known to make a translation into English a desideratum. In a country like England, where for its size there are perhaps more sermons preached—and worse—than in any country in the world, if the counsels of this excellent treatise were laid to heart by those who have to appear week after week in English pulpits, the unhappy twenty minutes, or the "bad quarter of an hour," might be made less dull and less irritating than they too often are to those who have to endure.

Going on Pilgrimage. By Lucy Taylor. (Nelson.) We should have nothing but praise for this carefully-written Companion to The Pilgrim's Progress, if we could feel convinced that Bunyan's story needs such an adjunct. The book has gained its world-wide popularity not because of its theology, as so many good people fondly imagine, but because it is "as good as a play"—as real and vivid. The Companion, by fixing our attention especially upon Bunyan's theological teaching, makes us aware, almost for the first time, that that teaching appeals to a religious party rather than to mankind. Any one who has read the original story and felt its fascination may find the Companion useful, but it must on no account be allowed to take the place of the original or to be read before it.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. FRANCIS RIVINGTON—who, since the withdrawal of his brother last year, has been the sole representative of the well-known publishing firm of Rivingtons—has now himself resolved to retire. The business has been purchased, as from July 1, by Messrs. Longmans, who will supply all the books in Messrs. Rivingtons' catalogue at their house in Paternoster-row. An historic interest attaches to this transfer, for the names of Rivington and Longman may be found side by side on a large proportion of the books that were published in London during the last century. Rivingtons is slightly the older firm of the two, having been founded as early as 1719, whereas Thomas Longman first commenced business seven years later.

THE first volume of Prof. Marshall's Principles of Economics is expected to be published this summer by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. The book, when complete, will be a fresh examination, from the point of view of the present generation, of questions discussed in Mill's Principles of Political Economy.

THE course of four lectures which Dr. Emil Reich delivered at Oxford last term, on "Graeco-Roman Institutions from Anti-Evolutionist Points of View," will be published next week by Messrs. Parker & Co. The lectures deal with such subjects as slavery and social conditions generally in classical times.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN announce a monthly reissue of their sixpenny edition of Charles Kingsley's novels, to consist of a million copies.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & Co. have now in the press A Protest Against

Agnosticism, by Mrs. Fitzgerald, author of "A Treatise on the Principle of Sufficient Reason," and "An Essay on Self-Consciousness, showing the Rationale of Faith, Hope, and Love."

The Register of St. Mary Magdalene, Canterbury, from 1559 to 1800, forming the fourth volume of Mr. J. M. Cowper's series of Canterbury Parish Registers, is now ready for delivery to subscribers.

THE next volume in the "Camelot" series will be Famous Reviews, selected by R. Stevenson.

THE new buildings of the Borough-road Training College, at Spring-grove, Isleworth, will be formally opened by the Earl of Granville, on Friday, June 13. The eighty-fifth general meeting of the British and Foreign School Society will be held on the same occasion. The total estimated cost of the new buildings amounts to £28,900, towards meeting which £20,000 has been received from the sale of the old college in the Borough-road, Southwark.

AT the next meeting of the Aristotelian Society, to be held at 22, Albemarle-street on Monday, June 2, at 8 p.m., there will be a Symposium on the question "Is the Distinction of Feeling, Cognition, and Conation Valid as an Ultimate Distinction of the Mental Functions?" in which Dr. A. Bain, Prof. Brough, Mr. R. H. Mitcheson, and Mr. G. F. Stout will take part.

THE printing and publishing trades of Mainz are preparing to celebrate the 450th anniversary of Gutenberg's invention of printing. On June 22 an exhibition of printing appurtenances from Gutenberg's time to the present day will be opened at the Grand-ducal Palace, and Dr. Velke, of the Mainz library, will lecture upon Gutenberg and his invention. On June 24, Gutenberg's birthday, the Gutenbergplatz and monument are to be illuminated, and a meeting will be held at the Gutenberg-Casino, the birthplace of the inventor.

MR. GEORGE ALLEN, of Orpington, and now also of Bell Yard, has issued an uniform series of cheap editions of three of Mr. Ruskin's works, with reproductions of the original plates. These are: The Seven Lamps of Architecture, now for the first time brought within the reach of ordinary book-buyers—the first edition fetches £4 or £5; and the two courses of lectures delivered at Oxford in 1870 and 1873, and published under the titles of Aratra Pentelici and Val d'Arno. We could wish that the three volumes had all been uniformly bound, and printed upon paper of the same tint. In other respects (except one) they are pleasant to look upon and to read. The exception, however, is serious. In his Oxford lectures of 1870, dealing with the elements of sculpture (which the present writer had the advantage of hearing), Mr. Ruskin had occasion to quote a good deal of Greek, and this Greek now appears in a most unscholarly guise. Not only are the accents frequently misplaced, but there are also several atrocious misprints, which Mr. Ruskin himself could never have passed. Such carelessness in the person responsible for proof-reading cannot be excused by any plea of cheapness.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: The title of Mr. George Meredith's forthcoming novel, One of the Conquerors, is, curiously enough, used, almost word for word, by one of the characters in a tale by him, "The Case of General Ople and Lady Camper," which appeared in the New Quarterly Magazine for June 1877. The general has the reputation of being a captivator of the fair sex, and has been so blinded by his admiration for Lady Camper that he has not noticed the courtship of his daughter and her nephew.

Lady Camper has been caricaturing the general unmercifully in consequence, to bring him to his senses, but without the desired effect. She afterwards says to him:

"You would not have cared one bit for a caricature if you had not nursed the absurd idea of being one of our conquerors. It is the very tragedy of modesty for a man like you to have such notions, my poor, dear, good friend. The modest are the most easily intoxicated when they sip at vanity."

Of her own choice, Lady Camper eventually weds the general, after the marriage of his daughter to her nephew.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE Hon. Stuart Erskine and Mr. Herbert Vivian have jointly issued a circular, announcing "a lively and eccentric newspaper," published weekly at one penny, to be called the Whirlwind. The first number will appear on June 17; and those interested should address themselves to Mr. H. Vivian, 9 Down Street, Piccadilly.

THE first number of a new antiquarian magazine, entitled Berkshire Notes and Queries, is announced for publication early in June by Mr. Elliot Stook.

AMONG the contents of the June number of Education is an important Symposium on the question, "Shall German supplant Latin?" in which the head-masters of Harrow and Westminster, Mr. Oscar Browning and Prof. Sonnenschein, take part. The Interview is with Miss Agnes Ward, principal of the Maria Grey College, of whom a full-page portrait is given.

THE Antiquary for June will contain, besides continuations of previous articles, an account, by Canon Scott Robertson, of the tomb in Canterbury cathedral opened last March, which is unhesitatingly identified as that of Archbishop Hubert Walter; and an obituary notice of William Blades, by Mr. T. B. Reed.

THE June number of East and West (now published by Mr. Heinemann) will contain an article on "The Atrocities of the Russian Exile System," by Stepniak; "Beneath the Belfry," by Maxwell Gray; and an account of Christopher Plantin, the founder of the famous printing-firm at Antwerp, by Mr. Gilbert S. Macquoid.

MR. EDWARD SALMON, author of "Juvenile Literature As It Is," has written for the June Parents' Review an article entitled "Should Children Have a Special Literature." To the same number Capt. C. Wynyard, of the Royal Military College, Farnborough, will contribute a paper on "Our Cadets."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE general board of studies at Cambridge has approved the name of Mr. A. B. Forsyth, of Trinity College, for the degree of Doctor in Science. Mr. Forsyth is at present engaged upon an elaborate work on The Theory of Differential Equations, of which the first part, dealing with Exact Equations and Pfaff's Problem, will shortly be published by the Pitt Press.

OXFORD was represented at the sexcentenary festival of the University of Montpellier this week by Mr. D. B. Monro, provost of Oriel; and Cambridge by Mr. Sedley Taylor, of Trinity.

THE visitatorial board at Oxford having declared Prof. Moseley to be disabled for the performance of his duties as Linacre professor of human and comparative anatomy, Convocation has approved the appointment of a deputy-professor, who will hold office during Prof. Moseley's incapacity. The appointment will be made at the end of the present term.

MR. H. B. CLARKE, of Wadham College, has been appointed to the teachership of Spanish at the Taylorian Institution, which has been vacant since the death of Señor Lucena some years ago.

CONGREGATION at Oxford has approved the preamble of a statute modifying the conditions of the Taylorian scholarship. Hitherto a scholarship and an exhibition have been given every year for French, German, Italian, or Spanish in succession. Henceforth a scholarship only in each of these languages will be awarded every alternate year, and the value of the scholarships will be reduced from £50 to £25. By this means, also, more money will be left free for the encouragement of advanced study in modern languages in any form which the curators may approve.

AT the annual meeting of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, held last week, Prof. T. McK. Hughes was re-elected president for the next academical year, and Prof. J. H. Middleton was elected vice-president.

AT the meeting of the Ashmolean Society on Monday next, June 2, Prof. Sydney H. Vines will deliver a lecture on "The Movements of Plants."

THE preacher at Mansfield College next Sunday will be Prof. Marcus Dods, of the Free Church College, Edinburgh.

THE annual report of the curators (or rather of the librarian) of the Bodleian Library for 1889 is printed in a supplement to the Oxford University Gazette. The total number of items added to the library during the year was 49,883, of which 6785 were purchases. The total expenditure was £7877, including £341 for the purchase of MSS., £1374 for the purchase of books, and £819 for binding. In addition, £135 was expended on the purchase of older books only, out of the contributions made for some years past by a member of All Souls' College; and £75 on the purchase of Oriental coins from Sir Alexander Cunningham's collection. Among the principal additions during the year may be mentioned: 108 volumes of revenue and other public accounts of the reigns from Charles II. to Anne; several early Hebrew MSS. and Japanese paintings; a number of Latin and English deeds which had belonged to the late Prof. Chandler; Egyptian ostraka and inscribed tablets and Oriental coins, presented by the Rev. Grenville J. Chester, in continuation of former donations; the Zend MS. of the Yama with Pahlavi translation, presented by Dastur Dr. Jamaspji Minocherji, which has already been described in the ACADEMY; and the holograph of Pope's "Essay on Criticism."

AT the meeting of the Oxford Union last week, a motion was brought forward "That this house regrets the non-recognition of the elective principle in the India Councils Bill now before parliament." Under the influence of an eloquent address from Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee, principal of the Ripon College, Calcutta, the motion was carried by the large majority of seventy-four votes to fourteen.

MESSRS. DICKINSON & FOSTER, of New Bond Street, have now on view a series of pictures illustrating some of the colleges at Oxford and Cambridge, in continuation of their former series on "The Great Schools of England."

PRINCIPAL EDWARDS, who is now on a visit to the United States, has received an offer of £1000 from Welsh residents in America, to be devoted to the library at Aberystwyth College.

MR. AUGUSTUS C. MERRIAM—whose name will be well known to readers of the American Journal of Archaeology—has been appointed to the newly founded chair of Greek archaeology and epigraphy at Columbia College, New York.

VERSE.

MEETING AND FAREWELL.

Ah me! how sadder than to say farewell
It is to meet,
Dreading that Love has lost his spell
And changed his sweet!
I would we were again to part
With that full heart.
The hawthorn was half-bud, half-flower
At our good-bye;
And braver to me since that hour
Are earth and sky.
Ah God! it were too poor a thing
To meet, this spring.
Our hearts—life never would have marge
To bear their tides,
Their confluent rush! Lo! death is large
In boundary sides;
And our great çaïte must be said
When I am dead.

MICHAEL FIELD.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE May Livre moderne is a very interesting number, by reason of a capital article on the late M. A. Barbey d'Aureville, who is far too little known in England, and also on his brother the Abbé Leon, of whom probably not ten Englishmen have ever heard. It is illustrated by a very good serious etching of the author of Les Diaboliques and Du Dandysme, and also by a reproduction of an amusing caricature of 1830, representing him in the hey-day of his own dandy stage, with wondrous hair, a more wondrous hat, a wasp waist, a rose in one hand, a pen in the other. There is an article by M. E. Tissot recommending the study of Goethe to Frenchmen on the rather odd ground that Goethe was, as a man, so much more perfect and interesting than—not merely Milton and Hugo, but Dante! There may be some of us who are prepared at a moment's notice to take up very heavy oadgels on this point with M. Tissot; but it is something to find a Frenchman doing justice, even awkwardly, to a German.

THE interest of the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for May is chiefly for Arabic and Hebrew scholars. F. Codera describes the thirty-seven books and MSS. acquired by him in his recent commission to Tunis and Algeria. He is convinced that there are still far more Arabic books and MSS. in private hands and in public libraries in Northern Africa than is generally supposed. He puts forward a project for printing one hundred volumes of those authors who deal with Spain, and for drawing up meanwhile biographical, bibliographical, and geographical catalogues and indices of these works, for which he has himself over 20,000 slips ready. E. Saavedra prints some Moorish inscriptions from Elche, of so late a date as 1509. Father Fita has some interesting accounts of the sacking of the Jewish quarters in the towns of Catalonia in 1391, and Hebrew inscriptions from Seville and Toledo. Sanchez Moguel pillories Vaca de Castro, the litigious Archbishop of Seville (1610-23) with his ninety-seven lawsuits, supported by all kinds of wrong-dealing. F. de Mély proves that the famous Golden Table of Pedro the Cruel had a real existence, was given to the Black Prince, and seen at Canterbury in the reign of Richard II. It was probably the retable of some altar, or perhaps a portable altar. Can it be still serving somewhere in some disguise? F. Coello makes a highly favourable report on Rodriguez Villa's "Historical Sketch of Italy from the Battle of Pavia to the Sack of Rome," and gives more qualified praise to Pella y Forgas's "Historia del Ampurdan," which, however, improves onwards the end.

THE BEATRICE EXHIBITION AT FLORENCE.

THIS exhibition of Italian women's work is not a very inspiring collection. So much time has been given, so much energy expended; and the result is proportionately so very small. A good deal of the work comes from convents, where one does not perhaps look for originality; but there are many laboriously wrought pictures in silk crewelwork, such as our grandmothers used to do, signed with the names of the artists, and presumably done in the outer world. These appear to have worked from patterns of our grandmothers' time, judging from the costume of the figures and still more from the treatment. The portrayal of sentiment is aimed at rather than decorative effect; and, as regards technique, there seems a strong tendency to designate material by sample. A gold ring (or is it a bangle?) which a gaily-dressed young man is tendering to an equally gaily-dressed maiden is represented by a piece of gold wire boldly projecting from the picture; hair is represented by real hair or by tow; and there is a picture of Queen Marguerita in which the face is indeed worked in silks, but the frills round the neck are real, and the pearls, if they were pearls, would be real too. But the climax is reached by an embroidered picture of an angel flying down towards a bed (in which apparently no one is lying); this bed is surrounded by curtains of real muslin, while the angel is brought into the immediate foreground by being clothed in long flowing garments of the same material. There are also numerous pictures worked either in silk or in hair, so as almost to resemble engravings, and a pelican feeding its young made of cotton wool, and a great deal (from its similarity one felt a very great deal) of fine and beautifully executed embroidery.

You may see straw weaving in a kind of loom, going on with great rapidity, and glove-making and embroidery of handkerchiefs by machinery. But these have become so much the commonplace of exhibitions that one passes them by without perhaps due appreciation.

The fine art department does not display much originality. The picture which leaves the strongest impression is a full-length life-sized portrait of the King and Queen of Italy standing together. But who would guess it to be the Queen; and does the King ever open his eyes so very wide? Round the galleries of the theatre is a large collection of drawings. Escaping for a moment from here into a box overlooking the stage, we had an amusing glimpse of the preparations going on for the tableaux from the Vita Nuova. Two stage wings representing trees were spread out on the floor, and up and down there walked a little man with a paintbrush about four feet long, putting in spring shoots. Dipping his paintbrush first into one paintpot, then another, he succeeded in a few minutes in transforming the foliage of late August into that of early May. And the air with which he wielded his tool was not soon to be forgotten.

There is a carefully drawn series of sketches on one of the staircases representing houses and streets in Florence connected with the families of Dante and Beatrice; but, naturally perhaps, considering the time which has elapsed since she lived, no relic of Beatrice herself. Yet it seems strange that not even a lock of her hair should have come down to us. How those who lived in the centuries immediately succeeding their time pictured Dante and Beatrice may be seen by the illuminations to the MSS. and early printed copies of the Divina Commedia and the Vita Nuova collected in the Tribuna Beatrice. Dante is represented usually as quite a young man, sometimes clothed in black. In one picture Beatrice marks off the divisions of her discourse on her fingers, Dante showing his interest by a similar action. Virgil appears like an Eastern mage, usually standing near Dante—once in a mandorla as though seen in a vision. The initials D. and B. are often placed over the heads of the principal figures.

Copies of the Divina Commedia must have been in demand soon after Dante's death, judging from the exquisite illuminated MSS. from the Biblioteca Laurenziana; and after the invention of printing, editions seem to have followed one another with great rapidity. There is a Divina Commedia here dated Brescia, 1487; another, Venice, 1491; and yet another printed at Venice in 1497. Botticelli's illustrated edition is also here—the face of Beatrice delicate and distinguished like those of his Sibyls.

In the same room are engravings from the works of later artists who have also illustrated Dante, including the "Beata Beatrix" of Rossetti—and the autographs of the sonnets written in her honour by living poets.

MAY PANTIN.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BRAUN, A. Die Arbeiterschutzgesetze der europäischen Staaten. 1. Th. Deutsches Reich. Tübingen: Laupp. 3 M.
 DELAIGUE, A. Paul Féval. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
 FERRY, Jules. Le Tonkin et la Mère-Patrie. Paris: Victor-Havard. 3 fr. 50 c.
 GOMPERZ-JAHREBUCH. Hrg. v. L. Geiger. 11. Bd. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Lit. Anstalt. 10 M.
 KLEIN, Th. Beiträge zur Geschichte u. Literatur der italienischen Gelehrtenrenaissance. III. Die griechischen Briefe d. Francisus Philolophus. Greifswald: Abel. 5 M.
 LE FAUVE, G. Le Volontaire de 1815: roman patriotique. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 3 fr. 50 c.
 NICOLAT, F. Les enfants mal élevés: étude psychologique, anecdotique et pratique. Paris: Didier. 7 fr. 50 c.
 RAMBAUD, A. La France coloniale: histoire, géographie, commerce. Paris: Colin. 3 fr.
 RAUCHER v. TRAUBENBERG, F. Frhr. Hauptverkehrswege Persiens. Halle-a.-S.: Tausch. 5 M.
 REBOUILLE de discours, rapports et pièces diverses dans les séances de l'Académie française 1880-1889. 3. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.
 RUPICOR et BAJOT. Meubles anciens des musées du Louvre et de Cluny. Paris: André. 30 fr.
 TISSOT, E. Les évolutions de la critique française. Basel: Georg. 4 M. 80 Pf.
 WERTZ, W. Shakespeare vom Standpunkte der vergleichenden Literaturgeschichte. 1. Bd. Die Menschen in Shakespeares Dramen. Worms: Reiss. 7 M. 30 Pf.

THEOLOGY.

- LINDENBERG, A. Erklärung der Offenbarung d. Johannes. Braunschweig: Schwetschke. 3 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ALLARD, P. La persécution de Dioclétien. Paris: Lecoq. 13 fr.
 COSTA DE BRAUVEGARD, le Marquis. Les dernières années du roi Charles-Albert. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
 GERMER, H. Geschichte d. deutschen Volkes u. seiner Kultur im Mittelalter. 1. Bd. Zur Zeit der karoling. u. sächs. Könige. 1. Lfg. Leipzig: Duncker. 1 M.
 SIGWART, Ch. E. Collegium logicum im 16. Jahrh. Freiburg-i.-Br.: Mohr. 2 M.
 VIVANT, A. Ritter v., u. H. Ritter v. ZEISSBERG. Quellen zur Geschichte der deutschen Kaiserpolitik Oesterreichs während der französischen Revolutionskriege 1790-1801. 5. Bd. Wien: Braumüller. 10 M. 80 Pf.
 WALLON, Henri. Les représentants du peuple en mission et la justice révolutionnaire dans les départements en l'an II. (1793-4). T. V et dernier. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
 WESTERHOF, B. Geschichte Oesterreichs u. Ungarns im 1. Jahrzehnt d. 19. Jahrh. Nach ungedr. Quellen. 2. Bd. Von Pressburg bis Schönbrunn. Leipzig: Duncker. 10 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- LOWMY, J. H. Die speculative Idee der Freiheit, ihre Widerstände, ihre praktische Verwertung. Prag: Riva. 4 M.
 MICHELL, M. Contributions à la flore du Paraguay. 3 et 4. Basel: Georg. 10 M. 50 Pf.
 PAX, F. Allgemeine Morphologie der Pflanzen m. besond. Berücksichtigung der Blütenmorphologie. Stuttgart: Enke. 9 M.
 PARRIS, Edmond. Traité de zoologie. Fasc. 1. Zoologie générale. Paris: Savy. 12 fr.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- DESCHAMPS, Emile. Œuvres complètes de, p.p. le Marquis de Queux de Saint-Hilaire. T. 6. Paris: Firmin-Didot. 12 fr.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE NEXT CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

Working: May 24, 1890.

I beg to deny the correctness of the statements made by Prof. Max Müller and D. Chwolson in to-day's ACADEMY.

Both must know that the circular sent out from Paris in October last was not a mere inquiry regarding the place of the next meeting of the Oriental Congress, but a protest against the committee nominated at Christiania, and against the proceedings of the last Congress, in which Prof. Max Müller took such a prominent part. This protest ended with an invitation to London. The document was widely published, but could scarcely be sent for signature to those members who were to blame for the proceedings of the last Congress, or to the tourists and others who were merely attracted by its festivities.

As for Prof. Chwolson, he signed the protest immediately under the names of the leaders of the movement, instead of under the special heading that was provided for those members (seven in number) who only desired to vote for the place of meeting. He also wrote a letter stating that the last Congress had only slightly fulfilled its object, that the division of the members into three classes was very offensive, that the scheme of an institute had been rejected and would hardly be carried out, and that M. Landberg would probably be the only one to object to London as the place for the next meeting. Under these circumstances, the accusation that his name had been wrongly entered is unfounded, and, in any case, should have been addressed to the secretaries of the London Congress, and not to M. Landberg.

I also deny that his name was often (if ever) quoted as a leader of the party in favour of the statutes and against the institute scheme, for he had been publicly mentioned as likely to be added to the irregular committee nominated at Christiania.

Finally, we do not claim to have the majority of the members of the last Congress, but only the majority of Orientalists representing twenty-two countries.

G. W. LEITNER.

South Kensington: May 26, 1890.

Having read the correspondence which has appeared in the last few numbers of the ACADEMY with reference to the eighth Congress of Orientalists held at Stockholm and Christiania last year, I wish to express my dissent from the course taken by the party of so-called "malcontents" or "protesters," who have thrown discredit on the proceedings of that Congress and stirred up much bad feeling on the subject.

Prof. Sayce, in his former letter, says that the Congress "broke up somewhat stormily," and, in his last, that "the majority of the delegates were hostile to the propositions of the acting committee." Having been present at that meeting as a delegate of the Royal Asiatic Society, I cannot agree with him. So far as I could see, the harmony in the proceedings was unbroken. The committee unanimously chosen to arrange for the holding of the next Congress comprised the most distinguished Orientalists present irrespective of nationality. Had there been any of our countrymen sufficiently noted to be elected on that committee, I feel sure from what I heard there would have been no dissident voice raised. Since, however, the more prominent among them were absent from Christiania, there was nobody to be nominated, Prof. Max Müller having been asked and having declined. As regards Russia, Prof. Chwolson has, in your last issue, disclaimed any intention to be drawn into the schism; and it is a new thing to find Englishmen acting the part of obstructives.

There seems to prevail an idea among the more influential of the protesters that the statutes of 1873 have been deliberately and wantonly infringed. That such has not been the case, those who know more about the matter than I do will support me in asserting, notwithstanding the document emanating from the French committee published in your last issue. No place was fixed upon for the next meeting before the Congress broke up solely because none of the delegates were authorised to invite on behalf of their respective countries. If London had been suggested by Prof. Sayce, that would have settled the whole difficulty.

After the courteous way in which we were all treated and the lavish hospitality shown, it is ungracious in us to cavil at mere questions of detail and wound the feelings of our Scandinavian friends.

ONE OF THE ENGLISH DELEGATES.

CHAUVER.

London: May 19, 1890.

Messrs. J. Blackwood & Co. have reprinted, under the title of "The Poetical Works of Geoffrey Chaucer," Wright's one-volume edition of the Canterbury Tales, apparently from the old stereotype plates. The binder has lettered the volume "The Complete Poetical Works," &c. Perhaps the publishers think that this description is justified by the addition to the original issue of "The Cuckow and Nightingale" (!), "The Assembly of Fowles," "Buckton," "Steadfastness," "Truth," "Fortune," "Soogan," "Purse," "Gentillesse," "Proverbs," "Adam," and "Virelai" (!), all from Moxen's edition, with the exception of a printer's error in "Steadfastness." Twelve genuine poems (including "Troilus" and "The Legend of Good Women") are thus omitted from this "complete" edition, while two spurious ones are inserted.

Prof. Skeat (ACADEMY, April 19) is under a misapprehension in supposing that Mr. Wright claims "always (when there is room for the least doubt) to have given the original reading of the MS. in a footnote when he had rejected it from the text." He only makes this claim "where a reading, although affording a tolerable meaning, appeared to him a decided bad one." He corrected what he considered merely scribal errors "without the least hesitation," giving as an instance of such corrections ll. 3179-80 [not 3779-80 as printed] (Miller's Prol., l. 69-70):

"Of storial thing that toucheth gentillesse
And eek more ryallé and holynesse"— where he has silently changed the italicised words to "moralité." Under the same head Mr. Wright would doubtless include what Prof. Skeat calls the "stupid repetition" of "frothe" for "for ire" in l. 1661 ("Knight's Tale, l. 80). Mr. Wright expressly states, "in cases like the above I have not thought it necessary to load the book with notes pointing out the alterations."

EDWD. GUNTORPE.

"HANSELYN" IN CHAUVER.

Ghent, Belgium: May 10, 1890.

It would seem that this word, which is very rare, has not yet received adequate attention. It occurs, so far as I know, but once* in Chaucer's "Parson's Tale" (Six-Text edition), p. 622, l. 422:

"to spoken of the horrible disordinat scantnesse of clothyng as been thise kuttet sloppes | or haynselyns | that thurgh hire shortnesse | ne couere nat the shameful membris of man to wikked entente. . . ."

This is the reading of the Ellesmere MS. The other readings are: hanselyns (Hengwrt), haunselynys (Cambr.), hanselynes (Selden), hanselynes (Petworth), hanselynes (Landsdowne). Harleian MS., 7334, which was used by Dr. Morris for his edition, presents (vol. iii., p. 297) the variant anslets. In all the texts my quotation, which will be found necessary to establish the meaning, is substantially the same.

Tyrwhit, in his Glossary, tells us that it "appears from the context to mean a sort of breeches." Dr. Morris explains anslets as "a slop or smock." Both evidently judge from the context, without giving it full attention. Halliwell, guessing not quite correctly, defines it as "a kind of short jacket mentioned by Chaucer." Wright—who always copies Halliwell, and very often while so doing omits the most important part of Halliwell's words—says merely that it is "a kind of short jacket," thereby leading the unwary reader to suppose that the word is so well known as not even to require an example.

It is evident that we cannot understand breeches here, of which it could not very well be said that they did not cover enough of the lower part of the body, owing to their "shortness." At first sight it would seem, then, that Halliwell was right in contending that it is some sort of short jacket.

Chaucer calls this article of dress sloppe or haynselyn; for we may look upon the one word as synonymous with the other. And what is a sloppe? In the plural it means "large wide breeches" (Halliwell), and in one text we find sloppes or haynselyns; but this is merely because more than one of such garments are referred to. Now we have the authority of Palgrave for sloppe—"a night-gowne, robe de nuit" (see Halliwell, sub voc., for this and similar quotations), which is certainly never—"a short jacket." And we shall see further on that haynselyn may have a similar signification.

Taking a hint from the process by which the explanation suggested itself to my mind, I have as yet left one word of the context out of consideration—kuttet. It has struck me that kuttet, which of course refers to sloppes, may—nay must—apply equally to haynselyns. This changes the aspect of affairs, especially as we must take to cut in the sense of to cut short (horizontally), not in that of to slit open (vertically). This latter explanation would only hold if we could think of breeches, which, as we have seen, is not possible. If, then, a kuttet haynselyn is a short jacket, a haynselyn must be a long dress, and a wide one as it is synonymous with sloppe.

So far, then, the result of our investigation is hanselyn—a long loose dress. But which is the origin of the word? By the side of the forms in -line, lyne, &c., we have the form anslet. If we may take anslet to mean hanslet,† these

* The Encyclopædic Dictionary says that the article of apparel in question was worn during the fifteenth century, but gives no references. We may therefore expect other instances to turn up, which perhaps Mr. Wilson Graham, the editor of the Chaucer Concordance in preparation, will be able to supply.

† If anslet is not=hanslet it falls outside the present investigation. The form anslet is not in the Philological Society's Dictionary.

forms point to Hans as their stem. Could this be the (Dutch) proper name which in Hans-en-Kelder will be well known to many Englishmen? Although at first sight this may seem strange, we shall perhaps think more favourably of it if we compare a certain number of words denoting an article of dress in which the same principal element occurs.

We have Dutch hansop (a long loose night-dress for children). This used to be spelt hansop; but it has long been used to represent hans-sop, i.e., Hans-soup—the Harlequin of the mediæval comedy, and hence his characteristic long loose dress (for the name compare Jack Pudding, Hansworst, &c., and especially Jean Potage). Here we have the proper name Hans as part of the name of an article of wearing-apparel (Magazijn v. Nederl. Taalkunde, i. 107).

More convincing still, on account of the second form mentioned, is a passage in ten Doornkaat Koolman, Wörterbuch der Ostfriesischen Sprache:

"hans-up oder hansman: Jacke und Beinkleider in einem Stück als Nachtkleid für kleine Kinder gebraucht."

Kiliaen yields perhaps most of all: Hanneke: colobium muliebre, palla, where hanneke=a diminutive of han-, a well-known abbreviation of Johannes by the side of Hans. These forms would seem to lend colour to the supposition that in our English word we have another instance of derivation from this proper noun.

There is but one difficulty left—that of the suffixes. In either case (hanselyn as well as (hanslet) the suffix is not English; -line may represent German -lein, and the word (hanslet) is perhaps to be taken as hansel (German)+the Romance suffix -et, where hansel is a well-known German diminutive form of Hans. This hypothesis presupposes such forms as Hansel, Hünselein in German. I have not actually found them as referring to any kind of dress; but in connexion with what may be said to be established, viz., that such a wide dress was named after the fool of the comedy, it is interesting to note that the words Hans, Hünselein, Hünselein are found "as the name of a fool," and also as an "appellativ zur bezeichnung eines lotterbullen, eines umherziehenden lustigmachers" in support of which statement Grimm quotes a passage from Brant's Narrenschiff.

I do not pretend to have solved all the difficulties connected with the explanation of the word. My attempt at a derivation may point in the right direction. The argumentation as to the meaning will possibly be accepted as conclusive.

H. LOGEMAN.

THE NEVILLES IN DOMESDAY.

London: May 23, 1890.

It is a commonplace of genealogy that the name of Neville does not even occur in Domesday. Dugdale, discussing the alleged founder of the family in England, observes that there is "no mention of him nor any of that name in the General Survey." So, too, Mr. Chester Waters can trace the family no further back than that Lindsey Survey of which he claims (but, as I have shown, on untrustworthy evidence) to have established the date as 1114-1116. Criticising a work by Mr. Foster, he writes (ACADEMY, No. 611, p. 40):—

"He has still to learn the origin of the Nevills. His pedigree begins with Geoffrey de Nevill, the husband of Emma de Bulmer; whereas the founder of the family in England was Geoffrey's grandfather, Gilbert de Nevill, who succeeded, before 1114, to the five manors in Lincolnshire which Ranulf de St. Valeri held under the Bishop of Lincoln in Domesday."

From this it is evident that Mr. Waters himself "has still to learn the origin of the Nevills," for the pedigree can be carried back, a generation further, to Domesday, in which "Radulfus de Nevilla" eo nomine duly appears. Nor is he the only member of his family who occurs in the great record.

From this it is evident that Domesday Book is still but imperfectly known.

J. H. ROUND.

FRENCH JEWS AND THEIR REPUBLICAN PERSECUTORS.

Autun: May 23, 1890.

In my letter on "France and the Republic," printed in the ACADEMY of May 17, I said that the three religious bodies outside of the Roman Catholic community made no complaints against the government of the Republic. In confirmation of this, so far as the Jewish body is concerned, will you permit me to lay the following words before your readers? They were spoken at Avignon on May 22 by M. Mossé, the Grand Rabbi:

"Nous, Israélites français, qui devons notre complète émancipation à l'immortelle Révolution de 1789, nous bénissons le gouvernement libéral et tutélaire qui n'admet parmi les citoyens d'autres distinctions que celles du dévouement civique et du talent et qui protège contre toute atteinte la sanctuaire de la conscience."

Your readers will observe that these words were not addressed to M. Carnot personally, but to the Republican government represented by himself and by the ministers who accompanied him. The case is really as the Grand Rabbi represented it. The rôle of the government is to protect liberty of conscience in Jews, Protestants, and Freethinkers. It has also effectually protected Roman Catholics against the intolerance of the revolutionary party, except when unable to do so during a temporary suspension of order in Paris, under the Commune, when the hostages were massacred.

P. G. HAMERTON.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 1, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Co-operation versus Conflict between Men and Nations," by Mr. Hodgson Pratt.

MONDAY, June 2, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.

8 p.m. Aristotelian: Symposium, "Is the Distinction of Feeling, Cognition, and Conation valid as an Ultimate Distinction of the Mental Functions?" by Dr. Bain, Prof. Brough, Mr. R. E. Mitcheson, and Mr. G. F. Stout.

TUESDAY, June 3, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Natural History of Society," II., by Mr. Andrew Lang.

8.30 p.m. British Museum: "The Manners and Customs of the Babylonians," I., by Mr. G. Bertin.

8 p.m. Civil Engineers: Annual General Meeting; Report of Council; Election of Officers.

8 p.m. Biblical Archaeology.

8.30 p.m. Zoological: "A Collection of Acarines from Algeria," by Mr. A. D. Michail; "The Anatomy of Podia megaleuca," by Mr. Frank B. Bedford; "Some Mammals collected by Dr. Emin Pasha," by Mr. O. Thomas.

WEDNESDAY, June 4, 8 p.m. Gymnasticon: "The Settlement of Brittany," by Mr. W. Edwards.

8 p.m. Elizabethan: "The Plays of Philip Massinger," by Mr. James Ernest Baker.

THURSDAY, June 5, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Flame and Explosives," V., by Prof. Dewar.

4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "An Inscribed Hittite Seal, purchased by the Rev. Greville I. Chester, at Smyrna," by Prof. Sayce; "Some Museums in Gallia and Transylvania," by Mr. F. Haverfield; "Description of a Weight," by Mr. J. L. André; and "Brasses in the Parish Churches of Willesden, Great Greenford, and Acton," by Mr. H. S. Cowper.

8 p.m. Chemical: "The Preparation of Pure Crystalline Copper," by Mr. C. O. Duncan.

8 p.m. Linnean: "A Collection of Plants from Madagascar," by Mr. G. F. Scott Elliot; "Weismann's Theory of Heredity applied to Plants," by Prof. G. Henslow; "Teratological Evidence as to the Heredity of Acquired Conditions," by Prof. B. O. A. Windle.

FRIDAY, June 6, 8 p.m. Physical: "The Effect of Change of Temperature on the Villari Critical Point of Iron," by Mr. Herbert Tomlinson; "The Diurnal Variation of the Magnet at Kew," by Messrs. W. G. Robson and R. W. J. Smith.

8 p.m. Philological: "The Linguistic Value of the Irish Annals," by Mr. Whitley Stokes.

8 p.m. Geologists' Association: "The Pebbly and Sandy Beds overlying the Woolwich and Reading Series on and near the Addington Hills," by Mr. H. M. Kjaerssen; "The Auriferous Series of Nova Scotia," by Mr. G. F. Monckton; "An Instance of Recent Erosion near Stirling," by Horace W. Monckton.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Search for Coal in the South of England," by Prof. W. Boyd Dawkins.

SATURDAY, June 7, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Ballad Music of the West of England," with Musical Illustrations, II., by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

SCIENCE.

Etyma Latina. By E. R. Wharton. (Rivingtons.)

NEARLY eight years ago I had the pleasure of reviewing Mr. Wharton's Etyma Græca in the columns of this journal (ACADEMY, October 28, 1882). Now, after a long though not unreasonable interval, the promised companion volume comes up for criticism. The plan of the book is nearly the same as that of its predecessor—first, a preface and introduction (pp. v.-xxxiv.); then the pièce de résistance, the etymological lexicon, occupying some 120 pages; and, lastly, thirty pages of "Comparative Etymology." The new features in the book are the introduction, comprising a much-needed note on "hidden quantities"; a list of authorities; and the "Comparative Etymology," which is not (as in the supplement to Etyma Græca) confined to one language. On the other hand, the lists of loan and onomatopoeic words, and the numerical references from the lexicon to the Laubühre, are now omitted.

The lexicon proper contains all the words which occur in "the sixteen Latin authors of the first rank"—Plautus, Terence, Cicero, Caesar, Catullus, Lucretius, Sallust, Vergil, Horace, Livy, Tibullus, Propertius, Ovid, Persius, Tacitus, and Juvenal. Mr. Wharton has omitted words used in the fragments of these writers, and all derivatives and compounds which explain themselves. Students will thus find in the Etyma Latina etymologies (so far as they can be given) of all words which they meet with in their ordinary reading, so that the scope of the book is eminently practical. It may be interesting to add that there are 3055 words discussed, of which 380, in Mr. Wharton's judgment, have not yet been satisfactorily explained. Of the rest, 1130 are original words, having cognates in other Indogermanic (or, as Mr. Wharton prefers to call them, Celtindic) languages; while 930 are derivatives which require elucidation; and rather over 600 are borrowed from other languages—mostly, of course, from the Greek. The total number of words used by the sixteen authors above enumerated is over 26,000. If one compares these figures with the statistics given in the preface to Etyma Græca, one finds that Greek classical literature has a larger vocabulary, in the proportion of 8 to 5, but that the proportion of derivatives to original words is very nearly the same (about 26 to 1) in both Greek and Latin. Of course, these figures apply only to the extant literature of the first rank in the two languages. It would be interesting to see whether an analysis of the words used by the best English or French authors would yield a similar result.

In proceeding to criticise the book, the plan of which I have tried to sketch, the first thing which must strike everyone is this—that a Latin etymological dictionary is a far more difficult work to produce than a similar Greek dictionary. There has been, indeed, no lack of philological workers in the field. Vaniček, whom Mr. Wharton rather cruelly ignores in his preface, gives, in a useful if not very critical summary, the chief etymological results gained before 1877; while the phonetics of the Latin language are set forth, in their most approved shape, by the recent work of Stolz in Iwan Müller's valuable Handbuch, and are made accessible to English readers by Messrs. King and Cookson, whom, by the way, Mr. Wharton might have included in his list of authorities. Besides these codifications (if one may so call them), there has been no want of direct or incidental research bearing on details. The difficulties which confront a Latin etymologist arise from other causes. In the first place, we have very little early Latin. Of pre-Sullan literature there is not much, and hardly any of it is earlier than 200 B.C. It is as though one had to deal with English, and yet possessed only a few fragments earlier than the foreign influence represented in Spenser's poems. Early inscriptions, glossaries, and the Italian dialects help us a good deal; but the interpretation of the first (witness the unhappy Duenos bowl) is often obscure, the second are only just beginning—thanks to Löwe, Götz, and Nettleship—to show their importance, while of the dialects we do not know by any means too much. The result is that we cannot always feel sure about the earliest meaning of any Latin word, and lexicographical research may often, as Mr. Wharton has seen in the case of αὐθάρωμα and aestimo, compel us to give up a phonetically suitable etymology. Unfortunately, the lexicography of Latin is not very far advanced, at least in comparison with Greek. Prof. Wölfflin pathetically observes, in the first volume of his Archiv, that Robert Stephanus did not produce nearly such good work as his son Henry, and Latin has never made up the bad start. Only in the last few years have scholars like Prof. Wölfflin and Prof. Nettleship begun to put the whole enquiry on a new basis. But, even when all is done, much must remain obscure. Many important political and moral terms seem to defy all attempts to connect them with cognates in other languages. Some, it may be, we shall be able to explain from Etruscan—Mr. Wharton thinks idus is one of these—and some from Celtic. Rex certainly has its most real cognate in Celtic; indeed, one might say its only real cognate, if (as I would suggest) the Gothic reiks is a loan-word. And similarly, perhaps, further study of Celtic may explain other Latin words. But one cannot help fearing that many important Latin terms will continue obscure, and that there is a certain isolation in the vocabulary and usages of the Italian dialects.

With all these difficulties, it is not strange that, since 1877, no serious attempt has been made to write an etymological dictionary of Latin. Only one exception is to be found—in the tables added to Prof. Lewis's smaller dictionary, and these we may perhaps call an attempt rather than an achievement. And since 1877 a considerable change has come over philology. I cannot go so far with Mr. Wharton as to denounce everything before 1877 as pre-scientific. If I may take a parallel from botany, Bopp and Schleicher seem to me to stand very much in the position of Linnaeus. In both sciences the theories of the founders have been overthrown; in both the change in views took place gradually—indeed, in philology, it is hardly yet complete; in both, finally, the difference between beginning and end, Linnaeus and Darwin, Bopp and Brugmann, is apparently greater than perhaps it is historically. But, in any case, there is a great difference; and it is therefore an excellent thing that a specialist like Mr. Wharton, well acquainted with recent philological research, should summarise the not wholly fragmentary results obtained in the last thirteen years.

Nor should it be forgotten that Mr. Wharton has done a good deal of original work himself. Of the etymologies contained in this book, 360 are his own; and, though I frankly confess I cannot accept all of these, I think there are many which deserve the careful attention of Latin scholars—those suggested, for instance, in explanation of auriga, boletus, and several others, which introduce better methods of arriving at older derivations. Less original, but perhaps equally new to most readers, will be the use of the dialects, by which imbuo is explained as in-fuo*, “to implant,” and ascia as *ascia (English “axe”). Nor has any English etymologist, so far as I know, carried out so far the interchange of d with l and with r. Indeed, I am a little inclined to think Mr. Wharton makes too much use of these (in themselves perfectly legitimate) methods of explanation. But it is fair to add that Stolz and others agree in the main with Mr. Wharton on these points. Curiously enough, we do not hear much of analogy in the book. Aurichalcum (surely a doubtful instance), abundo, adeps, comburo, amita, anfraetus (again doubtful), caducous, are instances; but they are not, as a whole, very numerous.

In passing to detailed criticism, I would venture to suggest the need of more detailed exegesis. There is, indeed, more help held out to the ignorant in this book than in Etyma Græca. The introduction and the very lucid sketch of comparative etymology may well be of much use. But still the “new views” are, after all, not child’s play. A Linnean botanist would be somewhat bewildered if he were suddenly confronted with the newest ideas on botany, and informed, e.g., that species, genera, and orders are purely conventional divisions. Similarly, a student may be puzzled when he meets original forms like GHVRZ-D, or finds the i in dies marked long: he begins to think that vowels do not count and consonants do not matter. There is a further reason for not condensing an etymological lexicon. It seems to be often thought that etymologies have some mysterious value of their own. There is a particular class of school-book writers who are fond of telling the reader, quite gratuitously, that “canon, rule, is the Latin canon, from the Greek κανών,” that “charm is the Latin carmen,” that “cahot is the Latin coactare,” and “badaud the Low Latin badare or batare.” Now such statements may be interesting—when correct; but it is the interest of Mrs. Markham’s History, and very often there is no interest at all. In either case there is no educational benefit to be derived from them, and anything which in the least degree encourages them is a misfortune. Suppose some college tutor, on the strength of Etyma Latina, should revert to the old practice of asking, in scholarship papers, the derivations of tripudium or imperator, or provincia or religio!

I am tempted to wish also, though for other reasons, that Mr. Wharton had added to each etymology the name of the scholar who first suggested it, so far as could be easily ascertained. Most of the lines have room to allow this, without an extension into another line; and it would be very interesting to know how many etymologies proposed before 1876 have stood the test of Mr. Wharton’s scrutiny.

There are, of course, in a work of this scope, a few details where one man naturally differs from another. Mr. Wharton, for instance, seems to me often successful in giving the true meanings of words. Thus, he has, I think, dealt very well with aerumna, aestimo, instar, and recens, perhaps also with supplicium; but I am not so sure about his treatment of e.g., caerimonia, importunus, and carmen. The latter—to take it as an example—must originally have denoted a “formula” and not “a song,” so that Havet’s (and others’) attempt to connect it with cano is semasiologically improbable. Redivivus, again, can hardly have been connected with redivo; it is apparently a comparatively late formation, and Cicero’s lapides redivivi seems to give the true sense. Why not accept Lange’s account of the word—viz., that it is akin to redivia? For piger and piget the sense “slow” is possibly earlier than that of “irksome.” The separation of ador and adora does not strike one as necessary, at least in view of the accounts which the Romans themselves give of the word. I am loth, too, to give up templum for tem-lum* from *temno (compare réveuos); and Prof. Nettleship’s account of aura seems to me far more probable than the older view. The spellings aleo, amentum, auger, beto, lack real authority: beto, indeed, has been condemned by both Bücheler and Havet.

There are other etymologies which must be more a matter of opinion. It is impossible to prove that sinister is not from senex, meaning literally better (cp. εὐνυμος), or that corbida does not denote “a ship which carried a basket of stones for an anchor.” But I confess I find it easier to admire the ingenuity than to believe in the certainty of these two etymologies. Similarly, I doubt about inquam (why not insquam*, cp. ἐννεμε?) arcesso and accerso, proprius, amo, obliviscor. The cadeis of the Bantine table (Bruns 46-7) suggests, as Stolz observes, that cad- and cal- may be here distinct. For fas, Brugmann’s bha- (Grundr. ii. 398) might be quoted. Exemplum I would analyse into exem-lum. But, obviously, proof positive is not forthcoming in such cases.

I am inclined to think that I differ from Mr. Wharton in one further point—that is, the extent to which etymology must go in explaining words. At least, I can so only account for his omission of words like altare, amicus, ambages, auctor, indiges, pontifex, sequester, luculentus, obesus, imperium. This last word, for instance, is given up by Mommsen as hopeless; and I confess I have not the remotest idea what the second syllable may mean. Mr. Wharton may answer it comes from paro like vitupero (which he also omits). But if so, how? I do think that in such cases we have the right to expect help from our etymologist. As it is, different and conflicting explanations have been advanced by good judges for all the ten words just quoted.

In conclusion, I have to congratulate Mr. Wharton on passing through the press with a singular absence of misprints a work involving so much labour and such intricate detail.

F. HAVERFIELD.

JENSEN’S COSMOLOGY OF THE BABYLONIANS.

Die Kosmologie der Babylonier. Studien und Materialien. Von P. Jensen. (Strassburg: Karl J. Trübner.)

THERE are two principal subjects in Assyriology to be worked upon at present, viz., (1) the careful edition of a set of well-arranged cuneiform texts, hitherto unpublished; and (2) the thorough investigation of a special branch of Assyriological researches, whether it bear on history or mythology, on grammar or astronomy. As models of the former kind, we may mention Prof. Brünnow’s edition of a peculiar kind of Assyrian Hymns, in the Zeitschrift für Assyriologie, and Father Strassmaier’s Babylonian Texts, the seventh part of which, “The Inscriptions of Cyrus,” has just left the press.

A masterly representative of the second kind is the book of Dr. Jensen which lies before us. Almost every word which occurs in published cuneiform texts concerning the Babylonian cosmology is here collected, explained, and critically examined. The result of so much labour is a beautifully printed and attractive volume, in which out of the chaos of Babylonian-Assyrian literature the following fragments have been skilfully brought into prominence:—(1) The Universe as a whole; the sky, its poles, its paths; heavenly bodies, with special regard to the zodiacal signs and the planets; the earth, its quadrants and zones; the “Mountain of the Countries” and the “Mountain of Sunrise”; “the Island of the Blessed”; Hades; the “Room of Assembly”; the “Main Sea.” (2) The Creation, its Babylonian legends, their origin and development. (3) The Deluge.

Special importance may be attached to Jensen’s identification of various stars and zodiacal signs, the author having independently arrived at the same conclusions as have lately been reached by Prof. Epping, who based his investigations on astronomical facts only, from texts supplied to him by Father Strassmaier. Not less significant is the author’s commentary upon the text of the celebrated Creation and Deluge tablets: it widely differs from any other of the numerous attempts at an interpretation of these texts, and, we may add, annihilates all of them. It is, however, unfortunate that Jensen did not make use of the important contributions towards the right readings of the Deluge text in the Expositor (September, 1888, p. 236 f.), which were available a long time before the Leipzig Beiträge zur Assyriologie were finally presented to the world.

In conclusion, we highly recommend this remarkable book to any one who would wish to form an idea of our present knowledge of Babylonian cosmology. As a useful introduction to it, the beginner might consult H. Zimmern’s university lecture “Assyriology: a Help to the Study of the Old Testament and the Classics.”

C. B.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

A Manual of Palaeontology for the use of Students. By Henry Alleyne Nicholson and Richard Lydekker. Third Edition, re-written and greatly enlarged. In 2 vols. (Blackwood.) Prof. Nicholson's Palaeontology has been so long before the world, and is so favourably known, that it has come to be regarded by many of us as an old and valued friend. For nearly eighteen years it has held its ground as practically the only English work devoted solely to the study of fossils. The subject is so extensive in scope, so complex in detail, and makes in these days such rapid progress, that in the preparation of a new edition the author has wisely secured the services of a colleague. The labour has been pretty fairly shared between the two; for while the original author has retained the department of Invertebrate Zoology, that of the Vertebrata has fallen entirely to Mr. Lydekker. This duality of authorship, so far from being a drawback, is a distinct gain to the reader, inasmuch as it inspires him with additional confidence; he feels, in fact, that from beginning to end he is listening to men who speak on their respective subjects with much more confidence than any single writer would be likely to command. On comparing the new edition with the last, the most obvious feature is the great amount of additional matter which has been introduced. Notwithstanding the use of much smaller type, the present edition runs to nearly 600 pages more than its predecessor; while the number of illustrations is 1419 against 722 in the second edition. Where space is of supreme importance, convenience has often to be sacrificed, and it therefore seems rather a pity that in many cases the figures should be repeated: thus, to take only a few instances, we find the same illustration on p. 79 and p. 1522, on p. 894 and p. 1026, on p. 914 and p. 930, on p. 916 and p. 1971; and so on. It is satisfactory to note that some of the old figures, such as that of the Apteryx, have been replaced by others which leave nothing to be desired. The first volume, devoted to the Invertebrata, has needed less amendment than the second; yet even here there is not a chapter but shows the revising hand. In most cases the latest and freshest sources of information have been drawn upon. Not to go outside our own country, we find in the early chapters references to the recent work of Dr. Hinde on fossil sponges, of Dr. Carpenter on echinoderms, and of Dr. Nicholson himself on corals and hydrocorallines. It is pointed out that the Eophyton of the Cambrian fuoidal sandstone of Sweden is probably not a land-plant, but, as Nathorst showed some time ago, simply the trails left on a muddy sea-floor by the tentacles of jelly-fishes. In dealing with the mollusca due attention has been given to recent work, the ammonites, for example, being distinguished by their modern generic names. We are glad to note that in speaking of fossil molluscs, the expressive term Lamelibranchiata is not displaced by Pelecypoda. Turning to the second volume, we find ourselves in the presence of practically a new work. Mr. Lydekker has undertaken the serious task of re-writing the entire section on vertebrate fossils—a task for which he was peculiarly qualified by his palaeontological work in connexion with the Geological Survey of India, and especially by his familiarity with the collections in the Natural History Museum. His own researches have lain chiefly among fossil reptiles and mammals, and on these subjects his remarks have all the weight of high authority; while in the department of fossil fishes he has had the advantage of appealing to such specialists as Dr. Traquair and Mr. Smith Woodward. In dealing concisely with so wide a subject as vertebrate palaeontology, much discrimination is needed in the selection of materials. Mr. Lydekker has, for the most part, been extremely judicious in presenting to the student what is essential, as distinguished from what is only of secondary importance. In some cases, however, he passes over subjects which we are inclined to regard as highly important. We find, for instance, no mention of Mr. Newton's valuable work on the skull of Scaphognathus. While the comprehensive work of Prof. Nicholson and Mr. Lydekker furnishes, on the whole, an admirable manual for any one wishing to study palaeontology in earnest, it is much too heavy a work for that large and increasing number of students who, while working at geology and biology, find it necessary to acquire a general acquaintance with fossil types of life. There is consequently still room for a smaller work. What is wanted is a concise text-book of palaeontology, not more than one-sixth the size and price of these handsome volumes.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ANTONIUS AND SALLUSTIUS OF HORACE.

Aberdeen, May 26, 1890.

I see to-day that, in the ACADEMY of May 24 (p. 357), Prof. A. S. Wilkins speaks of the form "Tullus Antonius [an obvious misprint for Iullus] weakly supported in Horace, while all other evidence seems to point to Julius." I have a recollection that the form IVLLO ANTONIO occurs in a recently-found inscription on the Requinine, which mentions him as consul with Africanus Fabius; but in Aberdeen I cannot verify the fact or give the reference. The inscription justifies O.I.L., VI., 12010, where a Iullus Antonius is mentioned. I had fancied it was now an accepted fact that Iullus was the praenomen of the son of the Triumvir, and Antonius his nomen; and that Prof. Wilkins would not maintain in 1890 that Julius was his nomen and Antonius his cognomen, even though Kiesling in 1884 agrees with him.

Prof. Wilkins also speaks of the "aes Sallustianum" (which Pliny mentions) as being in Spain. Pliny places it among the Centrones on the skirts of the Alps. Probably few will share Prof. Wilkins's scepticism as to this phrase being a sufficient proof that the Sallust whom Horace addressed owned mines.

W. M. RAMSAY.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the next meeting of the Zoological Society for scientific business, to be held on Tuesday, June 3, Mr. O. Thomas will read a paper on "Some Mammals Collected by Dr. Emin Pasha." We may also mention that, at the meeting of the Linnean Society on Thursday next, June 5, Dr. Weismann's theory of heredity will come up for discussion under two aspects: Prof. G. Henslow will consider it in its application to plants, while Prof. B. C. A. Windle will examine the teratological evidence for the transmission of acquired conditions.

By far the most interesting paper in the current number of the Mineralogical Magazine is one by Mr. Fletcher, of the British Museum, on "The Meteoric Iron of Tucson." After a critical and apparently exhaustive examination of the literature relating to this iron, he is able to clear up several points previously obscure and to correct some of the errors of former writers. The original locality seems to be between Tucson and Tubac, and it is probable that meteorites are still to be found there. From Tucson, a town in Arizona formerly within Mexican territory, two large masses were removed many years ago—one being now in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, while the other is preserved in San Francisco. They are composed of nickel-iron, associated with olivine, schreibersite, and chromite.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

PROFS. NÖLDEKE of Strasburg, Fausbøll of Copenhagen, and De Gubernatis of Florence, have been elected to the three vacancies on the list of honorary members of the Royal Asiatic Society occasioned by the deaths of Signor Amari, the Marquis Tseng, and Prof. Wright of Cambridge.

At the next meeting of the Philological Society, to be held at University College, Gower-street, on Friday, June 6, at 8 p.m., Mr. Whitley Stokes will read a paper on "The Linguistic Value of the Irish Annals," in which he will point out the light they throw on Low-Latin, Welsh, Polish, Anglo-Saxon, and Old-Norse.

MR. ROBERT BROWN, JUN., is about to contribute to the Babylonian and Oriental Record a series of articles on the Yenissei Inscriptions, for which a special fount of types is being prepared under the supervision of the editor.

THE Académie des Inscriptions has allotted 15,000 frs. (£600), from the Garnier Fund, to M. Dutreuil du Rhin, who is charged with a mission of exploration in Central Asia.

Grundlagen des neuhochdeutschen Lautsystems: Beiträge zur Geschichte der deutschen Schriftsprache im 15 und 16 Jahrhundert, von Karl von Bahder. (Strassburg: Karl Trübner.) This work is a valuable contribution to the difficult and important question of the origin of the present literary High German. It is well known that literary German, as first put into a definite shape in Luther's translation of the Bible, is mainly a Middle German dialect, the older Middle High German literature being based on the Upper German (South German) dialects. Dr. Bahder has given special attention to the local "printing-dialects" of South Germany in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and their influence on the common literary dialect. He finds his criteria of dialectal influence almost exclusively in phonetic changes, which he carefully distinguishes from merely orthographic peculiarities.

Correction.—Mr. Pinches's letter, entitled "A Late Babylonian Tablet of Aspasine," in the ACADEMY for May 17, p. 340, col. 3, line 23, for "A. D.," read "B. C."

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

MANCHESTER BRANCH OF THE ENGLISH GOETHE SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, April 16)

PRINCIPAL A. W. WARD, president, in the chair.—Miss Liebert read a paper on the letters of Goethe's mother to himself, his wife, and his son, lately published by the Weimar Goethe Society. By a number of happily-chosen extracts from these chatty and often strikingly original letters of Frau Aja, Miss Liebert brought before the meeting a vivid picture of the cheery old lady as she lived through those years of worry and excitement at the end of the last and beginning of this century, possessed of the wonderful secret of how to live a life of happy contentment herself, and managing to reflect some of her brightness on the lucky folk who came in contact with her. Miss Liebert pointed out what a pleasant light is thrown by these letters on Christiane. Clearly this ideal mother-in-law not only welcomed her son's wife for his sake, but learnt to value her highly for her own good qualities; and some of the merit for the very cordial relations existing between them must be put down to Christiane's credit. Frau Aja's letters show her to us, further, as a clear-headed, practical woman, taking life as far as possible from the bright side and not letting herself be much disturbed by political events, but yet not wanting in patriotism, as is shown by her joy when the French evacuated Frankfurt, her grief at the downfall of the Empire, and (rather comically) her exceeding aversion to the Latin type in German books. For her son's literary work she had the fullest appreciation: each new book is welcomed by her and kept as a special treat for high-days and holidays; and she delights in reporting her neighbours' praises, telling her son, e.g., how a certain clergyman was so delighted with Hermann und Dorothea that he quoted it now constantly at marriages and on all possible occasions. In Hermann und Dorothea, Miss Liebert pointed out, we have a monument to Frau Aja herself; some of the lesser traits, especially of Hermann's mother, are drawn from her. The keen, housewifely eye, the exceeding care in packing, the delight in giving, combined with the habit of carefully hoarding things that might be turned to eventual use, are all traits which Goethe had taken from his own mother, no less than the kindly good sense which made her deal so wisely with her son when in trouble.—The president said that even if Frau Rath had not been interesting as the mother of her son, her letters would be worth studying for the originality and freshness of the character they reveal. He thought Miss Liebert, in giving such a bright picture of Frau Aja, had perhaps passed too lightly over the defects natural to her character—defects which her son inherited. The constant brightness of temper and absence of sentimentality came in part from a determined avoidance of trouble for herself and a certain want of feeling for the trials of others; she was one of those people who, perhaps happily for themselves, persistently ignore the disagreeable and sad side of life. There was in her, too, a certain lack of refinement, due largely to the narrow circle in which she moved all her life; and her patriotism, if existent, was of a very narrow order. As regards Christiane, these letters certainly do show her in a pleasant light, and no doubt there were many points of sympathy between her and Frau Rath which commended her to the latter. But her letters published in the Jahrbuch of 1889 are not, said the president, good reading, and it is clear from these that Goethe did, as was inevitable, stand very much alone in his family—Christiane, her son, and her brother forming a trio apart.—The Rev. F. F. Cornish drew attention to some more instances of Frau Aja's power of shutting her eyes to anything unpleasant, and pointed out how gradually she had taken Christiane to her heart, her first letter to her being cool and guarded in tone.—Mr. Schelling spoke of her great interest in literature, even apart from her son's work, as shown by her intense admiration for Schiller, and thought that passages might be found to prove that her patriotism was not after all so narrow.—The hon. sec. then read a short note from Mr. H. S. Wilkinson, drawing attention to a parallelism between the contract scene in "Faust" and a passage in Rousseau's Réveries du Promeneur Solitaire (written in 1777–1778, published in 1782); and also a note based on material supplied by Mr. P. Susmann on the question of how far Goethe's portrait which appeared in Fraser's Magazine (March, 1832) was from the hand of Thackeray.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, May 1.)

Dr. SANDYS, president, in the chair.—Dr. Postgate suggested that in Hor. Od. II. 18, 34, "regumque pueris" the word pueris should be scanned as a spondee, there being no other instance of a resolved syllable in this metre in Horace and pueris being so scanned in Lucr. IV. 1026. (This suggestion has already been made by L. Müller.) In Hor. Serm. II., 3, 208, "species alius ueri scelerisque tumultu," he proposed to read with Dr. Gow alius ueris; and for scelerisque, for which Dr. Gow proposed corbrique, to read iscrique, the MSS. having iscrique or iscrique. In Hor. Ep. II., 2, 87, "frater erat Romae consulti rhetor ut alter | alterius sermone meros audiret honores" he suggested the transposition of frater and rhetor and that consulti ita should be read for consulti, comparing for the meaning to be given to frater Ep. i. 10 4, 5 "sed cetera paene gemelli | fraternis animis, quicquid negat alter et alter, | adnuit pariter." On Prop. I. 19-25 he criticised Mr.

Housman's proposals published in the Journal of Philology, defending the MS. readings.—Mr. Housman briefly replied.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, May 15.)

OSCAR BROWNING, Esq., in the chair. The following were elected fellows: N. Ball, G. B. Barton, F. A. Campbell, J. L. Currie, Prof. J. S. Elkington, J. N. Figgis, S. R. Gardiner, Sir Gerald Graham, Sir George Grey, H. Holloway, the Rev. W. H. Hutton, the Bishop of Lichfield, W. Marshall, C. W. O. Oman, the Rev. W. Potter, and E. Tregear. Mr. J. S. Stuart Glennie read a paper on "The Desirability of treating History as a Science of Origins." After criticising the literary view of history as presented by Carlyle and Mr. Froude, and defended by Mr. Birrell, Mr. Stuart Glennie urged a scientific treatment of history on three grounds. First, because a truthful description—truthful not merely in details, but in the standpoint from which details are described—is only possible as a result of a scientific study of origins; secondly, because we have at length got such an accumulation of new facts, and, in the theory of evolution, such a fund of new ideas, as make it possible to treat great questions of historical origins with some assurance of the possibility of scientific solution; and, thirdly, because of the important practical consequences which would follow that better understanding of the modern revolution which is possible only through a solution of the larger historical problems.—A discussion followed, in which Prof. Rhys Davids, Dr. Heinemann, R. Lloyd, A. Nutt, J. F. Palmer, and the chairman took part.

FINE ART.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

MR. SWAN's lioness and cube, called "Maternity" (68), does much to redeem the present exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery. It is the only picture of which the style is really grand; and it combines with its grandeur that fresh personal observation of nature, and that masterly use of the brush, which are the ideals of the best modern painting. There are also other things in it which are more rare: that pictorial grasp of the whole composition, for instance, without which the finest painting is comparatively wasted, and that "something else" too personal to be defined. Nor is it likely to fail in its appeal to the general public, for the life of it is sufficient to attract those who are unable to appreciate its more technical qualities. The proud happy look of the mother, distinctly feline as it is, the energy with which her children are seeking their natural refreshment (mark the curl in the tail), are sufficient to make it popular with those who may be unconscious of any special merit in the conception and execution of the picture. In colour, it is sombre but appropriate—the lions against what Dr. Garnett calls the "lion coloured sands," and all against a violet distance, make a simple and impressive harmony. The quality of the colour is a little dull and clayey perhaps, and the execution here and there, as in the hind paw of the raised leg, seems to have been arrested too soon; but these perhaps are questions of taste, on which opinions may differ without greatly affecting admiration of the work as a whole.

Much as there has been to admire at times in the work of Mr. Tom Graham, he has seldom or never done such full justice to the best that is in him as in his picture of "The Last Boat" (92). The little jetty with its water-worn stones still glistening with the last wash, and about to be deluged again by the stormy waves still banging against it; the sky, whose tattered clouds, though quiet now, tell of the fury with which the wind has been raging before sunset; the little fishing boat staggering in the still boiling waters; the man carefully trimming the pier lamp or beacon; the solitary woman watching—they all tell their tale perfectly and in true pictorial language. It cannot be said to be a "good Grosvenor;" but it contains at least two pictures to be remembered—Mr. Swan's "Maternity," and Mr. Tom Graham's "The Last Boat."

The Academicians appear to have deserted the Grosvenor; if we except Mr. Orchardson's fine portrait of himself, they send nothing of note, though the names of Sir John Mallais and others may be found in the catalogue. And from the aspect of the walls it would seem that the demand of three spring exhibitions upon the artists of England has somewhat overtaxed their powers of supply. The Grosvenor is not, however, quite denuded of speciality or of novelty. There is Mr. W. Stott, of Oldham, whose "Diana: Twilight and Dawn" (190) is at least characteristic, if not very successful, and whose "Soft Winds" (11) is assuredly both. No one can model clouds with greater tenderness or render more simply and delicately the soft gradations of pale blue water and grey sand. In Mr. Arthur Melville's "Audrey and her Goats" (109), and Mr. Guthrie's "The Orchard" (195), we have two pictures apparently of the same school; and, moreover, both artists seem to have been moved by the same desire to emphasise the contrast between very green grass and very red hair. Mr. Melville is the more daring of the two, for he carries the red hair up into the trees, and sets them on fire, one might almost say. As a suggestion in colour it is no doubt striking, though not more so than "The Javonaise Dancers" (341), a wild sketch by Mr. Melville; but surely the place for such suggestions is the studio and not the picture gallery. Mr. Guthrie's picture was in the Salon a year or two ago, and the heads of the children are admirable. If the handling of the orchard is too summary, and the work on too large a scale for its subject, it at least shows earnestness, sincerity, and a fine feeling for colour. So also does Mr. W. R. Symond's "Queen of the May" (24); but here we have besides a rare sweetness and delicacy which we hope no one will mistake for weakness. The "Queen of the May" is no pretty simoleon, but as fresh and sweet and gay as the buttercups with which she is garlanded. There is not too much of such light gaiety in modern colour. It is more congenial perhaps to pastel, but it is welcome, while clever artists like Mr. Muhrman prefer to be murky, and to comparatively cheerful painters like Mr. Peppercorn sage-green would appear to have a sacred charm. Tone, no doubt, is an important quality, but the world is rather dull where slates and pinks prevail even in costume, and the sea has ceased to be anything but the coldest gray. A very clever picture here by Mr. F. Brangwyn, of a slanting wet deck and seething waves, "Sail Ho" (219), has scarcely a touch of anything that can be called colour in ship or sky or sea. On the other side, doubtless, are some artists who tend to the opposite extreme, like Mr. John Reid and Mr. Anderson Hague. By the former there are several fine, strong sketches, like "A Trial Trip" (58), "A Coastguard's Garden" (64), and "A Busy Quay" (126), which contain suggestions of splendid colour; and by the latter a sunny picture called "Waiting for a Bite" (101), which not unworthily occupies a position of honour in the East Gallery.

There is bold, rich colour, also, and more imagination in a sketchy landscape by Mr. E. A. Walton (40); and Mr. T. Austen Brown has several small pictures which repay attention, the best though not the largest of which is "Gossips" (112). But perhaps on the whole the most promising picture here by an artist who is comparatively unknown is Mr. James Paterson's "The Moon is up" (158)—a landscape full of the mystery of twilight, and not less beautiful than original in its subdued harmonies of colour.

Its modesty and perfect keeping are shown in somewhat violent contrast against Mr. Hubert Vos's portrait of Prof. E. A. Freeman, in his hot red robes (157); but this clever artist is seen to much greater advantage in a large picture on the top of the stairs, "A Room in a Brussels' Alms House" (248), a subject treated with much dignity, and displaying to advantage the artist's skill in draughtsmanship and light and shade.

Though there are few pictures of any great note, there are, of course, many which are charming in their way. Mr. J. J. Shannon has two portraits, characterised by his usual grace and vivacity; M. Fantin Latour and Mme. Victoria Dubourg excel as usual in the painting of flowers; in landscape Mr. Anmonier delights us with his golden colour in "A Breezy Day," and Mr. C. E. Johnson with a silvery picture of "Autumn Sere," remarkable for the beautiful drawing of a pine tree. But it is not here that much need be said of artists whose more important work has been sent to other galleries; of Mr. Pettie, for instance, or Mr. Dicksee, or Mr. David Murray, or even of Mr. Clausen, whose "Girl at the Gate" (51) is one of the best painted, if not one of the most interesting, pictures in the Gallery. There is more excuse for calling attention to Sir Arthur Clay's colossal "Court of Criminal Appeal" (150), with its six life-size portraits of the judges; and Mr. Glazebrook's equally if not more colossal composition containing portraits of the Misses Sladen (381), though perhaps the size of these works is somewhat out of proportion to their value. Sir Arthur Clay has, however, succeeded in his portraits, and Mr. Glazebrook's picture has a large decorative effect. Among other portrait painters more or less specially associated with the Grosvenor are Mr. Llewellyn and Mr. Stuart Wortley. The former sends a charmingly simple portrait of "Netta" (8), which should add to his reputation; and Mr. Stuart Wortley, if he contributes nothing of unusual mark, succeeds, as he nearly always does, in conveying lively and pleasant impressions of the personality of his sitters.

Among the pictures which have at least the merit of originality is Mr. Arthur Hacker's "Flight from Bethlehem" (44), showing us the whitewalled village lit by moonlight and the Holy Family stealing away. The halos of the Virgin and Child contrast strangely with the realism of the scene. Another is Mr. Lavery's "Mary Queen of Scots in the Woods of Rosemuth on the Morning after the Battle of Langside" (41), which has little to attract except its strangeness. More easy to admire are Mr. Estall's bright landscape "Down by the Brook" (9), Mr. Olsson's "Grey October Morning," Miss Catherine Wood's "Wall-flowers" (138), Mr. Wellwood Rattray's "Passing Shower" (167), Mr. Beadle's "In Watering Order" (196), a very clever picture of "the Blues" falling in for exercise with led horses, Mr. Hudson's natural and pretty little girls in white, the daughters of the Rev. H. Tulford (278), and Mr. A. Tomson's "The Lark's Song" (20).

The sculpture, as usual, is not important; but there are some nice things, including Mr. Harry Bates' bronze panel of "Hector" (1), Mr. Onalow Ford's "Study of a Head in Bronze" (13), and statuette of a camel (12), Mr. Dressler's bust of Father Mackonochie (9), Mr. Roscoe Mullins's statuette of "The Muse's Younger Brother" (28), and Miss Mary Swainson's vivacious head of Miss Dolly Murray Prior.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PERROT AND CHAPIEZ ON THE ART OF JUDAEA.

Tell Hesi, Gaza, Syria: May 2, 1890.

The work of these active authors, entitled Art in Sardinia, Syria, Judaea, and Asia Minor, is so strange in its omissions and commissions that the ordinary reader needs some warning.

The extreme rarity of any pieces of Judæan art is well known, and we might therefore expect to find in a compass of 262 pages and 148 engravings at least a complete account of the materials. On the contrary, the most characteristic and remarkable examples that we know of are entirely ignored. The fine façade and sculpture of the so-called "Tombs of the Kings," the pediment of the so-called "Tombs of the Judges," the doorway of the same, and the highly characteristic cists for bones, found about Jerusalem—all these, though of Greco-Roman age, yet are all we have to judge by, being quite unlike the work of any other country, and ought to find place in a volume which illustrates buildings as late as Justinian. The only piece of early architecture yet known—Ramat el Khallil—is not even mentioned. The column lying in the quarry at the Russian church at Jerusalem, probably Solomonian, is also ignored. And looking to Syria, as well as Judaea, we fail to find any illustration of the Meshastela, of the sculptures of the Hauran, or of Palmyra. Yet these all belong to the history of Syrian art very essentially. There is, if I remember right, a slab figured in Smith's Dictionary, as being probably part of Solomon's sculpture, but no notice is taken of it. And in place of any intelligent or connected use of the coinage to illustrate decoration or motives, there are a few cuts scattered at random without any explanatory text.

What then does occupy all the space? may be asked. Largely the illustration of the ideas of M. Chipiez, as to the ideal Temple of Ezekiel. Two engraved plates and two large woodcuts are also occupied with a very hypothetical restoration of the brazen columns, Jachin and Boaz, of which one can only say that the shafts are very French, and the capitals suggest a triumph of a Parisian modiste in head-gear; certainly, as is claimed, they are "imbued with a stamp of originality and richness of aspect not met with among our predecessors," that is to say, among previous ideal restorations. We may note, however, an excellent little example of the "net-work" pattern in the Punic stela, fig. 168, which M. Chipiez has taken no notice of in his restoration.

The gradual change of opinion as to the age of the Haram Wall is curiously suggested by the Solomonian ascriptions on pp. 156, 177, the doubt on p. 179, and the Herodian ascription on pp. 186, 187, which last seems to me the truth, after examining the stones.

Some amusing drafts on the imagination occur: as in the deliberate statement about the use of the worn-out wheels of the water-tanks on p. 260; and the description of the scenery of the Gaza neighbourhood in the summer, while here already in April there is not a single run of fresh water in the whole country about Gaza, and only a little dribble of brackish stream in one place, soon swallowed in the stony soil. I would give a great deal to see "clear brooks running through grassy plots, or breaking in falls over immense boulders," in this dry and thirsty land.

On purely archaeological grounds there is some very questionable matter. The black conical vessels, fig. 250, are certainly of Arabic age, being found mainly in the mounds of Old Cairo. (That, however, is acknowledged in the "corrections.") The glass bottle, "made too by an Israelite for an Israelite," is just the same as one of Roman age found in the Roman cemetery at Hawara. For Judæan glass, Baron D'Ustinoff's collection, and that of the Russian patriarch at Jerusalem, should have been consulted. But a more serious matter is the reproduction and patronising of the fictitious restorations of Jewish tombs by Cassas. The well-known "Grotto of St. James" is shown from an incorrect drawing of his, though a good photograph can be had for a trifle; and his wholly impossible and fictitious enlargement of it, in the guise of a restoration, is approvingly republished as material that helps in the restoration of the temple. An equally misleading restoration of his from another tomb is also given.

The illustrations in general are not what should be relied on in a modern work. The drawings of the "Dome of the Rock" and "Absalom's Tomb" are out of perspective; poor sketches are given of monuments of which excellent photographs can be had; and it is too late to reproduce Champollion's and Lepsius's drawings of Hittites and Sardinians, when anyone can get photographs of the original sculptures for a few pence, and they have appeared in popular magazines.

The business of the translation is far from happy. Some sentences are quite unintelligible: such as in the note, p. 153; "Numbers were placed against the stratum," &c., p. 161; "This great canal," &c., p. 181; and "the Sakhra has replaced the cistern of Araunah's threshing floor," p. 189. Also many misprints occur; coin, for corn, p. 6; cassiteris, for cassiterite, p. 91 (where we learn that zinc and copper form bronze!); trapeze, p. 156; vertical plan, for section, p. 156; meridional, for south, p. 172; mutule, for module, p. 201; agrimen-son, p. 206; tone, for torus, p. 257; coned, for pent, p. 277; Barnaim, p. 280; covered, for covert, p. 291, &c.; while on the plates we read of "Ezechiah" for Ezekiel, and "talren" for taken.

It is sad that a volume so well got up, and so little likely to be soon superseded, should not have been based on more complete material, and have really supplied the undoubted need of a complete and useful hand-book for the reference of the student and the information of the public.

W. M. FLINDERS PETRIE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE project, started by the Society of Antiquaries, for the systematic excavation of the entire site of Silchester has been cordially taken up. Subscriptions to the amount of £200 have already been received, in addition to Dr. Freshfield's offer to provide the cost of laying bare one insula or square.

THE exhibitions to open next week include a series of water-colour drawings by Mme. Madeleine Lemaire, entitled "Flirt," at the Goupil Gallery in New Bond Street; and three pictures by Mr. Heywood Hardy, descriptive of incidents in "A Day with the Hounds," at the St. James's Gallery in King Street.

MRS. TIRARD will give a course of six lectures to ladies on "The Tombs and Temples of Ancient Egypt" at the British Museum, beginning on Monday, June 9, at 2.30 p.m. Each lecture will be illustrated by diagrams, and afterwards by a visit to the Egyptian Galleries in order to examine the monuments of the respective periods.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS have now issued their fifth Illustrated Catalogue for the season, being an English edition (with the usual murdering of the English language) of the Catalogue Illustré of the Exposition Nationale des Beaux-Arts, which was opened by the seceders from the Paris Salon on May 15 at the Champ-de-Mars.

MANY readers of the ACADEMY will be interested to know that the widow of Arsène Darmesteter (née Miss Hartog) has two works in this year's Salon—a portrait of Mme. Louis Havet, wife of the professor at the Collège de France; and a child's head, in pastel. The government also recently purchased from her a picture called "Nina," for 1200 frs.

AN interesting little memoir of a somewhat important Norwich artist—E. T. Daniell—has been issued privately in the most attractive of forms. It is the work of Mr. F. R. Beechens, of Thorpe near Norwich, who shows throughout it how keen has been his interest in saving from oblivion, while there was yet time, all sorts of details which had a right to become historical. We are grateful to Mr. Beechens—and Norwich people should be especially grateful to him—for this service. E. T. Daniell—whom even so great a man as Turner saw cause to admire—is not an artist who should be altogether neglected. He was clerk in holy orders as well as landscape painter, and as a priest, moreover, he was not without "cure of souls." He ministered for years in London, in a church in the heart of the West End, and saw there a good deal of the good society of his time. But he died prematurely; he was hardly in middle age when his career was closed. As a man, he appears to have been charming and estimable. As an artist, his work in colour commended itself, as we have hinted above, to one at least of the most illustrious of his contemporaries. An occasional associate of Turner, it is possible, but not absolutely proved, that he was a pupil of Cotman. E. T. Daniell's etchings and dry-points, even when not at first sight particularly attractive, will be found to have sterling merit. One of them, we may mention, is given in Mr. Beechens's agreeable publication (if a book that is issued privately can fittingly be called a publication). It and its fellows make plain to the student the very interesting circumstance that E. T. Daniell was on the right track in the matter of etching, some years before that art was generally revived with freedom and vigour. His work is never, we believe, petty, and never timid; and, for purposes of study, it is essential to remember that it was wrought fully fifty years ago. The tasteful monograph of Mr. Beechens should do good service in keeping alive the memory of the work of a not unimportant person.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THOUGH Monday next is appointed for the opening of the season of French plays at Her Majesty's Theatre, it will be a fortnight before the still substantial attraction of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's appearance is offered to the public. This great artist is then to appear in a rôle of which it was reported that she was somewhat tired in Paris—that of Jeanne D'Arc. Meanwhile the boards will be occupied by two newish pieces of some little mark—"La Lutte pour la Vie" and "Paris fin de Siècle."

WE hope next week to be able to discuss the new play "Judah," by Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, which Messrs. Willard and Lart have just produced with marked success at the Shaftesbury.

It is doubtful whether Mr. Irving has ever been in finer form than he was last week, when—refreshed probably by a change of programme—he gave a few performances of "Louis the Eleventh," with extraordinary power. That the creation was always, from its very beginning, monstrously clever, there cannot be any manner of doubt; yet there were points about it at the first to which, as we remember, we felt bound to take exception. Later on—on the piece's first revival, we think—the performance was felt by us to be more wholly satisfactory; and now it is not only satisfactory, but, we venture to say, of almost unexampled subtlety and force. Allowing, which we admit we have always been a little unwilling to allow, that there was not in the character of the monarch whom Quentin Durward served one touch of human virtue or charm—allowing that Louis was bad and hateful with an unbroken continuity such as has hardly hitherto been perceived or experienced—then the performance of Mr. Irving (who makes Louis more like a woman than a man, and more like a tigress or a cat than a woman) then, we say, the performance of Mr. Irving is of consummate truth as well as of consummate art. Within the limited range to which Mr. Irving by his view of the character deliberately restricts himself, the effects of the actor are as varied as it is possible for them to be. They are powerful and convincing in the extreme. They are elaborated with the utmost ingenuity—having been conceived, moreover, with no little imagination. Never has Mr. Irving's extreme cleverness in "make-up" served him in better stead. Never has his rich variety of gesture been more significant. Never has his voice been more biting and more telling. In these recent performances Mr. Harvey had some charm of youth as the Dauphin; Miss Coleridge some grace and ingenuousness as the young woman Marie. Then, again, there was enjoyed the ripe and singularly direct performance of Mr. Howe as Philip de Comines—a performance as honest and sturdy as '34 Port, so to say. Mr. Macklin and Mr. Haviland were not ill engaged; and Mr. Terriess—to name last a popular and engaging actor and an accepted bel homme—was seen to real advantage in the part of the Duc de Nemours. This week they are playing "Olivia," in which, of course, Miss Ellen Terry is most prominent and admirable; and in which Miss Annie Irish—a most sunny and sympathetic young actress—appears for, we believe, the first time at the Lyceum. And to-night, Saturday, the season ends, with Miss Terry's benefit.

MUSIC.

OPERA AT COVENT GARDEN.

BIZET's "Pescatori di Perle" was played on Thursday week. There seems very little chance of this work ever attaining popularity. It contains some good and pleasing music, but it lacks the charm and character of the composer's masterpiece. As a youthful production, it may interest musicians and encourage composers. Bizet, like Verdi, Gounod, and many others, did not become famous at a bound; they had to wait patiently for the day of success. Miss Ella Russell played her old part of Leila, and her clear and graceful singing was duly acknowledged. Sig. Valero was a good Nadir. M. Dufriche made his début as the chieftain Zurga. He has an excellent baritone voice, and he is an actor of marked intelligence. Signor Mancinelli conducted for the first time.

The performance of "Lohengrin" on the following evening attracted a large audience. One cannot wish for a better king than M. Edouard de Reske. His manner is dignified and his singing perfect. Again, M. Jean de Reske is the most satisfactory Knight of the Grail that has ever appeared in this country. Sig. d'Andrade as Telramund, and Sig. Abramoff as the Herald, satisfied all expectations. Miss Macintyre appeared for the first time as Elsa. Her pleasing and sympathetic voice and simplicity of manner won for her much favour, and probably with experience she will be able to display more feeling and dramatic fervour. Vocally, indeed, the part suits her thoroughly. Mme. Fursch-Madi was most impressive as Ortrude. The chorus sang remarkably well. Sig. Mancinelli conducted with much intelligence.

"Trovatore" was the opera selected for Saturday night. This work has seen prosperous days, but it would seem to be no longer an attraction. This is not surprising; for not only is it worn, but other works have since arisen to draw off the attention of the public. Mme. Tetrassini was the Leonora. She possesses a light voice, and therefore the rôle did not suit her; but she is an actress of considerable merit and experience. The tenor, Sig. Rawner, who is said to have made a sensation in Italy, was a new comer. His voice is hard and he shouts; and he will find it more difficult to succeed in this country.

Meyerbeer's "Les Huguenots" was given on Tuesday evening. This is an opera which requires a specially strong cast. From what we saw of Mme. Tetrassini in "Trovatore," we did not imagine that the part of Valentine would suit her; and so it proved. But she is an actress of great ability, and in the duet of the fourth act some passages were sung with dramatic power. M. Ybos, who played Raoul is better as an actor than as a singer. M. Dufriche gave an excellent impersonation of the Conte di Sans Bris, and Sig. d'Andrade was effective as Conte di Nevers. Mlle. Ella Russell took her old part of Margherita, and Mme. Scalchi that of Urbano. M. Edouard de Reske's Marcello is above praise. Signor Bevignani conducted. The chorus was good, and likewise the mise en scène.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE fifth Philharmonic Concert took place last Thursday week. The novelty was a new work by Mr. Frederic Oliffe, an "orchestral picture" entitled "Cloud and Sunshine." Of the composer much was expected, for in his Symphony he had shown real power. We cannot say that we were greatly impressed with the thematic material of his new venture. The principal theme of the Allegro seemed to us lacking in originality and somewhat formal in character. But the workmanship is excellent; it shows a firm and intelligent mind. The orchestration, too, is most effective throughout. The performance, under Mr. Cowen's direction, was exceedingly good, and at the close the composer was called to the platform. Mme. Sophie Menter gave a magnificent reading of Weber's "Concertstück," and afterwards played a Rhapsody of Liszt's with marvellous ease and brilliancy. She made many additions to the written text; but these probably emanated from the composer. Mme. Nordica sang Beethoven's "Ah perfido" with great success. The programme included Beethoven's Symphony in D.

M. PIERRE-RENÉ HIRSCH gave a pianoforte recital at Princes' Hall on Wednesday afternoon. He commenced with the Liszt transcription of Bach's Organ Prelude and Fugue in G minor. In this, and likewise in Liszt's Rhapsody No. 12, he displayed splendid technique. In Chopin's music his readings were forced or fidgety, and his alterations of the text were not improvements; but it would be difficult to speak in too high terms of the actual playing, and of the "octave" passage in the A flat Polonaise. The programme comprised several light modern pieces, and concluded with Liszt's Thirteenth Rhapsody and the Mélodie hongroise.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 896.—JUNE, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

- A SECRET MISSION. CHAPS. V-VII.
 THE ORIGINAL BALLAD OF THE DOWIE DENS.
 BY PROFESSOR VITCH.
 FROM ARGIN TO TOSKI; OR, THE NILE CAMPAIGN OF 1889.
With Maps.
 A SKETCH IN FIVE PHASES. BY GARTH GIBSON.
 JAMAICA.
 THE STRANGE OCCURRENCES IN CANTERSTONE JAIL.
 BY RICHARD MAREN.
 THE LAST OF THE RYDAL DOROTHYS.
 A STORY OF THE SEINE. BY REV. G. J. COWLEY-BROWN.
 ROMANCE OF TWO HEIRESSES.
 THE PORTUGUESE AND MAKOLOLO-LAND.
 BY DANIEL J. RANKIN.
 LAND PURCHASE IN IRELAND.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

BLACKWOOD'S NEW SERIAL.

THIS DAY. PART VIII. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

TRAVEL, ADVENTURE, and SPORT.

FROM "BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE"

No. VIII. CONTAINS:—THE LAYING OF THE ATLANTIC CABLE by the late HENRY O'NEIL, A.R.A.—LIFE IN CENTRAL ASIA—A VISIT TO THE BIG TREES OF CALIFORNIA, by Dr. CREADLE.—THE PIRATES OF SINGAPORE: ADVENTURES IN VIETNAM AND THE ADRYATIC.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR JUNE.

- TRADE UNIONISM, NEW AND OLD. BY GEORGE SHIPTON.
 A WELCOME TO STANLEY. BY THE REV. H. D. HAWKESLEY.
 MARCIA. CHAPS. 21-24. BY W. E. NORMAN, Author of "Thrifty Hall," &c.
 (To be continued.)
 COURT FUNCTIONS. BY A DEBUTANTE.
 SIR CHARLES DILKE ON IMPERIAL DEFENCE. BY ADMIRAL COLOMBE.
 EARLY DAYS RECALLED. BY MRS. ROSS. (To be continued.)
 CAROLINE. BY MISS DAINTY.
 EARLY SUMMER AT THE CAPE. BY THE REV. W. GREENWELL.
 THAT FIDDLER FELLOW. CHAPS. 4-6. BY HORACE HUTCHINSON.
 (To be continued.)
 NOTES OF THE MONTH, FROM LONDON AND PARIS.
 CORRESPONDENCE.
 OUR LIBRARY LIST.
 INDEX TO VOLUME VII.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

JUNE.

- THE GREAT EQUATORIAL FOREST OF AFRICA. BY P. B. DU CHAILLU.
 THE POETRY OF JOHN DUNNE. BY PROFESSOR DOWDEN.
 A VISIT TO A GREAT ESTATE. BY SIR H. POTTINGER, Bart.
 DISTINCTION. BY CONVENTRY PATMORE.
 ON EARLY LICENSING LAWS AND CUSTOMS. BY J. CHAS. COX, LL.D., F.R.S.
 PROTECTION v. FREE TRADE IN AUSTRALIA. BY G. H. D. GOSNIP.
 A GLANCE AT CONTEMPORARY GREECE. BY JAMES D. BOURCHIER.
 THE LANDLORD'S PREFERENTIAL POSITION. BY R. C. RICHARDS.
 THE LATEST DISCOVERIES IN HYPNOTISM.—I. BY DR. J. LUTS.
 THE LONDON STAGE:—
 A REPLY. BY HERBERT BRENDON TREES.
 A REJOINDER. BY OSWALD CRAWFORD, C.M.G.
 CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

JUNE.—Price 2s. 6d.

- THE LORDS and the SWEATING SYSTEM. BY BEATRICE POTTER.
 A PENNY POST FOR THE EMPIRE. With a Map. BY J. HENRIKER HEATON, M.P.
 RACING IN 1890. BY G. HERBERT STOTTFIELD.
 A BATTLE DESCRIBED FROM THE HANKS. BY LEON J. A. CAMPBELL.
 NEW WINE IN OLD BOTTLES. BY WILFRED WARD.
 SOMETHING ABOUT VILLAGE ALMSHOUSES. BY THE REV. DR. JESSOFF.
 AN ATHEIST'S PUPIL. BY W. S. LILLY.
 LABOUR DISPUTES and the CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. BY S. B. BOULTON.
 THE STORY OF A CONSPIRATOR (concluded). BY HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF ARGYLL.
 LORD ROSEBURY and the LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. BY FREDERICK HARRISON (County Alderman).
 ACTOR-MANAGERS:—
 (1) BY BEAM STOKER, M.A.
 (2) BY HENRY IRVING.
 (3) BY CHARLES WYNDHAM.
 London: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & CO., Limited.

Just published, price 3s. 6d.

MODELS FOR LATIN PROSE COM-

POSITION, Selected from the Best Authors.
 BY J. OLIVER, Bombay Educational Department.
 A. J. COMBRIDGE & CO., 31, Newgate Street, E.C.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

No. 351, for JUNE.

1. CHELTENHAM CONFERENCE ON THE TEACHING OF MODERN LANGUAGES—Official Report.
 2. MANUAL TRAINING. GEO. RICKES, B.Sc.
 3. THE HISTORY OF EDUCATIONAL MUSEUMS. W. H. WIDGERY.
 4. EXPERIMENTAL ARITHMETIC. SARAH CORBETT.
 5. SCHOLARSHIPS FROM PUBLIC ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS. Part II.
 6. SCHOLARSHIPS: a Scholar's Rejoinder.
 7. OCCASIONAL NOTES.
 8. NOTES ON ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.
 9. CORRESPONDENCE:—The College of Preceptors (Thornley)—Intermediate Education in Wales—Illustrations in History Lessons—The Forsyth College—Reading and Phonetics—The Revised Latin Primer—Godolphin School, Salisbury—Falsley School Board—French Diplomas—The People's High Schools in Denmark, &c.
 10. SCHOOLS AND UNIVERSITIES—THE TEACHERS' GUILD.
 11. FOREIGN NOTES—MISCELLANEA.
 12. TRANSLATION PRIZE AND EXTRA PRIZE.

Price 6d., per post 7½d.

Office: 96, FLEET-STREET, LONDON, E.C.

FOLK-LORE.

Vol. I., No. 2, JUNE, 1890. Price, 3s. 6d.

A QUARTERLY REVIEW OF MYTH, TRADITION, INSTITUTION, AND CUSTOM.

[Incorporating The Archaeological Review and The Folk-Lore Journal.]

CONTENTS:

- SOME POPULAR SUPERSTITIONS OF THE ANCIENTS. J. G. FRAZER.
 LEGENDS FROM FORRES STRAITS.—II. Prof. A. C. HADDON.
 A HIGHLAND FOLK-TALE and its FOUNDATION in USAGE. G. L. GOSNIP.
 PEEPING TOM and LADY GODIVA. E. SYDNEY HARTLAND.
 "HOW THEY MET THEMSELVES." JAMES DARMESTETER and AUGUSTE BARTHE.
 REPORT: CELTIC MYTH and SAGA. ALFRED NUTT.
 REPORT: ITALIAN FOLK SONGS. MISS R. H. BUSE.
 NOTES AND NEWS.
 REVIEW: "Les Contes Moraux de Nicole Bozon." JOSEPH JACOBS.
 CORRESPONDENCE: What's in a Name? E. CLODD. Fascination and Hypnotism. A. NUTT.
 MISCELLANEA: Easter in Greece. Highland Superstitions. J. G. FRAZER. Players' Superstitions. W. G. BLACK. Rabbinate Parallel to the "Two Travellers." S. SCHNEIDER. Folk-Lore Extracts. G. GOSNIP. Old Harvest Customs in Devon and Cornwall.
 FOLK-LORE BIBLIOGRAPHY.
 SUPPLEMENT: Index to Archaeological Journals (continued from "Archaeological Review"), pp. 77-84.
 London: DAVID NUTT, 370, Strand; ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR JUNE.

- COMPENSATION FOR LICENCES.—
 I. BY CARDINAL MANNING.
 II. BY W. S. CALVE, M.P.
 VESTED INTERESTS. BY PROFESSOR J. E. THOROLD ROGERS.
 THE LAW IN 1847 and the LAW in 1889. BY LORD COLERIDGE.
 THE THEOLOGY and ETHICS OF DANTE. BY PROFESSOR EDWARD CAIRD.
 TRUSTS IN THE UNITED STATES. BY R. DONALD.
 BROUGHT BACK FROM ELYSIUM. BY J. M. BARRIE.
 THE PERILS OF TRUSTEES. BY MONTAGUE CRAWFORD, Q.C.
 MUTE WITNESSES OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. BY MRS. EMILY CRAWFORD.
 A PALESTINIAN UTOPIA. BY THOMAS HODGKIN.
 THE BROAD CHURCH; or, What's Coming? BY THE REV. H. R. HAWES.
 THE BETTERMENT TAX. BY THE DUKE OF ARGYLL.
 LISTER & CO., Limited, 15 & 16, Tavistock-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

EDUCATION.

A JOURNAL FOR THE SCHOLASTIC WORLD.

SIXPENCE, MONTHLY.

CONTENTS FOR JUNE.

1. EDITORIAL NOTES.
 2. MISS AGNES WARD, PRINCIPAL of the MARIA GREY COLLEGE. With full-page Portrait.
 3. THE PRESENT POSITION OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS. BY JOHN VINE MILNE, B.A.
 4. A LETTER TO A BOY. BY THE REV. J. M. WILSON, M.A., Headmaster of Clifton College.
 5. SHALL GERMAN SUPPLANT LATIN? A Symposium. BY THE HEAD MASTERS of Harrow, Westminster, &c.; MR. OSCAR BROWNING, Professor Bonnensheim, &c.
 6. THE IDEAL EDUCATION of a GIRL. BY MRS. TAIT.
 7. EDUCATIONAL GOSPEL.
 8. CORRESPONDENCE.
 9. REVIEWS AND NOTICES.
 London: ROGER & DROWLEY, 11, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

JUNE.—2s. 6d.

- PROBLEMS OF GREATER BRITAIN. BY W. J. COURTTHORPE.
 GREAT and BIG: a Dialogue. BY T. O. BROWN.
 MR. GLADSTONE and the GREEK PANTHEON. BY KARL BLIND.
 CHARTERED COMPANIES IN AFRICA. BY COMMANDER V. LOVETT CAMERON, R.N.
 VERMIN IN ENGLAND. BY W. PRACE.
 THE BISHOP ELECT'S OATH OF CANONICAL OBEDIENCE. BY REV. MORRIS FULLER, M.A.
 THE EVIL MAY-DAY. BY HERBERT HAINES.
 A PLEA FOR SUNDAY OBSERVANCE. BY CHARLES HILL.
 THE LANCASHIRE LAUREATE. BY WILLIAM WATSON.
 THE GOVERNMENT OF BRUTES. BY J. W. SLATKIN.
 A KENTISH PILGRIM ROAD. BY H. F. ABELL.
 THE CASE FOR THE TITHE-PAYER. BY H. R. FANQUHARSON, M.P.
 POLITICS at HOME and ABROAD.
 CORRESPONDENCE.
 London: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, Waterloo-place.

Vol. I.—JUST PUBLISHED.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND, PAST and PRESENT: its History, its Relation to the Law and the State, its Doctrine, Ritual, Discipline, and Patrimony.

Edited by Rev. R. H. STORY, D.D., F.R.S., Scot.,
 Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Glasgow, and one of Her Majesty's Chaplains.

Assisted by Rev. JAMES CAMPBELL, D.D., F.R.S., Scot.

Rev. JAMES RANKIN, D.D.

Rev. T. B. W. NIVEN.

ANDREW MACGEOURGE, Esq.

Rev. ADAM MILBOY, D.D.

Rev. THOMAS LEISHMAN, D.D.

Late Rev. ANDREW EDGAR, D.D.

NESTOR ELLIOT, Esq., F.R.S.

Illustrated with numerous engravings of portraits of eminent Churchmen and views of interesting ecclesiastical edifices. In five volumes, cloth, red edges, price 7s. 6d. each.

WILLIAM MACKENZIE, 60, Ludgate-hill, E.C.;

Edinburgh, and Glasgow.

LUZAC & CO.,

Foreign and Oriental Booksellers and Publishers, (OPPOSITE THE BRITISH MUSEUM).

T'OUNG PAO:

ARCHIVES pour servir à l'Étude de l'Histoire des Langues, de la Géographie et de l'Éthnographie de l'Asie Orientale (Chine, Japon, Corée, Indo-Chine, Asie Centrale et Malaise). Rédigées par MM. GUSTAVE SCHLEGEL, Professeur de Chinois à l'Université de Leide, et HENRI CORDIER, Professeur à l'École spéciale des Langues orientales vivantes et à l'École libre des Sciences politiques à Paris.

Messrs. LUZAC & CO. are the English Agents for this most important new periodical. Five numbers will be published yearly.

Annual Subscription £1, post free.
 Messrs. LUZAC & CO. will be able to supply, at the most reasonable prices, all Periodicals published on the Continent and in the East.

LUZAC & CO.,

Foreign and Oriental Booksellers and Publishers,
 46, GREAT RUSSELL STREET,
 (OPPOSITE THE BRITISH MUSEUM).
 LONDON, W.C.

WILL BE PUBLISHED NEXT WEEK.

Post 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

HISTORY OF CIVILISATION: Graeco-Roman Institutions, from anti-evolutionist points of view,—Roman Law, Classical Slavery, Social Conditions.—"Four Lectures" delivered before the University of Oxford, by EMIL REICH Doctor Juris. Author of "Lectures on the History of Civilisation."

PARKER & CO., Oxford; and 8, Southampton-street, Strand, London.

Just published, with Frontispiece, crown 8vo, 6s.

ENGELBERG: and other Verses. BY BEATRICE L. TOLLEMACHE (Hon. Mrs. Lionel Tollemache). P. ARCVIAL & CO., King-street, Covent-garden.

ROMANTIC STORIES OF STAGE and MUSICIAN. Ready June 2nd. Price 1s. EDINBURGH: MENZIES & CO. LONDON: SHIPPIE, MARSHALL & CO.

HIGH-CLASS BOARDING SCHOOL for GENTLEWOMEN. Foreign Languages and Accomplishments. Specialties: the pleasant Intellectual Home for Ladies who wish to continue certain studies only. Miss ESSER, Rockfield, Lansdown-road, Croydon.

A NEW MANUAL OF BOOK-KEEPING for Wholesale and Retail Traders. BY PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.

G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C., and the AUTHOR, 25, Chancery-lane, W.C.

Now ready.

INDUCTION and DEDUCTION: a Historical and Critical Sketch of Successive Philosophical Conceptions respecting the Relations between Inductive and Deductive Thought, and other Essays. BY CONSTANCE C. W. NADEN. Edited by H. LEWIS, M.D., Army Medical Department. With Memoir and Portrait. One vol. 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square, W.C.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Wills, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks, Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
This Evening, at 8, THE GREEN BUSHES.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLIGH.
To-Night and Every Evening, at 8, will be acted an Original Farce, by Mr. A. W. PIERCE, called
THE CABINET MINISTER.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Saturday, 10th Inst., Oliver Goldsmith's celebrated old Comedy,
SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.

Young Marlow, Mr. Charles Wyndham; Hardcastle, Mr. Wm. Blakely;
Sir Charles Marlow, Mr. F. Atterley; Hastings, Mr. W. Draycott; Tony Lumkin, Mr. Geo. Giddens; Digory, Mr. S. Valentine; Mrs. Hardcastle, Miss M. A. Victor; Miss Neville, Miss E. Leyshon; Miss Hardcastle, Miss Mary Moore.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

THE NATIONAL THEATRE.
AUGUSTUS HARRIS, Sole Lessee and Manager.
Every Evening, at 8.30 (by arrangement with Mr. William Terriss),
Last two weeks of PAUL KAUVAR. Received with enthusiasm at Drury Lane, At 7.45, THE MARRIED BAKE.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, GEO. EDWARDS.
To-night, at 8, RUY BLAS AND THE BLAZE ROUE.
By A. C. Torr and Herbert F. Clark. Music by Herr Meyer Luis
The dances by John D'Auban.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BERNHOFF-TRIE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, A VILLAGE PRIEST.
By Sydney Grundy.
Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandes, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Allan, Miss Rose Leclercq,
Miss Norreys, Mrs. Gaston Murray, Mrs. Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. F. J. HARRIS.
Manager, Mr. H. GRITTS LONSDALE.
To-night, at 8.30, new Comedy Opera,
GRETA GREEN.
By T. Murray Ford and Dr. John Storer.
Preceded, at 8, by a new farce, entitled MESMERISM.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THEODORA.
Messrs. W. H. Vernon, Charles Cartwright, Cecil Morton Yorks, George
Bernage, George W. Cockburn, Alfred B. Cross, H. de Solla, H. Sturge, Charles Lander, G. L. Grand, Bayne & Leonsard, Messrs. Dolores Drummond, Charles Trevor, Marie Stuart, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SUDGEN.
Every Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Madames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mrs. L. GASTRY.
Every Evening, at 8, ESTHER SANDRAZ.
Messrs. Chas. Sugden, A. Bouchier, Everill, De Lange, E. Lewis, &c.; Madames Langtry, Chas. Calvert, M. Lea, C. Benton, L. Meyers, E. Williams, &c.
Preceded, at 8, by THE FAST COACH.

STRAND THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.40, the most refined and amusing farcical comedy, by Mrs. Musgrave, OUR FLAT.
Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.
Doors open at 7.30.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 8, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe,
O. Yorks, F. Grove, Fred Barry, and Fred Thorne; Madames Winifred
Emery, Hanbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and Terms arranged
for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
Publishers, Printers, and Binders,
51, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY
LANE, LONDON.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

INVESTED FUNDS, £24,400,000.

PROFITS DIVIDED, £24,000,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS,
£7,700,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTD. 1835.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt
The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

ROBINSON AND CLEAVER'S
PARIS PRIZE MEDAL

IRISH CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.

Children's	- 1s. 3d.	HEMSTITCHED—
Ladies'	- 2s. 4½d.	Ladies'	- 2s. 11½d. } per
Gent's	- 3s. 6d.	Gent's	- 4s. 11d. } doz.

Embroidered Handkerchiefs in all the Latest Styles, from 1s. to 60s. each.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Belfast.

Samples and Price Lists post-free. (Please name this Paper.)

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUTON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Free Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER

246, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W. (1)

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. G. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free.

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of
the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J.
ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.
(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11 LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

MEMORY. A. LOISETTE'S

SYSTEM.—"I was impressed with the possibilities of improvement to Memory which your Lectures in CAMBRIDGE opened up."—R. N. Ingle, M.A., M.D., University Lecturer
(Jan., '90). "Physiological, scientific."—Dr. Andrew
Wilson (April, '88). "We again recommend the system."—Dr. Wilson (Jan., '88). "Great advantage to strong memory, incalculable aid to weak one."—
Dr. Buckley. "Excellent travelling companion."—
Capt. J. B. Hays, R.N.—Apply 27, New Oxford Street, London.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself
to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete - - - 1

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete - - - - - 5s. 6d.

Engine-turned Pattern, complete - - - - - 6s. 6d.

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic - - - - - 10s. 6d.

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE."
THE ENGLISH NOVEL IN THE TIME OF SHAKESPEARE.

By J. J. JUSSERAND.

Translated by ELIZABETH LEE; Revised and Enlarged by the AUTHOR.
Illustrated by Six Hellogravures by Dujardin, of Paris, and Twenty-one Full-page, and many smaller illustrations, executed in facsimile.

In 1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, price 21s.

The Book is divided into Seven Chapters:—I. Before Shakespeare; II. Tudor Times—the Fashions and the Novel; III. Lyly and his "Euphuës;" IV. Lyly's Legacies; V. Sir Philip Sidney and Pastoral Romance; VI. Thomas Nash: the Picaresque and Realistic Novel; VII. After Shakespeare.

"All lovers of Elizabethan literature will welcome M. Jusserand's new book..... No Englishman who has written on the period has shown himself more completely in touch with his subject, or more fully and widely read in the authors with whom he deals. Want of accuracy or of literary insight is never apparent, and it is very rarely that even the smallest feature is missed because of a 'foreigner's standpoint'..... M. Jusserand's book and its exquisite engravings form a most valuable contribution to the study of English literature."—Standard (Leader).

Now ready, the Twenty-fourth Volume of the "STORY of the NATIONS."

THE JEWS UNDER ROMAN RULE

By W. D. MORRISON.

Index, Illustrations, and Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"It is a comparative rare thing to meet with a book of so much general interest and yet at the same time containing so great an amount of genuine scholarship as Mr. Morrison's account of 'The Jews under Roman Rule'..... Where all is so good it is difficult to point out special merits; the book is certainly one of the most delightful combinations of instruction and interest we have seen for a long time."

Manchester Examiner.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

A MARIAGE DE CONVENANCE.

By O. F. KEARY. 2 vols., cloth, 31s.

"It is told very cleverly; character and the development of character are happily traced."—Daily News (Leader).

MUMFORD MANOR.

By JOHN ADAMSON. 1 vol., cloth, 6s.

"An agreeably written book."—Morning Post.

THROUGH ABYSSINIA.

An Envoy's Visit to the King of Zion.

By F. HARRISON SMITH, R.N. Crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, with Map, 7s. 6d.

"Mr. Smith's narrative may be read with satisfaction by all who enjoy the records of travel in out-of-the-way places."—Yorkshire Post.

"The whole story of his journey, his difficulties, and his success is told in a pleasant and easy fashion."—Glasgow Herald.

Now ready, Volume IV. of "THE CAMERO SERIES."

IPHIGENIA IN DELPHI.

WITH SOME TRANSLATIONS FROM THE GREEK.

By RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D.

Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, parchment back, illustrated, 8s. 6d.

"A very charming volume..... Dr. Garnett has achieved a very interesting and scholarly piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

"A few copies of the EDITION DE LUXE of this and the preceding Volumes in the Series, may still be had. Prices on application."

HEROES AND MARTYRS, AND OTHER POEMS.

By JOHN ALFRED LANGFORD, M.A.

Cloth, 8s. 6d.

"Fellotrous and dignified verses."
Graphic.

A POETASTER'S HOLIDAY

Cloth, 8s. 6d.

"This writer has good temper, modesty, and withal more of the divine spark than most of his fellows..... There is good taste and restraint in all the poems."
Manchester Guardian.

VOL. II. (GONO—FY) Now Ready.]

[PART VIII. Now Ready]

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY:

An Encyclopædic Lexicon of the English Language.

Edited by Prof. W. D. WHITNEY, Ph.D., LL.D. (Yale University).

PROFUSELY AND ARTISTICALLY ILLUSTRATED.

The work, cloth, gilt, sprinkled edges, price £12s. each Volume; half morocco, cloth sides, marbled edges, £16s., will be completed in six Volumes.

Also in Twenty-four Monthly Parts, limp cloth, price 10s. 6d. each.

The ATHENÆUM on Volume I.:

"The 'Century Dictionary' bids fair to be far and away the largest and best general and encyclopædic dictionary of the English language..... The work, notwithstanding incalculable variety and difficulty, is singularly free from error of any kind..... To judge from the volume before us, this great work will be characterised throughout, and in every respect, by a lavish expenditure of labour and capital, of rare ability and technical skill, all turned to the best advantage by careful and capable attention to the uniform realisation of a thoroughly judicious plan."

Prospectuses post free on Application.

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

2 vols., demy 8vo, with Portraits, Maps, and other Illustrations.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of the Rev. ADAM SEDGWICK, LL.D., F.R.S., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Prebendary of Norwich, and Woodwardian Professor of Geology from 1818 to 1873. By JOHN WILLIS CLARK, M.A., F.S.A., and THOMAS MCKENNEY HUGHES, M.A.
[READY IN JUNE.]

MEMORIALS of the LIFE of the Rev. GEORGE ELWES
CORRIE, D.D., late Master of Jesus College, Cambridge. Edited by Miss HOLROYD. With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, 13s.

GRAY and his FRIENDS. Letters and Relics in great part hitherto unpublished. Edited by Rev. D. C. TOVEY, M.A. [In the press.]

THE SPEECH of DEMOSTHENES against the LAW of LEPTINES. A Revised Text, with an Introduction, Critical and Explanatory Notes, and an Autotype Facsimile from the Paris MS. By J. E. SANDYS, LL.D., Public Orator in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 9s.

LECTURES on MENTAL FACULTY: being Lectures delivered in the University of Cambridge during the Lent Term, 1888-89, on the Growth of Mental Faculty and Means of Training it. By FRANCIS WARNER, M.D., Physician to the London Hospital, Lecturer on Therapeutics and on Botany at the London Hospital College, &c. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

LANGUAGE and LINGUISTIC METHOD in the SCHOOL.
By S. S. LAURIE, M.A., LL.D., Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 4s.

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Series.

EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENEIA in AULIS. By C. E. S. HEADLAM, B.A. 2s. 6d.

"This is a book of the right sort. The matter of the notes and introduction, whether original or not, bears the stamp of thoughtful and enlightened consideration."—Classical Review.

"The reader of this difficult play will find Mr. Headlam's edition more helpful than any previous work in English on the same subject."—Journal of Education.

EURIPIDES.—HIPPOLYTUS. With Notes and Introduction. By W. S. HADLEY, M.A. 7s.

"We have here a text, by no means unduly conservative, of which every page gives proof of care, judgment, and taste. The well and even brilliantly written introduction contains some admirable remarks upon Euripides in relation to his times, and a comparison of the treatment of the subject by Euripides, Seneca and Racine; and there is a good excursus on orphism. The notes are full, not too full; there is enough, and not too much, of the views of other editors, and in their treatment no carping, but no lack of independence; the style is clear and vigorous; the scholarship, the critical acumen, the literary appreciation leave nothing to be desired. Difficulties—of which there are many in the Hippolytus—are never avoided. The accuracy of the printing, too, deserves praise."—Classical Review.

PLATO.—EUTHYPHRO. With Introduction and Notes. By J. ADAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.

PLUTARCH.—LIFE of TIMOLEON. With Introduction, Notes, and Lexicon. By Rev. HUBERT A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 6s.

XENOPHON.—CYROPAEDEIA. Books I., II. With Introduction, Notes, and Map. By Rev. HUBERT A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 6s.

"The work is worthy of the editor's well-earned reputation for scholarship and industry."—Athenæum.

—Books III., IV., V. By the same Editor. 5s.

"Dr. Holden's Commentary is equally good in history and scholarship."
Saturday Review.

—Books VI., VII., VIII. By the same Editor.

[In the press.]

HOMER.—ODYSSEY. Book XXI. With Introduction, Notes, and Appendices. By G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow of Sidney Sussex College. 2s.

HERODOTUS.—Book V. With Notes, Introduction, and Maps. By E. S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A. 3s.

CAESAR.—DE BELLO CIVILI. Book I. Edited, with Notes, by A. G. PESKETT, M.A., Fellow of Magdalene College. [In the press.]

LIVY.—Book IV. With Introduction and Notes. By H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

LIVY.—Book V. With Notes and Introduction. By L. WHIBLEY, M.A. 7s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

MOLIÈRE.—LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES. With Introduction and Notes. By E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D., University Lecturer in French. 7s.

RACINE.—LES PLAIDEURS. With Introduction and Notes. By E. G. W. BRAUNHOLTZ, M.A., Ph.D. 2s.

SCHILLER.—WILHELM TELL. With Maps, Introduction, and Notes. By KARL HERMANN BREUL, M.A. 7s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.
GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 944.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

The Subscription List will open on Monday, the 9th June, and close on or before Thursday, 12th June.

CHEAP PRINTING A NECESSITY OF THE AGE!

Attention is called to the following important features of this Company:—

There is no Promotion Money to be paid.
There is no payment for Goodwill or old and worn-out Machinery and Plant.
There are no Founders' Shares, all the profits belonging to the Shareholders without preference or distinction.

THE ECONOMIC PRINTING AND PUBLISHING COMPANY, Limited.

INCORPORATED UNDER THE COMPANIES ACTS, 1862 TO 1886.

CAPITAL £100,000.

100,000 Shares of £1 each, upon which it is anticipated that not more than 10s. per Share will be called up at present.

Issue of 100,000 Shares payable as follows:—2s. 6d. per Share on Application, 2s. 6d. per Share on Allotment. Two months' notice will be given of subsequent Calls, which are not to exceed 2s. 6d. each.

Directors.

JUSTIN MCCARTHY, Esq., M.P., Chairman.

JOSEPH BOULTON, Esq. (JOSEPH BOULTON & Co., Limited, Printers and Publishers).

A. MONTAGUE HAINES, Esq. (HAINES & Co.)

CAMPBELL PRAED, Esq.

HENRY P. WELCH, Esq. (WELCH PERRIN & Co.)

And one or two Directors to be chosen by the Board from the first Shareholders.

Bankers—MESSRS. WILLIAMS, DEACON, & CO., 20, Birchin Lane, E.C.; MESSRS. PRAED & CO., 189, Fleet Street, E.C.

Solicitors—MESSRS. SAUNDERS, HAWKSFORD, BENNETT, & CO., 68, Coleman Street, London, E.C.

Broker—JAMES GILLESPIE, Esq., 11, Copthall Court, E.C., and Stock Exchange.

Auditors—MESSRS. PIXLEY & CO., Chartered Accountants, 24, Moorgate Street, E.C.

Architect—WILLIAM DAWES, Esq., Manchester and London.

Secretary (pro tem.)—A. G. SYMONDS, Esq., M.A. (Oxon.)

Registered Offices (pro tem.)—68, Coleman Street, London, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

The Company is formed for the purpose of engaging in the business of cheap printing and publishing on a large scale. The demand for cheaper Books, Magazines, and Newspapers is rapidly on the increase owing to the spread of education and the growth of population. Hundreds of the best serial publications and standard works are beyond the reach of the masses by reason of their virtually prohibitive prices; whilst the works of specialists in the various scientific and learned professions find but a limited field amongst those for whom they are intended, because the purchasing of books varying in price from six shillings to thirty shillings a volume constitutes a severe tax on the fixed incomes of many professional men.

Recent developments in printing machinery prove that cheap and good printing of Books, Magazines and general literature is certainly attainable, especially if modern plant and appliances be combined under one administration and under one roof, instead of, as is sometimes the case, the publisher's office being in one place, the composing-room in another, the machining-room in a third, and the folding and binding in a fourth—operations in each of which a separate profit is intercepted, and added, perhaps by a different firm—to the cost of production.

A printing establishment combining all the aforesaid requisites in one set of hands, with abundance of the newest plant, and placed in the position of a ready cash purchaser of paper, will be enabled to produce printed literature—the greatest necessity of the age—cheaply and on a large scale, and in a quarter of the time it would otherwise take to turn out work.

Good printing or publishing-houses, even in the worst times, are hardly ever idle; and the continuous high dividends declared by them attest the solid and profitable nature of the printing and publishing industry generally.

The following are the only firms whose Shares are quoted in the Stock Exchange official list, &c.:—

	Ordinary Share Capital	Nominal value of Shares	Paid up.	Market Price.
Cassell & Co., Limited	£368,890	10	9	18
Waterlow Bros. & Layton, Limited	100,000	10	10	21

The Shares in these and other similar Companies are held in high repute, and are difficult to obtain, the concerns being in some cases little more than private family partnerships, from participation in the profits of which both authors, customers, and the general public are thereby shut out.

A great advantage is secured by the printing and publishing enterprise which, possessing practical experience, starts at the present time unencumbered with antiquated plant and machinery, and avoids workshops confined within narrow City areas, at high rentals, under conditions which are unhealthy to the employes, and admit of no expansion or adaptation to newer requirements.

Accordingly the Company will erect entirely new workshops on an eligible site near London, which the Directors have in view. Some of the best modern printing works are now situated at Guildford, Aylesbury, Redhill, Kingston, and other places outside London.

The Company's workshops will have good Railway and cartage facilities. They will be erected from the designs of Mr. William Dawes, Architect, of Manchester and London. Their estimated cost is moderate, and the buildings are designed on such a scale as will admit of gradual expansion in sections, as business grows. The first section can be open for business, already promised, within a few months of the Allotment of Shares.

They will be fitted throughout with the electric light, a great boon in itself to compositors. As they will be new, great expenses for repairs will be avoided; and being practically fireproof, their Insurance will be at low rates.

No payments have been or will be made for "good-will" or promotion money or, in fact, initiatory charges of any kind other than the preliminary expenses, incident to the formation and successful establishment of the Company.

The Directors believe that the value of the Shares will at least equal those of the Companies mentioned above, and that there is every probability of substantial dividends.

In the selection of the printing plant the Directors have taken into consideration the fact that, whereas in all but one of the branches connected with the printing of books and newspapers enormous economies have in the past fifty years been effected, mainly through the increased productive power of various machines, in the one central and essential branch, viz., the composing room, not only have the expenses increased, but the modus operandi is almost as primitive as in the days of Guttenberg and Caxton.

The Directors believe that the machine known as the Linotype Composing Machine is capable of effecting the largest net economies over the present cost of type setting by hand, and that by adopting it they save a large capital outlay for type.

[Continued on next page.]

They have accordingly contracted for a supply of Linotype Machines under special conditions, of which the following are among the most important:—

The rate of wages paid to ordinary Compositors in London varies in piece work from 8d. to 10d. per 1,000 ens of type set up, corrected, and distributed; but the Linotype Company, Limited, agrees to hire to the Economic Printing and Publishing Company Linotype composing machines, and to charge a Royalty equal to only 2d. per 1,000 ens of matter set up, corrected, and automatically distributed.

When machines are unemployed, a small sum only is charged for each working hour.

The Linotype Company also gives to this Company a monopoly as regards the use of their machines for London and ten miles round, subject only to exceptions in favour of the proprietors of newspapers and periodicals, and of firms who have already contracted for a supply of a specific number of machines, or who are entitled to machines in virtue of being original subscribers for founders' shares.

To make the Company's operations partake as largely as possible of a co-operative character, a percentage rebate off the ordinary printing tariff will be allowed to all authors who are shareholders in the Company, and all employees will, as far as possible, be chosen first from amongst the Shareholders.

It is intended to apply to the Stock Exchange for a quotation.

The following contract has been entered into.

Contract dated the 3rd day of June, 1890, made between the Linotype Company, Limited, of the one part, and A. G. Symonds as Trustee for the Company of the other part, being the contract referred to above.

The above is the only contract to which the Company is a party, but arrangements have been made with other persons relating to the preliminary expenses of formation of the Company, and procuring capital, which may constitute contracts within the meaning of Section 38 of the Companies' Acts, 1867, but applicants for Shares shall be deemed to waive their rights to specification of any particulars of such arrangements or contracts, and to accept the above statements as sufficient compliance with Section 38 of the Companies' Acts, 1867.

The Memorandum and Articles of Association and the contract mentioned above can be inspected by applicants for Shares at the Offices of the Company's Solicitors.

Applications for Shares may be made by letter or on the accompanying form, and forwarded, with a remittance for the amount of the deposit payable on application, to the Bankers of the Company, or to the Secretary, at the Office of the Company. If the whole amount applied for by any applicant is not allotted, the surplus paid on deposits will be credited to the sum due on allotment, and where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or of either of the Bankers, Broker, or Solicitors of the Company.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.		PAGE
GIFFEN'S THE GROWTH OF CAPITAL, by Prof. EDGEMOND		381
MAJOR CONDER'S PALESTINE, by Prof. SALMON		381
HUGH HALIBURTON'S IN SCOTCH FIELDS, by W. WALLACE		383
BISHOP GOODWIN'S FOUNDATIONS OF THE CREED, by the Rev. RONALD BAYNE		388
THE LIFE OF CARMEN SYLVA, by J. G. O. MINCHIN		384
WELZHOFF'S HISTORY OF THE GREEK PEOPLE, by F. T. RICHARDS		385
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH		385
THREE VOLUMES OF VERSE		386
NOTES AND NEWS		387
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS		388
ORIGINAL VERSE: "MR. WATT'S PICTURE OF MAMMON," by O. ELTON		388
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS		389
THE AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY		389
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS		389
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Discovery of the Sixth Brahmana of the Samaveda, by Prof. Max Müller; The Oriental Congress, by Prof. Sayce; Etymological Notes: "Cookney," "Clock," "Cable," by Prof. Cook and H. Frank Heath; The Word "Hanselins" in Chaucer, by Prof. Skeat.		390
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK		391
GOODWIN'S SYNTAX OF THE GREEK VERB, by Prof. POSTGATE		391
AN INSCRIBED GAULISH MENHIR, by W. S.		392
OBITUARY		393
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Antonius of Horace, by Prof. A. S. WILKINS		393
SCIENCE NOTES		393
PHILOLOGY NOTES		393
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES		393
THE ROYAL ACADEMY, III., by CLAUDE PHILLIPS		394
PROPOSED EXCAVATIONS AT CHESTER		395
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY		395
"JUDAH," by F. WEDMORE		396
STAGE NOTES		397
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK		397

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., Scientific, and of all descriptions, Legal Documents, Specifications, Plays, &c., COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in shorthand or type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARRAR 4, Southampton-street, Strand, London.

UNIVERSITY TYPE-WRITING

OFFICE, OXFORD.—Authors' MSS. typed and prepared for the press. Any number of copies can be had from first impression. Examination papers.—For price list address the Secretary.

EXHIBITION OF BLACK AND WHITE

DRAWINGS.—Messrs. CASSELL & COMPANY'S EIGHTH ANNUAL EXHIBITION OF ORIGINAL DRAWINGS IS NOW OPEN at the MEMORIAL HALL, FARRINGTON STREET, E.C. Admission free on presentation of address card.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—MRS. TIRARD

(Miss HELEN BELOE) will give a COURSE of LECTURES to LADIES on "THE TOMBS AND TEMPLES OF ANCIENT EGYPT," commencing JUNE 9TH. Syllabus, &c., by letter only, from Miss A. LESLIE, 20, Cardigan-road, Richmond, Surrey.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and

SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME ADERET introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governesses Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent-street, N.W.

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED (late

of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

LIMITED OWNERS' RESIDENCES

ACTS, 1870-71.—Board of Agriculture.—Landed Proprietors wishing to restore or improve their mansions and other buildings under the above Acts can CONSULT Mr. JOHN BIRCH, Architect, who re-built Ingestre Hall and other large country houses.—Address F. John-street, Ad-iph, London, W.C.

STATISTICS treated in a LITERARY WAY.—Further WORK desired by Advertiser. Twenty years' varied experience with figures. Special knowledge in some branches. Fair originality and knowledge of current literary and art matters.—Address HUGH, care of J. W. Vickers, 5, Nicholas-lane, E.C.

Collection of Drawings and Pictures of the late SAMUEL SIMON, Esq.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will

SELL BY AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on MONDAY, JUNE 10TH, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a small COLLECTION of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS and PICTURES by the Old Masters of the Venetian, Flemish, Dutch, and Early English Schools, including Examples by

J. B. Weenix Van Apshoven Geo. Morland
D. Van Denier De Kever W. Collins, R.A.
W. Van de Velde J. M. Molesart Str. J. Thornhill
Isaac Ostade W. Hilton, R.A.
A. Kaufman, R.A.
Also the fine Portrait painted in 1566 by Sir Antonio More of the Emperor Maximilian the 8th, and recently exhibited at the Tudor Exhibition; and many others of the highest quality.
Catalogues can be obtained of RALPH THOMAS, Esq., Solicitor, 27, Chancery-lane, and of the AUCTIONEERS.

Library of an Indian Official; Selection from the Library of a F.S.A., &c.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will

SELL BY AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12TH, and following days, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of BOOKS, comprising the above Libraries, consisting of numerous Standard Works on India, Belles-lettres, Literature, and Art—Books of Prints and Illustrated Works—County Histories and Local Topography, &c., including a complete set to date of the Minutes of the Institution of Civil Engineers—Bombay Transactions Gazetteer, Government Records, &c.—Mill's British India—Tod's Rajasthan—Oriental Dictionary, Grammars, and MSS.—Bentley's Standard Novels—Shakespeare's Works, fourth folio—first editions of Dickens—Poulton's Local Histories—Morant's Essex—Strickland's Queens of England and Scotland—Hook's Archbishops of Canterbury—American Publications, &c.
Catalogues on receipt of two stamps.

Valuable Old Books and Illuminated and other MSS. from the Libraries of the late Dr. H. BONAR, T. C. ARCHER, F.S.A., and T. HEINZ, Esq.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will

SELL BY AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12TH, and following days, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, a PORTION of the interesting LIBRARIES of the late Dr. HORATIUS BONAR, T. C. ARCHER, Esq., and T. HEINZ, Esq., consisting of rare Works on Scottish and English Literature, early Scottish Confessions of Faith, Religious Poetry, Works on Church Service and Discipline, Illustrated and other MSS., Early Printed Books, &c., mostly in excellent condition and bound by Bedford, &c., amongst which may be mentioned the Jenny Geddes's Prayer Book, Edin., 1837, fine copy in red morocco—the Bible of 1619 and Prayer of 1611—Bonlow's Theophrastus, fine copy—Tyndall's Frith and Barnes's Works, 1578—Ness's History and Mystery of the Bible, complete—Ancient Scottish Poems, 1827—H. Vaughan's Silas Scintillans, 1655—Washington's Divine Poems, 1654—Fullerton's Tarla Dove, Edin., 1867—Luther's Enchiridion, first edition, with the plates of Dürer's Little Passion, fine copy, Wittenberg, 1543—8, Rutherford's Letters, first edition, 1664—Common Prayer and Psalms in Metre, Edin., 1615—Hennoch Clapham, Summons to Doomsday, &c., Edin., 1593—Zachary Boyd's Last Battle of the South in Death, original edition, Edin., 1879, exceedingly rare—Tyndale's Obedience of a Christian Man, Mariborow, 1533—Knox's Works—Kay's Portraits—Troubles at Frankfurt on the Common Prayer, 1533—Song of Mary the Mother of Christ, 1601—Bruce's Edinburgh Sermons, 1561—Northbrook's Poor Man's Garden, 1600—Dives and Pauper, 1536—Frith on the Sacrament, 1535, &c.

Catalogues in preparation.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-

BOOKS.

New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application. PUBLISHED BY CO., 37, SOHO-SQUARE, LONDON.

THÉOPHILE BELIN, 29, Quai Voltaire,

Paris. Livres anciens et modernes rares et curieux. Catalogue Mensuel envoyé aux demandeurs.

ALL RECENT PURCHASES.

MATTHEWS & BROOKE'S NEW CATA-

LOGUE of Books, comprising First Editions of Rare Works, Library Editions of Standard Authors, a fine collection of Works on Conchology, Natural History, &c., post free from Sun Buildings, Bradford, or 15, Boar Lane, Leeds.

Now ready.

INDUCTION and DEDUCTION: a Historical and critical Sketch of Successive Philosophical Conceptions respecting the Relations between Inductive and Deductive Thought, and other Essays, by CONSTANCE C. W. NICHOLSON, Edited by R. LEWIS, M.D., Army Medical Department. With Memoir and Portrait. One vol., 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square, W.C.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG,

PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also a convenient and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free

PALL MALL.—A collection of Pictures, removed from Lewisham, to be Sold, by direction of the Executors of the late HENRY NEWTON, Esq.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce

FOR SALE BY AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on WEDNESDAY NEXT, the 12TH JUNE, at 1 o'clock precisely, the collection of PICTURES of the late HENRY NEWTON, Esq., including works by Alfred and Gustave Bransky, Buchanan, Canaletti, Cattermole, Maclean, Mann, Pons, and others. May be viewed Monday and Tuesday next, when catalogues may be had.—54, PALL MALL.

PALL MALL.—Twenty-five Pictures, recently exhibited at the Belfast Exhibition, the property of the Rt. Hon. the EARL OF KILMOREY, K.P.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce,

Immediately after the foregoing, 25 PICTURES of the old Dutch and Italian schools, including WORKS ascribed to

Jan Both Jan Mel C. Huyman Watteau
Lacrot Moucheron N. Pousin T. Wyck and others. May be viewed on Monday and Tuesday next, when catalogues may be had.—54, PALL MALL.

PALL MALL.—A collection of Old English China, removed from the country, the property of a lady.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce

FOR SALE BY AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on THURSDAY NEXT, the 13TH JUNE, at 1 o'clock precisely, a collection of about 150 OLD CHINA and BOW FIGURES and GROUPS, the property of a lady. May be viewed Tuesday and Wednesday next, when catalogues may be had.—54, PALL MALL.

PALL MALL.—Old Japanese Porcelain, Carvings, and Lacquer Ware.

MESSRS. FOSTER respectfully announce

FOR SALE BY AUCTION, at the GALLERY, 54, PALL MALL, on FRIDAY, the 13TH JUNE, at 1 o'clock precisely, a collection of old JAPANESE CHINA, the lacquer ware, carvings in ivory and wood, porcelain inro, netsukes, sword guards, &c., including many signed examples by celebrated artists. May be viewed Wednesday and Thursday next, when catalogues may be had.—54, PALL MALL.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH

WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a DEMONSTRATOR and ASSISTANT LECTURER in CHEMISTRY at a Salary of £150 per annum.

Applications, with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 9TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH

WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

CHAIR OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

The Council are prepared to APPOINT a PROFESSOR of MECHANICAL ENGINEERING in the new Engineering Department. The stipend of the Professor will be £200 per annum.

Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before JUNE 10TH, 1890, to IVOR JAMES, Registrar, Cardiff, May 7th, 1890.

THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROFESSORSHIP OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above PROFESSORSHIP, vacant by the death of Professor Karl Dammann, Ph.D.

Applications, accompanied by ten copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than the 24TH JUNE, 1890.

The successful candidate will be expected to enter upon his duties on the 30th of September, 1890.

Candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing. Further particulars may be obtained from GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY, COLLEGE DUNDEE.

ST. ANDREW'S UNIVERSITY.

CHAIR OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.

The Council of University College, Dundee, invite APPLICATIONS for the CHAIR OF ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE. The appointment will be made in accordance with the terms of the Agreement under which the College now forms part of St. Andrew's University.

The salary will be £400, with two thirds of the fee.

All information may be had from the Subscriber, with whom applications, accompanied by twenty-five copies of testimonials and references, must be lodged on or before TUESDAY, 18TH JULY.

G. W. ALEXANDER, M.A., Secretary.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is

OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100 Mercer's-road, Tufnell Park, N.

CHAPMAN AND HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW, JUNE.

THE GREAT EQUATORIAL FOREST of AFRICA. By P. B. DU CHAILLOU.
THE POETRY OF JOHN DONNE. By Professor DOWDEN.
A VISIT to a GREAT ESTATE. By Sir H. POTTINGER, Bart.
DISTINCTION. By COVENTRY PATMORE.
ON EARLY LICENSING LAWS and CUSTOMS. By J. CHAS. COX, LL.D., F.S.A.
PROTECTION v. FREE TRADE in AUSTRALIA. By G. H. D. GOSSIF.
A GLANCE at CONTEMPORARY GREECE. By JAMES D. BOUCHIER.
THE LANDLORD'S PREFERENTIAL POSITION. By R. C. RICHARDS.
THE LATEST DISCOVERIES in HYPNOTISM.—I. By Dr. J. LUTS.
THE LONDON STAGE:—
A REPLY. By HERBERT BRENDON TREB.
A REJOINDER. By OSWALD CRAWFORD, C.M.G.

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.
ESSAYS, SPECULATIVE and SUGGESTIVE. By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. 2 vols., crown 8vo. [In a few days.]

DR. WILLIAM JUNKER.
TRAVELS in AFRICA. By Dr. Wm. JUNKER. With 88 Full-page Plates and 195 Illustrations in the Text. Translated from the German by Professor KEANE. Demy 8vo. [This day.]

W. S. LILLY.
ON RIGHT and WRONG. By W. S. LILLY, Author of "A Century of Revolution." Demy 8vo, 12s.

REV. H. W. LITTLE.
H. M. STANLEY: his Life, Works, and Explorations. By the Rev. H. W. LITTLE. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.
BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at LEEDS, commencing on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.

PRESIDENT ELECT—
Sir FREDERICK AUGUSTUS ABEL, C.B., D.C.L., D.Sc., F.R.S., V.P.C.S.

NOTICE to CONTRIBUTORS of MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that, under an arrangement dating from 1871, the acceptance of Memoirs and the days on which they are to be read are now as far as possible determined by Organising Committees for the several Sections before the beginning of the Meeting. It has, therefore, become necessary, in order to give an opportunity to the Committees of doing justice to the several Communications, that each Author should prepare an Abstract of his Memoir of a length suitable for insertion in the published Transactions of the Association, and the Council request that he will send it, together with the original Memoir, by book-post on or before August 6, addressed thus: "General Secretaries, British Association, 22, Albemarle-street, London, W. For Section—." Authors who comply with this request and whose papers are accepted will be furnished before the Meeting with printed copies of their Reports or Abstracts. If it should be inconvenient to the Author that his paper should be read on any particular day, he is requested to send information thereof to the Secretaries in a separate note.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.
The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

SIR JOHN SOANE'S MUSEUM, 13, LINCOLN'S INN FIELDS.
ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, and SCULPTURE.
OPEN FREE, from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in JUNE, JULY, and AUGUST.
Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the CURATOR, at the Museum.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.
The ANNIVERSARY MEETING, for the ELECTION of PRESIDENT and COUNCIL, &c., will be held (by permission of the Chancellor and Senate) in the HALL of the UNIVERSITY of LONDON, BURLINGTON GARDENS, on MONDAY, JUNE 18th, at 2.30 p.m.
The Right Hon. Sir MOUNTSTUART B. GRANT DUFF, G.O.S.I., C.I.E., &c., President, in the Chair.
During the meeting the Royal Medals for the encouragement of Geographical Science and Discovery will be presented.

ELY EPISCOPAL RECORDS: a Calendar and Concise View of the Episcopal Records preserved in the Muniment Room of the Palace at Ely. Compiled by direction of the Right Reverend ALWYNE, LORD BISHOP of ELY. By A. GIBBONS, Author of "Early Lincoln Wills," "Bishop Wells' Liber Antiquus," &c. Fifty Copies to be printed for Subscribers, at 21s.—Address, A. GIBBON, The College, Ely.

BLACKIE & SON'S LIST. F. V. WHITE & CO'S

Just published, in Four Parts, square folio, 12s. 6d. each; or complete in Portfolio, £2 12s. 6d.

A SELECTION FROM THE LIBER STUDIORUM OF J. M. W. TURNER, R.A.

For Artists, Art Students, and Amateurs.
Comprising 4 Facsimile Reproductions in Mezzotint by Photogravure; 51 Facsimile Reproductions of the Etchings, including 7 Rare Unpublished Plates; and 87 Text Reproductions of the Finished Engravings.

With Historical Introduction by FREDERICK WEDMORE; and Practical Notes by FRANK SHORT.

* * Prospectus post-free on application.

Notice.—The Sixth Volume will be published on the 13th instant.

BLACKIE'S MODERN CYCLOPEDIA.

WITH NUMEROUS ENGRAVINGS and MAPS,
Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.
To be completed in 8 vols., issued quarterly, square 8vo, cloth, 6s. each; or half-morocco, 8s. 6d. each.

THE HISTORY AND CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

By ALEXANDER JOHNSTON, late Professor of Jurisprudence and Political Economy in Princeton College.

The Contents of this Volume originally appeared as the article on the History and Constitution of the United States in the "Encyclopædia Britannica."

"We do not think that we have ever met with a more satisfactory sketch of the American Commonwealth."—Saturday Review.

Notice.—The Eighth and concluding Volume will be published shortly.

THE HENRY IRVING SHAKESPEARE.

Edited by HENRY IRVING and FRANK A. MARSHALL, and Illustrated by GORDON BROWNE and other Artists.

To be completed in 8 vols., small 4to, cloth, gilt top, 10s. 6d. each.

Crown 8vo (544 pp.), cloth, 9s.

A TEXT-BOOK OF ORGANIC CHEMISTRY.

By A. BERNTHSEN, Ph.D., formerly Professor of Chemistry in the University of Heidelberg.

Translated by GEORGE M'GOWAN, Ph.D., Demonstrator in Chemistry, University College of N. Wales, Bangor.

"Dr. Bernthsen's book may be described as a condensed epitome of the present state of knowledge concerning organic chemistry—full, accurate, and abreast of the most recent discoveries."—Philosophical Magazine.

TENTH EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED. Medium 8vo, cloth, 18s.

DESCHANEL'S NATURAL PHILOSOPHY.

Translated and Edited by J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L., F.R.S., Professor of Natural Philosophy in Queen's College, Belfast.

Illustrated by 783 Engravings on Wood and 3 Coloured Plates. Published also in separate Parts, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.

Part I.—Mechanics, &c. Part III.—Electricity, &c.
Part II.—Heat. Part IV.—Sound and Light.

"Systematically arranged, clearly written, and admirably illustrated, it forms a model work for a class in experimental physics."—Saturday Review.

In 4 vols, imperial 8vo, cloth, £5; or half-morocco, £6 6s.

THE IMPERIAL DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A Complete Encyclopedic Lexicon, Literary, Etymological, Scientific, Technological, and Pronouncing.

By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D.
New Edition by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

Illustrated by above 3,000 Engravings on Wood.

"Few, except specialists, are likely to come across terms not to be found here; and the definitions are accurate and intelligible, developing into detailed explanations where necessary. The etymology is clear and concise, and the illustrations are copious, appropriate, and well executed."—Times

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILEY.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I. FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL.

Ready on Wednesday next, at all Libraries in Town and Country.

THE MAN WITH A SECRET.

3 vols.

By the Author of

"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab," "The Piccadilly Puzzle," "Miss Mephistopheles," &c.

II. THE MYSTERY OF M. FELIX.

By the Author of

"Great Porter Square," "Toilers of Babylon," &c.

In 3 vols.

"...A novel of great interest and power—one that can scarcely fail to enhance his already high reputation and extend his popularity as a writer of fiction.... It bubbles over with humour of the raciest and ripest character.... The author unravels with much dramatic effect as sensational, singular, and striking a story as could well be conceived. The air of mystery pervading the novel is successfully maintained till towards the closing chapters.... in conception and character, indeed, the work is quite distinct from the general run of modern novels—a circumstance which in itself lends value to Mr. Farjeon's latest literary effort, apart from other merits always readily recognisable in the writings of this accomplished author."—Scotsman.

III. BLIND FOLD.

By Florence Marryat.

By the Author of
"My Sister the Actress," &c.

3 vols.

"The story is well conceived and skilfully told... May be read with considerable pleasure."—Scotsman.

IV. A NEW OTHELLO.

By Iza Duffus Hardy.

By the Author of
"Love, Honour, and Obedience," &c.

3 vols.

"...A New Othello is a good story.... In many important respects it is the best work that has yet come from her now experienced pen.... Hypnotism is treated both healthily and artistically—it is employed as the simple machinery of an interesting story to which it is indispensable. The gradual subjection of a woman's will to a hypnotic practitioner is finely conceived and thoroughly well worked out; the intended point being never lost sight of for a moment. Indeed, 'A New Othello' is an admirably-constructed novel altogether.... it meets the taste of the hour without this being its apparent aim, and displays a wholesome and refreshing absence of self-consciousness.... The various characters are excellent as portraits; and the situations, sufficiently strong and dramatic in themselves, are rendered more so by the way in which they are managed."—Graphic.

"...A work at once refined and vigorous, brimful of excitement, yet free from vulgar sensational clap-net, and the artifice of the melodramatist of fiction.... A really admirable novel. The new Othello himself is a character of rare interest, and Dr. Fitzgibbon—a fascinating figure from first to last.... The women-folk are well-drawn and pleasant people.... A strong and interesting work.... A story of exceptional interest, told in good style, and dealing with a best of pleasant people."—Court Journal.

V. THE LAST OF Col. Rowan THE CORNETS.

Hamilton. 2 vols, 12s.

"Colonel Hamilton writes in a delightfully breezy and natural fashion of past days in the army, and his story 'The Last of the Cornets' is likely to be vastly appreciated by men in the service, and perhaps even more by those who were in the service a quarter of a century or so ago. Nor are army men likely to be the only appreciative readers of Col. Hamilton's story, for not only does he paint barracks life with a fidelity and verve which only practical experience and a love of his profession could ensure, but he has also introduced a sufficiently strong element of purely human interest to make his book acceptable to all lovers of honest, wholesome fiction. The story is well written, full of animation, and of special interest to the large class of readers who were in the service when cornets flourished, or are still interested in army life as it was and is. Colonel Hamilton must give us another service story ere long."—Court Journal.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S NEW NOVEL.

In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

FERRERS COURT.

By the Author of "Bootles' Baby," "Buttons," &c. [June 24.]

MRS. HUNGERFORD'S NEW NOVEL.

In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

HER LAST THROW.

By the Author of "Molly Bawn,"

"The Hon. Mrs. Vereker," &c.

[At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET STRAND, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now Ready, Price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

for JUNE, 1890, contains, among other articles of interest:—ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton, Author of "Nancy," &c. Part I. Chaps. XXI.—XXIII.—THE ROMANCE of HISTORY—IX. WILLIAM LITHGOW—A TRANSVERSAL of SIX—THE LEGION of HONOUR—CHARACTERISTICS of RUSSIAN LITERATURE—LLOYD COURTENAY'S BANISHMENT—SOME PECULIARITIES of SUSSEX—PEARL POWDER. By Mrs. Annie Edwards, Author of "Ought We to Visit Her?" &c. Chaps. XXV.—XXVIII., &c.

NEW WORKS of FICTION.

BY the AUTHOR of "AN ILL-REGULATED MIND."

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE. By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "A Dreamer," &c. In 8 vols., crown 8vo.

"MRS. DIEHL is excellent in her portrayal of masculine weakness; but when, on the other hand, she describes strength of character, it is real strength, and not, in the usual feminine fashion, a mere attempt to reproduce Charlotte Brontë's 'Rochester.' In 'HER THREE LOVERS' (3 vols.) it is the weaknesses, moral or otherwise, that predominate, but by no means to the exclusion of sympathy. The plot is complicated, and contains a surprise. Readers will be well-advised who enter upon the novel in order to discover this and its other good things for themselves."—The Graphic.

"In 'THE FAILURE of ELIZABETH' (3 vols.) the heroine is drawn with all the kindly knowledge and gentle experience which characterise Miss Poynter's art, and who, failure though she be, yet carries the sympathy of her reader with her to the end. The description of the sordid life in a German boarding-house reveals a humour for which we had not given Miss Poynter credit."—World.

"HUGH WESTBURY has written one of the best historical novels since 'The Last of the Barons' and 'The Last Days of Pompeii.'"

Saturday Review.

"Apart altogether, however, from its solid and skillful handling of character, 'ACTE' (3 vols.) fulfils all the conditions of successful romance. The incidents are admirable in invention, and natural—indeed, inevitable—in sequence. Most of all, from the general reader's point of view, the writer has proved that he can construct and tell a story which is from first to last rich in absorbing interest."—Academy.

"MR. GISSING's book is clever and amusing. 'THE EMANCIPATED' (3 vols.) is a work of genuine interest, full of careful character studies, and subtle touches of humour."—Morning Post.

NOTICE.—The New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s., of MISS MARIE CORELLI'S popular Novel, "ARDATH: The Story of a Dead Self," may now be obtained at all Booksellers and Railway Stations. The novel in this form becomes the latest addition to BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS, in which series the same author has three other novels, viz.: "A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS," "VENDETTA," and "THELMA."

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

Cassell & Company's Announcements.

"A book without a parallel."

RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE.

NOTICE.—The First Edition of "THE JOURNAL of MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF," translated by MATHILDE BLIND, has already been exhausted, and a Second Edition will be ready in a few days. 2 vols., price 24s.

Second Edition, now ready, price 10s. 6d.

THE REV. J. G. WOOD:

His Life and Work.

By his Son, the Rev. THEODORE WOOD.

With Portrait. Demy 8vo, cloth.

The Speaker says:—"Mr. Theodore Wood has done his work well. It was a simple tale he had to tell, and he has told it simply."

A Second Edition of Mr. HARRY FURNISS' "ROYAL ACADEMY ANTICS" is now on sale, price 2s. 6d.

BOOKS FOR HOLIDAY READING.

VOLUMES BY Q.

The Splendid Spur. Second Edition, now ready, price 5s.

The Astonishing History of Troy Town. By Q. Second Edition. Price 5s.

VOLUMES BY R. L. STEVENSON.

The Master of Ballantrae. Sixteenth Thousand. 5s.

Treasure Island. Illustrated. Twenty ninth Thousand. Price 5s.

Kidnapped. Illustrated Edition. Twenty-second Thousand. Price 5s.

The Black Arrow. Thirteenth Thousand. Price 5s.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION.

King Solomon's Mines. By H. RIDER HAGGARD. Sixty-eighth Thousand Price 5s.

Popular Edition, now ready, cloth, price 5s.

St. Cuthbert's Tower. By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of "The House on the Marsh," &c.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW STORY.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.

Little Mother Bunch. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH, Author of "Carrots," &c. 240 pages. Illustrated.

"The story is a very charming one."—Schoolman.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

To meet the latest requirements of the Educational Department, and of the Educational Commission.

SAMPSON LOW'S READERS.

Edited by JOHN GILL,

(Of Cheltenham.)

Author of "School Management," &c.

The great principle which has guided the selection of the matter is to adapt the lessons to the prevailing tastes and mental states of the successive periods in child life. Each lesson will contain a picture by some celebrated artist, as Raphael, Rubens, Turner, Landseer, or other of the world's great painters; prose, by one of the best authors; poetry, by one of the best poets; and a well-worn proverb.

Each book, while governed by the general principle regulating the series, will have one feature peculiar to itself—as, for instance, the Third Reader will introduce lessons on Nature Lore, Eastern and other Tales, Natural History, Talk and Tale of Moral Duties.

FIRST READER	... 9d.
SECOND READER	... 10d.	Now ready.
THIRD READER	... 1s.
FOURTH READER	... 1s. 3d.	In the press.
FIFTH READER	... 1s. 4d.
SIXTH READER	... 1s. 6d.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS.

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE.

Crown 8vo, fancy boards, 2s.; cloth, uniform, 1s. 6d.
LORNA DOONE. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
FAR from the MADDING CROWD. By THOMAS HARDY.
SENIOR PARTNER. By Mrs. RIDDELL.
CLARA VAUGHAN. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
THE GUARDIAN ANGEL. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.
HER GREAT IDEA, and other Stories. By Mrs. WALFORD.
SOME ONE ELSE. By Mrs. CROKER.
THE MAYOR of OASTERBRIDGE. By THOMAS HARDY.
THE CASTING AWAY of Mrs. LEOKS and Mrs. ALESHINE; and THE DUSANTES. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange."
ADELA OATHOART. By GEORGE MACDONALD.
ORIPPS the CARRIER. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
DRED. By HARRIET BECHER STOWE.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR. By THOMAS HARDY.
THE VASTY DEEP. By STUART CUMBERLAND.
DAISIES and BUTTERCUPS. By Mrs. RIDDELL.
GUILD COURT. By GEORGE MACDONALD.
MARY ANERLEY. By R. D. BLACKMORE.
 * * To be followed by others.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS of MR. STANLEY'S BOOKS.

THE CONGO, and the FOUNDING of its FREE STATE: a Story of Work and Exploration. 2 vols., demy 8vo. With over 100 Full-page and smaller Illustrations, 2 large Maps, and several smaller ones. Cloth extra, 21s.

"Mr. Stanley may fairly boast of having given to the world two of the most remarkable books of travel and adventure; and this second work is in every respect by far the more interesting."—Athenaeum.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

* * The Unabridged Edition, superior in paper and binding, and with the Original Maps, price 7s. 6d., can still be obtained.

"It is incomparably more lively than most books of African travel."—Saturday Review.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT; from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

* * The Unabridged Edition, superior in paper and binding, and with the Original Maps, price 12s. 6d., can still be obtained.

MY KALULU: Prince, King, and Slave. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.; gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"The book is extraordinarily fascinating, and will be read by everyone, man or boy, with breathless interest, from cover to cover."—Penny Illustrated Paper.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED), St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 7, 1890.

No. 944, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Growth of Capital. By Robert Giffen. (Bell.)

IN this work Mr. Giffen resumes the calculations which he initiated some years ago in his well-known essay on "Recent Accumulations of Capital." Here, even more than in that essay, the mere magnitude of the figures, the thousands of millions with which the statistician deals, affect the imagination like the immensity of astronomical distances. A more intelligent wonder is excited by the skill with which these vast masses of figures are handled. In a calculation of this sort there are two opposite dangers to be avoided. On the one hand are those purists who insist upon a precision which is impossible and for the purpose in hand unnecessary. It is not advisable to take care of the pence, or even of the pounds, where the scale upon which the estimate is constructed is so enormous. But, of course, it is possible to go too far in the neglect of accuracy. For example, Hooke—one of those whom Mr. Giffen, in an interesting historical retrospect, rescues from oblivion—first assumed the quantity of coin in the country, and then assumed the ratio between the amount of coin and personal property, "building an hypothesis upon an hypothesis" without any statistical foundation. Avoiding these dangerous extremes, Mr. Giffen holds safely an intermediate course between those who "blindly creep or sightless soar."

The results of the work may be summed up under two headings—the existing quantity of wealth measured in money, and the increase in the quantity of wealth during the last decade expressed as a ratio or percentage. The answer to the first problem may be roundly stated as ten thousand million pounds sterling. In thus estimating the national capital we do not regard the country as a going concern capable of being sold like a brewery. The estimate is not so much the selling value of the whole as the sum of the value of the parts considered each as separately saleable. We must guard against what logicians call the fallacy of composition and division. Thus understood, the estimate of national capital is useful as an indicator of a country's prosperity and of its capacity to endure strains and burdens. The indications afforded are not unfavourable to us in comparison with other countries. It is true that the amount of capital similarly estimated in the United States is probably as great as in the United Kingdom. But the amount per head is greater here. Our accumulations are greater than those of France, and exceed those of Italy even more than might be expected. The comparison of provinces as well as of nations is instructive. From the facts that Ireland has less than a twentieth of the property belonging to the United Kingdom, and that the property per head is less than a third of what it is in England, Mr. Giffen deduces some striking political reflections.

"Reckoning by wealth, England should have 86 per cent. of the representation of the United Kingdom; Scotland, by the same rule, should have about 64 only; and Ireland no more than 30. . . . These would be a representation of forces in Parliament, if we had perfectly just arrangements, and not merely a counting of heads."

The growth of wealth is, in some respects, an object easier to measure than its existing quantity. In the latter problem, that which we have been considering, the result may be vitiated by the omission of any item. But the omission of the same entry in the estimates for both 1885 and 1875 is not likely to disturb much the ratio between the two estimates. The growths of a great number of items may be fairly taken as samples of the total growth. Accordingly, we may accept with considerable confidence Mr. Giffen's computation that the value of the national capital has increased during the decade under consideration by 17 per cent. This result is at first sight disappointing, considering that the increase during the preceding decade, 1865-1875, amounted to 40 per cent. But then we have to take into account that there has occurred in the latter decade a fall of prices, an appreciation of money. Accordingly, in order to obtain the right measurement, we must correct our measuring-rod. This is a task familiar to Mr. Giffen. In his celebrated reports on the variation on the value of exports and imports, he encountered and surmounted a similar difficulty. The volume of our foreign trade as measured in money seemed not to have expanded until it was ascertained by Mr. Giffen that the measuring rod had been shrinking. Applying to the present problem a correction similar in principle, Mr. Giffen reaches the satisfactory conclusion that the retardation in the growth of wealth has been only apparent, that just as great progress has been made during the second decade as during the first.

Mr. Giffen's use of this delicate correction suggests some general reflections on the vicissitudes of economic theory. There can be little doubt that the reasoning on which this calculation rests would have been viewed with great suspicion by Mr. Giffen's predecessors in the line of economic orthodoxy. We still read in the most authoritative treatise on political economy, that it is in general impossible to say whether an article has "risen or fallen in respect to things in general." Now what Mr. Giffen's method demonstrates is that money has risen "in respect to things in general" by a certain percentage. When Canning in his classical speech in favour of the Bullion Report heaped ridicule upon those who maintained that the notes of the Bank of England were not depreciated, he regarded it as nonsense to speak of depreciation in any other sense but that which is defined by reference to a metallic standard. But now Mr. Giffen has shown that a different sort of depreciation with respect to commodities may exist and be measured. What if an undeveloped notion of this very species of depreciation was latent in the phrases on which Canning, Peel, and all the orthodox have poured such unmeasured ridicule "a sense of value in reference to currency as compared with commodities," and even the "abstract idea of a pound"? Perhaps it would have been better, instead of pulverising with such violence those heresies, to have diligently pressed out the drop of science which they contained. The natural and generally justified contempt which common sense and practical genius entertain for the vagaries of speculation may be indulged too far. What is derided as heresy by one generation may be accepted as orthodoxy by the next. This is a trite moral; but it is pointed by a signal instance. Here is a conception which is scouted as fantastical by the text-books, and, indeed, involves considerable philosophical difficulties. Yet this once heretical and still highly speculative principle is adopted in practice by one whose just authority is founded upon a peculiar solidity of intellect—one whom even those who differ from him in economic theory acknowledge as supreme in his mastery of statistical fact, and those who agree with him admire as a champion of orthodoxy and a malleus hereticorum.

F. Y. EDGEWORTH.

Palestine. By Major C. R. Conder. (George Philip & Son.)

THE present work is a condensed record of explorations and discoveries in Palestine. No man has laboured more indefatigably, and none, perhaps, with greater success, than Major Conder in throwing light upon many hitherto enigmatical points in the Bible. The services he has rendered to students of theology, science, and history are of world-wide repute; and, in producing his present publication, he places a work of great utility and interest within the means and the understanding of all classes. It cannot fail to rouse the dormant interest of a large number of readers in this country, to whom Palestine—the human cradle of Christianity—would otherwise be a dead letter.

In an introductory chapter Major Conder gives an outline of the earliest exploration of Palestine. This he dates back to the invasion of Thothmes III. He attributes a good deal of our knowledge of the topography of Palestine in the fourth century, A.D., to the Onomasticon of Eusebius—which was translated into Latin by Jerome. From Antonius Martyr—a great traveller and pilgrim—much has been learnt, especially regarding the customs and beliefs of the people of Palestine in the sixth century. Major Conder gives credit to the Arab invaders of Syria for their toleration and generous attitude towards the Christians. He says:

"The conquest of Palestine by Omar did not by any means lead to the closing of the country to Christians. One of the best known and most detailed accounts of the Holy Land written up to that time was taken down from the lips of the French Bishop of Arulphus, by Adamnan, Bishop of Iona, about 680 A.D., in the Monastery of Henry. It appears that Arulphus was in Palestine during the reign of Mu'awiyah, the first Khalif of Syria ruling in Damascus; and the same policy of toleration and peace, which was inaugurated by this ruler, enabled St Willibald, in 722 A.D., to journey through the whole length of the land."

After the introductory chapter, the author proceeds to treat of "The Explorations in Judea," "The Survey of Samaria," "Researches in Galilee," "The Survey of Moab," "Exploration in Gilead," and "Northern Syria." These chapters form a valuable and concise record of modern research in the land of the Bible. The book further contains a useful general index and an appendix. There are also numerous illustrations and maps, all of which enhance the value of the work.

The most interesting and instructive portion of the book is Chapter VII., "The Results of Exploration." It is a scholarly and well-considered paper, in which the author has poured forth all his knowledge gained from careful study and long experience. Want of space precludes many quotations, but the author's remarks as to the ancient fertility of the land in comparison with its present condition are of special interest.

"Palestine," he says, "is still a land of corn, wine, and oil, as of yore, and sheep are still fed in the same pastoral regions; the same vineyards are still famous, the corn of its plains still yields an hundredfold. I am unable to see that in any respect, either in climate or natural productions, can the land have changed, excepting always that a decrease in population has led to a decrease in cultivation."

Major Conder very rightly argues that the most interesting study in connection with Palestine is that of ethnology, and he observes (referring to the natives of Syria) that "it is still thought in England that they are Turks, though the number of Turks in the country south of Damascus might perhaps be counted by tens." I readily agree that there exist in Syria various races and many religions. But I think his assertion that the population is "very mixed" is somewhat misleading, for he immediately proceeds to enumerate the various religions and sects. In another place he says:—"Race and language are not synonymous." Surely the same thing may be said of race and religion.

Referring to the Druzes of Mount Lebanon, the author is inclined to think that they are of Persian descent. It is more probable, however, that the origin of the Druzes was coeval with that of the Persian race; they may possibly even be descended from the same stock. It is also to be regretted that the author—evidently through want of space—occasionally makes such bald remarks as—"In the time of Christ Greek was spoken in Palestine." Does he mean that Greek was the sole language spoken, or only that it was used among other dialects?

With regard to Arabic, Major Conder remarks that "the Lebanon muleteers' jargon would certainly not be understood by an university professor of Arabic." In a manner this is undoubtedly true, but one must inquire into the causes. As a rule, those who study Arabic devote themselves to what is called the classical language, and there the matter rests. Very few take the trouble to follow the developments of the language, from the earliest times down to the present day. One often hears Arabic distinguished as ancient and modern, from which it might be inferred that the difference between the two is like that which exists between ancient and modern Greek. As a matter of fact, there is scarcely any difference in respect either of vocabulary or grammar between the best Arabic writing of the present day and the earliest works of Arabic prose—excepting possibly a few modifications adopted through modern exigencies. The language of the present day, in all Arabic-speaking countries, is certainly more corrupt than that of olden times; but this is owing especially to the intermixture of races and the introduction of foreign elements. Nevertheless, it is a noteworthy fact that, of all the ancient languages of the world, none has maintained the same degree of purity as Arabic, in spite of many obstacles. There is of course a good deal of difference between the speech of townsmen and of peasants; between the speech of Egyptians and Syrians. Still, the difference is assuredly not greater than that which exists between the dialects spoken in different counties of England.

While on this subject I must refer to another matter, which Major Conder seems to ignore. This is the effect of the language on the character of the people. A true knowledge of a people—of their manners, customs, and modes of thought—is impossible without an intimate acquaintance with their language and religious beliefs; and a careful study of a living race is essential to a correct understanding of its history. The effect which the Arabic language has produced on all Arabic-speaking people is immense, not only by its literature, but also through the stories persistently handed down from generation to generation. This applies to the population of Syria and Egypt at large—both Muhammadans and Christians; especially to those who are free, or almost free, from contact with Europeans.

Another matter should also be borne in mind: the effect of the Muhammadan religion on the character of the people—on Christians as well as on Muhammadans. So great is the influence of Arabic (through its being the sacred language of Islam) that it has not only permeated other Oriental languages, but it has influenced the life and character of most Oriental nations. Arabic literature is the most extensive of all the living literatures of the East, most of which were written by Muhammadans, whose minds have been irrigated (so to speak) by the doctrines and ideas of Islam. It should be remembered that Muhammadanism is a religion which regulates the social system of the people. The promises of a future life in the Kuran are a repetition—only in a more glorious aspect—of their life on earth. Hence, their social system, manners, customs, &c., are dictated to Muhammadans by their Book of Faith. Necessarily, therefore, those Christians who have for centuries been in close contact with their Muhammadan compatriots cannot escape being greatly influenced by Islam. When I speak of the people, I mean the peasants and lower classes, who must always be considered as the true representatives of a nation. It is, of course, useless to take into consideration the inhabitants of large ports and cities, a great number of whom have for many years been indoctrinated with Western ideas of civilisation, and have adopted European customs (especially French), and, with them, European ideas of religion and morality. These can hardly be classed now as natives.

Take therefore the lower middle and the working classes. A Muhammadan is continually swearing by Allah; so does the Christian. The Muhammadan swears by his Prophet; so the Christian swears by Christ and the Virgin and the Saints. Muhammadan women are veiled; so are the Christians, though they are not so particular in hiding their faces. The same dress, food, and customs are used by the Christians as by the Muhammadans.

Major Conder strongly insists on the necessity of the study of native life. He says:—

"the object of those interested in such studies should be to organise inquiries from sympathetic residents"; and again "a complete Fellah vocabulary should be collected in Syria. The vulgar pronunciation should be preserved, the vulgar idioms and grammatical blunders. A great many archaic words which are not in Lexicons would thus be unearthed, just as we find valuable survivals in the dialects of our own provinces. To this vocabulary every legend, song, proverb, or mythical tale that can be gathered should be added, and every custom noted. The charms and amulets worn, the burial, birth, and marriage rites, the common oaths and salutations, the peasants' ideas of etiquette and ceremony—every one of these has an unknown scientific value."

I heartily endorse these opinions. A collection of this kind would greatly increase our knowledge of the people of that ancient land. Moreover, it would be of much practical utility in other ways. But these things are not easy to accomplish. What says the Arab poet?

"How often man cannot attain
His wish and heart's desire,
As sailing ships but rarely gain
The wind they most require."

Before concluding, I am constrained to refer to Major Conder's remarks about Muhammadanism in pp. 122 to 126. He here waxes eloquent and enthusiastic. Eloquence is always pleasing, but enthusiasm is dangerous. It may lead one unconsciously into exaggeration. The author says that "there are in Islam as many antagonisms, as much indifference and disbelief, as many sects mutually hateful, as much discord and contention over abstract dogmas, as are to be found in the West."

It would have been interesting had Major Conder enumerated these numerous sects instead of speaking in general terms. As to religious indifference, I venture to say (and I think that the author on further reflection, as well as all those who have had experience in Muhammadan countries, will agree with me) that more religious fervour is to be found among Muhammadans of all classes than in any other religious body in the world. This much is certainly to be said in their praise. The ignorance and superstition which the author describes as prevailing among the poorer Muhammadans are unfortunately too true. On the other hand, it must be observed that ignorance and superstition equally exist among the poorer Christian communities. I fail, therefore, to see why Islam should be made responsible for these evils. One must go elsewhere to seek the cause. It is impossible here to enter fully into this matter; suffice it to say that the darkness of ignorance and superstition are fast fading away before the rising sun of knowledge, in spite of many obstacles which have hitherto like mountain-clouds barred the light from reaching the ancient races of that ancient land.

H. ANTHONY SALMONÉ.

In Scottish Fields. By Hugh Haliburton. (Paterson.)

THIS is the ripest and in every sense the best book that has yet come from the possibly too facile pen of the writer who occasionally and quite unnecessarily veils his personality under the designation of "Hugh Haliburton." Alike in subjects and in style, it is a remarkable advance upon For Puir Auld Scotland's Sake, the volume which immediately preceded it. Perhaps it is so because its author has almost emancipated himself from that fascinating—to some minds—Scotch parochialism, of which Emeritus Professor Blackie is at once the showman and the preacher. When Hugh Haliburton has given up the habit of talking about a poet as "a makkar," and using such phrases as "rustic bard," even under the shelter of inverted commas, he will have completely emancipated himself. As things are, the criticism which is here given or implied, both of the life and of the works of Burns, is distinguished by robust sense. It is sandwiched between articles of an informing and descriptive character, dealing mainly with rural Scotland, and in short chapters bearing such titles as "Burns Leaving School," "Burns introducing Himself," "Burns and Highland Scenery," and "The Prose of Burns." A good deal of the characterisation which is included in these chapters is indeed only lucid conventionality—for example, when we are told of Burns's prose:

"There we have in a long scarcely broken series of views the man Robert Burns, divested of his singing robes, his laurel crown, and his lyre, handling the rude implements of his earthly toil, and wearing 'hoddie gray and a' that.'"

This is little better than what Carlyle used to call "a dud." Still worse is this:

"Too much is being made of the art of Burns. . . . Burns belongs to the class of natural poets. He is of kin to Shakspeare and Scott, rather than to Pope and Tennyson. He is of those who 'never blotted a line,' whose song was meant for ears and hearts, rather than eyes and intellect. . . . There is no science in his poetry. His strains are racy. They are such as should come from the lips of an inspired ploughman. Ploughman he was, and not penman."

Hugh Haliburton objects, and very properly objects, to the fantastic cleverness which would make out Burns's work to be "a clever, but merely mechanical, whittling of cherry-stones." But his own "natural" theory of Burns's art is not much better. If it meant that Burns was born with a greater instinct for art than most poets, everybody would agree with it. But this is apparently not what is meant. For we are told that Burns was "a literary man in the sense that what he left is literature, but in no other. His were not the literary habits that make writing a profession." If that be the case, how comes it that Hugh Haliburton places Burns in the same class with Shakspeare and Scott, who made writing not only a profession, but a highly successful profession, and whose "literary habits" must, therefore, have been by no means despicable? Beside, were Burns's "literary habits" so very different from those of the ordinary writer by profession? He was not careless; he was in the habit of composing his verses before he reduced them to manuscript. If he did not blot much, he often revised a great deal; his prose bears only too many traces of "literary habits."

As a rule, however, Hugh Haliburton's contributions to criticism are marked, as already said, by strong Scotch sense, like that shown in his dismissal of Mr. R. L. Stevenson's fantastic representation of Burns as a Don Juan. His article on Dunbar, under the title of "Scotland's Earlier Burns," is a solid piece of work—informative rather than critical in the true sense; from the purely literary point of view, indeed, it will not compare—to take only recent estimates of Dunbar—with that of Prof. Minto. All things considered, the best essays in this volume are those which deal, not with the literary, but with the social aspects of Scottish life of the past, and to some extent also of the present, such as "Holy Fairs," "The Revolution in the Rural Districts," "The Old Scottish Ploughman," "The Doom of Vagrancy," and "Whipping the Cat"—which last phrase means the practice among tailors of "going from farm-town to farm-town, even from cottar-house to cottar-house, and there working for and meanwhile messing and lodging with the inmates." These papers, most of which are based on the writer's own experiences, contain a great amount of out-of-the-way knowledge, and are agreeably though not brilliantly written. They are full of painstaking photography. This sketch of a Scotch ploughman, after he has been under the hands of the itinerant tailor, is a good example of Hugh Haliburton's style of writing and of his habit of looking at men:

"Jock was a striking figure when, under favourable sartorial auspices, and with health, youth, and fine May weather in easy auxiliary attendance, he assumed the part which, according to Shakspeare, we all pass through, of 'braw wooer,' and stalked 'down the lang glen' to see his jo. His faultless fawn-coloured corduroys caught him at the knees, and fell loose about his ankles, a knot of blue and red ribbons danced above his calves, and mother o' pearl glanced lavishly about his fetlocks. His waistcoat was of crimson plush, and twinkled with rows of starry white buttons, while his short jacket of mole-black or snuff-brown velvet showed in front, and at sleeve band another display of pearls, but of larger size—large and lustrous as moons. His broad blue bonnet surmounted brows of more than regal happiness, and was adorned with a rosette and a whip of gaily-coloured streamers, that rustled in his left lug like the cap-wing of Mercury. . . . Our picture of Jock's equipment as a wooer is complete when we have put a song in his mouth, a book of ballads in his right hand, and a brass-bound whip under his left arm."

Almost no book of the same kind as In Scottish Fields has been published for a number of years—certainly none nearly so good.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

The Foundations of the Creed. By Harvey Goodwin. (John Murray.)

The Foundations of the Creed is an effort to expound and defend the Christian religion as expressed in the Apostles' Creed in a manner that shall be persuasive to modern modes of thought. The author observes that, "in some respects Pearson's great work fails to meet all the wants . . . felt by those who in our own days study and think about" the Christian Faith; and he therefore considers that an attempt "to present to English readers something of the nature of a discussion of the whole question of the Foundations of the Creed" is "likely to do some good in its generation."

We quote this language because it indicates the first and most obvious difference between Bishop Pearson and Bishop Goodwin. Bishop Pearson wrote for the theologian, and will scarcely be appreciated without special knowledge and training; Bishop Goodwin, on the contrary, strives to gain the ear of the intelligent citizen, whose only preparation for the subject is a sincere interest in it. "Something of the nature of a general discussion of the whole question" is a fairly accurate description of his book. It has just enough of system to make it clear, but no parade of special learning, and no elaborate accumulation of references; it will be easily followed by every reader of intelligence. A second difference of method Bishop Goodwin himself calls attention to. The older work was originally preached to a congregation, and thus "the reader sitting (as it were) inside the church, is armed against those who by the nature of the case, are outside"—against atheists, Jews, Photinians, &c.; but, continues Bishop Goodwin, "I am not so sure that he is protected against those doubts and difficulties which he carries about with him in his own heart." In other words, the modern divine, going deeper down than his predecessor, is more sympathetic. He does not divide men sharply into believers and heretics, and maintain towards the latter an attitude of hostility and scorn. The heretic he confutes is a voice in his own soul; the light that leads astray is light from heaven, and, perhaps, need not lead astray.

Both these characteristics of Bishop Goodwin's book—its popular character and its sympathetic charity—connect themselves with the distinction he makes in his opening chapter between faith and knowledge. He insists that no article of faith can be known as a proposition of Euclid is known; he even suggests that "where there is no place left for doubt there is no opening for the exercise of belief properly so called"; he would "concede that all men are agnostic," but would like some special word to be coined, as, for instance, "apistic," to express impossibility of believing. This position, so familiar to readers of Browning, is not developed at any length, it is merely stated; but the whole treatise is permeated with the spirit of it. The cock-sure, positive style of reasoning, which aims at convincing a man against his will, is banished altogether, and replaced by an almost anxious candour and sobriety of statement—far more persuasive, of course, to modern minds. We have said that Bishop Goodwin addresses the general reader; but he also contends that the Apostles' Creed should be held for the ordinary Christian a sufficient definition of the Christian faith, and he has carefully refrained from discussing matters of doctrine not referred to in it. Of these he mentions six in particular—inspiration, original sin, justification, predestination, the authority of the Church, and the Sacraments. Even as regards the Creed itself, the "tendency" of his exposition is to "reduce the difficulty of accepting the Creed to that of accepting the Incarnation."

Inasmuch as the inspiration of Scripture is not dealt with, it is almost needless to record that so logical a writer as Bishop Goodwin does not use the authority of Scripture in support of his positions. He even points out at the end of his Introduction the impossibility of relying upon the infallibility of either Church or Bible. This, of course, at once distinguishes The Foundations of the Creed from the huge class of works which depend upon the authority of either Church or Bible, and make elaborate use of tradition or of Bible texts to establish their positions. The special strength and persuasiveness of Bishop Goodwin's book is the special weakness of too many volumes of Christian apologetic; he makes a consistent and successful effort to rest his case upon arguments and intuitions for which his readers will not have to refer farther than their own minds.

We have devoted most of our space to a consideration of the method of the Bishop of Carlisle. It is its method which gives the book its importance. Able and adequate as the matter is, it cannot claim to be new. Nor is the method entirely new. The bishop tells us in his last chapter that he has been led to the conception and execution of The Foundations of the Creed by his "participation in periodical literature." He has himself already, on a smaller scale, written papers, "bearing directly or indirectly upon the Christian Creed in its relation to human knowledge," in a style which intelligent laymen can follow; but we are acquainted with no work of at all the proportions of the one before us which deals in a similar spirit with religious questions. Bishop Goodwin can claim to speak for his own Church; and his unusual scientific and philosophic attainments entitle him to a respectful hearing from science, and teach him, what so many divines are ignorant of, the language in which science must be addressed. We scarcely like to say that the modern Pearson on the Creed has been written; but the task, after reading Bishop Goodwin, no longer seems impossible.

We might remark upon almost all the bishop's fourteen chapters. He has the unusual power of stating an argument pleasantly as well as clearly, so that the reader follows without effort, and continually wishes to reach the end of a vista his guide only looks down. Moreover, the wise reserve of some passages, and the judicious compression of others, suggest continual comments to the critic; but we must be content with one only. The skill which the writer shows in arguing upon God or the Holy Spirit or the forgiveness of sins in terms that can be easily followed and understood, does not help him when he has only to make a plain statement. He gives us no sufficient account of the Gospel narratives. So far as our belief in Christ is historical, it is a matter of knowledge rather than of belief. The nature of the documents upon which that historical knowledge rests should be stated as succinctly, as definitely, as clearly as possible in every defence of Christianity however elementary. Bishop Goodwin gives us an excellent passage upon the opening chapters of S. Luke, and valuable comments upon the evangelical records; but we get no adequate summary of the nature of the narratives upon which our knowledge of Christ rests. In any work written to persuade the modern doubter to accept the Christian religion, we hold this to be a serious omission. No definition of the inspiration of the Gospels is necessary, but a criticism of them merely as documents is essential. This is a weak point in a persuasive to Christianity unusually wise and candid, and certain to exercise an immediate and valuable influence upon the methods of Christian apologists.

RONALD BAYNE.

The Life of Carmen Sylva. Translated from the German by Baroness Deichmann. (Kegan Paul.)

THE binding of this book is very good, its paper irreproachable, its type excellent, its contents indifferent. For this disappointment the translator is not responsible. Occasionally—as when speaking of General von Moltke (p. 100), she informs us that "Princess Elizabeth became much attached to this so eminent and distinguished man"—her speech betrays her origin; but, on the whole, she has translated Baroness Stackelberg's book into idiomatic English. We may notice here the remark of Moltke made in 1866 anent the future King of Roumania, then Prince Charles of Hohenzollern. "That young Prince of Hohenzollern," said the Prussian field-marshal, "will make his mark and become talked about."

This is one of the few historical references in the book which would interest the general reader. To tell the plain truth—the book is dull. The reason of this is not far to seek. The book is saturated with introspection and lacking in incident. In this it faithfully mirrors the character of the illustrious lady whose character it purports to describe. No one, therefore, can fairly complain of the author, unless, indeed, it be urged against her that she has disclosed to the public eye feelings too sacred to be recorded even in a private diary. This, however, is a matter less of taste than of national prejudice, and a Teuton would regard the Schwärmerei of a German poetess with more favour than a cold-blooded Englishman. We are told that the poetic journal of the princess for 1860 "reveals a soul longing for God." Many extracts are given from this journal; one must here suffice. On January 2, 1869, Princess Elizabeth writes:

"My early years have been rich—rich in love, in sunshine, and many trials. I have always been saved from one thing, and that is to be bereft of all joy. This weight has never fallen on my heart, and so I am still young and strong, and look forward to middle age with joy and pleasure. If only heaven will continue to grant me the power of writing poetry, I will guard and keep it as a sacred shrine. I do nothing to cultivate the gift in order not to become vain. I only beg that it may live on for me and in me, and pray for the freshness of youth, which is necessary for writing a poem from one's heart. Adieu, you beautiful year, and may the new year look in kindly upon my room and my heart. 'Tout ou rien' shall be my motto" (p. 119).

The chief incidents in the life of the Princess Elizabeth, of Wied, can be briefly stated. She was born on December 9, 1843, and was married to Prince Charles of Roumania on November 15, 1869. On September 8, 1870, she gave birth to a daughter. Well had it been for the peace of Roumania had the wife of her ruler been the mother of many children; but this was not to be. Her only child died on Maundy Thursday, 1874. Those who were allowed to approach the parents during their bitter bereavement were struck by their resignation to God's will. "Dites à leur tous," said the Princess, "que je tâche de suivre l'exemple de ma mère. Je l'ai vue souffrir! Elle était plus forte que moi!" (p. 177). Although written some years before, a verse from one of Carmen Sylva's English and, in our opinion, most beautiful of her poems may be quoted here:

"In life's deep sorrow, grief, and pain,
When none by me below'd remain,
I ever heard the thrilling strain:
Oh, serve the Lord with gladness!"

We can well believe that the childless queen felt keenly the disappointment of her hopes on that day (November 26, 1886) when her husband's nephew was declared his successor. But the queen had already raised a monument to her lost child, which is enshrined in the most famous and magnificent of Roumanian churches. "I have undertaken a great work for the Church of Curtea d'Ardeş," she writes to her mother on March 5, 1886. "I am inscribing the gospels on enormous sheets of vellum, from which they are then to be read every Thursday as a recollection of that Thursday on which I heard them read beside the coffin of my child" (p. 293). In the Roumanian churches the words of the four evangelists describing the Passion of our Lord are read every Maundy Thursday, and are called "the twelve gospels," as their reading is interrupted twelve times with song and prayer. Of the beauty of the Cathedral Curtea d'Ardeş it is difficult to write without appearing to exaggerate. The Queen described it as "like one of the Arabian Nights, with its magnificent background of mountains, which are as high as Caraiman."

Recent events in Roumania are of great interest, but they are not dealt with in this book. "In politics the Prince is my oracle," wrote the Queen in 1884, "and I avoid discussing them with anyone else." Happy, indeed, is the country where the consort of the sovereign does not concern herself with party politics, and Roumania and Greece are both blessed with queens who have no desire to rule. The good that Queen Elizabeth has done is simply incalculable. This is manifest not only in the moral but in the intellectual character of her court. She has herself said that she was "first a wife, then the mother of her country, and then a poetess." By a singular perversion of merit her claims as a poetess have taken precedence, both in this book and in general repute, of her far nobler services as a queen and a patriot. In all relations of life, both public and private, she has been a true and admirable woman; but in the republic of letters the poems of Carmen Sylva will be finally pronounced—what they really are—mediocre. Posterity, however, which is beyond the reach of the most industrious flatterer, will give Queen Elizabeth of Roumania her full due as “the mother of her country.”

J. G. COTTON MINCHIN.

THE HISTORY OF THE EARLY GREEK PEOPLE.

Geschichte des Griechischen Volkes bis zur Zeit Solons. Von H. Welzhofer. (Gotha: Perthes.)

THE Germans have surprised the world in a good many ways since 1866. But the improvement of German literary style has been perhaps even a greater surprise than their victories, their growing commerce, or their colonial policy. Picturesqueness has acclimatised itself across the Rhine, and German works on history can now sometimes be read with pleasure, as well as studied with profit. Herr Welzhofer's account of the early Greeks (really the second volume of his “Geschichte des Altertums”) is an excellent example of the new manner. It is brightly and pleasantly written, and glides easily from topic to topic. The brevity necessary in a part of so large a plan has not degenerated into curtness or prevented the story from being artistically told. With excellent taste, the author has recognised that to tell the legends briefly is to spoil them. Yet, though they are not here repeated, he manages somehow to convey to us an impression of the wealth of poetry which is locked up in them, and he reveals to us the Greeks as an artistic people.

The last few years have seen in Europe a great revival and extension of the taste for things Hellenic. The world is really receiving a fresh instalment of that wonderful and all-embracing impulse which we call Hellenism. The present history distinctly takes its place as a communication of Hellenism as well as a record of facts. The historian is doing far more than recording the past; he has caught its spirit, and (if we are not mistaken) he will impart that spirit to his readers.

From another point of view, too, his work is interesting. It illustrates a second change which is in progress—the reaction against the sceptical school of historical enquirers. The incessant destructive criticism of ancient statements is felt to have gone far enough. People have hoped that the denudation of years would lay bare at last the solid rock of fact; but layer after layer of material is disintegrated and the solid truth is never found at the bottom. What wonder then if a certain number of independent minds think that inquiry is on a wrong track, or that a right track has been followed too far; that the statements even of the simplest old authorities may be sometimes true; that all which is strange is not necessarily false; that tradition is not always a liar; and that great men do sometimes influence the current which seems to carry them along? No doubt the young science of anthropology has done something to bring about this change of mind. It has revealed to us on indisputable evidence, and even as existing in the present day, institutions, incidents, legends, and states of mind among other peoples which are closely parallel or akin to early Greek and Roman affairs; while instances in which the unlettered tradition of savages has been found true cannot fail to raise the credit of the traditions which tell us of a Roman kingship, of an Etruscan dynasty, or of a Trojan war. Herr Welzhofer restores Lycurgus to his place as a great man and a great legislator; Lycurgus is no collective name of a priestly guild, no alias of a god. In Homer he finds one poet, and the greatest of poets; and he speaks with deep regret of the share which his countrymen have had in the fruitless effort to argue the poet away and (as Mr. A. Lang expresses it) to “rend his songs.”

Of the points in which (even in his handling of Homer) we find ourselves unable to agree with Herr Welzhofer, it is hardly worth while to speak. His book is vigorous enough and fresh enough to deserve a simply commendatory notice.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

NEW NOVELS.

Cutting for Partners. By John Cordy Jeaffreson. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Failure of Elizabeth. By E. Frances Poynter. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

Till the Great Assize. By Vere Clavering. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

The Conspirator. By Count Paul P—. Edited by Frank Harkut. In 2 vols. (Sampson Low.)

For so Little. By Helen Davis. (Swan Sonnenschein.)

Who is the Man? By James Selwyn Tait. (Chapman & Hall.)

Agatha's Quest. By R. H. Sherard. (Trischler.)

AFTER being silent for some years in the department of fiction, Mr. Jeaffreson makes a welcome re-appearance with his Cutting for Partners. The story is none of those spasmodic attempts to catch a little fleeting popularity which are the feature of the day with so many novelists, but a clever, honest, and entertaining piece of work. It is a novel by a man who can think, and think to some purpose, and his delineation of three generations of the Challoners is marked by much vigour and originality. The first volume is the least interesting, but it is absolutely necessary as laying the basis for the future development of the characters; while the third volume, which is generally the strongest test of a writer of fiction, is one of the most charming and successful pieces of composition we have read for a long time. The growth of character in Sophy and Robin—the hero and heroine—from childhood to womanhood and manhood is tenderly and lovingly depicted, and is marked by many natural and graceful touches. Admiral Challoner, also, is all through a distinct and impressive individuality, from the time when he begins life as a boy under Nelson till the time when he closes his earthly course, beloved and respected by the nation he has gallantly served. Of course, the novel has its secret; and it takes the form of a harmless deception practised upon the Admiral by his wife, Antoinetta, who is perhaps the best and most lovable character in the whole work. Knowing how earnestly he desires offspring of his own, she yields to the strong temptation of palming off Sophy upon him as his own child, whereas she is really his niece. But the innocent imposture does no one any harm, and it causes the admiral to love for her own sake a child whom he would otherwise have held in abhorrence, owing to an old feud. The author demonstrates his medical lore in many parts of the story; and there is something touchingly pathetic in the way in which the admiral and his wife endeavour to conceal from each other the knowledge of certain fatal maladies from which both are suffering. Some readers may argue that Antoinetta, who is as truthful and upright as the day, would never have deceived her husband as to the parentage even of his brother's orphan grandchild; but the weight of the temptation has to be considered, and she paid for the error by bitter self-reproach. East Anglian life is graphically reproduced in these pages; and one figure especially, Mr. Peter Norcross, the old family solicitor, stands out in bold relief. There are other characters also little less skilfully drawn. Mr. Jeaffreson has produced a very able work, and one both complex and comprehensive in its interests.

Miss Poynter is scarcely fair to her heroine in entitling her novel The Failure of Elizabeth. If she fails to win the love of her husband, the Rev. Robert Holland, vicar of Thornton Briars, the fault is not hers. Holland is a cold, hard, unsympathetic man, who marries Elizabeth when still a girl, and treats her with reserve and a total lack of affection. He even exasperates her by giving his confidences to a scheming and volatile woman, on the ground that she knows all about his parish work. The Rev. Robert Holland is, in short, a curmudgeon; and his early career was marked by certain pecuniary eccentricities which would have brought him within the meshes of the law but for the considerate kindness of his ecclesiastical superior. He originally makes the acquaintance of Elizabeth Verrinder under somewhat romantic circumstances in Germany. The young impressionable girl gets to believe in him thoroughly as a superlatively good man; but, after marriage, she becomes sadly disillusionised. Hers was a nature “where a strong individuality was for ever in revolt against a scarcely less strong instinct of submission,” and experience had not been sufficiently extensive to adjust their claims. Her sordid husband did not understand her, so they daily drifted further apart, only to be reconciled when Holland was upon his death-bed. The characters in this story are carefully drawn; and if Miss Poynter does not depend upon excitement for effect, she appeals to us by something better—a style that is at once strong, flowing, and lucid.

Till the Great Assize is a formidable title, and seems naturally to portend the punishment of some great crime, whose perpetrator has escaped the hands of earthly justice. It is, therefore, rather disappointing to find no reference to this final judgment until the last page of the third volume, and then to discover that the grand secret which has to be unravelled concerns only the identity of a little child. Apart from this flaw of nomenclature, Vere Clavering's story possesses quite the average degree of interest. Gladys Ackroyd's sorrows are, indeed, calculated to stir the sympathy of the reader; and she is a heroine who can be brave and not merely mawkish and sentimental. The chief fault against her is that she could fall so readily into the wiles of so palpable a swindler and mauvais sujet as Wilfred Ackroyd, a man in every way despicable. All the time, Basil Glendyne, who has loved her from childhood, and is worth a hundred Ackroyds, is permitted to eat his heart out in grief and disappointment. Only when he has proved by fire, so to speak, how deep his attachment is, and when he has grown grey by labour and sorrow, does he meet with his reward, and Gladys finds in his tried affection a sure haven. The tragic death of the scapegrace Ackroyd is related with some power; and another of the few really good things in the book is the way in which Ned Radford, who has been temporarily led astray by Ackroyd, asserts his manhood and recovers himself. Basil's father, the irascible old Sir Everard Glendyne, who is ever ready with that most insupportable of phrases, "I told you so," is capably drawn. Society hunters get some hard knocks. Glendyne eschews all sets, and, by way probably of showing that society is not necessary to a man's rise, he eventually becomes one of the ablest and most honoured of Her Majesty's judges. In spite of a certain want of grip, this novel is readable.

The horrors of Russian despotism, especially in Poland, and the ineffectual attempts of patriotism to overthrow the imperial system were never more vividly described than they are in some chapters of The Conspirator. It purports to be a romance of real life. The editor vouches for the truth of the main incidents, which are sufficiently startling to satisfy even the most exacting in this respect. It seems almost incredible that in this advanced age cruelties should be practised suggestive only of barbaric times. But the events detailed in Count Paul P——'s revelations are of comparatively recent occurrence, and many of the persons who took part in them are still alive. Two characters make an indelible impression upon the reader: Alexei Wassiljevitch, a man of infinite power and resource; and Miriam, a beautiful Jewess, who exhibits a sublime and unparalleled devotion. There is one observation in these volumes which conspirators would do well to reflect upon, and it is made by the cleverest and most restless plotter of his time.

"I am as old as the century," he says, "and I have lived through many changes. My experience has led me to the conclusion that conspirators have done very little, if anything, for the cause of liberty and the rights of man."

But what has poor England done that she should call down this condemnation from the Count: "Time was when your Palmerstons and Gladstones thundered at Czars and Bombas. Nowadays, you are glad to elink away with a novel in one pocket and peace with honour in the other." This novel is sure to attract a wide circle of readers, but on other than purely literary grounds.

For so Little is the story of a crime. It traces the career of a clever, intellectual young man, whose character becomes gradually more and more debased, until for money's sake he actually poisons one person and endeavours to murder his wife in the same way. Laurence Maher seemed to have a brilliant future before him, for he was gifted with external beauty, high mental capacity, and the power of drawing men, and more particularly women, to himself. But there was a latent strain of vice in his nature, which, encouraged, grew by what it fed on. His end was melancholy in the extreme. The author cleverly keeps the secret as to who the real murderer is till towards the close, suspicion being all the way through thrown upon a young lady, Beatrice Morte, who is passionately in love with Maher. But in the end all is made plain. The scene is laid in Australia, but there is little scope for local colouring, as the novel is one of character. It is unquestionably exciting.

Exciting also is Who is the Man? a Tale of the Scottish Border. But Mr. Tait makes us sup too full of horrors. A series of the most ghastly murders is committed, which forcibly remind us of the Whitechapel tragedies; and after suspicion has unjustly hung upon two persons, one of whom is tried for the crimes, the real murderer is discovered in the person of a poor, half-witted fellow, who takes revenge for certain wrongs in this way. Those who like a gruesome story have it here in perfection.

A decidedly sensational story is Agatha's Quest, but it is by no means destitute of ability. Agatha is a newspaper correspondent who is deputed to unravel the secret of a murder committed under extraordinary circumstances. It would be unfair to the author to reveal the nature of the remarkable, not to say terrible, discovery she ultimately makes; but it is a wholly new and unexpected incident. Mr. Sherard scarcely seems so happy when he is discussing the mysteries of a newspaper office.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

THREE VOLUMES OF VERSE.

Poems. By Joseph Thomas Chapman. (Bristol: Arrowsmith.)

Tales of a Tennis Party. By Blancor Dash. (Kegan Paul, Trench, & Co.)

Echoes of Thought. By Emily E. Reader. (Longmans.)

POEMS which, though lyrical in form, are didactic in character—which lack some of the more essential qualities of poetry, but make up for their absence by admirable thoughts and excellent lessons—rather defy criticism. The critic ought perhaps to say that verse, and especially lyric verse, is not the most suitable medium for homilies on everyday truths. But he is checked by the reflection that everyday truths are just those which most escape observation; and he is bound to admit that the poet—be his rank as poet whatever it may—who crystallises them into couplets and stanzas for their better recognition does a serviceable work. Mr. Chapman's poems are of this modest but useful character. His subjects appear to be all, or nearly all, selected for the practical lessons that may be drawn from them; but their range is, nevertheless, a wide one. Aspects of nature, passages of human experience, passions of the mind or the heart—all suggest to him valuable moral truths which are self-evident when they are pointed out, but of which a busy world needs to be reminded. Thus, he enforces afresh such familiar lessons as that mere gain is not necessarily success—that loss, when it is helpful to others and to the world, better deserves the name. He teaches the philosophy of little things, out of which all great ones come. He shows us that life, wealth, power, truth, death are what we make them to be by the manner in which we use or receive them. He shows the rich man the limitations that beset him; he reminds the poor man that all nature is his park and his mansion. He sings of progress; of glory that consists in noble effort and honest work; of the boundless satisfactions of thought; of the inequalities that disappear, and the petty differences that are forgotten, when the soul gets high enough to take broad views of men and things. Sometimes—as in these verses on "Contentment"—he conveys by a pleasant apologue a very effective lesson:

"Contentment knocked at a poet's heart;
The poet gave an impatient start,
To see such a stranger there.
Infinite longings, beautiful dreams,
Wonderful thoughts on numberless themes,
Metaphors rich and rare,
Sensitive sentiments morbidly sad,
Exquisite raptures, hopes half mad,
For these there was plenty of room to spare,
But none for Contentment anywhere.

"She next approached a philosopher's soul;
The sage put down some mystical scroll,
And a vexed look crossed his face.
Whether the will is bound or free,
Whether there was an eternity,
Whether all matter and space
Only exist as part of the mind,
These and more of a similar kind,
Were secrets long he had sought to trace;
Till found, Contentment could have no place.

"She went to the house of a millionaire,
But the poor rich man was full of care,
And begged of her not to stay.
One who had only lived for fame,
Sighing at last for a loftier aim,
Told her to go away.
Those who had most of wealth and ease
Always appeared the hardest to please;
And even the people who seemed most gay
Asked her to call another day.

"At length she entered a peasant's breast;
The poor man gladly received his guest
As an angel passing by.
Proud of his garden, pleased with his cot,
Plain though his fare, and humble his lot,
Gratitude beamed from his eye.
Peacefully here she hoped to remain;
But soon she heard the peasant complain
Of some small trouble, and then with a sigh
Contentment left earth and flew to the sky."

There is nothing in these verses that has not been said in other forms by preachers and teachers without number. Every lesson, indeed, in the book has been enforced many times over in homily and essay and sermon; but the repetition is not to be regretted. If the poet's way of telling the wholesome truths which it is so necessary men should know be the more effective way, then it is well he has taken up the parable of the homilist. In a preface Mr. Chapman justifies the views he takes on social and moral questions, but they need no justification. They are manifestly the views of a man who realises the true relations of men to each other, and is right-minded in regard to the inequalities of life.

Mr. "Blancor Dash"—who is to be congratulated upon his smart nom de guerre—may have the making in him of a tolerably expert writer of verse. But he has much to learn, and perhaps still more to unlearn, though whether he will ever do the necessary learning and unlearning seems a little doubtful. His present mood appears to be one of comfortable satisfaction with his achievements. Such a mood is obviously a pleasant one; and a writer who can keep it up is spared a good many mortifications and vexations—to say nothing of an infinite deal of work—which his less complacent brethren must needs submit to. But it has its disadvantages. It is, of course, fatal to progress; it prevents the possibility of higher attainment, and even deteriorates a man's present standard. Mr. "Blancor Dash" will therefore have to choose between going back and going forward. If he wishes to advance he will have to reconsider his view of his work and of himself. In a note to the longest piece in this volume, "Our Host's Tale," which is a versified Arthurian story, he refers to the Laureate's poem, "Balin and Balan," dealing with the same subject. He is concerned to show that he wrote his story before reading the Laureate's poem—a statement to which we are willing to give full credence. But, having said this much, he adds that he had to decide whether he would throw away what he had written, or publish it and run the risk of comparisons between his work and Lord Tennyson's. He elected to publish—

"believing," he remarks, "that with this explanation I shall not be accused of arrogance by the ordinary reader, whilst professional critics who have [the italics are Mr. "Dash's"] to say something may, for all I care, accuse me as much as they please."

Now we are not aware that we are obliged to take any notice of Mr. "Dash"—or (in his elegant way of putting it) that we have to say something about him. But it may be none the worse for him that we should. We shall not accuse him of arrogance, for there is no arrogance in copying another man's style, even when the copying is as closely done as it is in the following passage:

"And then he asked her of the king; she smiled, Telling him all; and of the queen, and still She smiled, but tearfully, and told him all; Of the princess, but neither tear nor smile; And e'er she answered, as the valley's top They neared, where joining from opposing sides The mountains leant together, swift came one Around the dragon's head, and shouting loud, 'Look, knight, defend ye! from the king I come, So yield to him through me,' in mad career Rushed on: and Balin, hurtling to the charge, They shocked together, as two mighty rocks Crash from opposing slopes; and as the least Leaps into fragments, so the splintering spear Of Launcer left his shield; but Balin's stroke Hurl'd man and horse to ground, as some great wave That strikes a vessel's stubborn side unbroke, Yet casts it from its height into its vale To plunge and sink for ever; so they fell."

But Mr. "Blancor Dash" is not wholly a copyist. He can produce original work which, though it has its defects, has also its merits. Here is a passage of much merit:

"Man's life is born into a bootless world. If he strive not, how base! and if he strive What weariness and grief, whilst evermore Recedes the earthly goal! We plan and act, Our little wisdom runs before our deeds Led other ways by Fate; and all our days But mock the visions of our yesterdays, Till every purpose seems as shaped by dreams, Futile, and waking, voided."

Here is a happy suggestion of Spring:

"Far and near,
Spring filled the woodlands with her lucent green,
And bared heaven's inner blueness, scattering
White waving fleeces, in the skies, of clouds,
On earth, of hawthorn's blossoms."

And here is an effective picture in a couple of lines:

"And in the gap left clear,
Athwart the moon there loomed the midnight towers
Of a sieged city."

The defects in Mr. "Blancor Dash's" work appear to be mainly the result of haste and want of care. Some of them are due to a false taste in language, as where he describes rocks and rising ground as "sheery," or speaks of "the slope plain," or produces such a couplet as:

"That vain wild strain of grief to death that clings Swept every heart, and none would mute its strings."

The inversion in the first line is not less objectionable than the impossible verb "mute" in the second. The inversions indeed throughout the volume are its chief blemish. We have no doubt, however, that Mr. "Blancor Dash" can produce good work if he will. But he must first put away the mood of self-satisfaction; and he will be well-advised if he avoids the temptation to reproduce a style which he cannot make his own.

Deep religious feeling, a certain quaint simplicity, and an earnest if meagre attempt to interpret some of the higher problems of life—these are characteristics of Mrs. Reader's poems. Though the poems are modestly called "echoes," they have an original value of their own, within the somewhat narrow limits which Mrs. Reader is content not to pass. She has no heterodoxy and no new orthodoxy to proclaim; she does not concern herself with theories of belief or non-belief; she takes what have been accepted as old truths, and reflects them afresh from the clear surface of her own mind. In saying this we are really borrowing an image from one of her shorter poems. We quite assent to her argument that the mind presents a varying—as she puts it, a concave or convex—reflection, but it is something that the reflecting body should be as clear as it can be. The following is the poem:

"TRUTH."

"Men's minds are like a polished shield, for both Have convex sides, where truth and right remain;
And concave ones, where all things mirror false;
And yet the world without is just the same.
One says the universe is full of care;
Another says the world is bright and fair.
One speaks of Nature ravaging for blood;
Another calls her merciful and good.
But Nature's self, in spite of praise or blame,
Stops where she was, and does her work the same.
Yet both speak truth. It is not they have lied—
One sees the concave, one the convex side
Of this world's mirror. Who is wrong, who right,
Is tested in a sphere outlying human sight."

It is in thoughts suggested, rather than fully wrought out, that Mrs. Reader is at her best. The lines we have quoted are an example of a crudely stated idea, which the thoughtful reader can amplify and work out for himself. Here, in a still shorter poem, is another example:

"QUIET."

"Let the light speak—and it shall say
There is no speed and no delay,
Perfect quiet brings the day.
Perfect growth by little shows:
He who hastes shall lose by speed;
He who clutches mar by greed;
He who hurries spoils his deed
And swells the debt he owes."

But here is, perhaps, a more forcible example still, contained in a single couplet, the introductory lines of a poem on "Life":

"Death is the life of a man when he careth for all the world giveth;
Life is the life of a man who is dead to the world while he liveth."

Each of these propositions contains an obviously true thought, capable of wide amplification, but needing to be much qualified.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE biography of Lord Sherbrooke, which Mr. A. Patchett Martin is writing, will have a brief prefatory memoir by Sir John Coope Sherbrooke, sometime governor-general of Canada. The book will form two volumes, and will be illustrated with two portraits—one taken at Sydney in 1847, the other in London in 1883.

THE mid-June issue of the Universal Review will contain a contribution from Count Tolstoi, embodying not only a reply to the criticisms which have been made upon his latest work, "The Kreutzer Sonata," but also a definite declaration of his own views on the subjects of morality, marriage, and Christianity.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately, as the second volume in their "Adventure Series," Robert Drury's Journal in Madagascar. Such doubts as have been raised against the veracity of the narrator are fully discussed by the editor, Capt. Pasfield Oliver, who, by his work, The French Dispute in Madagascar, has already identified himself with the island.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & Co. are about to publish a work by Mr. Clarmont Daniell, entitled The Industrial Competition of Asia; or, the Connexion between Currency and the Trade and Finances of our Empire in the East, with especial reference to the competition of India in European markets, and to the importance of increasing the supply of gold available for British purposes.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN propose to complete their cheap reissue of Charles Kingsley's works by the addition of nine volumes of sermons, to appear at monthly intervals between now and February next. The entire series will thus consist of twenty-nine volumes. We doubt whether there is any other author recently dead, novelist or not, whose popularity can be attested by such evidence.

MR. ANDREW LANG is editing a companion volume to The Blue Fairy Book, to be called "The Red Fairy Book." Like the former, it will contain numerous illustrations by H. J. Ford and Lancelot Speed.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces the tenth volume of "The Gentleman's Magazine Library" as just ready for publication. It will contain Architectural Antiquities, being the first of two volumes to be issued on this subject.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co. will publish next week Yorkshire in the Olden Time.

THE Bishop of Ely has recently caused all the ancient records of the diocese, hitherto scattered in different places, to be removed to the palace at Ely, where they are now deposited in a spacious muniment room, and made available for historical research. In further pursuance of his design, the bishop has commissioned Mr. A. Gibbons, author of Early Lincoln Wills and other similar works, to prepare a calendar and concise view of these records, which—it need hardly be said—are of more than merely ecclesiastical interest. The episcopal registers proper begin in 1337; and the visitation books and the transcripts of pariah registers are in unusually good preservation.

It is proposed to print copies of all the wills, and also of the marriage register of the old chapel of Ely House, Holborn. The volume will be issued in a limited edition of fifty copies; and subscribers should address themselves to Mr. A. Gibbon, The College, Ely.

SHAKESPEARE students will be glad to know that a new volume of the "University Series," Julius Caesar, edited by Mr. Benj. Dawson, will be issued early in June by Messrs. R. Sutton & Co.

MR. WILLIAM ANDREWS, of Hull, has in the press a volume to be issued shortly under the title of Obsolete Punishments, dealing with the ducking stool, cranks, pillory, stocks, gibbet-lore, witchcraft, burning of books and punishing of authors, &c. Numerous illustrations will be given.

MESSRS. F. V. WHITE & Co. will publish immediately Fergus Hume's new novel, The Man with a Secret, in three volumes; and Crisis Cross Lovers, by the Hon. Mrs. H. W. Ochetwynd, also in three volumes. John Strange Winter's one-volume novel, Ferrers Court, will be issued by the same publishers shortly.

THE first edition of The Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff, translated by Mathilde Blind, has been already exhausted. A second edition is now in preparation, and will be ready during the course of next week.

A NEW edition of Mme. Darmesteter's (née Mary Robinson), New Arcadia and other Poems, has been called for. The book will be issued in a French style of binding at a cheap price.

WE are asked to state that Mr. Charles Marvin is lying seriously ill at Plumstead. He was to have started last week for a journey to the oil regions of America, when he was attacked with a recurrence of the lung trouble that followed the severe attack of Russian influenza that prostrated him early in the year.

THE last Friday evening discourse at the Royal Institution will be given on June 13 by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson on "The Physical Foundation of Music."

ON Saturday next, June 14, Messrs. Sotheby will begin the sale of a miscellaneous collection of books and MSS. brought together from different quarters, some of which (we fancy) have appeared in the same sale-room not very long ago. Among the books we may mention a subscriber's copy of Audubon's Birds of America; the Kilmarnock edition of Burns; copies of Charles Lamb's Prince Dorus and Beauty and the Beast (coloured); besides many of those illustrated works which are sought after by both English and French collectors. The MSS. include an exceptionally fine Office of the Virgin, illuminated by an Italian miniaturist of the fifteenth century; a list of all the incumbents of parishes in Norfolk, from the earliest times to the present century, compiled by Mr. E. J. L. Scott, of the British Museum; and several Browning autographs.

ON Wednesday of last week a new tombstone over the grave of Charles Avison was publicly unveiled in the churchyard of St. Andrew's, Newcastle. The former inscription, in mixed Latin and English, has been restored, with the following quotation appended from Browning's Parleyings:

"On the list
Of worthies who, by help of pipe or wire,
Expressed in sound rough rage or soft desire,
Thou whilom of Newcastle organist."

THE Orient Company, who propose this summer to repeat their enterprise of sending two of their large steam-ships on a series of pleasure cruises to "the land of the midnight sun," have again commissioned Lieut. G. T. Temple, author of the Admiralty Pilots for Norway, to compile a guide-book for their passengers. On this occasion the pamphlet is augmented by two special contributions—on the astronomical aspect of the subject, by Mr. J. Norman Lockyer, with several explanatory illustrations; and on the geology of Norway, by Mr. Grenville A. J. Cole, with a geological map.

THE new sixpenny edition of Tom Brown's School Days (Macmillan) contains on the verso of the title-page a bibliography so full as to constitute a life-history of what we may safely call one of the half-dozen most popular books of this century. Almost the only information not given is the number of copies of which each edition consisted. The total number of editions, since the first publication in April 1857, is fifty, of which seven were issued at the price of half-a-guinea. The illustrations, by Mr. Arthur Hughes and Mr. Sydney Hall, were first added in 1874; and, concerning these, it is important to notice that the original blocks required to be cut down to fit the crown octavo editions. The first really cheap edition, and also the one most frequently reprinted, was the pott octavo of 1865. As many will recollect, a sixpenny edition previously appeared, in 1882; but in the form known as medium quarto, which is by no means so well suited for permanent preservation as the present form of medium octavo. To make the bibliography complete, it would be necessary to ascertain the number of (pirated) editions that have been published in America.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

AT the Commemoration at Oxford, on June 25, the honorary degree of D.O.L. will be conferred upon the following: Mr. W. Q. Orchardson; Prof. Henry Sidgwick, of Cambridge; Mr. Henry M. Stanley; Mr. E. Maunde Thompson, of the British Museum; and Sir William Turner, professor of anatomy at Edinburgh. We understand that Mr. Stanley will be the guest of Prof. Jowett, at Balliol.

DR. BUTLER, Master of Trinity, has been re-elected vice-chancellor at Cambridge for the coming academical year.

THE President of the French Republic, at the instance of the Académie des Sciences, has conferred the distinction of officer of the legion of honour upon two English mathematicians: Prof. Sylvester of Oxford, and Prof. Cayley of Cambridge.

IN Convocation at Oxford, next Tuesday, it will be proposed to make a contribution not exceeding £150 to the Oxford Historical Society.

THE tapestry worked by Mr. William Morris after a design by Mr. Burne-Jones, has now been hung in the chapel of Exeter College. The subject is "The Adoration of the Magi." It is interesting to remember that the two artists matriculated together at Exeter in 1852, and that both were elected to honorary fellowships in 1882. Mr. Burne-Jones, it appears, did not graduate, though the university conferred upon him the degree of D.O.L. at the Commemoration of 1881.

THE Council of the Cambridge Philosophical Society has decided—in accordance with the reports of the adjudicators, Sir W. Thomson, Lord Rayleigh, and Prof. G. H. Darwin—to award the Hopkins Prize for the period 1883-1885 to Mr. W. M. Hicks, for his memoir upon "The Theory of Vortex Rings" (Phil. Trans. 1885), and for his earlier memoirs upon related subjects; also to award the Hopkins Prize for the period 1886-1888 to Mr. Horace Lamb, for his paper on "Ellipsoidal Current-Sheets" (Phil. Trans. 1887), and for his numerous other papers on mathematical physics.

THE special board for biology and geology at Cambridge have nominated a lady—Miss L. Aekroyd, of Newnham—to occupy the university table at the Plymouth laboratory of the Marine Biological Association for one month.

THE registry at Cambridge calls formal attention to the fact that, by the recent admission of six unattached students, the total number of persons matriculated during the present academical year amounts to 1027, being the highest on record.

THE subject chosen for Sir William Browne's gold medal for Greek elegiacs at Cambridge next year is "In Obitum Roberti Browning."

PROF. ROY and Dr. D. MacAlister have been appointed to represent the university of Cambridge at the tenth International Medical Congress to be held at Berlin in August.

MR. C. WOOD, organist of Caius College, is writing the music for the performance of the "Ion" of Euripides, which is to take place at Cambridge next term.

AT the annual meeting of Mansfield College, the following were among those elected to form the enlarged council of twenty-four: Prof. A. S. Wilkins, of Owens College; Dr. Dale, of Birmingham; Mr. T. Raleigh, of All Souls; and Mr. B. F. Horton, of New College.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

MR. WATTS'S PICTURE OF MAXIMON.

Come, and behold your god, ye worshippers!
He sits at the receipt of sacrifice.
Hunger is up in those inveterate eyes:
Already two are crouched, and neither stirs.
His gross hand dabbles in that hair of hers—
Frail form, whose sick deep slumber testifies
Lethe begun! A youth with shoulder lies
Upheaved, unstrung, and tarnished face averse.

England! thy souls in this oblivious hell
Lie sunken, and for ever more forget
Honour and shame. Whose voice is like a bell
To pierce their souls with some outworn regret
Of innocent days, so that they sleep less well,
So that in dreams their hard-sealed eyes are wet?

OLIVER ELTON.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Antiquary is falling into the fault of having too many articles in each number, the result being that no single subject can be treated so fully as it deserves. By far the most important article in the June number is contributed by Canon Scott Robertson. It relates to the tomb of Archbishop Hubert Walter, who died in 1205; for that it is that prelate's tomb the evidence now seems to be conclusive. The rich embroideries and other objects found in it are worthy of the attention of all antiquaries. We hope they may some day be reproduced, so far as is possible, in coloured facsimile. An engraving is here given of the paten and chalice. As our readers know, it was the custom to bury ecclesiastics with objects of this kind on their breast. They were never, or very rarely, such as had been used for Mass, but copies, intended as symbols only. They were commonly made of lead or tin. These are of base silver. The chalice, judging from the engraving, must be very beautiful. It is, we believe, the oldest piece of ecclesiastical plate in England. "The Antiquary Among the Pictures" is an unsigned article which we should have been glad to have met with in a newspaper, but which is quite out of place here. Miss Lucy Toulmin Smith reviews Mr. Gomme's "Village Community." We do not suppose that there is anyone else in this country who knows so much of the early life of our ancestors as she. The only criticism we have to make is that we wish her paper had been much longer. Mr. R. O. Hope continues his annotated list of Holy Wells. The paper before us includes those he has heard of in Lancashire, Lincolnshire, Monmouth, and Norfolk. As a first attempt, it is valuable. We trust that his collections will be much added to and reproduced as a kind of gazetteer of wells having such associations.

THE AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY.

We quote the following from the New York Nation:

"Boston, May 8, 1890.

"The spring meeting of the society was held yesterday at the rooms of the American Academy. To the great regret of the members, Prof. W. D. Whitney sent in his resignation as president. Dr. W. Hayes Ward was elected to fill his place. The other officers elected for the year were—vice-presidents, the Rev. A. P. Peabody, Prof. E. E. Salisbury, Prof. D. C. Gilman; secretaries, Prof. D. G. Lyon, Prof. C. R. Lanman, Prof. W. W. Goodwin; treasurer, Mr. A. Van Name; directors, Mr. A. I. Othel, Prof. M. Bloomfield, Prof. J. H. Thayer, Prof. E. W. Hopkins, Prof. R. J. H. Getthell, Prof. A. L. Frothingham, Prof. J. P. Taylor. Profs. Antonio Maria Ceriani (Milan), H. Brugsch-Pasha (Berlin), Eberhard Schrader (Berlin), and W. D. Whitney (New Haven), were elected honorary members. Mr. Alexander I. Othel, of New York, sent a gift of 1,000 dollars to the society.

The following papers were presented:

"Prof. W. R. Harper (Yale), with a view to show the value of historical syntax, gave several studies of the Taylor inscription of Sennacherib. The following points were dwelt upon: the accusative in u and a, the relation between adjective and substantive, permissive, participle, infinitive, and noun with pronominal suffixes. Mr. Lester Brader, jun. (Yale), presented a Classification of the sentences in the Taylor inscription of Sennacherib. Mr. George A. Barton (Harvard) spoke on the Origin and Character of Tiamat, the Biblical tehom, symbolised as a dragon. Dr. W. Hayes Ward spoke on Babylonian Mythology as illustrated by Babylonian Art. The chief sources of information are the seal cylinders. Dr. Ward thinks that there is no figure of Gisdubar on the celebrated Sargon stone. The figure is rather that of the god of fertilising waters. We see this from other examples in which there appears in addition an undoubted Gisdubar figure. This god of the fertilising waters is represented with fish, and with streams coming from his shoulders or from his navel. Before the god there generally appears an attendant pushing a figure. In later art the stream disappears, and the figure seems to come forward willingly. Dr. Ward sees in this figure Shamash, the sun-god, who is also pictured with streams. The Abbu Habba tablet seems to represent the same scene as the one so familiar to us on the seals. When the streams disappear from the seated god, they reappear in the emblems of the sun-god, as four streams of water crossing a circle. There is no doubt that the figure on the Abbu Habba tablet is that of Shamash. The scene must therefore be laid in Heaven, and not in Hades, as heretofore supposed. In the Abbu Habba representation, the god rides upon the upper waters, in the neighbourhood of which stars are plainly visible.

"Dr. Robert Harper (Yale) made a communication in regard to three tablets now in his possession which he had brought back from the university of Pennsylvania's expedition to Babylonia. They belong to the so-called class of loan-tablets, and were unearthed at Niffer. They are dated in the years two and four of Ashur-tilili-ilani, King of Assyria. The dates are of chronological value. They show that the Babylonian empire existed, if only in name, for four years after the death of Assurbanipal.

"Mr. F. P. Ramsay (Wetheredville, Md.) proposed to substitute the terms 'postpositive' and 'prepositive' in Semitic grammar for 'perfect' and 'imperfect.' Dr. William M. Arnold (Johns Hopkins) sent a criticism of Schrader's Keilinschriftliche Bibliothek, vol. ii., and Prof. D. G. Lyon (Harvard) a criticism of Peiser's Keilinschriftliche Aftenstücke.

"Dr. Cyrus Adler (Johns Hopkins) presented an account of the Johns Hopkins and the Abbot Egyptian collections. The first consists of 680 objects collected by Col. Mender I. Cohn in the years 1832 and 1835. Among them are two Ooptic inscriptions deciphered by Mr. Max Müller. The Abbot collection, the property of the New York Historical Society, is well known. It is said to be fully equal to the great collections in Europe; Miss Edwards is authority for the statement that it is one of the best in the world. The more the pity that it is not put in a building where it can be studied to advantage, and that complaints have been made by several scholars that it is not readily accessible.

"The Rev. Lysander Dickerman discussed the Egyptian synonyms for the word 'pyramid.' He finds the word to be Egyptian and not Greek, and to denote always 'a sacred enclosure for the preservation of things.'

"Prof. R. Gotthell (Columbia) showed several photographs of a remarkable Alhambra vase now in the possession of Mr. Charles A. Dana, of New York. The vase is said to have been dug up by some peasants in the Alpujarras, whither Abu Abdallah Mohammad (Boabdil) and the remnants of the Beni Nasr retired after they had surrendered Granada to Queen Isabella, January 2, 1492. The vase is a beautiful specimen of Moorish art. It is perfectly preserved, and contains several interesting Arabic inscriptions. Of the four other Alhambra vases known to exist to-day, that in the Hermitage at St. Petersburg is the only other one in a perfect condition.

"Dr. A. V. Williams Jackson (Columbia) read two papers on 'Sanskrit brade-oaksu (Rig-veda x., 95, 6), and on 'Avestan Transcription.' In the latter, Dr. Jackson pleaded for uniformity of transcription, at least among American Avestan scholars. Mr. Charles J. Goodwin sent a paper on 'The Hermes Function of the War-God Skanda,' based upon a hitherto unpublished text of the Atharva-veda. The likeness between Skanda (from the root skan, to leap) and Hermes is very close. They are both gods of cunning and roguery. They have parallel functions and resemble each other in many minor points.

The fall meeting of the society will be held at Princeton College.

"R. J. H. G."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BRELEUX, J. La caricature politique en France pendant la guerre, le siège de Paris et la Commune (1870-71). Paris: Labitte. 25 fr.
- CHOISY, A. Histoire de la littérature grecque. T. 2. Paris: Thorin. 8 fr.
- OSWALD, J. Bildnisse d. Königs Mathias Corvinus u. der Königin Beatrix in den Corvin-Codexen. Budapest: Kulan. 8 M.
- GOSSET, A. Les couples d'orient et d'occident. Paris: Baudry. 60 fr.
- IMHOOF-BLUMER, F. Griechische Münzen. Neue Beiträge u. Untersuchungen. München: Franke. 40 M.
- KOBELL, L. v. Kunstvolle Miniaturen u. Initialen aus Handschriften d. 4. bis 16. Jahrh. 3. Lfg. München: Albert. 8 M.
- PITRE, G. Curiosità popolari tradizionali. Vol. VIII. Tradizioni ed usi nella penisola Sorrentina, da Gaeta ad Amalfi. Turin: Loescher. 5 fr.
- RACONTE di antiche miniature estratte dal Codd. di Montecassino. Serie I. Fasc. 1. Turin: Loescher. 10 fr.
- SAN CARLOS, La Marquise de. Les Américains chez eux. Paris: Nouvelle Revue. 8 fr. 50 c.
- STRIKACH, A. Geschichte u. Leben der Schweizer Kolonien in den Vereinigten Staaten v. Nordamerika. Zürich: Müller. 5 M.
- WALCKER, K. Adam Smith, der Begründer der modernen Nationalökonomie. Berlin: Liebmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BOUQUET, Comtesse de la. La Guerre de la Vendée, 1793-6. Mémoires inédits, p.p. sa belle-fille. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
- COLLIEROW, P. Frankfurt am-Main im schmal-kaldischen Kriege. Strassburg: Trübner. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- CORRESPONDANCE diplomatique du Comte Pozzo di Borgo et du Comte de Nesselrode. T. 1. 1811-18. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.

- DONIOL, H. Histoire de la participation de la France à l'établissement des Etats-Unis d'Amérique. T. 1. Paris: Picard. 80 fr.
- EGLOFFSTEIN, H. Frh. v. Fürstbist Balthasar v. Darmbach u. die katholische Restauration im Hochstift Fulda. 1570-1606. München: Rieger. 8 M.
- FORTES rerum Bernensium. 5. Bd. 4. Lfg. 1817-1831. Bern: Schmid. 9 M.
- FORSCHUNGEN zur brandenburgischen u. preussischen Geschichte. Hrg. v. R. Koser. 2. Bd. 1. Hälfte. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 6 M.
- GILBERT, O. Geschichte u. Topographie der Stadt Rom im Altertum. 3. Abtlg. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
- LIEBENWALD, W. Zur Geschichte u. Organisation d. römischen Vereinswesens. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
- LUBOMIRSKI, le Prince. Histoire contemporaine. T. 2 (1834-1837). Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
- MEYER v. KNONAU, G. Jahrbücher d. Deutschen Reiches unter Heinrich IV. u. Heinrich V. 1. Bd. 1054 bis 1069. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 16 M. 80 Pf.
- PÉRIE, G. La faculté de droit dans l'ancienne université de Paris (1180-1793). Paris: Larose. 7 fr. 50 c.
- REGISTRES de Boniface VIII. Fasc. 5, pp. G. Digard. Paris: Thorin. 12 fr.
- ROBIQUET, P. Le personnel municipal de Paris pendant la révolution: période constitutionnelle. Paris: Quantin. 7 fr. 50 c.
- SAIGY, G. Documents historiques relatifs à la principauté de Monaco depuis le 15^e siècle. T. 2. 1494-1660. Paris: Picard. 25 fr.
- SALOMON, F. Frankreichs Beziehungen zu dem schottischen Aufstand 1687-1690. Berlin: Speyer. 1 M. 40 Pf.
- SCHAEUBLE, K. H. Die Juden in England vom 8. Jahrh. bis zur Gegenwart. Karlsruhe: Braun. 3 M.
- SCHNEIDER, J. Geschichte der evangelischen Kirche d. Elsass in der Zeit der französischen Revolution (1789-1801). Strassburg: Schmidt. 8 M.
- TOULANNEUX, M. Bibliographie de l'histoire de Paris pendant la révolution française. T. 1. Paris: Champion. 10 fr.
- WIEGANDT, L. C. Julius Caesar u. die tribunitische Gewalt. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ALTMANN, R. Die Elementarorganismen u. ihre Beziehungen zu den Zellen. Leipzig: Veit. 28 M.
- BAUMANN, Geschichte der Philosophie nach Ideen-gehalt u. Beweisen. Gotha: Perthes. 7 M.
- HEILIGER, K. M. Der Urbüffel v. Celebes: Anoa depressicornis (H. Smith). Berlin: Friedländer. 8 M.
- JACQUARD, A. Etudes géologiques sur l'asphalte et le bitume au Val-de-Travers. Basel: Geering. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- LAURENT, E. Les habitats des prisons de Paris: étude d'anthropologie et de psychologie criminelles. Paris: Masson. 10 fr.
- LIPPERHEIDE, V. Thomas v. Aquino u. die Platonische Ideenlehre. München: Rieger. 3 M.
- MASSONIUS, M. Ueb. Kant's transcendental Aesthetik. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- POLARFORSCHUNG, die internationale, 1881-3. Die deutschen Expeditionen u. ihre Ergebnisse. 2. Bd. Berlin: Aaber. 22 M.
- SCHREIBER, E. Vorlesungen üb. die Algebra der Logik (exakte Logik). 1. Bd. Leipzig: Teubner. 16 M.
- SCHWAB, H. A. Gesammelte mathematische Abhandlungen. Berlin: Springer. 26 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ANTHOLOGIA PLANTINIANA appendix Barberino-Vaticana. Recensuit L. Sternbach. Leipzig: Teubner. 4 M.
- ATHENAEI Naucratis dialecticosophistarum Libri XV., recensuit G. Kaibel. Vol. III. Libri XI.-XV. et indices. Leipzig: Teubner. 7 M. 50 Pf.
- BROKER, Ph. A. Ueb. den Ursprung der romanischen Versmasse. Strassburg: Trübner. 1 M. 30 Pf.
- BREGAIGNE, A. et V. HENRY. Manuel pour étudier le Sanscrit védique. Paris: Bouillon. 12 fr.
- COMMENTATIONES philologiae Ienenses, edd. seminarii philologorum Ienensis professorum. Vol. IV. Leipzig: Teubner. 8 M.
- HARLET, B. Studien üb. die sog. Zypeta. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- HARODOT'S 2. Buch, m. sachl. Erläuterung. Hrg. v. A. Wiedemann. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.
- HIRSCHWÄLDER, B. Beiträge zu e. Commentar der unter Lucians Namen überlieferten Schrift "Lob der Heimat." Leipzig: Fock. 80 Pf.
- LUCHS, A. Emendationum Livianarum particula IV. Erlangen: Blassing. 50 Pf.
- MÜLLER, W. Quaestiones vestiarum. Göttingen: Dieterich. 1 M.
- SILI ITALICI Paulus, ed. L. Bauer. Vol. I. Leipzig: Teubner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- UHLIRBECK, O. C. Die lexikalische Urverwandtschaft d. Baltoslavischen u. Germanischen. Leiden: Blakenberg. 2 M.
- WEBER, H. Quaestiones Catullianae. Gotha: Perthes. 4 M.
- XENOPHONTIS historia graeca. Recensuit O. Keller, cum apparatu critico et indice verborum. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DISCOVERY OF THE SIXTH BRĀHMANA OF THE SĀMAVEDA.

Ct'ord: June 2, 1890.

Instead of troubling your readers about the next meeting of the Oriental Congress and the legal aspects of the reversio suffragii ad populum, I shall be glad if you will allow me to call the attention of Sanskrit scholars to a curious discovery, lately made by Pandit Satyavrata Sāmāsrāmī.

It was in the year 1849, in the preface to the first volume of my edition of the Rig-Veda, p. xxvii., that I pointed out that at the time of Sāyana there must have existed eight Brāhmanas of the Sāma-Veda. Prof. Weber doubted the fact, which I had communicated in a letter to Prof. Benfey, and I therefore quoted Sāyana's ipsissima verba. These amounted to this: that the first Brāhmana is the Praudha-, the large one, that is, the Pankavimsa; the second the Shadvimsa, the third the Sāmavidhi, the fourth the Ārshaya, the fifth the Devatādhyāya, the sixth the Upanishad, the seventh the Samhitopanishad, the eighth the Vamsa.

I returned to the subject again in my History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature (1859). There I showed that Kumārila Bhatta also knew eight Brahmanas of the Sāmaveda, and that, according to him, no accents were marked in them.

Whether Sāyana was right in calling these works Brāhmanas is a question which does not concern us. He gave them that name, and ascribed to them full śrauta authority. That is enough.

The question of interest, however, was whether these eight Brāhmanas could still be identified. No doubt existed about No. 1, the Praudha or Tāndya-brāhmana, which is published in the Bibliotheca Indica. No 2 is the Shadvimsa, of which a portion, the Adbhuta, has been published by Prof. Weber; No. 3 is the Sāmavidhāna, published by Burnell, 1873; No. 4 the Ārshaya, published by the same scholar, 1876 and 1878; No. 5, the Devatādhyāya, published by the same, 1873. No. 7, the Samhitopanishad-brāhmana, and No. 8, the Vamsa-brāhmana, have likewise been edited by Burnell in 1877 and 1873.

There remained therefore No. 6 only, called the Upanishad. Prof. Weber thought this must be meant for the well-known Khândogya-upanishad, constituting eight out of the ten books of the Khândogya-brāhmana. I myself was inclined to adopt the same opinion, though I hesitated between it and the Kena-upanishad.

Thanks to the researches of a well-known student of the Sāma-veda, Satyavrata Sāmāsrāmī, to whom we owe a useful edition of the Sāma-veda-samhitā, we know now that the Khândogya consisted really of two parts, and that the two books hitherto missing are the two books of the Mantra-brāhmana.

The words of Sāyana so often quoted, giving an account of the eight Brāhmanas, the Pandit reads: "Ārshayam daivatam kaiva mantram vopaniśat tatah," not, as they are usually read: "Ārshayam daivatam kaiva bhaved upaniśat tatah."

The ordinary reading is not wrong, and conveys the right information to any one acquainted with ancient Sanskrit literature. Still it is possible that Sāyana himself wrote "mantram vopaniśat tatah," and that an ignorant scribe, not knowing what to make of "mantram vā," changed it into "bhaved." I should prefer to read "mantrā."

Pandit Satyavrata Sāmāsrāmī had published this Mantra-brāhmana in the Hindu Commentator, 1872, with a Sanskrit commentary and a Bengali translation. This text has been severely criticised by Prof. Knauer in his excellent edition of the Gobhila Grīhya-Sūtras, 1884; and the Pandit, acknowledging the defects of his first edition, has now published an improved edition in a Journal, called Ushā, the Dawn. In it he explains that the real Brāhmana of the Kauthumas consisted, like the Satapatha-brāhmana, of forty Adhyāyas. The Praudha consists of twenty-five, the Shadvimsa of five. These thirty Adhyāyas are devoted to Śrauta ceremonies, and form one whole. Then follows the Mantra-brāhmana, consisting of two Adhyāyas, devoted to Grīhya ceremonies; and, lastly, the Upanishad, consisting of eight Adhyāyas or Prapāthakas, making forty in all. The remaining five Brāhmanas are treated by our Pandit as Anu-brāhmanas, and Sāyana is severely taken to task for his ignorance of all matters pertaining to the Sāma-Veda.

The Mantra-brāhmana contains verses to be used at marriage ceremonies. It is clearly presupposed by the Gobhila Grīhya-Sūtras, as has been shown by Prof. Knauer.

The same number of the Ushā contains also the beginning of a Sāma-prātisākhya. If the series is continued in the same spirit, it deserves the support of all Sanskrit scholars in Europe.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

Queen's College, Oxford: June 2, 1890.

The anonymous correspondent who signs himself "One of the English Delegates," could not have understood what passed at the Christiaia meeting. The committee was not "unanimously chosen"; it consisted of only four persons, one of whom was not present; and it did not include representatives of England, France, America, Italy, Spain, Portugal, or Russia. The anonymous correspondent has a very poor opinion of his fellow-countrymen. This is not surprising, as he considers Count Landberg a more "noted" Orientalist than Prof. Weber or Dr. Oppert.

A. H. SAYCE.

ETYMOLOGICAL NOTES: "COCKNEY," "CLOCK," "COBLE."

Yale University: May 22, 1890.

It has occurred to me, in reading Dr. Murray's spirited letter on the word "cockney," that in the equation cohenay=fowl's egg, the first element might possibly be some other word than cock=French coq. In the phrase: "œuf à la coque," coque means "shell," and is derived, according to Littré, from Lat. concha. "œuf à la coque" literally signifies "egg in the shell," which for many purposes is simply equivalent to "egg." To assume that cockney, in the peculiar uses instanced by Dr. Murray, is a translation of "œuf à la coque," may seem too daring, and I shall not venture to take the responsibility for such an assumption. Still, there is something to be said in favour of it as a conjecture. The same word coque, whether related or not to the cock in cockboat, may, for anything I can see, be contained in M.E. cokebelle, which occurs in Trevisa and the Promptorium, the quotation from Trevisa (i., 219) being as follows: "a cokebelle of silver i-honged aboute his nekke," a translation of the Latin "nolam argentum circa collum." A bell of the shape or size of a shell might not inconceivably take the name of cokebelle. The sense, "egg in the shell," would, of course, suit the context in the passages from Piers Plowman and the Tournament of Tottenham, and has perhaps a special significance in that from Heywood: "Men say that he that cometh every day, Shall have a cockenaie [egg in the shell] . . . But I gat not so much . . . As a good hens fether, or a poore eg-shell," i.e. instead of getting the egg in the shell, I got not even the shell. Dr. Murray recognises the difficulty in the interpretation, "cock's egg," and, indeed, it is no slight one. As for the n, which Dr. Murray interprets as the sign of the genitive plural, it might be euphonic to prevent the clashing of initial with final vowel, or might be due to some mistaken analogy. The n in bittern and nightangle are, strictly speaking, not organic. With reference to the derived senses of cohenay, it may be worth noting that in two modern French words, coquecigue and coquefredouille, the first element would appear to be identical with the coque cited above; and that both these words, as well as a much larger number in Old French coined on the same model, are terms of disparagement, and remind us of the last meaning adduced by Dr. Murray under (1) namely, "milksoop." In presenting these considerations, I have no intention of setting up a rival etymology to that of Dr. Murray, but merely wish to suggest what may possibly not have occurred to him and the others who have written on the word.

In reading Reeves' Adamnan, I have come upon clocca in the sense of "bell," and produce the instances, in the hope that they may be useful to investigators of English clock. They are (p. 120): "cloccam pulsa"; (p. 214) "pulsata personante clocca." These are especially interesting because they may be conceived to have been used with the Celtic form in mind, or perhaps to have been a direct Latinisation of the Celtic.

For the etymology of coble, Adamnan's caupallus (p. 170) should be borne in mind. Reeves notes one variation in the accusative singular, caupulum, and Du Cange has a variety of forms. I fail to see why the Century Dictionary should say of coble, "not connected with O. North. cuopel, a boat." Considering the influence of Celtic monks upon Northumbrian civilisation, it seems to me natural enough that North. cuopel* (dat. cuople, Matt. viii. 23), Lat. caupulus, &c., and the current Celtic etymon, should be interrelated.

ALBERT S. COOK.

Strassburg University: May 27, 1890.

As I see that the correspondence on this subject is not closed, I should like to suggest another explanation of the meaning of the expression "cock's egg," supposing that Dr. Murray has indeed found in this the origin of the M.E. cohenay. I cannot see how his suggestion that children think more of cocks than hens (even if they do, which I doubt) could possibly be the origin; children do not, as a rule, contribute to the permanent vocabulary of a language. Nor does the suggestion of Prof. Karle seem satisfactory to me.

Now in German there exists exactly the same expression, Hahneuei, as a term of reproach; and this is what Grimm says of it in his Wörterbuch:

"Hahneuei, n. nennt das volk im Göttingischen und anderwärts die misgestalteten hühnerelmen glaubte solche eier hülbe der hahn gelegt und aus ihnen entwickelte sich ein basilisk. daun bezeichnet man auch durch hahneuei scherzhaft etwas wunderbares unglaubliches."

May not the same legend have existed in England to explain small misshaped eggs. And may not a similar process of folklore have caused a specialisation of the use of the word in the sense of something wonderful to that which was certainly then as now to the simple rustic one of the most wonderful phenomena in nature—the London "cockney"?

H. FRANK HEATH.

THE WORD "HANSELYNS" IN CHAUCER.

Cambridge: June 8, 1890.]

I am of opinion that this word was borrowed from French, and is mentioned in Godefroy's dictionary.

I there find: "Hamselin, hamcellin, hainselin, a.m., sorte de robe longue." Godefroy gives examples from Christine de Pisan, and from documents dated respectively 1403 and 1416.

I cannot lay hold of the etymology; but I believe that the last syllable is precisely F. lin., in the sense of linen-cloth (Cotgrave). The rest of the word suggests the theoretical Teutonic hamisa*, noticed by Kluge s.v. Hemd.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 8, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Dr. Johnson and his Contemporaries," by Dr. I. B. Milnehead.

TUESDAY, June 10, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Natural History of Society," III, by Mr. Andrew Lang.

8.30 p.m. British Museum: "The Manners and Customs of the Babylonians," II, by Mr. G. Bertin.

8 p.m. Colonial Institute: "Capital and Labour in the West Indies," by Mr. Henry Fowler.

8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "The Nomad Tribes of Asia Minor," by Mr. Theodore Bent; "A Contribution to a Scientific Phenology," by Mr. Bernard Hollander.

THURSDAY, June 12, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "Flame and Explosives," VI, by Prof. Dewar.

8 p.m. Society of Arts: "The Rationale of Indian Railways," by Sir Theodore O. Hope.

8 p.m. Mathematical: "Parabolic Note," by Mr. R. Tucker; "Further Notes on Simplicissima," by Mr. W. J. C. Sharp; "Rotatory Polarization," by Dr. J. Larmor; "The Expression of the Square Root of a Quartic as a Continued Fraction," by Prof. G. B. Mathews; and Papers by Messrs. A. R. Johnson and R. Russell.

FRIDAY, June 13, 8 p.m. New Shakespeare: "Much Ado about Nothing," by Mr. H. S. Pearson.

8 p.m. London Amateur Scientific Society: "The Lias and Oolites of Northampton," by Mr. A. Loydell.

9 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Physical Foundation of Music," by Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

SATURDAY, June 14, 8 p.m. Royal Institution: "The Ballad Music of the West of England," with Musical Illustrations, III, by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould.

8.45 p.m. Botanic: Fortnightly General Meeting.

SCIENCE.

Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek Verb. By William Watson Goodwin. Second Edition. (Macmillan.)

It would, perhaps, be fairer to the book before us if we could imagine it to be Prof. Goodwin's first contributions to the subject. But his former book has laid us under such obligations that this is impossible. The present Syntax is a good deal handsomer book than our old friend Greek Moods and Tenses, which I have before me in the Boston edition of 1870. It is in larger print and on better paper, and weighs more than twice as much. But its increase in contents is not nearly so great; and the publishers would have done better for themselves, for the author, and for the interests of classical scholarship in this country if they had kept nearer to the old size and price. It is necessary to protest against the prices of classical books of the more advanced kind, which are continually on the rise. The same sum is asked for two plays, better edited undoubtedly, as sufficed formerly to purchase the entire dramatist. The additions are partly due to the Appendix, which has grown to one-tenth of the volume; partly to disquisitions on various subjects, which might, I think, have been more conveniently added to the Appendix; and partly to an expansion of treatment and increase of illustrations throughout the book, among which must be mentioned the full and generally satisfactory account of Homeric syntax.

The well-known characteristics of Prof. Goodwin's work—his power of making practical inductions, his distinctness of thought, and his masculine common sense—are as conspicuous in this book as in its predecessor. In addition, it shows a breadth of scope, an enlargement of view, and an appreciation of recent developments which the first book could not, from the nature of the case, display. The birth of a real historical syntax of Greek and Latin, and the application of statistical methods to Greek and Latin grammar, correcting and corrected by a sharpened and more consistent textual criticism, are making the grammatical student's path clearer and more certain walking. Exceptions, the "sundries" of grammar, have to give a strict account of themselves. They can no longer be explained away in the old metaphysical fashion after which Hermann said of the aorist of attempted action—such as ἐκτεῖνα, "I tried to kill"—that it "fecisse sed sine effectu significat." (By the way, Prof. Goodwin does not notice this usage of the aorist, though he calls its use "like the future" in questions "strange" (82). It is discussed in an Appendix to Sheppard and Evans's Notes on Thucydides.) Nor, again, will any sober scholar, however much he may admire Madvig's masterly discussion in the Adversaria of the use of the aorist for the future infinitive, follow Cobet in sweeping all such infinitives out of Homer. Survivals of earlier usage, prejudices or nuances of particular writers, masterings of the sense by the sound, are veras causas of irregularity recognised by Prof. Goodwin. Of the last, Thuc., I, 118 is a pretty example, ὄντες καὶ πρὸ τοῦ μὴ ταχέως ἵέναι, the μὴ being simply due to the fact that τοῦ μὴ ταχέως ἵέναι sounded more natural than τοῦ οὐ τ. ἱ., though neither τοῦ nor μὴ have anything to do with the infinitive. A passage like this should give Dr. Rutherford pause.

Prof. Goodwin has made good use of recent works, especially of the magnificent collections of the writers in Schanz's Beiträge—whose writings, pace Prof. Goodwin's abstracts, all scholars should study in the original—of his countryman Prof. Gildersleeve's acute and learned dissertations, and of the excellent Homeric Grammar by Mr. Monro. Not only scholarship, but teaching, will be improved by these researches. The behaviour of πρὶν need not bring pain even to schoolboys; μὴ, in expressions of fear, is no longer alarming; and even μὴ οὐ with the subjunctive may be dealt with without an invocation of ellipse. Prof. Goodwin himself has settled οὐ μὴ's business; and in Cambridge, at any rate, we are well prepared to receive the theory which he has expounded in a luminous and convincing Appendix. I should myself have welcomed it with the sober joy which one feels when one is anticipated; but I hear that Dr. Peile has taught substantially the same doctrine for several years.

The book bears throughout the marks of most careful and judicious revision. Prof. Goodwin's formulations of general statements, and his framing of definitions, are in general excellently done. It is difficult to find a page in which some improvement, often slight, though not on that account unimportant, has been made on the previous edition.

Conditional sentences are a branch in which Prof. Goodwin has a special right to be heard.

He adheres to his distinction between ἐάν with the subjunctive, and εἰ with the optative, as being only one of greater and less "vividness"; and to those who object that this view is not sufficiently distinct, he makes the sufficient answer that it is as distinct as the case allows. Still, I cannot admit it as entirely satisfying the facts. "If he leaves (=shall leave) the house he will be captured," seems to me in all respects (except in the time referred to) to be parallel with "if he left yesterday he was captured"; while "if he were to leave, or should leave the house, he would be captured," contains the imagination and conveys the impression that he is not expected to leave the house. It is in this (which I would fully admit may have been derived from an original difference in degree of vividness or of sense of distance) that must be sought the real distinction between the two usages in ordinary Greek. The form which implies nothing, but simply places the consequence and the condition side by side, is naturally "more vivid" than one which suggests a possibility that their connexion has not got beyond the limits of imagination. In general suppositions Prof. Goodwin's treatment of sentences introduced by εἰ τις, &c. (§ 67), with the indicative as a variety of those introduced by ἐάν τις has lately been criticised by Mr. Bayfield in the Classical Review; and probably a distinction between indefiniteness of person and indefiniteness of occurrence might with advantage have been introduced. The use of past tenses of the indicative with ἄν in statements ordinarily expressing unfulfilled conditions is very well delimited and pertinently illustrated. In particular, Prof. Goodwin clearly and acutely points out where an idea of non-fulfilment is gratuitous or inadmissible.

The treatment of the potential indicative and subjunctive is much less satisfactory. Prof. Goodwin says that—

"In most cases the limiting condition involved in the potential optative is not present to the mind in any definite form, and can be expressed in English only by such words as perchance, possibly, or probably, or by the auxiliaries could, would, should, &c., with the vague conditions which these imply (like 'if he should try,' 'if he pleased,' 'if he could,' 'if what is natural should happen,' &c.). Sometimes a more general condition is implied, like 'in any possible case,' as οὐκ ἂν δεχόμενοι τούτο, 'I would not accept this' (on any terms)," and just below, "the optative, thus used with no conscious feeling of any definite condition, but still implying that the statement is conditioned and not absolute [the italics throughout are mine], is the simplest and most primitive potential." Further on, speaking of the development of the potential optative, he marks most correctly, as a "final step," that of "the condition being actually stated in the sentence" as εἰ κελεύσεως ἔλθοι ἄν. Now, if he had adopted the vulgar notion that the potential usage was due to mutilation or suppression in the "conditional sentence," his view would be intelligible; but, as it is, he has embraced a phantom. In ἔλομ' ἢ κεν ἔλθοι, "I may slay or I may be slain" (Il. 22, 253, p. 77), how can the optative still imply that the statement is conditioned? Conditioned by what? By his "going into battle," implied in ἔλομ'? Then a verb could condition itself—a fearful thing to admit. Is it not obvious that the possibility is as absolutely undetermined and unconditional here as, say, in the English, "I may be killed in battle," or the Latin "feri potest ut occidat"; and that the unconditional possibility comes first, the conditioned possibility, whether explicit or implicit, after it? The treatment of similar sentences relating to past tense is vitiated by a strange unwillingness to admit that the optative may be used of past events in principal clauses. He will only go so far as to say "φαίης κε, without a protasis may have a vague potential force, 'you might perchance say,' which could be felt as either past or future, as the context demanded." This seems to admit that the potential optative can be used as the potential indicative of past time, especially as it is immediately followed by a quotation of οὐκ ἂν ἐρίσσειεν (Il. 3, 223), "No other mortal could then vie with Odysseus." But then I cannot understand why Prof. Goodwin throughout his citations from Herodotus translates λέγοιεν ἂν, &c., by the ambiguous might tell, &c., instead of by the ordinary English may have told.

Among the potential uses of the past tenses of the indicative, he classes a use of ἂν with the participle which may be just as well referred to the optative, and unduly reduces its extent. In Soph. O. T. 523, ἀλλ' ἤλθε μὲν δὴ τοῦτο τοῦνιδος τάχ' ἂν ὀργῇ βιασθέν, the order of the words and the sense (for the reproach had come; the fact was certain, though not the cause) show that to translate "this reproach may have come from violence of wrath" is to import into Greek a looseness characteristic of English. So in O. C. 964 and Thuc. 6, 2. As I have discussed these and similar passages in the Transactions of the Cambridge Philological Society (vol. iii., part i.), I need only add here that it was the fact that the optative and indicative were in use together which determined writers unconsciously to adopt an ambiguous form. Later on, the more distinct indicative here, as in unfulfilled conditions and unfulfilled purposes, drove out the optative.

Prof. Goodwin begins section 744 by saying "the subject of the infinitive, if expressed, is in the accusative." I find it difficult to believe that Prof. Goodwin should have slipped into such a statement; yet I cannot find any correction or qualification of it, though it is contradicted by many of his own citations. The well-known passage οὐκ ἔφη αὐτὸς ἀλλ' ἐκείνον στρατηγεῖν, the direct form of which Prof. Goodwin (p. 267) gives as οὐκ ἐγὼ αὐτὸς ἀλλ' ἐκείνος στρατηγεῖ,* is the first example that occurs; see also § 784, 1, Xen. Anab. 1, 4, 15; Thuc. 2, 65 (§ 798).

It would not be necessary to do more than mark this imperfection of statement if it were not accompanied by other apparent misconceptions of the power of the infinitive in Greek. "The most indefinite infinitive, so far as it is a verb, must, at least, have a subject implied" seems a very cautious and, at first sight, plausible statement. But the words in italics can only mean "so far as it is the finite or, rather, a personal verb"; for its other verbal functions have no relation to its subject. And this is obviously absurd. Prof. Goodwin, however, probably means that the infinitive ultimately involves an idea of a subject of some sort. We may grant this. It is true of every verbal noun and of a great many other ones. But a grammatical subject is no more involved or implied in καλὸν ἔστιν ἀποθανεῖν, "it is honourable to die" or "there is honour in dying," than in μέλλει βροντᾶν, or in "bibere est uiuere," or in "post Caesaris caedem," or in "occiso Caesare." And where the subject of the infinitive is expressed, its case originally depended on its own relations to the rest of the sentence, and continued so to depend, except in a certain number of cases where the accusative established itself to the exclusion of other cases. The "impossibility of expressing an independent subject" with what Prof. Goodwin calls the "object infinitive," as ἀρχεται αἰδεῖν, "he begins to sing," no longer distresses us, if we think of ἀρχεται δοῦδης, or translate "begins singing." The same prepossession tinges Prof. Goodwin's account of the infinitive after adjectives. "The infinitive is here regularly active or middle, even when the passive would seem more natural." The omitted subject of the infinitive (except when it is passive) is distinct from that of the adjective." Prof. Goodwin's feeling for language in concrete examples leads him to translate his illustrations correctly—ἐπιτηδεῖα καὶ λέγειν καὶ ἀκούειν, a road "convenient for speaking and hearing," λούσασθαι ψυχρότερον, "colder for bathing." This "object infinitive," he says, "may be the object of a verb, generally appearing as the accusative of the direct object, sometimes as the accusative of the kindred meaning." With him, then, the whilom dative (for such he admits it was) has so changed its character that it is now to be classed as an accusative only, the proper force of its datival uses having been "already forgotten." I submit that there is no evidence that the Greek mind felt the infinitive as an accusative any more than as any other case. The difficulties of this artificial and anachronistic view are perhaps best seen by quoting Prof. Goodwin's section 748 [the italics are mine], "The poets, especially Homer, allow an infinitive after many verbs, which commonly do not take this construction. The meaning of the verb, however, makes the sense clear." The impression which this leaves on my mind is that Homer (for Homer is a poet) takes the liberty of using constructions which are "peu correctes," but does not go so far as to be unintelligible. As an example Il. 1, 22 is given, ἐπευφήμισαν Ἀχαιοὶ αἰδεῖσθαι ἱερεῖα, translated "the Achaeans shouted with applause (commanding) that they should reverence the priest." The effect of the original upon a mind unprejudiced by grammatical forms is rather "the Achaeans, in assent, shouted for reverencing the priest." In ἔπειρα τὸν ἄνδρα ἀπιέναι Prof. Goodwin would, if I do not misunderstand him, see three accusatives—an actual one in τὸν ἄνδρα, a virtual one in ἀπιέναι, and an implied one in the "omitted subject" τὸ ἀπιέναι. This view I cannot venture to embody in a translation. But I have no difficulty in translating the Greek. It is simply "I won the man over to departing." Prof. Goodwin, indeed, says that in περὶ μὲν βουλήν περὶ δ' ἐστὲ μάχεσθαι (Il. 1, 258) "βουλήν shows that μάχεσθαι was felt as a limiting accusative." But, in the "fluid" condition of Homeric speech, how is this to be proved? I notice, in conclusion, that μὴ οὐ, Mr. Whitelaw notwithstanding, is always explained as conditional, even in Herod. 6, 106. In Soph. O. T. 12 it is rightly explained as conditional, but not rightly referred to 817; the double negative is due to the negative idea of the sentence. "I should be hard-hearted [which I am not] if I did not pity"; an exact parallel is Eur. Med. 568 (quoted in § 443 b).

A few minor but not unimportant points may be referred to. The new numbering by undivided sections is a great improvement; not so the concession to "universal use" in citing the orators by "the numbers of the orations." Dem. Mid. or Zenoth. at once conveys information, often important, to the reader: he seeks it in vain in Dem. 21 or 32. Per contra, Prof. Goodwin has not fallen in with the prevailing affectation of "lettering" the books of Homer or Herodotus. In another edition we shall hope to have the names of speeches at least in the index, and we should be glad also to have the sections of chapters in Thucydides and Herodotus. I have not noticed many misprints; but the same word is misprinted four times in two lines on p. 143, twice also on p. 144.

As a whole, the book is a treasure house of Greek syntax. To put its merit in a word, it is indispensable.

J. P. POSTGATE.

AN INSCRIBED GAULISH MENHIR.

M. LIÈVRE, the librarian of the town of Poitiers, has just published a pamphlet (Poitiers: Blanchier; Paris: Leroux) on the Gaulish inscription on the menhir of Vieux-Poitiers, with a drawing of the stone, and philological notes by Prof. Ernault. The inscription is in Roman characters of about A.D. 200, and, according to M. Lièvre, runs thus:

RATIN BRIVATIOM
FRONTV. TARBELSONIOS
IREVY

that is, "Fronto, son of Tarbello, made (or dedicated) the ratis of the Brivates." To ratis M. Lièvre attributes the meanings "pierre sacrée," or "pierre," while Prof. Ernault compares Irish rath, Welsh rhodd, Old-Breton rat, "grace, favour," and Greek ἐ-παρίς, ἐ-παρίς (from ἐ-παρί-ς), and translates "objet de culte pour les Brivates," "protection (divine) pour les Brivates," "gratum opus Brivatibus." All these renderings are somewhat vague. The drawing shows that the stone is a linga, and it may be conjectured that rati- here signifies a linga or *φαλλός made of stone. This conjecture is supported by the fact that one of the meanings of the Sanskrit rati- is "pudenda." That these menhirs are the simulacra of Mercury of which Caesar speaks (vi. 17, 1) is maintained by M. Salomon Reinach in the new number of the Revue Celtique.

W. S.

OBITUARY.

WITHIN the last few days two names have been struck off the roll of geologists by the hand of death. Mr. John Gunn, of Norwich, formerly rector of Irstead, died on May 28, in his eighty-ninth year. During his long life he had accomplished much excellent work in connexion with the geology and archaeology of Norfolk; and his well-known collection of local fossils, presented to the Norwich Museum, is a standing memorial of his zeal as a collector.

* It should be οὐκ ἐγὼ ἀλλ' ἐ. σ., the αὐτὸς being only required to give the contrast in the indirect discourse.

* The Gaulish man's name Rati-agros (Corpus Inscrip. Lat., x. 4969) may possibly be compared with the Greek names φαλλικάϊος, φαλλίων.

MR. W. S. DALLAS, of the Geological Society, was carried off somewhat suddenly by a paralytic attack on May 29 at the too early age of sixty-six. The loss of so accomplished and amiable a man will be mourned equally by geologists and zoologists. Many of his early writings related to entomological subjects, including a Catalogue of the Hemipterous Insects in the British Museum. Mr. Dallas was well known as the author of A Natural History of the Animal Kingdom, and as the translator and editor of a large number of works, such as Heer's Primeval Switzerland, and Müller's Facts and Arguments for Darwin. His name is also associated with a good deal of the serial literature of science, especially with the Popular Science Review, Cassell's Natural History, and the Annals and Magazine of Natural History. From 1858 to 1868 Mr. Dallas was curator of the York Museum, and in the latter year was appointed to the assistant-secretaryship of the Geological Society—a position which he held until the day of his death, ever discharging its duties with fidelity and with characteristic ability.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ANTONIUS OF HORACE.

Manchester: June 2, 1890.

I am indebted to Prof. W. M. Ramsay for pointing out my careless slip in speaking (obiter) of the "Spanish" as Sallustianum: the error is the less explicable that I wrote with Plin. N.H. xxxiv. 3, "in Centronum Alpino tractu," fresh, as I thought, in my memory.

I wish it had been possible for Prof. Ramsay to give the reference to the recently-discovered IVLLO. ANTONIO. The evidence which, up to the date of this discovery, seemed overwhelmingly against "Iullus" may be found collected in Mommsen's Römisch. Forsch. i., p. 35, note 54, and in Keller's Epitomena, p. 297. I do not know of any recent critical editor of Horace who accepts "Iullus."

In C. I. L., vi., 12,010, we have

M. ANTONI IVLLI,

which is poor evidence that Iullus was a praenomen. Prof. Ribbeck is at least not one of those who endorse the "accepted fact" that Iullus was the praenomen and Antonius the nomen; for he calls him "C. Iulius Antonius," and it was this form of the name which seemed to me so doubtful, in 1890 as in 1884.

A. S. WILKINS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE following arrangements have been made for the meeting of the British Association at Leeds this year, from September 3 to 10. President-elect, Sir Frederic Abel; presidents of sections—(A) Dr. J. W. L. Glaisher; (B) Prof. T. B. Thorpe; (C) Prof. A. H. Green; (D) Prof. A. Milnes Marshall; (E) Sir R. Lambert Playfair; (F) Prof. Alfred Marshall; (G) Capt. A. Noble; (H) Dr. John Evans. Evening discourses will be given by Mr. E. B. Poulton on "Mimicry," and by Prof. C. Vernon Boys on "Quartz Fibres and their Applications"; and Prof. Perry will also lecture to the working classes on "Spinning Tops."

THE Linnean Society has this year awarded its centenary medal to Prof. Huxley. The three previous recipients are Sir Richard Owen, Sir Joseph Hooker, and Prof. Alphonse de Candolle.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

INVITATIONS have this week been issued for the ninth International Congress of Orientalists, to be held in London in 1891 from September 1 to 10, under the hon. presidency of Sir Henry C. Rawlinson. The president of the organising committee is Sir Mount Stuart Grant-Duff, and the vice-president Sir George Birdwood. The members include Profs. Sayce, Douglas, Margoliouth, R. S. Poole, Terrien de Lacouperie, and Cecil Bendall, Dr. Richard Morris, Canon Isaac Taylor, Dr. Ginsburg, Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole, Mr. F. V. Dickinson, Mr. T. G. Pinches, &c. The secretaries are—Dr. Leitner, Woking; Prof. Douglas, British Museum; the Rev. Dr. E. W. Bullinger, Woking; and Mr. J. F. Hewett, Walton-on-Thames.

THE Oxford Magazine for June 4 contains an elaborate review of Mr. Wharton's Etyma Latina, which is characterised as "a book of which not only Oxford but England should be proud, and which will leave its impress on editions of Latin dictionaries and grammars for a long time to come."

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

CAMBRIDGE ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY.—(Annual Meeting, Monday, May 19.)

PROF. T. McK. HUGHES, president, in the chair. The annual report mentioned several publications which had been issued, or were on the point of being issued, to members; those who had passed away were duly commemorated. The roll of the society now numbers 321 ordinary, and 12 honorary members.—Prof. J. H. Middleton gave the following description of a sixteenth-century jug, exhibited by Prof. G. F. Browne. Beer jug of what is called in Elizabethan inventories "Cullen (Cologne) ware," and in French "Grès de Flandre." It was very highly valued in England during the latter half of the sixteenth century, and jugs such as this were often mounted with costly, elaborately-worked silver lids and handles. The South Kensington Museum possesses some fine examples. The "body" of the jug is a very hard siliceous clay, covered with a lead glaze, the peculiar mottling of which was much admired. It was made in this way: first the jug was "thrown" on the potter's wheel, and then thin slabs of the same clay were pressed into moulds, and fixed by some fluid "slip" on to the surface of the jug. The whole was then fired in the kiln, and then fired a second time after being dipped in the glaze. The designs consist of three female figures in the costume of the potter's own time. (1) Judith holding a sword and the head of Holofernes, with scroll over her head inscribed IVRR 1569. (2) Queen Esther standing with folded hands, ESTER HAT FICTORIA, i.e., "Esther has the victory." (3) Lucretia holding a dagger to her breast; LVCRETIA A. 1569. Prof. Browne tells me that this very interesting piece of dated Cullen ware was dug up recently in Downing-street. In many cases the reliefs on this kind of pottery are similar to those used for the stamped vellum book-bindings which were so commonly made in Germany and Flanders during the latter half of the sixteenth century. The three ladies on this jug frequently occur on these beautiful and elaborate bindings. A similar connection between designs on book-bindings and on pottery occurs on the rare (so-called) Henri Deux ware which is of about the same date as Prof. Browne's jug.—The following remarks were also made by Prof. Middleton on a Christian engraved gem belonging to the Rev. S. S. Lewis: Before describing this very interesting gem I will say a few words on the origin of its design. In many cases pagan motives were adopted by the early Christians for their representations of Christ. One of these, in which Christ is represented as the Good Shepherd, is taken from an early Greek design of Hermes Psychopompus—Hermes, that is, in the character of the conductor of souls to the realms of Hades. In Greek art Hermes Psychopompus is represented in various ways. In one of them, the original of the Good Shepherd type, he is shown standing, and bearing on his shoulders a ram or sheep—typifying the soul of the dead person. This type is known as Hermes Criophorus—the sheep-bearer. Pausanias mentions an early and very sacred Criophorus statue as existing in his time at Tanagra in Boeotia. Many bronze statuettes of this group have been found in various places both in Greece and Italy. In other works of art Hermes Psychopompus is represented escorting the soul in human form to the banks of the Styx, where Charon, the ferryman, waits to carry the ghost over the dark stream. This motive occurs on some very beautiful terra cotta reliefs, and also on some of the painted kyklii of Attica, and Eretria in Euboea. In Greek art death was never treated in a horrible or painful way, and among the early Christians there was the same habit of avoiding any painful subjects in their painting and sculpture. On the sarcophagi and in the catacomb paintings of the third and fourth centuries the scenes of Christ's life which are selected are those which illustrate His power or His beneficence, not His death or sufferings. In later times the case was very different, and scenes of horror and torture of every kind became the favourite subjects for the mediaeval artists. If the personification of death was represented in Greek art, death (thanatos) was treated in a graceful way, either, as on the Attic kyklii, as a handsome bearded man in conjunction with Hypnos; or, as on the sculptured column from Epheesus, as a beautiful winged youth, differing only from Eros in the fact that he is armed with a sword. Another variety of the Good Shepherd type was taken by the early Christians from the Greek or Graeco-Roman Orpheus. In some of the earliest catacomb paintings this subject is adopted without any modification to suit its new meaning. The Christ-Orpheus is represented as a youth wearing the Phrygian cap, seated, playing the lyre to a circle of listening beasts and reptiles of all sorts. In later representations sheep only surround the seated figure, which thus becomes more distinctly that of the Good Shepherd. On Mr. Lewis's gem we have the more frequent Criophorus type of the Good Shepherd, which occurs in many forms in Christian art from the third to the fifth century. It is especially found in the following connexions—on the elaborate sarcophagi reliefs of the third and fourth centuries; on the catacomb paintings of the same date; on terra-cotta lamps; on rings and engraved gems; and on those curious glass vessels with pictures in gold leaf, of which so many examples have been discovered in the catacombs of Rome and Naples. Figures in the round of this type are very rare. The most perfect example is a statuette of about half life-size, which was found during the excavations of the lower Church of St. Clemente in Rome. This latter figure seems to date from the latter part of the third century. It is closely similar in design to the figure on Mr. Lewis's gem, but is inferior to it as a work of art, being, like all the sculpture of that date, clumsy in type and coarse in execution. This is one among many examples of skill in the lesser arts surviving long after the more important arts of painting and sculpture on a large scale had fallen into a state of decadence. The workmanship, not only of gems, but also of coins and ivory reliefs, is, in many cases, very good even during the period of the late Roman empire. Mr. Lewis's signet gem is a very beautiful sard, an oval of about one inch by 3/4 inch wide, engraved with a figure of Christ, bearded, in short tunic and long boots; bearing a sheep with curved horns on his shoulders. He stands on an anchor, emblem of Faith; two lambs leap up towards Him; behind Him is a tree, on which three birds are sitting. In the field are two fishes—the IXΘΥΣ being the well-known emblem of Christ. In the exergue, below the anchor, is a small cross on a disc. The workmanship is unusually fine, both in proportions and details. The design is pictorial in style, and an unusual amount of the field is unoccupied. On the whole it is the finest gem of the kind I have ever seen. From its exceptionally fine workmanship it cannot be later than the fourth century; and, if the figure of Christ had not been bearded, I should have given it an earlier date. It has unfortunately been damaged by re-polishing, which gives, at first sight, a dubious look to the gem. In point of technique it is an interesting example of very skilful work with the wheel and the drill, as is described by Pliny (H. N. xxxvii., § 200) in an interesting passage which gives the various methods of work employed by gem-engravers, the most important being the use of tools driven by a bow and drill—"plurimum vero in its terebrarum proficit fervor." Perhaps the finest collection of gems of this type is that in the possession of Dr. Drury Fortnum, who has written some interesting articles on them in the Archæological Journal. This collection includes many rings, either wholly of metal or set with engraved gems, with figures of the Good Shepherd represented both by the Orpheus and the Hermes Criophorus type.

ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.—(Anniversary Meeting, Monday, May 21.)

SIR THOMAS WADE, president, in the chair. The election of Mr. M. L. van Deventer as a non-resident member was announced. The president reviewed the position of the society, both as to finances and as to its work. Though a small body, it was larger in numbers than it had ever been, and was steadily though slowly increasing; and its financial position was thoroughly sound. After giving details on these points, the president pointed out that the activity of the society in its special work was encouraging. The Journal was not only much larger than formerly, but had now for some time been issued at regular quarterly intervals; and the society was also undertaking the delivery of regular courses of lectures, and was contemplating the foundation of a new fund for the translation of oriental works on history and geography. After urging the members to increased effort, he vacated the chair for the new president, the Earl of Northbrook.—Sir M. Monier-Williams, as the oldest member present, moved a vote of thanks to the outgoing president, and welcomed the new president, who had been preceded in office by another ex-viceroy of India, Lord Auckland, and who had already showed in many ways, more especially in connexion with the Indian Institute at Oxford, his interest in orientalism. The motion was seconded by Sir Mountstuart Grant-Duff, and supported by Sir Henry Rawlinson, who referred to the support he had received from the society in the publication of his Assyrian researches, and by Mr. Howorth, who strongly urged the importance of the new translation scheme. The following were elected as council and officers for 1890-91: president—The Earl of Northbrook; director—Sir H. O. Rawlinson; vice-presidents—Sir A. Cunningham, Sir F. J. Goldsmid, Sir Monier Monier-Williams, Prof. A. H. Fayce, Prof. W. Robertson Smith; council—F. F. Arbuthnot, Sir George Birdwood, Edward G. Browne, F. V. Dickins, Sir M. E. Grant Duff, Prof. Douglas, Dr. Theodore Duka, J. F. Hewitt, Sir W. Wilson Hunter, Henry O. Kay, Sir Peter Lumsden, Gen. Robert MacLagan, E. Delmar Morgan, Robert Sewell, T. H. Thornton; treasurer—E. L. Brandreth; secretary—Prof. T. W. Rhys Davids; hon. secretary—Robert N. Oust.

FINE ART.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

III.

As usual, it is in the departments of portraiture and landscape-painting that the greatest vitality is observable—in those departments, in fact, in which absolute contact with nature is a necessity, and the crowning grace of true imagination, though a quality not less precious than in other branches of art, is perhaps not so readily missed as in these. While, at the Academy at any rate, some of the greatest and most deservedly popular among English portraitists have fallen conspicuously below their highest level of excellence, others have displayed an equally remarkable advance.

It would be unnecessary cruelty to dwell on the only too obvious demerits of Sir J. E. Millais's "The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P., and his Grandson" (361). These may be condoned in remembrance of the same master's magnificent profile portrait of the great orator, formerly in the possession of the Duke of Westminster. Neither can it with any fairness be asserted that Mr. Watts in the charmingly-conceived study of babyhood, "Hester Fraser Tytler" (196), shows any of his lost cunning of hand. Too many of our competent portrait-painters are apparently now condemned to perpetuate the features of provincial mayors with or without their insignia of office, of masters of foxhounds past, present, and future, and of vigorous government officials more or less known to fame. No one executes such a task with greater dignity and success than Mr. Oulless, who, notwithstanding a certain dryness of execution which is inherent in his manner, has rarely been happier than in his "Angus Holden, Esq., Mayor of Bradford, 1887" (74), in which the precise and brilliant execution of accessories difficult to deal with enhances rather than detracts from the character of the whole. A great rarity and exception in this artist's practice is the full-length of a lady, "Mrs. North" (214), which, by reason of his mannerism in the treatment of flesh, is far from being an agreeable performance.

The unexpectedly brilliant success attained by Mr. Luke Fildes when he some four years since broke new ground with his "Mrs. Luke Fildes," is on the present occasion more than sustained. Such is now his vogue that we may expect that, as was ultimately the case with the late Frank Holl, he will in future devote himself mainly to portrait-painting. His "Mrs. Thomas Agnew" (303) is a fine and delicately-modelled presentment of an elderly lady, in which, however, the gown of puce-coloured brocaded satin, set off with adornments of white lace and gauze, is rendered with a certain harshness and want of brilliancy in the textures. In the more sculptural portrait of "Mrs. Robert Borwick" (395), there is—or rather we imagine that we can trace—a certain resemblance to the style of M. Elie Delaunay. Mr. Fildes's most complete and striking achievement is, however, the large full-length "Portrait of a Lady" (467). This white-haired dame, soberly yet magnificently attired in black velvet and Venetian point, faces the spectator, just leaning one hand on a console of pronounced Louis Quatorze design. Although this picture is perfectly simple and realistic in conception, it has elements of strength and dignity such as the painter has not yet revealed in the same measure. Something in the general arrangement of the whole suggests a study of the grands portraits d'apparat produced during the first half of the last century.

It is a rash thing to condemn any performance of Mr. J. S. Sargent's without returning to it a second and a third time. He has on occasion an odd way of asserting himself, and of giving the careful student of his work an uneasy feeling that his first impression has been a hasty and a wrong one. Still, it is difficult to find any excuse for the defiant and unmitigated ugliness of the "Portrait of Mrs. K." (652), with its trenchant grey tones and bluish shadows. It may perhaps have for the artist himself a significance which it certainly lacks for the uninitiated beholder. The "Portrait of a Lady—a Study" (421) shows equally that element of perverseness in the artistic nature of this gifted painter, which prevents him from contemplating from its serious side, or with the respect due even to average humanity, the personality which he seeks to reproduce. This vivacious lady, robed in mauve satin, relieved by a crimson flower in her bodice, raises her ample skirts with an unrefined movement, which is, moreover, of too ephemeral and too trivial a character to be suitable for reproduction in a portrait. Yet the truth and vitality of the representation, the easy, or apparently easy, brilliancy of the execution are such that, when we look round and compare the uninviting performance with its soberer neighbours, this appears—to borrow the words often applied to the art of Mr. Sargent's prototype, Velázquez—verdad, the rest merely pintura. Should, however, the advocatus diaboli reply to this praise, "If this be truth, let truth for ever hide her head," it is not sure but that many might be found to agree with him. Mr. Jacob-Hood's "Miss Shaw Lefevre, late President of Somerville Hall, Oxford" (436) shows a remarkable power in the artist of adapting style to subject; for this serious and imposing presentment of a learned lady is modelled with an almost over-anxious precision, and conceived in a reticent spirit altogether well suited to the subject. Admirable, too, in its pathetic simplicity, and its easy skill of arrangement, is Mr. J. H. Lorimer's likeness of "The late Professor Lorimer" (471), depicted in his doctor's robes. Mr. Alma-Tadema's half-length of "E. A. Waterlow, A.R.A." (160) is a singularly natural and unaffected piece of portraiture, lacking only that absolute success in the rendering of flesh which Mr. Tadema seldom attains in dealing with a life-size subject. Mr. Hubert Herkomer's performances in portraiture will not satisfy his admirers. Neither of his female portraits at all approaches the level of the "Miss Grant" or the "Lady in Black"; while the male portraits show rather the assumption than the possession of true solidity of execution. Of these, by far the best is the "Major E. R. Burke" (318). There is a certain alertness of movement, a suggestion of life, in Mr. Pettie's "Sir Edmund Hay-Currie" (144), which is, however, marred by the painter's usual defect—the vitreous quality of his environing atmosphere. In his "Sir Baylton Dixon" (1099), the bright scarlet coat of the sitter is treated with most unpleasant effect, its tone being neither in true relation nor in happy contrast to the hot background. We had accustomed ourselves to look upon Mr. W. Carter as one of the most rising of the younger English portrait painters. He is, however, this year all at sea, groping on the one side in the direction of French art, with his "Mrs. D. Dale" (98); and, on the other, seeking apparently to assimilate the style of Mr. Oulless, as in the official likeness of "James Hughes, Esq., Mayor of Oxford" (138). The large full-length "Study in Red" of Mr. W. T. Dannat (237) may be looked upon either as a portrait or as an exercise, on a large scale, in the combination of cunningly-graded reds with ivory-like flesh and locks of a ruddy fairness. Considerable success attends the attempt; but a higher degree of technical subtlety would be requisite in order to give adequate interest to a study of such size and pretensions.

On the whole, the completest and most satisfactory performances of the year are to be found among the landscapes and marine pieces; both the veterans and that ever-increasing band of younger wooers of nature having this year highly distinguished themselves. That Sir John Millais's twilight landscape "The Moon is up and yet it is not Night" (25) has been to him a labour of love is evident. Not often of late years has the master revealed so much genuine pathos in depicting a scene of his favourite Scotland. Unfortunately he is still but too faithful to the principles of the school to which he originally belonged; and, declining to generalise or omit, he yet selects for representation subjects which do not, unassisted, compose themselves or constitute in their virgin simplicity pictures proper. We have never been great admirers of the hard artificial quality of light affected by Mr. H. W. B. Davis; and yet we are constrained to admit that "A Ford on the Wye" (780), though by no means free from this drawback, is a noble composition. The drawing and grouping of the oxen crossing the fair stream in the afternoon glow is first-rate. Mr. Vicat Cole and Mr. Leader, the protagonists of what we may call the popular British school—that which gladdens the eye of the average tourist and the lover of the commonplace picturesque—are both represented by characteristic works: the former by a large canvas, "The Thames at Greenwich" (390); the latter by three pictures, of which the best is the well-composed "The Silent Evening Hour" (672), and the worst the intensely harsh and drily-painted coast scene, entitled "The Sandy Margin of the Sea" (131).

Hardly ever has the veteran Mr. Hook done better than on the present occasion. At this stage of his prolonged career it seems unnecessary to dwell upon the obvious limitations of his well-matured and in its way consummate art—the narrowness of its scope and its too great monotony from a technical point of view. It is refreshing to find the master abandoning for once British coast scenery and giving us in "A Dutch Pedlar" (309), an unsurpassed view of a wide canal or inlet in Holland, with its expanse of calmly-flowing water meandering through low green banks, and its warm, moisture-laden atmosphere. The rendering is altogether masterly, save for the figures, which are, as usual, uninteresting. A good specimen of Mr. Hook's work, in his more usual vein, is "Breakfasts for the Porth" (317); and a better still, "Last Night's Disaster" (75), in which, with more than usual daring and felicity, he has depicted the movement of a still violently agitated yet slowly subsiding sea. We have seen Mr. Henry Moore to greater advantage than in the three canvases here shown, though in all of them the hand of the true artist and the true nature-lover is apparent. We prefer to any of them the smaller of his contributions to the new Salon of the Champ-de-Mars. A fine imaginative conception is Mr. Audley Mackworth's study of vast sun-dyed clouds overhanging a calm sea, called by him "Cloud Chariots" (158). He owes something to the example of Mr. Brett, but avoids that painter's pre-Raphaelite insistence on embarrassing detail, and takes a more emotional view of nature. The latter displays his wonted industry in four canvases, of which the most important, if not the most successful, is "Echoes of a far-off Storm" (472). We cannot but regret Mr. Adrian Stokes's temporary abandonment of landscape proper for studies of white, frothing sea tinged by the sunset hues of a clear sky; since what he shows at present gives proof rather of endeavour than of achievement. Of the superficial brilliancy, the loose à peu pres technique, of Mr. Peter Graham and his followers it is not easy to say anything new or interesting. The master himself has been seen to far greater advantage than in "Departing Day" (190), or "Low Tide" (215); while Mr. MacWhirter is characteristically himself in the large and purely scenic "Mount Etna from Taormina" (708). A far better executant, coming nevertheless within the same category as the last-named painter, is Mr. J. Farquharson, who in "My Heart's in the Highlands" (562) has from his own standpoint well rendered a subject of singular charm—a winding Scotch river glancing in the sun and fitfully shown through the branches of fir-trees projecting across the foreground. One of the best things in the exhibition, and certainly, up to the present, the magnum opus of its author, is Mr. David Murray's large landscape, "The Young Wheat" (1090), showing a vast prospect of bleak fields upon which the corn is beginning to sprout, these being sparsely marked out along the boundaries by blossoming trees. The hardness and paintiness of the far distance in this, as in another charming example on a smaller scale, "In Summer-time" (875), alone mars the satisfactory effect of the whole. A very brilliant tour de force is the "Tulip Culture" (750) of the American landscapist, Mr. George Hitchcock. He depicts in the freshness and sparkle of morning sunshine a formal garden on parterre of tulips, arranged in broad bands of white, yellow, pale and deep pink blossoms, in the midst of which stands a female figure in quaint Dutch costume of lilac hue. The painter of this curious study has derived something in the rendering of light and air from the impressionistic school of Claude Monet, but he shows, nevertheless, only a tempered enthusiasm for this special phase of modern art. Among the most delicate pieces of tone and colour to be found on the walls of the Academy, is Mr. Alfred East's "October Glow; near Yardley Woods" (1104). Want of space prevents us from referring in detail to some interesting performances, including Mr. W. L. Wyllie's "Davy Jones's Locker" (81); Mr. Robert Noble's "By the Linn Pool" (759); Mr. Napier Hemy's "The Rescue" (1147); Mr. Yeend King's "Autumn's Wooing" (1098); and Mr. W. L. Picknell's "November Solitude" (779).

The relatively narrow space devoted as usual to the exhibition of sculpture is, on the whole, not less well filled than on recent occasions, although neither the hope of the new school, Mr. Alfred Gilbert, nor the President have been able this year to contribute anything. We have been accustomed to identify Mr. Harry Bates with sculptured reliefs, executed in a style hovering midway between the later Greek manner and the style of the Renaissance; but he now takes, for the first time, high rank as a sculptor in the round. His "Pandora" (2117) is a nude kneeling figure of harmonious lines and delicate modelling, informed, moreover, with a melancholy grace most appropriate to the subject. It was a quaint and dainty conceit to fashion the fatal casket of gold and ivory after the fashion of the chryselephantine sculptures of ancient Greece. Yet this seems at once to necessitate a polychromatic scheme of colour, such as M. Gérôme has this year applied, with signal success to his statue "Tanagra" at the old Salon; and such as Gibson employed some thirty years ago in his once famous "Tinted Venus." Mr. Bates has slightly tinted his surface, so as to take off the crude whiteness of the marble, but this concession appears hardly sufficient. Mr. Hamo Thornycroft shows no statue of importance, but by his diploma work, the bas-relief styled "The Mirror" (2057), gives proof of an important progress in the one branch of his art which he had not completely mastered. A young American sculptor, Mr. John Donoghue—who is better known as yet in Paris and Rome than in London—makes an important first appearance with "The young Sophocles leading the Chorus of Victory after the Battle of Salamis" (2119). It may, perhaps, be objected that this is not the boy Sophocles leading a choric song of thanksgiving, but rather a comelier Tyrtæus chaunting a fierce war-song as he urges his Spartans on to the attack. However this may be, the artist displays a genuine power of assimilating Greek forms and the Greek spirit, while infusing into them a vitality and a personal quality belonging to himself. Mr. George Frampton's bronze figure, "The Angel of Death" (2090), shows some passages of fine and subtle modelling and some pathos of conception, but it lacks altogether impressiveness of general aspect. On the contrary, in Mr. W. A. Davis's marble statue, "The Genius of Sculpture" (2091), admiration is compelled for the flowing lines and easy harmony of the general composition, while the triteness and stagey quality of the conception exercises a repellent effect. Decorative skill of a class not usually found in modern English sculpture is shown by Mr. Lawes in his large allegorical composition styled "Figures representing Liberty, Peace, Commerce, &c." (2004)—a work giving proof of strong leanings towards the French style of the end of the seventeenth and beginning of the eighteenth century. It is wanting, however, in purpose and in the distinctiveness which belongs to a true artistic individuality. Mr. J. Havard Thomas's "The late Right Hon. W. E. Forster" (1962) gives proof of ability in the treatment of the unmanageable costume proper to the modern civilian, but displays a too rhetorical conception of a noble and simple personality. Last, but by no means least, we come to Mr. Onslow Ford's colossal bronze group, "Charles George Gordon" (1958)—showing the hero of Khartoum in a magnificent gala uniform, mounted on a camel which is caparisoned with a fanciful and excessive splendour. It is impossible not to admire the skill with which the character of the huge beast is given, with which the multitudinous details of its hair and skin and its magnificent trappings are reproduced; while we will not deny that the form and attitude of the great leader are very cleverly adapted to that of his strange mount. Yet who will be found to maintain that this is a fitting or dignified mode of presenting to posterity one of England's noblest children, or that we have here any really typical elements of the man or the essence of his true personality? And it would constitute no good answer to our strictures to prove that the uniform, the decorations, the camel's shaggy mane and its adornments are all textually correct; for the impression which they combine to convey is not truly characteristic, but a false and misleading one. Mr. Onslow Ford's other contributions are the bronze statue "Music," which is evidently a pendant to the "Dancing" in the New Gallery, and the bronze version of the curious decorative figure "Peace," of which the plaster model appeared here some two or three years since.

CLAUDE PHILLIPS

PROPOSED EXCAVATIONS AT CHESTER.

SOME repairs executed three years ago in the North Wall of Chester resulted in the discovery of Roman inscriptions and sculptures; and a further exploration, started by the Chester Archaeological and Historic Society, produced more inscriptions and sculptures. It is now proposed to set on foot further explorations at the same spot. The former discoveries have excited great interest both in England and on the Continent, and Prof. Mommsen, of Berlin, has written to Mr. Haverfield strongly urging further search. Of all the historic sites in England none are so likely to aid our knowledge of Roman history as the Roman military centres, and it is well known that Deva was garrisoned by the Twentieth Legion from the earliest times almost until the end of the Roman occupation of our island. The results of the excavations are therefore likely to be of importance not only to English archaeologists, but to all professed scholars, and it is to be hoped that both will readily respond to the appeal for subscriptions, and do their best to further this really important work in any way possible to them.

The area of search will be the Dean's Field and the North Wall adjoining the portions previously examined. A scheme of excavation, signed or supported by the Duke of Westminster, the Bishops of Chester, Salisbury, and Oxford (Bishop Stubbs), Dr. Evans, President of the Society of Antiquaries, Dr. Collingwood Bruce, Dr. Hodgkin, Prof. Pelham, Mr. F. Haverfield, and others, has been put forth, with the concurrence of the Chester Archaeological Society, and the Dean and the Corporation have given leave for the excavations. Subscriptions may be sent either to Prof. Pelham, 20, Bradmore-road, Oxford, or to Mr. Haverfield, Lancing College, Shoreham.

The extract from a private letter of Prof. Mommsen referred to above is as follows:

"I approve, with all my heart, the project of taking upon a larger scale the excavations at Chester. For the story of the Roman empire, so far as it has to be based on the monuments, there is nothing so instructive as the great headquarters of the imperial army. The cemetery discovered at the beginning of this century at Mayence has more advanced our knowledge of this period than all the vulgar scribbling with which the plebs urbana has filled our volumes. We Latin scholars will pray very earnestly for good luck to the English pick-axes occupied at Deva; and the last discoveries give good hope. Perhaps Greek inscriptions are more in vogue with your classic and roving nation; but I think you do not lack men who, remembering or not remembering our poet's words, Willst du immer weiter schwelgen? sich! das Gute liegt so nah, will act up to it.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

A SERIES of water-colour drawings by Mme. Madeleine Lemaire is on view just now at the Goupil Gallery. Attention was drawn to the artist some years ago, it will be recollected; and, after a lapse of time, she had a distinct success with the illustrations to L'Abbé Constantin of Halévy. Of these it has been lately said that, as actual interpretations of the novelist's character, they are hardly equal to Maurice Leloir's illustrations to Manon Lescaut or to Lynch's illustrations to Calmann Levy's édition de luxe of the Père Goriot of Balzac. But for all that, they are possessed of two qualities not very often found in combination—grace and dash. Of the new drawings which illustrate M. Hervieu's Flirt the same may, we think, be averred. Such qualities as they have are French, essentially—neither in conception nor method have they anything in common with English water-colour. They are not the less attractive and clever, and a spare half-hour may be spent not unprofitably in seeing them.

THE eighth exhibition of works in black and white executed for Cassell & Co.'s publications is now on view in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, and will remain open until June 20.

MESSRS. R. H. SUTTON & Co. announce folios of Lace and Embroidery, edited by Mr. Alan S. Cole, and folios 2 and 3 of Wood-Carving, edited by Eleanor Rowe.

WE quote the following from the Oxford Magazine:

"The British excavations at Megalopolis are continuing to produce very satisfactory results. Though the tumulus which gave rise to somewhat unfounded hopes seems to contain little of interest, the theatre is repaying excavation admirably. Mr. Loring, of King's College, Cambridge, and Mr. Woodhouse, of Queen's College, Oxford, are now in charge. They have found the bottom of the caeca quite perfect. The number of 'wedges' is nine, each fronted by a long throne. Besides the lower row, a continuous channel and stone border have been found. The orchestra is of a horse-shoe pattern, not a complete circle as at Epidaurus. A series of most interesting inscriptions of several periods has been brought to light upon the throne. These were all dedicated, it appears, by one Antiochos after he had been Agonothetes. The names of tribes also occur in Roman and in earlier characters. The latest find is a cylindrical dedication-base, with an artist's inscription; the statue has not been found, but may yet be forthcoming. At the end of this month [May] the excavations will be discontinued for the present."

THE STAGE.

"JUDAH."

AT the vast Shaftesbury Theatre, where even "The Middleman" had not quite the length of run that was expected, and where "Dick Venables"—not an uninteresting play by any means—came to an untimely end, Messrs. Willard and Lart have now produced Mr. Jones's "Judah." "Judah," though it does not afford to Mr. Willard the opportunity for a personation so picturesque and so varied as that of Cyrus Blenkarn, bids fair to be a distinct success. It will carry Messrs. Willard and Lart comfortably on to the end of their management, and it would probably do more than this. It appears to me extremely well constructed; it is certainly well written—written, indeed, quite admirably, if judged by the unexacting standard of the modern stage; and it is performed well enough as regards its secondary characters, and all but perfectly as regards its two principal ones. And the two chief parts, be it noted, those of Mr. Willard and Miss Brandon, though good up to a certain point, are yet more trying than remunerative. An examination of "Judah" can only confirm the statement of its author, that it is the first of a series (as I think I understand him) not designed for a particular actor or a particular theatre, but the unfettered product of the imagination of its writer.

Nevertheless, I am not sure whether Mr. Willard's part on a certain side—the character of Judah Llewellyn in a certain phase of him—might not have been strengthened with advantage. Literary interest, at all events—what one may call poetic interest, indeed—would have been increased rather than lessened had Mr. Jones been pleased to emphasize that which is essentially Celtic in the temperament of the Welsh Presbyterian minister, who, living in his youth the life of a shepherd on the hill-side, heard "voices," as Joan of Arc did. The first act has not proceeded very far before the essentially Celtic—the visionary, the poetic—is a good deal dropped. Judah, though he yields before long to a terrible temptation, and becomes, to put it severely, a perjured soul, remains in the main a well-intentioned and not extraordinary young man, with a certain desire after piety. As a dramatist's creation he is not so good but that he might be still better; as an imaginative study he cannot take rank, I think, with Cyrus Blenkarn, who, though indeed he did not so conduct himself as to prove what the Socialists would like him to have proved (since he was artist, and only artist, and needed a middleman to work him) was yet a character curiously complete and well considered, a portrait observed and executed with real penetration—not a type, but an individual, another Bernard Palissy, of the Staffordshire towns. Llewellyn Judah, the young minister, does not impress us so powerfully. Again, there is the character of the heroine, Vashti Dethick. To the artist who interprets her she presents immense difficulties, which are admirably minimised—I cannot say, vanquished. As the creation of a writer she is excellent—more fully satisfactory, perhaps, than Judah Llewellyn; yet, as a rôle for the theatre, she must be pronounced to be at the same time exacting in her requirements and limited in her effects.

But if "Judah" does not present to its chief performers opportunities as great and as sympathetic as did "The Middleman," it lays hold as boldly of what may be considered a problem of the day, and leads it to a noble solution. It would be hard to imagine a more dexterous treatment than Mr. Jones has applied in his new piece to what at first sight may seem the merely sensational subject of a fasting-woman working, or preparing to work, a cure upon a young girl who suffers from some obscure nervous disease. What the disease is we are not explicitly told; but there is, among other matter, very true observation of life in the author's full recognition of the immense influence exercised upon the very sensitive—their deterioration or improvement, in fact—by the mere presence of particular persons, either antipathetic or congenial to them. The little Lady Eve—played by Miss Bessie Hatton with naïveté naturalness and tact—is visibly better, before Miss Vashti Dethick, with her magnetic attractiveness, has been in the house half an hour. And, apart from observation of life and purely literary gifts, one remarks in the piece a singular excellence of construction; and it has been implied already that one's moral sense is satisfied at the ending—an ending in which two lovers, both of whom have been faulty, accept the responsibility of living down their faults in the midst of the very people who have been most conscious of them. The blemish on Vashti was certainly not irremovable; not irremovable, even, was the fault of the Welsh minister. The really moral conclusion may be genuinely liked—it will, at all events, be heartily applauded by a public never slow to recognise the necessity of virtue in others. "We have all of us," says La Rochefoucauld, "resignation enough to endure the sorrows of other people." We have all of us, too, morality enough to perceive the necessity of moral behaviour on the part of our neighbours.

Miss Bessie Hatton—who acts a difficult though sympathetic little part with so much discretion—is the only artist engaged upon the Shaftesbury stage of whom I have yet spoken. And since we happen to be among the secondary characters, let tribute of praise be offered to the interpreters of several more of them: to Miss Gertrude Warden, for instance, who plays with naturalness and right effect what Miss Gertrude Kingston would have played with higher and more forced but still with always effective colour—the part of the scientific young woman, who is an active member of the Watch Committee, self-appointed, so to say, at Lord Asgarby's, to inquire into the bona fides of Vashti Dethick. Mr. Sant Matthews is excellent as Professor Jopp; and Mr. Kerr as the scientific young man who makes slightly physiological love to the scientific young woman. The material for satire in these matters is neatly indicated by Mr. Jones—the satire itself might, I think, with advantage have been carried further. As Mr. Dethick—humbug altogether, "Sludge, the medium" in the life of to-day—Mr. Royce Carleton is everything that he ought to be.

It remains only to speak of Mr. Willard and Miss Olga Brandon. In the hands of both these artists the play receives fullest justice. In "Dick Venables" the young emotional actress, who has taken rather suddenly a distinguished place, had more opportunities to use, and she used them; but in "Judah" nothing is neglected, and something of a magnetic presence—a presence that might have cured Lady Eve and fascinated Judah Llewellyn—is assuredly made manifest. The performance of the Dissenting minister by Mr. Willard is a contribution of an almost inestimable kind to the success of the play—ineestimable inasmuch as he leaves us no means of realising how great are those difficulties of the part which his stage art contrives almost imperceptibly to surmount. I do not propose to dwell upon this or that particular point in an impersonation that is throughout consistent, discreet, and powerful, but rather to invite the reader to ask himself how many actors we possess who, in the performance of Mr. Willard's part, would have been able to carry the sympathies of the public completely with them. Judah Llewellyn—though the author might have developed him more amply than he has chosen to do—has to be at once something of a poet, of a seer, of a lover, of a saint, of a penitent, of a shepherd of his flock. How to be convincing in all, and repulsive and mawkish in none? Mr. Willard solves the difficulty. He portrays with a poetic realism and with vivid interest a character essentially noble, yet not built by any means upon popular lines. The performance is broad and consistent. It has, as I have said, the rare merit of being convincing.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

WE were bidden last Friday to witness at a matinée at Terry's Theatre the performance of Mrs. A. Webster's poetic drama, "In a Day." Augusta Webster has long and deservedly enjoyed consideration as a poet; but we fear that "In a Day" does not evince much aptitude on the part of its author for purely theatrical writing. The play, which reads well, somehow gathers about it a sense of diffuseness when seen upon the stage; and on Friday many passages not uninteresting in themselves visibly bored an audience which consisted in the main of more or less literary people. Again, if it was desired to know what effect might be produced by the performance of that which is confessedly a piece of good literature, it was ill-advised to make the experiment with so amateurish a cast as that of last week. Miss Davies Webster—the daughter of the poetess—has indeed, as we are informed, had some little provincial experience, and she is of sympathetic presence, and highly intelligent. But she has much to learn. The technique of the art of an actress has yet to be acquired by her. From the first words it was evident that she was a lady, and evident, hardly less distinctly, that she was not an artist. Mr. Mathew Brodie's performance of Myron, a wealthy Greek who is not a little of a Sybarite, was well-intentioned, and occasionally not wanting in freshness: but it was inadequate. The part of Olymnius, father to the heroine, Klydona, was looked and acted with feeling and an unusual measure of tact and expressiveness by Mr. Stephen Phillips, who filled a small rôle, we recollect, in one of the recent productions of Mr. Benson. Mrs. Webster has decided lyrical faculty, and it was a relief to find that one of her songs—

"Once a sea-nymph loved a boy:
He and she, they loved so well"— was given very effectively. The music was composed by Miss Mary Carmichael. But whatever may have been the refreshment afforded by certain passages of the performance, whether dramatic or lyrical, the result of all cannot truthfully be said to have shown that Augusta Webster is a poet for the stage. It is much to be a poet for the closet.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

"LA TRAVIATA" was given at Covent Garden on Saturday evening last, with Miss Ella Russell as the Violetta. Though a difficult part for her, she may be said to have played the invalid very well. For her brilliant vocalisation she deserves much praise. M. Montariol, the Alfredo, was good, except for the fact that he occasionally forced his notes. "Don Giovanni," Mozart's masterpiece, was given on the following Monday, with a strong cast. The new lady from Munich, Mme Tavery, took the part of Donna Anna. She has a clear voice, good intonation, and her declamatory singing is very fine. Mme. Nordica, as Elvira, and Miss de Lussan, as Lerlina, were both satisfactory. Sig. Ravelli sang "Mio tesoro" exceedingly well, but he wisely declined the encore. It is now beginning to be felt that encores are even more of a nuisance on the stage than on the concert platform. Mr. Augustus Harris is evidently trying to use his powerful influence to abolish them. Mr. Plumkett Greene's voice told well in the Statue scene. Sig. d'Andrade was good in the title rôle. The chorus was admirable. The band under the direction of M. Randegger was also remarkably good. "Roméo et Juliette" was performed in French on Tuesday evening, and drew a large audience. Mme. Melba did full justice to the part of Juliette so far as vocalisation was concerned, but her impersonation of the daughter of Capulet, on the whole, lacked emotion. M. Jean de Reske, as the Romeo, surpassed himself; he is in better voice than ever this season. M. E. de Reske, as Friar Laurent, sang and acted as usual—that is, magnificently. M. Montariol was excellent as Tybalt. Mlle. Regina Pinkert made a satisfactory appearance as Stephano. The chorus sang brilliantly; and the orchestral accompaniments, under the direction of Sig. Mancinelli deserve high praises, especially in the matter of delicacy. Another great attraction this week will be "Die Meistersinger" on Saturday evening, with M. J. de Reske as the Walther. Mme. Tavery will be the Eva and M. Lassalle the Hans Sachs; the rest of the cast is also a good one.

M. Paderewski gave his third recital at St. James's Hall last Thursday week. There is no occasion to describe the programme in detail, for we have nothing fresh to add about his interpretations of modern compositions, including his own. He played Beethoven's Sonata in A flat (op. 110) in an interesting and characteristic manner, though little artifices from time to time interfered with one's enjoyment. His reading of Schumann's Carnival was exaggerated. In this music one can have plenty of sentiment, but not sentimentality. M. Paderewski does not seem to be in touch with this composer. We are glad to find that he is attracting larger audiences.

A very interesting concert was given the same evening at Princes' Hall by Mme. Sophie Löwe and some of her pupils. The programme was an excellent one, comprising songs of Brahms, Schumann, and Schubert. Mme. Löwe sang with her usual good taste, and the pupils gave evidence of careful training.

M. Sapellnikoff gave a pianoforte recital on the following afternoon. Of his perfect command of the keyboard we have already spoken. He had a good chance for display in a Liszt transcription of one of Bach's organ works. His interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata Appassionata was thoroughly sound. Mendelssohn's "Variations Sérieuses" were given in a brilliant though at times somewhat too demonstrative a manner. Chopin's Fantaisie in F minor and A flat Polonaise were played with energy, although in the latter piece there was too much effort. The Nocturne in D flat is a real test piece, but M. Sapellnikoff never seemed to get beneath the notes. Some Tchaikowski Variations, and some Liszt and Tausig transcriptions gave the pianist further opportunity of showing his strength and marvellous technical skill.

Mr. George Grossmith's humorous and musical recital at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon deserves mention, although it cannot properly be regarded as a concert. Mr. Grossmith has a pianoforte on the platform, of which, indeed, he makes skilful use. The humorous songs which he sings, and the funny, clever, and, at times, satirical remarks which he makes, are, however, the chief attraction of the entertainment. The fact that Mr. Grossmith for two hours amused an immense audience proves him to be specially fitted for the career which he has chosen. His success was never for a moment in doubt.

The programme of the third Richter concert on Monday evening included two excerpts from the "Ring des Nibelungen": the first scene from Act 3 of "Siegfried," in which Wotan wakens Erda from her long sleep to ask questions respecting the fate of the gods; and the third scene from "Götterdämmerung," in which Hagen and the vassals welcome Gunther and his bride, Brünnhilde. The performances were excellent. Miss Lena Little and Mr. Max Heinrich sang with dramatic power, and with due appreciation of the music. The male chorus sang with energy. One may ask, however, whether it is right to give selections of this kind. The enthusiastic admirers of Wagner have an answer ready to hand—Beethoven's Symphonies became known in a similar manner. Those who are well acquainted with the work, and especially those who have been to Bayreuth, can enjoy the music as a reminiscence; but we much fear that to others it can mean but little. The programme included Goldmark's Overture "Im Frühling," lately produced at the Crystal Palace; Brahms's serious and profound Rhapsody on a fragment from Goethe's "Hartzeise im Winter," for alto solo, male chorus, and orchestra; and Mozart's "Linz" Symphony. Herr Richter conducted with his usual ability and success. The hall was crowded.

Herr Willy Hess, Sir C. Hallé's able leader, gave a morning concert at Princes' Hall on Tuesday. He played in a firm and thoroughly artistic manner Rust's Sonata in D minor; the music, if old-fashioned, is of great interest. Ernst's Concerto in F sharp minor enabled him to show how good a player he is; but the composition is weak, and is not improved by a pianoforte accompaniment. Herr Hess gave likewise some solos. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel sang solos and a duet in their best style. The audience was large and appreciative.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING

for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.
G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C. and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery-lane, W.C.

ROMANTIC STORIES of STAGE and RING; or, Glimpses Behind the Scenes. By A WANDERING MUSICIAN. Ready June 2nd. Price 1s.

Edinburgh: MENZIES & Co,
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co.

NOW READY, 8vo, price 15s.

CHURCH AND STATE UNDER THE TUDORS.

By GILBERT W. CHILD, M.A.,

Exeter College, Oxford.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

THE QUALITY OF MERCY.

A TALE OF SLUMBERLY QUAMP.

BY HAROLD VALLINGS.

Author of "The Superior Sex," &c. 2 vols. 21s.

"A really clever piece of work. Quite one of the stories to be read."—Court Journal.

GARDNER & CO., 26, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Now ready, demy 8vo, 2 vols., cloth, 38s.

BRETT'S COMMENTARIES ON THE PRESENT LAWS OF ENGLAND.

By THOMAS BRETT, B.A., LL.B.,

Author of "Leading Cases in Modern Equity," and joint Author of "Clerke and Brett's Conveyancing Acts, 1891-2."

The main idea of this book is to bring into special prominence the present and living law, and only to deal with past law, or that which is practically obsolete, so far as it is necessary to enable the reader to understand the present.

LONDON: WM. CLOWES & SONS (Limited), 27, FLEET STREET.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY,

SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

Books can be exchanged at the residences of Subscribers in London, by the Library Messengers.

SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per Annum.

A Large number of Copies of the Best and most Popular Books of the Season are now in circulation at MUDIE'S LIBRARY.

All Works of general interest are freely added immediately on publication.

Library Catalogue for 1890, 1s. 6d. Prospectuses and Clearance List of Books on Sale Postage free.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY (Limited), 30 to 34, New Oxford Street.

BRANCH OFFICES: 241, BROMPTON ROAD, and 2, KING STREET, CHEAPSIDE.

Vol. I.—JUST PUBLISHED.

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND, PAST and PRESENT: its History, its Relation to the Law and the State, its Doctrine, Ritual, Discipline, and Patrimony.

Edited by Rev. R. H. STORY, D.D., F.S.A., Scot.,
Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Glasgow, and one of Her Majesty's Chaplains.

Assisted by Rev. JAMES CAMPBELL, D.D., F.S.A., Scot.

Rev. JAMES RANKIN, D.D.

Rev. T. B. W. NIVEN.

ANDREW MACGREGOR, Esq.

Rev. ADAM MILROY, D.D.

Rev. THOMAS LEISHMAN, D.D.

Late Rev. ANDREW EDGAR, D.D.

NENION ELLIOT, Esq., B.Sc.

Illustrated with numerous engravings of portraits of eminent Churchmen and views of interesting ecclesiastical edifices. In five volumes, cloth, red edges, price 7s. 6d. each.

WILLIAM MACKENZIE, 60, Ludgate-hill, E.C.;
Edinburgh, and Glasgow.

At all Libraries and Booksellers. 1 vol. super royal 8vo, cloth boards, 21s.

KURRACHEE: Past, Present, and Future.

By ALEXANDER F. BAILIE, F.R.G.S., M.R.A.S., Author of "A Paragon of Treason," &c., with numerous Plans and Illustrations.

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

Calcutta: THACKER, SPINK, & Co.

Bombay: THACKER & Co., Limited.

Just published, with Frontispiece, crown 8vo, 6s.

ENGELBERG: and other Verses. By BEATRICE L. TOLLMACHE (Hon. Mrs. Lionel Tollemache).

PARCIVAL & Co., King-street, Covent-garden.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free

LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt.
The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS HAVENSCROFT, Manager

Ready immediately, at all the Libraries, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME.

BY A FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great Ex-Chancellor.

Just ready, at all the Libraries, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth 10s. 6d.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS OF THE COURT OF THE TUILERIES.

THE EVE OF AN EMPIRE'S FALL.

Before the Franco-German War. By Madame CARETTE,
Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

Third Edition, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, 6s. Authorised Translation.

MY MISTRESS, THE EMPRESS

EUGÉNIE; or, Court Life at the Tuilleries. By her
Private Reader, Madame CARETTE (née BOUVET).

"We recommend every one who admires good work to buy and read it."—Morning Post.

Cloth gilt, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; post free, 2s. 8d.

STANLEY; AND HIS HEROIC

BELIEF OF EMIN PACHA. By E. P. SCOTT.

With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.

"Mr. E. P. Scott, himself an African traveller, gives a clear, readable, and interesting narrative of the rescue Expedition, to which he has prefixed an account of Stanley's early career."—Vanity Fair.

LONDON: DEAN & SON, 160a, Fleet Street, E.C.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS.
Crown 8vo. 350 pp. 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA.

SAINT MONICA.

SAINT MONICA. A Wife's Love Story.

By Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS, Author of "The Mammoth of Unrighteousness," "Pharisees," "In Sheep's Clothing," "Loyella," "A Tantalus Cup," "His Story and Hers," &c.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE,

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by HOLL, R.A.; OULES, R.A.; PETTIE, R.A.; PRINCEP
A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including
H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art.
Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. IV. No. 6. JUNE. 1s. 6d.

Yearly Subscription (Ten Numbers), 13s. 6d., post free.

CONTENTS.

G. R. SCOTT—TWO MSS. OF PERSIUS.

R. WHITEHEAD—ON A COIN. VI. 14—VII. 1.

ORELLI-MEWES' HORACE, VOL. II.—I. W. T. LENDRUM.

SCHAEFFER'S MANUAL OF THE SOURCES FOR GREEK HISTORY.
R. W. MACAN.

BUDGE'S PSEUDO-CALLISTHENES ON ALEXANDER. D. S. MARGOLIOUTH.

GOODWIN'S MOODS AND TENSES. D. B. MONRO.

WAT'S ILIAD IN ENGLISH VERSE. W. EVERETT.

SHORTER NOTICES.

NOTES.

ARCHAEOLOGY—

DR. DORFFELD on the GREEK THEATRE. JANE E. HARRISON.

DR. DORFFELD on the LOGEION. A. E. HAIGH.

SUMMARIES OF PERIODICALS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

DAVID NUTT, 270 & 271, Strand.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 996.—JUNE, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

A SECRET MISSION. CHAPS. V.-VII.
 THE ORIGINAL BALLAD OF THE DOWIE DENS.
 BY PROFESSOR VEITCH.
 FROM ARGIN TO TOSKI; OR, THE NILE CAMPAIGN OF 1889.
With Maps.
 A SKETCH IN FIVE PHASES. BY GARTH GIBSON.
 JAMAICA.
 THE STRANGE OCCURRENCES IN CANTERSTONE JAIL.
 BY RICHARD MARSH.
 THE LAST OF THE RYDAL DOROTHYS.
 A STORY OF THE SKINE. BY REV. G. J. COWLEY-BROWN.
 ROMANCE OF TWO HEIRESSERS.
 THE PORTUGUESE AND MAKOLOLO-LAND.
 BY DANIEL J. RANNEY.
 LAND PURCHASE IN IRELAND.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

BLACKWOOD'S NEW SERIAL.

THIS DAY. PART VIII. PRICE ONE SHILLING.

TRAVEL, ADVENTURE, and SPORT.

From "BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE."

No. VIII. CONTAINS:—THE LAYING OF THE ATLANTIC CABLE by the late HENRY O'NEIL, A.R.S.—LIFE IN CENTRAL ASIA.—A VISIT TO THE BIG TREES OF CALIFORNIA, by Dr. CHADLE.—THE PIRATES of REGNA: ADVENTURES IN VENICE and the ADRIATIC.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14,
 HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUPTMANN, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO., have the best and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
 A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
 This Evening, at 8, THE GREEN BUSHER.
 Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

COURT THEATRE.
 Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.
 To-night and Every Evening, at 8, will be acted an Original Farce, by Mr. A. W. Pinero, called
 THE CABINET MINISTER.

GAIETY THEATRE.
 Lessee and Manager, GEO. EDWARDS.
 To-night, at 8,
 RUY BLAS AND THE BLASE ROUE.
 By A. C. Torr and Herbert F. Clark. Music by Herr Meyer Lutz.
 The dances by John D'Arban.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.
 Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BEERBOHM-TREX.
 Every Evening, at 8.30, A VILLAGE PRIEST.
 By Sydney Grundy.
 Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Allan, Miss Rose Leclercq,
 Miss Norreys, Mrs. Gaston Murray, Mrs. Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE
 Lessee, Mr. F. J. HARRIS.
 Manager, Mr. H. GREGUS LONSDALE.
 To-night, at 8.30, new Comedy Opera,
 GREYNA GREEN.
 By T. Murray Ford and Dr. John Storer.
 Preceded, at 8, by a new farce, entitled MESMERISM.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE
 Every Evening, at 8, THEODORA.
 Messrs. W. H. Vernon, Charles Cartwright, Cecil Morton Yorke, George
 Berango, George W. Cockburn, Alfred E. Cross, H. de Solis, H. Sturge, Charles Lander, G. L. Grange, and Leonard Boyne; Mesdames Dolores Drummond, Clarice Trevor, Marie Stuart, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.
 Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
 Every Evening, at 8.15, MAJORIE.
 Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville.
 Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABOARD.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.
 Sole Lessee and Manager, Mrs. LANGTRY.
 Every Evening, at 9, ESTHER SANDRAZ.
 Messrs. Chas. Sugden, A. Bourchier, Everill, De Lange, E. Lewis, &c.; Mesdames Langtry, Chas. Calvert, M. Lea, C. Denton, L. Meyers, E. Williams, &c.
 Preceded at 8, by THE FAST COACH.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.
 Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
 Every Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
 Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe,
 O. Yorke, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames Winifred
 Emery, Harbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
 Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT*MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Free Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER

348, 349, 350, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

PEOPLES' EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.
 (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,
 with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS ON DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES OF MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
 21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and Terms arranged
 for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
 Publishers, Printers, and Binders,
 21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY
 LANE, LONDON.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
 FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
 that I like so
 well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

TRISCHLER & CO.'S LIST.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

A Railway Foundling. 3 vols.

By ROMAN, Author of "The Milroys." The Daily Telegraph says: "It is a story which from the outset is delightfully tantalizing. It is a story that must be read to be understood. There is vivacity and adventure in it, and good as the authoress's previous work, 'The Milroys' was, it is not too much to say this is better." The Sunday Times says: "It is a novel of an agreeable kind, a graphic picture drawn by the hand of an expert, and the story is interesting and amusing."

The Romance of a Station. 2 vols.

By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED, Author of "Nadine," "Amities," "Policy and Passion," "Australian Heroine," &c. The Spectator says: "This is a really able writer, but she has never done anything quite so good as 'Romance of a Station.' The fascinating, inscrutable Necta Wilson, the veiled Princess, is a veritable creation, whose presence in any book would suffice to make it notable. We hope Mrs. Campbell Praed will give us other books that we can praise as heartily and unreservedly."

The Queen of the Black Hand.

By HUGH COLEMAN DAVIDSON, Author of "The Old Adam," "Cast on the Waters," "The Green Hills by the Sea." Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. The Glasgow Herald says: "The name of Hugh Coleman Davidson has become so well known to novel readers that they know what to expect when he gives them a new book."

Darell Blake. By Lady COLIN

CAMPBELL. 5th Thousand. Extra cloth, bevelled boards, 272 pp., 6s. From the Saturday Review:—"The character of Lady Colin Campbell's hero is intensely interesting. It reveals uncommon acuteness and freshness of observation, and that reserve of power which the possession and artistic control of power can alone engender. Lady Colin Campbell is certainly gifted in the art, so like intuition it may well be intuition, that impels the unflinching hand to stay at the moment in the process of characterization to give the required accent of light or nuance of shade, with the simple and delicate touch that is most effective."

Doctor Greystone. By Madame

VAN DE VELDE. Third Thousand. Bevelled boards, cloth extra, 792 pp., 3s. 6d. The World says:—"Dr. Greystone" is a clever and original book; and in these days of over-emphasis and exaggeration an author who can pass so quietly and simply over the scene in the prologue of the crying wife's death deserves high praise."

JUST OUT.

Midge. By MAY CROMMELIN,

Author of "Brown Eyes," "Violet Vylian," "Cross Roads," &c. Cloth gilt and bevelled boards, 6s.

The Copper Crash. By FRANK

DANBY, Author of "Doctor Phillips," "A Babe in Bohemia." Seventh Thousand. Picture boards, 2s.

A Nasty Cropper. By G. F.

UNDERHILL, Author of "In at the Death," &c. A Realistic and Sensational Sporting Story. Picture boards, 2s.

JUST OUT.—NEW BOOK BY JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

Dinna Forget. By the Author of "Booties' Baby" and "Harvest." 33,000 copies of "Dinna Forget" have been sold in fourteen days. Paper, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d. The Edinburgh Times says:—"John Strange Winter's tale is a love-story that is like nothing else in fiction except the former work of this pleasing author. It is sentimental without being soporific, and carries the interest lightly along without haste and without rest."

A Society Scandal. By RITA,

Author of "Fishes," "The Mystery of a Turkish Bath," &c. Eleventh Thousand. Paper, 1s.

Agatha's Quest. With Preface by

JULES VERNE. By ROBERT SHERARD, Author of "Rogues." Paper, 1s.

ENORMOUS SUCCESS OF MISS AMY READE'S REALISTIC AND SENSATIONAL NOVEL.

Ruby! Ruby! Ruby! or, How

GIRLS ARE TRAINED FOR CIRCUS LIFE.

Among others the following well-known ladies and gentlemen have kindly allowed their names to be used as indicative of their desire to assist the author in her well-directed efforts to bring before the public the horrible cruelties practised by circus trainers on unoffending children who are committed to their care for the purpose of special instruction:—

Gainsford Bruce, Esq., Q.C., M.P.	H. H. Raphael, Esq., London School Board.
Jacob Bright, Esq., M.P.	John W. Rowntree, Esq.
Sir Richard Temple, M.P.	R. May uel, Esq., M.A.
Joshua Rowntree, Esq., M.P.	Colonel D'Oyly, Battley, High Sheriff, County Wicklow.
Walter McLaren, Esq., M.P.	Mrs. Annie Jarvis, School Board, Edinburgh.
Rev. Alfred Morris	Mrs. F. Morrison, Farmwood, Ascot.
Rev. R. Macbeth, M.A.
Rev. F. A. Walker, M.A., D.D.
Mrs. S. Bennett, Richmond.

ROYAL COMMISSION.—Mr. Gainsford Bruce, Q.C., M.P., has promised that as soon as sufficient evidence can be obtained to justify such a step, he will call attention to the matter in the House of Commons, with a view of inducing the Government to advise Mr. Justice to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into and report upon the treatment of children whilst being trained to the business of circus riders, acrobats, and contortionists.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.; picture boards, 3s.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"The motive actuating the authoress is a good one."

Manchester Guardian says:—"Ruby" by Amy Reade. This book is notable on account of the charges brought by the authoress against a manager or managers in general of circuses. It is an indictment so tremendous that, if it can be proved, the authoress should not be content with representing a picture to harrow novel readers. She should collect her proofs and lay them before the Public Prosecutor. Miss Reade asserts that in cases of contumacious girls of seventeen are stripped naked by the circus-master and flogged by him till they are sick and faint and bleeding."

18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, BLACKFRIARS, E.C.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST OF BOOKS.

Editio Quarta, large wide post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SABRINÆ COROLLA

In Hortulis Regiæ Scholæ Saloptensis Contextuerunt Tres Vni Floribus Legendis.

Now ready, price 6s. 6d.

PASTOR PASTORUM;

or, the Schooling of the Apostles by our Lord.

By the Rev. HENRY LATHAM, M.A.,

Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

(Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL & Co.)

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TRANSLATIONS from PRUDENTIUS.

A Selection from his Works rendered in English Verse. With an Introduction and Notes. By F. St. JOHN THACKERAY, M.A., F.S.A., Vicar of Mapledurham.

CAMBRIDGE MATHEMATICAL SERIES.

NOTES on ROULETTES and GLIQUETTES. By W. H. BESANT, D.Sc., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Second Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Immediately. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY ARITHMETIC. By

C. PENDLEBURY, M.A., F.R.A.S., Head Mathematical Master, St. Paul's School; and W. S. BEARD, F.R.G.S., Assistant Master at Christ's Hospital.

ARITHMETIC. By Charles Pendle-

BURY, M.A., F.R.A.S., Senior Mathematical Master of St. Paul's School.

Fourth Edition. Stereotyped.

COMPLETE with or without answers, 4s. 6d.

IN TWO PARTS, with or without answers, 2s. 6d. each.

THE EXAMPLES, without answers, 8s.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on

HEAT. By W. GARNETT, M.A., D.C.L., Principal of the College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Examiner in Physics in the Victoria University. Fifth Edition. Revised and Enlarged. 4s. 6d.

NEW VOLUME OF BOHN'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

WATERLOO.—THE DOWNFALL of the FIRST NAPOLEON: a History of the Campaign of 1815. By GEORGE HOOPER, Author of "Wellington," "The Italian Campaigns of General Bonaparte," "The Campaign of Soudan," &c. With Maps and Plans. New Edition, Revised, 8s. 6d.

"This reprint of Mr. Hooper's most excellent account of the Waterloo campaign ought to be very welcome." St. James's Gazette.

"An able monograph on 'Waterloo.'"—Athenæum.THE SHILLING SERIES.

Fcap. 4to, double columns, illustrated.

MRS. EWING'S MELODIOUS DREAM, and Other Tales.

MRS. EWING'S a FLAT IRON for a PARTING.

MRS. EWING'S SIX to SIXTEEN: a Story for Girls.

MRS. EWING'S WE and the WORLD: a Book for Boys.

MRS. EWING'S MRS. OVERTHEWAY'S REMEMBRANCES.

MRS. EWING'S JAN of the WINDMILL.

MRS. EWING'S a GREAT EMERGENCY.

MRS. EWING'S BROWNIES.

MRS. GATTY'S PARABLES from NATURE. Two Series. Each 1s. In 1 vol., cloth, 3s.

MISS PROCTER'S LEGENDS and LYRICS. Two Series. Each 1s. In 1 vol., cloth, 3s.

MISS SHAW'S HECTOR: a Story for Young People.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS,

YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.THE MODERN MALADY; or, Sufferers

from "Nerves." By CYRIL BENNETT, Author of "The Massage Case," &c. With an Introduction by HERBERT TIBBITS, M.D., F.R.C.P. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

This Work deals in a popular manner with the Nineteenth Century disease, commonly known as "Nerves." It gives hints as to the reasonable treatment of sufferers by their friend and relations, and points out what is to be avoided as well as what is to be aimed at, in order to effect the speediest recovery.

EGYPTIAN SKETCHES. By

JEREMIAH LYNCH, formerly President of the San Francisco Stock Exchange, and Member of the Californian State Senate. Demy 8vo, with 16 Full-Page Illustrations, 10s. 6d.

"The independent testimony of a shrewd and competent observer."—Spectator.

LAMB'S ADVENTURES of ULYSSES.

With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. A Map of the Wanderings of Ulysses, an Index of Proper Names, and a few brief Explanatory Notes are appended. This Edition will be found well adapted for Prizes, or for use in Reading Circles and Schools. Cloth, square 8vo, 1s. 6d.; also, an Edition specially bound for a Prize or Gift-Book, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

MY WIFE'S POLITICS. An Amusing

Sketch for Holiday and Seaside Reading. By HORACE HUTCHINSON, Author of the Badminton Volume on Golf. Price 1s. [Ready shortly.]

ARNOLD'S ENGLISH LITERATURE

SERIES, comprising some of the most popular works in the language. Each volume will contain scenes from a single book, the continuity of the narrative being maintained by short summaries in italic type. The omissions are dictated by a desire to make the series available for young readers at an earlier age than the complete works. The type is bold and clear, the paper good, and the size of the volumes handy. Each volume will contain from 224 to 256 pages, square 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d. A special edition for Prizes and Presents will also be issued.

The following will be ready shortly.

DAVID COPPERFIELD (By arrangement with Messrs. Chapman & Hall).

THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP.

DOMBEY and SON.

SCHOOL AND COLLEGE TEXT-BOOKS.WILLIAMS' and LASCELLES' IN-

RODUCTION to CHEMICAL SCIENCE. Edited by B. P. LASCELLES, M.A., F.C.S., Assistant Master and Librarian at Harrow School. Crown 8vo, 232 pages cloth, 3s. 6d., with 60 Illustrations.

MODERN FRENCH READINGS.

With Helps for Composition. Edited by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham. Crown 8vo, 203 pp., cloth, 3s.

LES TROIS MOUSQUETAIRES.

Edited for the use of Schools, it is believed for the first time, by Prof. SUMICHRIST, of Harvard University, and now in use at Eton College. Cloth, 250 pages, 3s. 6d.

COLLAR'S GERMAN LESSONS.

Based on Eysenbach's German Grammar, and forming a complete manual for the use of beginners, with Exercises and Vocabulary. Cloth, crown 8vo, 370 pages, 6s.

ALLEN and GREENOUGH'S LATIN

GRAMMAR. 488 pages, half-morocco, 6s. Classical Review:—"No teacher of Latin Grammar, and no worker in Latin Grammar, can dispense with the book."

PRACTICAL LATIN COMPOSITION.

By W. C. COLLAR, Author of "The Beginner's Latin Book." Cloth, crown 8vo, 278 pages, 6s.

BENCH WORK in WOOD. A Handbook for Technical Schools and Manual Training Classes. With over 300 Illustrations. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

PLANT ORGANISATION. A Review of the Structure and Morphology of Plants by the written method. With Diagrammatic Illustrations. By R. H. WARD, Professor of Botany in the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. 4to, stiff cover, 4s.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 18, WARWICK SQUARE, PATERNOSTER ROW, in connection with
GINN & Co., Boston and New York.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 945.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NOW READY, in 2 vols, demy 8vo, with Portraits, Maps, and other Illustrations, 36s.

Dedicated, by special permission, to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF THE REVEREND ADAM SEDGWICK,

LL.D., F.R.S., FELLOW OF TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, PREBENDARY OF NORWICH,
AND WOODWARDIAN PROFESSOR OF GEOLOGY FROM 1818 TO 1873.

By JOHN WILLIS CLARK, M.A., F.S.A.,

Superintendent of the University Museum of Zoology and Comparative Anatomy, and formerly Fellow of Trinity College,

AND THOMAS MCKENNY HUGHES, M.A., Woodwardian Professor of Geology.

MEMORIALS of the LIFE of the REV. GEORGE ELWES CORRIE, D.D., late Master of Jesus College, Cambridge. Edited by Miss HOLROYD. Demy 8vo, with a Portrait, 12s.

GRAY and HIS FRIENDS. Letters and Relics in great part hitherto Unpublished. Edited by Rev. D. O. TOVEY, M.A. [Nearly ready.]

THE GROWTH of ENGLISH INDUSTRY and COMMERCE during the EARLY and MIDDLE AGES. By W. OUNNINGHAM, D.D. New Edition. Demy 8vo, 16s.

THE SPEECH of DEMOSTHENES against the LAW of LEPTINES. A Revised Text, with an Introduction, Critical and Explanatory Notes, and an Autotype Facsimile from the Paris MS. By J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D., Public Orator in the University of Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 9s.

AN EIGHTH-CENTURY LATIN-ANGLO-SAXON GLOSSARY. By J. H. HESSLS. Demy 8vo, 10s.

LECTURES on MENTAL FACULTY: being Lectures Delivered in the University of Cambridge during the Lent Term, 1888-89, on the Growth of Mental Faculty and Means of Training it. By FRANÇOIS WARNER, M.D., Physician to the London Hospital, Lecturer on Therapeutics and on Botany at the London Hospital College, &c. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

LANGUAGE and LINGUISTIC METHOD in the SCHOOL. By S. S. LAURIE, M.A., LL.D.,
Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 4s.

THEORY of DIFFERENTIAL EQUATIONS. Part I.—Exact Equations and Pfaff's Problems,
By A. R. FORSYTH, D.Sc., F.R.S., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. [In the press.]

A REVISED ACCOUNT of the EXPERIMENTS made with the BASHFORTH CHRONO-GRAPH to find the Resistance of the Air to the Motion of Projectiles, with the Application of the Results to the Calculation of Trajectories, according to
J. Bernoulli's Method. By FRANCIS BASHFORTH, B.D. 12s. [Nearly ready.]

MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL PAPERS. By Sir W. THOMSON, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S.
Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University of Glasgow. Vol. III. Demy 8vo. [Nearly ready.]

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.
GLASGOW: 263, ARGYLE STREET.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
FRAZER'S THE GOLDEN BOUGH, by Canon ISAAC TAYLOR	399
BUXTON FORMAN'S POETRY AND PROSE OF KEATS, by W. WATSON	400
KEBBEL'S LIFE OF LORD DERBY, by J. A. HAMILTON	402
CARSTENSEN'S TWO SUMMERS IN GREENLAND, by G. T. TEMPLE	402
NEW NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	402
CLASSICAL SCHOOL BOOKS	402
NOTES AND NEWS	402
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	402
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A DAUGHTER OF THE NILE," by M. P.	407
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	407
THE HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE	407
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	408

CORRESPONDENCE:— The Oriental Congress, by Prof. A. Müller; The Dedication of Shakespeare's Sonnets, by T. Tyler; The Spelling of "Was," &c., in the Alliterative Poems, by Prof. Skeat; The "Imitation Christi," by Philo-Kempensis; The Masses and Yards of a Ship, and the Sign of the Cross, by Prof. A. S. Cook; The Word "Hansel" in Chaucer, by J. H. Round	408
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	410
DR. MARTINEAU'S THE SEAT OF AUTHORITY IN RELIGION, by A. W. BENN	410
CORRESPONDENCE:— Some Semitic Etymologies, by W. Muss-Arnolt	411
SCIENCE NOTES	412
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	412
THE SCOTTISH NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY	412
OBITUARY: PHILIPPE BURY	414
CORRESPONDENCE:— "The Art of Judaea," by Prof. G. Perrot	414
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	415
THE DAILY COMPANY AT THE LYCEUM	415
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	416

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governesses Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent-street, R.W.

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES is the subject of the ESSAY for which prizes of TWENTY GUINEAS are offered by the LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED, of 3, George-yard, Lombard-street, London, E.C. Conditions forwarded upon receipt of a stamp for postage.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100 Mercer's-road, Tufnell Park, N.

CATALOGUES.
BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application. DULAU & CO., 37, Soho-square, London.

THÉOPHILE BELIN, 29, Quai Voltaire, Paris. Livres anciens et modernes rares et Curieux. Catalogue Mensuel envoyé sur demande.

ALL RECENT PURCHASES.
MATTHEWS & BROOKE'S NEW CATALOGUE of Books, comprising First Editions of Rare Works, Library Editions of Standard Authors, a fine collection of Works on Conchology, Natural History, &c., post free from Sun Buildings, Bradford, or 15, Bear Lane, Leeds.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S NEW CATALOGUES.
THEOLOGICAL CATALOGUE.—Theology and Philosophy, chiefly Foreign. 1890.
ORIENTAL CATALOGUE.—Language, Literature, Antiquities, &c., of the East. 1890.
FRENCH CATALOGUE. 1890.
GERMAN CATALOGUE. 1890.
14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, and 20, 8, Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

LORD DUFFERIN IN INDIA.
THIS DAY, 8vo, 9s.
SPEECHES DELIVERED IN INDIA DURING the YEARS 1864-8. By the MARQUIS of DUFFERIN and AYA.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

Vol. I.—JUST PUBLISHED.
THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND, PAST and PRESENT; its History, its Relation to the Law and the State, its Doctrine, Ritual, Discipline, and Patrimony.
Edited by Rev. R. H. STORY, D.D., F.S.A., Scot.,
Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Glasgow, and one of Her Majesty's Chaplains.
Assisted by Rev. JAMES CAMPELL, D.D., F.S.A., Scot.
Rev. JAMES RAMSAY, D.D.
Rev. T. D. W. NIVEN,
ANDREW MACGREGOR, Esq.
Rev. ADAM MILLER, D.D.
Rev. THOMAS LEISHMAN, D.D.
Late Rev. ANDREW EDGAR, D.D.
KENNEDY ELLIOT, Esq., S.S.C.

Illustrated with numerous engravings of portraits of eminent Churchmen and views of interesting ecclesiastical edifices. In five volumes, cloth, red edges, price 7s. 6d. each.
WILLIAM MACGREGOR, 69, Ludgate-hill, E.C.;
Edinburgh, and Glasgow.

THE SIXTH VOLUME, JUST PUBLISHED. BLACKIE'S MODERN CYCLOPEDIA OF UNIVERSAL INFORMATION.

Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D.

With Pictorial Illustrations and a Series of Maps.

To be completed in Eight Vols., cloth, 6s. each; or half-morocco, 8s. 6d. each.

Volume I. contains 3,684 Articles, 217 Wood Engravings, and 4 Maps.
Volume II. " 2,615 " 194 " " 8 " "
Volume III. " 2,671 " 238 " " 2 " "
Volume IV. " 2,109 " 242 " " 2 " "
Volume V. " 2,618 " 215 " " 4 " "
Volume VI. " 2,225 " 201 " " 8 " "

* * Vol. VII. will be issued on 13th September, and Vol. VIII., completing the work, early in December.
"A model and a marvel of accurate information."—Spectator.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, OLD BAILLY.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c. THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

PROFESSORSHIP OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.
The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above PROFESSORSHIP, vacant by the death of Professor Karl Demmann, Ph.D.
Applications, accompanied by ten copies of Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than the 24th JUNE, 1890.
The successful candidate will be expected to enter upon his duties on the 30th of September, 1890.
Candidates are especially requested to abstain from canvassing. Further particulars may be obtained from GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

VACATION SCIENCE COURSES, EDINBURGH.

BIOLOGY.—General Course of Lectures and Practical Work.—Prof. GEDDES, J. ARTHUR THOMPSON, and Demonstrators.
BOTANY.—Course of Lectures and Laboratory Work, Excursions, &c.—Prof. GEDDES.
ZOOLOGY.—Lectures and Practical Work. Shore Fauna of the Forth.—J. ARTHUR THOMPSON.
SOCIOLOGY.—A General Course of Lectures, and a Special Course with Excursions.—Prof. GEDDES.
The Fee for each Course is £2 2s.; for any Two Courses, £3 3s.
The classes will be held as formerly, at Granton Marine Station.
For detailed Prospectus apply to J. ARTHUR THOMPSON, 30, Royal Circus, Edinburgh.

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has REMOVED to PIXHOLME, DORKING, and has now space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays especial attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus, and the boys have daily practice. Inclusive terms 80 or 100 guineas a year according to age.
References permitted to
Miss Buss, North London Collegiate School, N.W.
Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.

DANTE.—LECTURES by CORRESPONDENCE.—Apply E. U., The Willows, Buxton.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY,
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

Patron—HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.
President—The LORD ABERDARE, G.C.B.
THURSDAY, 19th JUNE, at 8.30 p.m.
The following Paper will be read:—"THE EXPULSION of the JEWS in 1290," by G. H. LEONARD, M.A., F.R.Hist.S.
11, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, W.

THE HENNESSY LIBRARY.

THE VALUABLE LIBRARY
Of the late
WILLIAM M. HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A.,
The Eminent Irish Scholar and Archaeologist,
Assistant Deputy Keeper of the Public Records,
COMPRISING

PRINTED BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS,
FACSIMILES of MANUSCRIPTS, STATE PAPERS,
RECORDS, MASTER of the ROLLS' PUBLICATIONS, &c.;
ILLUSTRATIVE OF

The History, Antiquities, Language, Laws, Religion, Topography, Genealogy, Poetry, &c., of Ireland, INCLUDING

Many Rare Works in good condition and enriched with numerous Manuscript Notes by the late learned owner,

WILL BE SOLD BY AUCTION,
BY
JOHN W. SULLIVAN,
AT HIS

LITERARY, ART, and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,
No. 8, D'OLIER STREET, DUBLIN,
On THURSDAY, 26th JUNE, and Following Day,
Commencing each day at 1 o'clock.

* * Catalogues ready, and may be had from the Auctioneer.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s.
ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the best and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

LIMITED OWNERS' RESIDENCES

ACTS, 1870-71.—Board of Agriculture.—Landed Proprietors wishing to restore or improve their mansions and other buildings under the above Acts can CONSULT Mr. JOHN BLOOM, Architect, who re-built Ingers Hall and other large country houses.—Address 8, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

Just published, with Frontispiece, crown 8vo, 6s.
ENGELBERG: and other Verses. By BEATRICE L. TOLLMACHE (Hon. Mrs. Lionel Tollmache).
PENGVAL & CO., King-street, Covent-garden.

Now ready.
INDUCTION and DEDUCTION: a Historical and Critical Sketch of Successive Philosophical Conceptions respecting the Relations between Inductive and Deductive Thought, and other Essays. By CONSTANCE C. W. NADEN. Edited by E. LEWIS, M.D., Army Medical Department. With Memoir and Portrait. One vol. 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.
BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square, W.C.

TO AUTHORS. MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS.

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.
Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines. Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

THE UNIVERSAL REVIEW,

JUNE 16, 1890.	PRICE 2s. 6d.
CONTENTS.
I. MARRIAGE, MORALITY, and CHRISTIANITY: a Reply to Critic of "The Kreszter Sonata." .. By Count LEON TOLSTOY.
II. THE ART of ENGLAND (The Academy, the Grosvenor, and the New Gallery). (Fully Illustrated.) .. HARRY QUILLER.
III. THE TRUMPET of FAME .. H. D. THALL.
IV. THE RIVAL SALONS.—I. Salon des Champs Elysees. (Fully Illustrated.) .. EMILY CRAWFORD.
V. PROCRIS. (Illustrated.) .. GRAHAM R. TOWNES.
VI. THE DEADLOCK in DARWINISM .. SAMUEL BUTLER.
VII. A VILLA at TIVOLI .. Professor VERRALL.
VIII. UNPUBLISHED MSS. of the Poet COWPER Mrs. D'ARCY COLTHER.
IX. THE WAGES of SIN. (Illustrated.) .. LUDAS MARET.
X. THE WORLD in JUNE .. The EDITOR.

ILLUSTRATIONS.
"Edna," from Original Pencil Sketch .. By G. A. STORRY, A.R.A.
Louis XI. in the Villager's Cottage .. SETMOUR LUGAS, A.R.A.
"The Conversion of St. Hubert" .. ARTHUR LEWIS.
"The Triumph of Saul and David" .. T. M. ROOKE.
"Saturday night at the Savage Club" .. W. H. BARTLETT.
Venetian Fruitellers on the Giudecca .. HENRY WOODS, A.R.A.
"How Lisa loved the King" .. BLAIR LEITCH.
From Original Sketches ("Study of a Woman," "Le Rêve (Zola)" .. A. DE RICHMOND.
Facsimile of MS. of an Original Poem .. By COWPER.
The Wages of Sin. .. A. SACHSEVIEL-COKE.
"She went back to the East, &c." .. DONOTRY THURN.
Frontispiece: "The City Fountain" .. By J. Macwhirter, A.R.A.; Dandy Sadler; Philip Morris, A.R.A.; B. W. Leader, A.R.A.; George Langbe; Lionel Smythe; A. Hacker; Mervin Nure; Ernest Waterlow, A.R.A.; E. Onslow Ford, A.R.A.; Walter Duncan.
Initials by C. A. Channer.

SWAN SONNENSCHEIN & CO., Paternoster-square E.C.
A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CHALLIN, Chartered Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.
G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C. and the AUTHOR, 25, Chancery-lane, W.C.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

THYME and RUE. By Margaret B. CROSS. 3 vols.

DISHONOURED. By Theo. Gift, Author of "Pretty Miss Bellow," "Victims," &c. 3 vols.
"The book must be pronounced a really good novel, because it fulfils the purpose for which a novel exists, by telling an interesting story in a thoroughly interesting way."—Manchester Examiner.

LITTLE MISS COLWYN. By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of "Jacobi's Wife," &c. 3 vols.
"An undoubtedly good and well-written story."—Athenaeum.
"Most of the characters in the book are, however, more or less distinctive and well drawn, and her readers have to thank Miss Sergeant for an undoubtedly good and well-written story."—Athenaeum.

CUTTING for PARTNERS. By John CORDY JEAFFRESON. Author of "The Rapiers of Regent's Park," "Live It Down," &c. 3 vols.
"A clever and interesting story, and contains a number of clever and interesting characters and sayings."—Scotsman.
"It is enough to say that the reader who does not feel the kindler and the wiser for having read it must be a curiosity."—Graepic.

TILL the GREAT ASSIZE. By VERA CLAVERING, Author of "A Modern Dollish," &c. 3 vols.

ADA TRISCOTT. By Captain ANDREW HAGGARD, Author of "Dodo and I," &c. 3 vols.
"Ada Triscott" is a better novel than ninety-nine out of every hundred published, and is so great an improvement on "Dodo and I," that it is reasonable to anticipate that the next novel from the same pen will give Captain Haggard a considerable position among living novelists."—Athenaeum.

CROSS ROADS. By May Crommelin, Author of "Queenie," "Orange Lily," &c. 3 vols.
"This latest production of Miss Crommelin's will compare favourably with any previous effort."—Manchester Examiner.

PART of the PROPERTY. By Beatrice WHITBY, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," 3 vols.
"There is not much risk involved in predicting the popularity of Beatrice Whitby's fresh venture."—Literary World.

Uniform, each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

NOVELS BY EDNA LYALL A HARDY NORSEMAN.

WE TWO. IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT ERRANT. WON BY WAITING.
DONOVAN: a Modern Englishman.

HURST & BLACKETT'S STANDARD LIBRARY.

SELECTIONS FROM.
Each in a Single Volume, price 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.	CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.
A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN.	A NOBLE LIFE.
A LIFE for a LIFE.	HANNAH.
NOTHING NEW.	THE UNKIND WORD.
MISTRESS and MAID.	A BRAVE LADY.
THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.	STUDIES from LIFE.
	YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

NATURE AND HUMAN NATURE.	The OLD JUDGE; or Life in a Colony.
WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES.	TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR.
	The AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.	ALEC FORBES.
ROBERT FALCONER.	SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.	LIFE of IRVING.
LAIRD of NORLAW.	A ROSE in JUNE.
AGNES.	PHOEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT (LIMITED).

GEORGE ALLEN'S LIST.

WORKS BY JOHN RUSKIN.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Cheap Small Editions Complete with all the Plates, small post 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

THE SEVEN LAMPS of ARCHITECTURE.

1. The Lamp of Sacrifice.—2. The Lamp of Truth.—3. The Lamp of Power.—4. The Lamp of Beauty.—5. The Lamp of Life.—6. The Lamp of Memory.—7. The Lamp of Obedience. The 14 Plates for this Edition have been specially prepared by Messrs. Goupil & Co.

ARATRA PENTELICI:

Seven Lectures on the Elements of Sculpture.

With 1 Engraving on Steel and 10 Autotype Plates.

1. Of the Division of Arts.—2. Idolatry.—3. Imagination.—4. Likeness.—5. Structure.—6. The School of Athens.—7. The Relation between Michael Angelo and Tintoret.

VAL D'ARNO:

Ten Lectures on Art of the Thirteenth Century in Pisa and Florence.

With 1 Steel Engraving and 12 Autotype Plates.

NEARLY READY.

ARIADNE FLORENTINA: Six Lectures on Wood and Metal Engraving, and Appendix.

With 4 Full-page Facsimiles from Holbein's "Dance of Death," and 12 Autotype Plates.

1. Definition of the Art of Engraving.—2. The Relation of Engraving to other Arts in Florence.—3. The Technique of Wood Engraving.—4. The Technique of Metal Engraving.—5. Design in the German Schools of Engraving (Holbein and Dürer).—6. Design in the Florentine Schools of Engraving (Sandro Botticelli).—7. Appendix.

MORNINGS IN FLORENCE.

Being Simple Studies of Christian Art, for English Travellers.

Second Edition. 12mo, 10d. each No., in red leatherette.
1. Santa Croce.—2. The Golden Gate.—3. Before the Solder.—4. The Vaulted Book.—5. The Straight Gate.—6. The Shepherd's Tower. These Six Parts may be had bound together in cloth, price 4s.

ST. MARK'S REST:

The History of Venice.

Written for the Help of the few Travellers who still care for her Monuments.
12mo, complete, in cloth, 6s.

JUST OUT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A NEW NOVEL by BLANCHE ATKINSON.
Author of "The Web of Life."

THEY HAVE THEIR REWARD.

NOW READY, in 1 vol., small post 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

FOUR GREAT TEACHERS:

Ruskin, Carlyle, Emerson, & Browning.

By JOSEPH FORSTER.

* * All Books sent carriage paid. Lists post free.

GEORGE ALLEN, ORPINGTON,
AND

LONDON: 8, BELL YARD, TEMPLE BAR, W.C.

THE TRAVELLING SEASON, 1890.

MURRAY'S FOREIGN HANDBOOKS.

With Maps and Plans.

HANDBOOK DICTIONARY—ENGLISH, FRENCH, and GERMAN. 6s.

HANDBOOK of TRAVEL TALK—ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, and ITALIAN. 3s. 6d.

HANDBOOK—HOLLAND and BELGIUM. 6s.

HANDBOOK—THE RHINE and NORTH GERMANY. 10s.

HANDBOOK—SOUTH GERMANY, AUSTRIA, and THE TYROL. In Two Parts. 12s.

HANDBOOK—SWITZERLAND and THE ALPS. In Two Parts. 10s.

HANDBOOK—FRANCE, Part I., NORMANDY, BRITTANY, THE PYRENEES, &c. 7s. 6d.

HANDBOOK—FRANCE, Part II., CENTRAL FRANCE. 7s. 6d.

HANDBOOK—THE RIVIERA. 5s.

HANDBOOK—PARIS and its ENVIRONS. 8s. 6d.

HANDBOOK—MEDITERRANEAN ISLANDS. In Two Parts. 21s.

HANDBOOK—ALGERIA and TUNIS. 12s.

HANDBOOK—SPAIN, ANDALUSIA, &c. In Two Parts. 21s.

HANDBOOK—PORTUGAL, LISBON, CANARY ISLANDS, &c. 12s.

HANDBOOK—NORTH ITALY, VENICE, THE ITALIAN LAKES, &c. 10s.

HANDBOOK—CENTRAL ITALY, FLORENCE, TUSCANY, &c. In Two Parts. 10s.

HANDBOOK—ROME and its ENVIRONS. 10s.

HANDBOOK—SOUTH ITALY, SICILY, NAPLES, POMPEII, &c. In Two Parts. 12s.

HANDBOOK—EGYPT, THE NILE, CAIRO, &c. 15s.

HANDBOOK—GREECE, THE IONIAN ISLANDS, &c. In Two Parts. 24s.

HANDBOOK—TURKEY in ASIA, CONSTANTINOPLE, &c.

HANDBOOK—DENMARK, COPENHAGEN, ICELAND, &c. 6s.

HANDBOOK—SWEDEN, STOCKHOLM, &c. 6s.

HANDBOOK—NORWAY, CHRISTIANIA, &c. 9s.

HANDBOOK—RUSSIA, ST. PETERSBURG, MOSCOW, FINLAND, &c. 12s.

HANDBOOK—HOLY LAND, SYRIA, PALESTINE, SINAI, &c. 20s.

HANDBOOK—BOMBAY, POONAH, BEEJAPUR, KURRAOHEE, &c. 15s.

HANDBOOK—MADRAS, TRICHINOPOLI, BANGALORE, MYSORE, &c. 15s.

HANDBOOK—BENGAL, BURMAH, N.W. PROVINCES, CALCUTTA, LUERNOW, DELHI, &c. 20s.

HANDBOOK—PANJAB, WESTERN RAJPUTANA, KASHMER, UPPER SINDH, &c. 15s.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

NOTICE.—The author of "THAT UNFORTUNATE MARRIAGE" (Mrs. FRANCES E. TROLLOPE) has written a new novel in 3 vols., entitled "MADAME LEROUX," which is ready this day at all Libraries and Booksellers.

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE.

"To say that in 'MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE' (3 vols.), the characters and results of their actions are traced out step by step in the incidents and the plot of the story, and that they teach in this way an interesting legend, is only to give KATHARINE WYLDE the praise which her skilful workmanship unquestionably deserves. The merits of this story are indisputable." Athenaeum.

HER THREE LOVERS.

"MRS. DIEHL is excellent in her portrayal of masculine weakness; but when, on the other hand, she describes strength of character, it is real strength, and not, in the usual feminine fashion, a mere attempt to reproduce Charlotte Brontë's 'Rochester.' In 'HER THREE LOVERS' (2 vols.) it is the weaknesses, moral or otherwise, that predominate, but by no means to the exclusion of sympathy. The plot is complicated, and contains a surprise. Readers will be well-advised who enter upon the novel in order to discover this and its other good things for themselves."—The Graphic.

THE FAILURE OF ELIZABETH.

"In 'THE FAILURE OF ELIZABETH' (3 vols.) the heroine is drawn with all the kindly knowledge and gentle experience which characterise Miss POYNTER's art, and who, failure though she be, yet carries the sympathy of her reader with her to the end. The description of the sordid life in a German boarding-house reveals a humour for which we had not given Miss POYNTER credit."—World.

ACTE.

"HUGH WESTBURY has written one of the best historical novels since 'The Last of the Barons' and 'The Last Days of Pompeii.'" Saturday Review.

"Apart altogether, however, from its solid and skilful handling of character, 'ACTE' (3 vols.) fulfils all the conditions of successful romance. The incidents are admirable in invention, and natural—indeed, inevitable—in sequence. Most of all, from the general reader's point of view, the writer has proved that he can construct and tell a story which is from first to last rich in absorbing interest."—Academy.

THE EMANCIPATED.

"MR. GISSING's book is clever and amusing. 'THE EMANCIPATED' (3 vols.) is a work of genuine interest, full of careful character studies, and subtle touches of humour."—Morning Post.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE."

THE ENGLISH NOVEL in the TIME of SHAKESPEARE.

By J. J. JUSSERAND.
Translated by ELIZABETH LEE; Revised and Enlarged by the AUTHOR.
Illustrated by Six Heliogravures by Dujardin, of Paris, and 21 Full-page, and many smaller illustrations, executed in facsimile.

1 vol., demy 8vo, cloth, gilt tops, 21s.
"M. Jusserand's book, and its exquisite engravings form a most valuable contribution to the study of English literature."—Standard (Leader).
"Dr. Jusserand's agreeable style makes his book, though historically valuable, very pleasant reading." Daily Telegraph.

THE TWENTY-FOURTH VOLUME of the "STORY OF THE NATIONS."

THE JEWS UNDER ROMAN RULE.

By W. D. MORRISON.
Index, Illustrations, and Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.
"Presented with singular lucidity, and with an admirable combination of brevity in style with completeness of matter. This work is a worthy addition to this admirable series of historical volumes."—Scotsman.

Small crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, parchment, 4s. 6d.
ROBERT BROWNING: Personal Notes
By EDMUND GOSSE.

THE ADVENTURE SERIES.

Large crown 8vo, well illustrated, cloth, 5s. each.
Volume II, now ready.

ROBERT DRURY'S JOURNAL in MADAGASCAR.

Preface and Notes by Capt. S. PASFIELD OLIVER.
With many Illustrations and Maps.

Vol. I. THE ADVENTURES of a YOUNGER SON. By E. J. THELAWNY.
With Introduction by E. GARNETT. Illustrated. Second Edition.

NEW NOVEL AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

A MARIAGE DE CONVENANCE.

By O. F. KEARY. 2 vols. cloth, 21s.
"We may congratulate Mr. Keary on having produced, not merely a novel, but a work of art." Saturday Review.

With 5 Maps, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

JAPAN and the PACIFIC, and A JAPANESE VIEW of the EASTERN QUESTION.

By MANJIRO INAGAKI, B.A. (Oxforb).

Now ready, Volume IV. of "THE CAMEO SERIES." IPHIGENIA IN DELPHI.

With some Translations from the Greek.
By RICHARD GARNETT, LL.D.
Fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, parchment back, illustrated, 3s. 6d.

"A very charming volume. Dr. Garnett has achieved a very interesting and scholarly piece of work."—Manchester Guardian.

* * A few copies of the EDITION DE LUXE of this and the preceding Volumes in the Series may still be had. Prices on application.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE TWO KINDS of TRUTH:

A Test of all Theories.
With Special Application to those of Instinct, Immortality, and Evolution.

By "T. E. S. T." an Old Life Member of the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

"A volume of rambling philosophical essays that are very readable and suggestive."—Scotsman.

"He disclaims for his work the dignity of a philosophical treatise. An intelligent and suggestive writer."—Glasgow Mail.

"Vigorously written, and abounds in information." British Weekly.

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF POETRY.

A POETASTER'S HOLIDAY.

Cloth, 8s. 6d.
"This writer has good temper, modesty, and withal more of the divine spark than most of his fellows. There is good taste and restraint in all the poems." Manchester Guardian.

SONG-STRAYS.

Cloth, 8s. 6d. [Just ready.]

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster-square, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

THE HOUSE on the SCAR: a Tale of South Devon. By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "Proud Maisie," "Oressida," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The story is well told, and the clever treatment of the various situations more than makes up for any lack of freshness in the materials of the plot."—Scotsman.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By E. RENTOUL ESLER. 8 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count PAUL P. Edited by FRANK HARKUT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"There is no lack of startling incident and sensational adventure in this record of Russian oppression and Polish intrigue. The interest of the story seldom flags."—Speaker.

"The book is vividly written and abounds in excitements of various kinds."—Athenaeum.

THE STORIES of the THREE BURGLES. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Rudder Grange," "The Hundredth Man," &c. Second Edition now ready. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

Low's Standard Library of Travel.

BY DR. GEO. SCHWEINFURTH.

THE HEART of AFRICA: being Three Years' Travels and Adventures in the Unexplored Regions of Central Africa. By Dr. GEORG SCHWEINFURTH. New Edition. With Map and numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. per volume.

By R. P. ASHE, M.A.

TWO KINGS of UGANDA; or, Life by the Shores of the Victoria Nyanza. Being an Account of a Residence of Six Years in Eastern Equatorial Africa. By ROBT. P. ASHE, M.A., F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S., &c. New and Cheaper Edition. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Second Editions of the Cheap Re-issues of Mr. Stanley's Books, in the press.

HOW I FOUND LIVINGSTONE; including Four Months' Residence with Dr. Livingstone. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"It is incomparably more lively than most books of African travel."—Saturday Review.

THROUGH the DARK CONTINENT;

from the Indian to the Atlantic Ocean. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
"Every page contains the record of some strange adventure, or the note of some valuable observation. We lay down the book with a feeling of admiration for the courage of the explorer and of respect for his powers of observation and great industry." Pall Mall Gazette.

To meet the latest requirements of the Educational Department, and of the Educational Commission.

SAMPSON LOW'S READERS.

Edited by JOHN GILL,

(Of Cheltenham.)

Author of "School Management," &c.

The great principle which has guided the selection of the matter is to adapt the lessons to the prevailing tastes and mental states of the successive periods in child life. Each lesson will contain a picture by some celebrated artist, as Raphael, Rubens, Turner, Landseer, or other of the world's great painters; prose, by one of the best authors; poetry, by one of the best poets; and a well-worn proverb.

Each book, while governed by the general principle regulating the series, will have one feature peculiar to itself—as, for instance, the Third Reader will introduce lessons on Nature Lore, Eastern and other Tales, Natural History, Talk and Tale of Moral Duties.

Now ready. In the press.
FIRST READER, 9d. FOURTH READER, 1s. 6d.
SECOND READER, 10d. FIFTH READER, 1s. 4d.
THIRD READER, 1s. SIXTH READER, 1s. 6d.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED), St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 14, 1890.

No. 945, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Golden Bough: a Study in Comparative Religion. By J. G. Frazer. In 2 vols. (Macmillan.)

THE science of comparative mythology is undergoing a silent but radical revolution. Not many years ago it was generally believed that the ancestors of the Aryan-speaking nations had all migrated in successive swarms from Central Asia, bringing with them an elaborate mythology, consisting chiefly of storm gods, dawn maidens, and solar heroes. It was asserted, and without contradiction, that the "real theogony of the Aryan nations" was to be found in the Veda, which was "to comparative mythology what Sanskrit has been to comparative grammar." All these fancies are now exploded, and it is recognised that the primitive Aryans were rude forest tribes or pastoral nomads, in a low stage of culture, with a shamanistic religion, consisting largely in the worship of ancestral spirits, or mere fetiches such as stones and trees. Mannhardt was one of the first apostles of this new doctrine. Patiently collecting from the mouths of German peasants their tree and forest-lore, which he regarded as a survival of the earliest beliefs, he essayed to explain many obscure observances and legends as having arisen out of a primitive worship of trees and plants. Like other prophets, Mannhardt had little honour in his own country and in his own time. At last, however, his mantle has fallen on a zealous and erudite disciple. It may be said at once that Mr. Frazer is not a fantastic mythologist whose theories may be summarily dismissed, but a competent scholar who has established a clear right to respectful audience, even though we may hesitate to accept the revolutionary hypothesis which he propounds. It is unusual out of Germany to meet with a writer who has made such an exhaustive study of the literature of his subject. His reading is exceptionally wide, comprising not only the standard authorities, ancient and modern, but including numerous obscure monographs on the local folklore of all countries. And he is not merely erudite, but able and ingenious; so that his book, which is only presented as a first instalment of a much larger work on primitive religion, cannot fail to place its author in the front rank of living mythologists.

In these two handsome volumes he confines himself with Teutonic thoroughness to the investigation of the import of a single legend—the mysterious story attaching to the Arician lake, well known from Turner's picture of "The Golden Bough," excellently reproduced as a frontispiece to the first volume, and known also from Macaulay's description, in the "Lay of the Battle of Lake Regillus," of the gathering of the Latin clans, who came "From the still glassy lake that sleeps

Beneath Aricia's trees—
Those trees in whose dim shadow
The ghastly priest doth reign,
The priest who slew the slayer,
And shall himself be slain."

The Arician lake occupies the volcanic crater of Nemi, the ancient sanctuary of Diana Nemorensis among the Alban hills. In the grove grew a sacred tree, from which, if a runaway slave could break off "the golden bough," he was entitled to challenge the priest of the sanctuary to single combat, and, if he slew him, to reign in his stead as the Rex Nemorensis. In these volumes Mr. Frazer endeavours to find an answer to the two questions: why the priest had to slay his predecessor, and why, before he slew him, he had to pluck the golden bough. Mr. Frazer's solution, shortly stated, is that we have here a survival of ancient Aryan tree-worship; that the priest was regarded as an incarnation of the spirit of the tree, his life being bound up with the life of the tree, and could only be assailed by first breaking off the bough. When the priest was killed, the spirit of the tree was supposed to pass into his assailant. The object was to obtain a new incarnation of the tree-spirit in a younger and more vigorous form. Mr. Frazer contends that this was a survival of human sacrifice, that the golden bough was the mistletoe growing on an oak; and he uses the tradition as the basis of a theory that tree-worship is the key which will interpret a large portion of primitive religion.

It may be admitted that no more plausible interpretation of the obscure Arician legend has hitherto been advanced, and also that the worship of fetiches, especially of sacred trees and stones, formed a larger element in primitive Aryan religion than has been usually supposed. But while this may be conceded, it must be added that Mr. Frazer's fault is that of being too thorough. Like most of his predecessors in mythological interpretation, he attempts to fit his own private key into the wards of too many locks. Of this he is himself not altogether unconscious. Reviewing in the preface his completed work, he acknowledges that, now that the theory has been worked out in detail, "I cannot but feel that in some places I may have pushed it too far"; and he adds this distinct challenge to his reviewers, that "if this should prove to have been the case, I will readily acknowledge and retract my error as soon as it is brought home to me." Mr. Frazer has undoubtedly pointed out the weak element in his book. If he had refrained from pushing his theory quite so far, he would have been more successful in carrying his readers with him, and almost unreserved commendation might have been bestowed on a very valuable and important contribution to scientific mythology. But when he contends that Zeus, Osiris, Diana, Balder, and Adonis, were at first only the deified spirits of trees or plants, his arguments are not convincing, and the reader feels inclined to place less confidence than he might otherwise have done in the sobriety of the writer's judgment.

To take one or two instances, we find him contending on wholly insufficient grounds that Osiris was primarily a tree-spirit, and not, as is held by the best authorities—Lepsius, Maspero, Tiele, and Renouf—one of the numerous forms in which the Egyptians revered the sun. Mr. Frazer sets aside the evidence of the older monuments, and the positive information of such well-informed authorities as Diodorus, and of Macrobius who was acquainted with the writings of Manetho, and relies on certain decorative sculptures at Philae belonging to the Ptolemaic period, when the early spirit of Egyptian religion had evaporated, and on deductions drawn from incidental statements of untrustworthy writers like Plutarch and Firmicus. Thus, Firmicus informs us that the image of Osiris was enclosed in a coffer made of a hollow log. But this, if it proves anything, merely proves that primitive Egyptian coffins may have been made from hollow logs, like the tree-coffins recently found at Falerii. Against such dubious inferences we have to place not only the definite statement of Diodorus that Osiris was the sun, but his identification in the Book of the Dead with Ra, and the fact that he is called the son of Nut, the heaven, and of Seb, the earth, the golden egg laid by Seb being clearly the solar orb. He is at once the father, the brother, the husband, and the son of Isis, who is probably the dawn. The son of Osiris and Isis is Horus, the noon-day sun. Osiris, when slain by Set, the darkness, goes down into the underworld and becomes the judge of the dead. Osiris is swallowed by Anubis, who is the dusk of twilight. Anubis was the son of Osiris, who mistook Nephthys, the evening afterglow, and wife of Set, the darkness, for her sister Isis, the dawn, his own lawful wife. All these elements in the myth of Osiris are distinctively solar; and if there could be any doubt as to his true character, it would be set at rest by the unique copy of the Book of the Dead recently acquired for the British Museum by Mr. Budge. In one of the drawings in this papyrus, Osiris and Ra are seated side by side, a marginal note explaining that Osiris is the sun of yesterday, and that Ra, his double, is the sun of to-day. The resurrection of Osiris is clearly the rising of to-morrow's sun, and not, as Mr. Frazer contends, the renewal of vegetation in successive years. It is possible that the worship of Osiris may have incorporated certain obscure local cults, but it is more probable that any connexion he may have with vegetation is due to his being regarded as the principle of life, embodied in the sun. But to contend that he was primarily and principally a tree-spirit is to fly in the face of all the most authentic evidence, and of all the chief authorities, ancient and modern. And Mr. Frazer does not even attempt to explain how a tree-spirit could have become the father of the mid-day sun, or could have been slain by the darkness of the night.

Coming to the Aryan mythology, Mr. Frazer claims as tree-gods various deities hitherto supposed to be solar or celestial. Fire was obtained by the friction of wood; and hence, he argues, trees may have been regarded as reservoirs of hidden fire, and logs of wood may have been kindled sacrificially at the solstices with the object of renovating the sun's decaying heat. It was natural, he argues, to describe those trees whose wood was used for these sacrificial fires by such epithets as "golden," "shining," and "bright." Hence the names of Zeus and Jove being derived from a root meaning "to shine," we may reasonably consider them as tree-spirits, which were "reservoirs of hidden fire." Mr. Frazer observes that "Zeus and Jupiter have commonly been regarded as sky gods because their names are etymologically connected with the Sanskrit word for sky. The reason," he adds, "seems insufficient." But he should have remembered that not only is the Greek Zeus the same word as the Sanskrit Dyaus, which means the physical sky, but that even the Greeks and Romans had not wholly lost the consciousness that the words Zeus and Jove had once denoted the sky. If these words, as he contends, originally meant trees, because they were a source of "bright" fire, then Horace, when he says "Manet sub Jove frigidus venator," must have referred to the huntsman, heated by the chase, reclining under the shade of a cool tree; and the Greek phrase Ζεὺς ὕψι must have denoted the pattering drops which, after a shower, fell from the leaves of the divine oak. Jupiter, or Dies-piter, must have meant father tree; but why should this tree-father have hurled the thunderbolt?

Doubtless earlier local tree-worships may have been absorbed by the worship of Zeus after he had become the supreme deity of the Greeks. It may, for instance, be admitted that the sacred oak at Dodona was at first merely a fetish tree, on whose branches charms and amulets were hung, and that the worship of Zeus became localised at this early shrine, just as the Hebrew worship of Jehovah was localised around the venerable sites of sacred stones, or as Muhammad found himself unable wholly to suppress the veneration of his disciples for the black fetish stone at Mecca. But to contend that Zeus was primarily an oak is as perverse as it would be to contend that the sublime monotheism of Judaism and Islam was merely based upon litholatry.

Diana also, according to Mr. Frazer, was originally a tree-spirit. It is not improbable that, as in the case of Artemis, certain ancient forest worships were transferred to Diana; but, as her name indicates, there can be little doubt that she, like Artemis, was primarily the moon. Diana was believed to help women in their travail, and the ex votos which have been found near the sanctuary at Nemi prove that the shrine was visited by women desirous of offspring or anxious for safe delivery. Mr. Frazer adduces this as a proof that she was primarily a tree-goddess. But surely her connection with female functions is sufficiently and naturally explained by the moon's periodic times. Mr. Frazer also thinks that the Arician lake was held sacred to Diana as a tree-goddess because it was surrounded by a grove. A more obvious explanation is suggested by the fact that the deep lying woodland lake went by the name of Diana's mirror, not because she was a tree-goddess, but because the calm land-locked Arician pool reflected so perfectly the image of the moon.

Mr. Frazer considers that Adonis was also a spirit of vegetation, and that the lament for Adonis was a vintage or harvest song, or a threnody for the corn-spirit who had perished. But Adonis, as the very name asserts, was a Semitic deity borrowed by the Greeks. Adonis cannot be separated from Tammuz; and the Semitic Tammuz, who is undoubtedly solar, may be traced back to the Accadian name tim-isi, which is written with ideographs which signify the "maker of fire." The Greek myth of Adonis and Aphrodite must be identified with the Babylonian myth of Tammuz and Istar, and Tammuz is as clearly the sun as Istar was the planet Venus, and afterwards the moon. Mr. Frazer finds traces of the gardens of Adonis in India and Prussia, as well as in Sardinia and Sicily. In Sardinia and Sicily, which had contained Phœnician colonies, it may be possible to trace survivals of Semitic rites, but it is difficult to see how they can have reached regions so remote from Semitic influences as Bengal and the Baltic coasts.

In contending that so many deities hitherto supposed to be solar were originally tree-spirits, Mr. Frazer makes out the strongest case for Balder. Like most sun-gods, Balder was called the son of heaven and earth—of Odin and Frigg; his name, like that of Baal and other sun-gods, means the "lord" or "king"; and his death, like that of other solar heroes, is at the hand of the powers of darkness. Mr. Frazer argues with great ingenuity that he was a tree-spirit—the personified oak, oak logs being sacrificially burnt at the fire festivals of Yule and Midsummer in order to rekindle the failing heat of the sun, and that hence Balder has been mistaken for a sun-god.

His strongest point, which is very ingeniously worked out, is that Balder could only be slain by the fateful mistletoe, the life and the parasite of the oak, so that only when the mistletoe was cut could the life of the oak be severed. He believes that the golden bough which had to be cut in the Arician grove by the claimant to the priesthood was the mistletoe growing on the sacred tree, and guarded by the priest as the symbol of the life of the oak, which was symbolised or incarnated in the life of the priest who served it.

This is a very plausible explanation of the Arician myth; but there are so many solar features about Balder that it seems more probable that we have, as in so many other cases, an instance of the transference of myths. The mistletoe cult seems to have been distinctively Celtic, and the near relation of Celts and Latins may account for the survival of a Celtic cult in Latium. Just as myths of Heracles, the Graeco-Phœnician sun-god, were transferred to Hercules, the Italian god of enclosure, a wholly unrelated deity, so Celtic tree-cults may have been transferred to a Teutonic sun-god, probably at the time when, as I have shown elsewhere, so many elements of Celtic culture were taken over by the Teutons, who must at one time have been living under the political supremacy of the Celts. This instance illustrates a chief defect in Mr. Frazer's method. He does not take into account the extensive borrowing of myths and their transference to unrelated deities. In the case of two mythologies only, the Babylonian and the Greek, do we possess materials sufficiently early and ample to make it possible to trace this borrowing with reasonable certainty. But we have sufficient to show that sundry myths of Zeus, Uranus, Heracles, Ares, Aphrodite, Europa, Artemis, and Andromeda, are really cosmogonic myths of Anu, Tiamat, Tammuz, Uras, Bel Mero-dach, and Istar, which were translated from the Babylonian cosmogony into the Greek mythologic cycle.

It has been already observed that the besetting danger of mythological writers is the endeavour to open too many locks with the same key. We may admit with Mannhardt that certain myths may be explained from a primitive worship of sacred trees; but we must also allow that Schwartz, Kuhn, Bréal, Prof. Max Müller, Sir G. Cox, Mr. Lang, Mr. Robert Brown, and Mr. Herbert Spencer, have not altogether failed in their explanations, and that there are solar myths, lunar myths, dawn myths, storm myths, myths arising from the totemistic worship of animals, and of sacred stones, as well as verbal myths, mere nomina becoming numina. The stories of Circe, of Cupid and Psyche, and of Perseus and Andromeda, are probably lunar myths; the story of Antæus is a simoom myth; the stories of Prometheus, and perhaps of Daphne, may be fire-drill myths. It is possible, as Mr. Frazer contends, that the Dodonean Zeus and the Capitoline Jupiter were worshipped under the form of oaks; and we know that sacred stones, probably belemnites or meteorolites, were regarded as venerable images of the Cassian Zeus, the Ephesian Artemis, and the Paphian Aphrodite. Most of the systems of mythological interpretation have some foundation, and most of them have been applied to cases where they are not applicable. Each successive writer overrides his hobby. The most successful principle of interpretation is the eclectic—the mood of the interpreter should be catholic, not sectarian.

Though exception has been taken to some of Mr. Frazer's conclusions, it may be frankly acknowledged that we are indebted to him for an important work which calls attention to an aspect of primitive religion hitherto unduly neglected. With more sobriety of judgment, and with the courage to omit a few tempting but fanciful analogies, his book would have deserved nearly unqualified commendation.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

Poetry and Prose by John Keats. A Book of Fresh Verses and New Readings, Essays and Letters lately found, and Passages formerly suppressed. Edited by H. Buxton Forman. (Reeves & Turner.)

In preparing this volume, as a supplement to the Library Edition of Keats, Mr. Buxton Forman has followed what was no doubt the only safe course for an editor in such circumstances—that of waiving altogether his own private judgment as to what might be worth and what might not be worth publication, and giving unreservedly the results of his examination and collation of all material which has not hitherto seen the light. Thus it is inevitable that we find here a good deal in which even an enthusiastic student of English poetry may be pardoned for feeling but a moderate degree of interest, while some readers may even go so far as to question if it was quite desirable, or altogether a friendly service to Keats's fame, to enlighten us as to the various tentative and experimental stages through which Keats, in some instances, arrived at those results which were undoubtedly the only things he intended for our eyes. Some of us may, perhaps, be imperfectly grateful for having our familiar impressions of splendid lines or phrases unsettled and distracted by a knowledge of such gropings and fumbings towards perfection, as it would, on the whole, have been better for us to take for granted. But in such a case no middle course was open to a judicious editor; and Mr. Forman has, at any rate, been consistent in leaving nothing unrescued from darkness which it was possible for him to set in broad daylight.

Some of the results of these researches are undoubtedly of high interest; for although we may be permitted to doubt whether either Keats or his reader is a gainer by the publication of every trivial little cancelled reading which his extant MSS. disclose, there can be no question of the importance and value to us of the discovery of any whole stanzas which his artistic instinct bade him suppress. The case of the suppressed first stanza of the "Ode to Melancholy" is well known, and Mr. Forman is able to give other instances where the operation of amputation was not less wisely performed. "Stanza VII. of 'Isabella,'" says Mr. Forman,

"originally closed with a different couplet from that of the published text, and was followed by a stanza which has not, I believe, been printed. The change of couplet and erasure of the stanza are among Keats's master-strokes of cunning craftsmanship. Here are the ten cancelled lines:

"Lorenzo, I would clip my ringlet hair
To make thee laugh again and debonnaire."
"Then should I be," said he, "full deified;
And yet I would not have it, clip it not:
For, lady, I do love it where 'tis tied
About the neck I dote on, and that spot,
That anxious dimple it doth take a pride
To play about. Ay, lady, I have got Its shadow in my heart, and every sweet
Its mistress owns there summed up all complete."

"It will be remembered that instead of all this we have the admirable couplet:

"Lorenzo"—here she ceased her timid quest,
But in her tone and look he read the rest."

Then, again, in "The Eve of St. Agnes," the following stanza, suppressed in the printed version of the poem, was originally written after Stanza III.:

"But there are ears may hear sweet melodies,
And there are eyes to brighten festivals,
And there are feet for nimble minstrelies,
And many a lip that for the red wine calls—
Follow, then follow to the illumined halls,
Follow me youth—and leave the hermit—
Give him a tear—then trophied bannerals,
And many a brilliant tasseling of light
Shall droop from arched ways this high baronial night."

"Baronial night," to speak in Polonius's manner, is not good, and "tasseling of light" is, to say the least, dubious; and this is certainly another case in which the artist comes out more in what he blots than in what he writes. In Stanza V. of the same poem, Mr. Forman gives us a passage, afterwards erased and supplanted by other matter, in which one line—

"The muse should never make the spirit gay"— is not without interest as an aesthetic dictum reflecting personal feeling. In "Hyperion," Mr. Forman notes one verbal change involving almost as total an inversion of the meaning as in the celebrated case of Pope's alteration of "A mighty maze, a maze without a plan," to

"A mighty maze, but not without a plan."

For in the magnificent passage about the oaks, that "dream all night without a stir,

Save from one gradual solitary gust,
That comes upon the silence and dies off
As if the ebbing air had but one wave,"

Keats at first wrote, instead of "gradual," "sudden."

Mr. Forman exhumes from the Examiner and the Champion certain short prose pieces by Keats in the shape of critical articles. They cannot be called specimens of good writing. The attempt, which he deprecates in the muse, "to make the spirit gay," does not seem to be natural to him; and both here and in his letters there is a kind of forced hilarity or determined sort of facetiousness which to the reader is unprofitable and wearying—at least, to any reader who cares for real humour.

Mr. Forman gives us various new letters of Keats, and also restores the hitherto suppressed passages of letters which Lord Houghton saw fit to print with more or less important omissions and, in some cases, manipulations. The mass of newly published matter contains many things which cannot fail to please and interest those readers who like to have their opinion of men of genius lowered. Among other matters, the friendship between Keats and Hunt appears in a less pleasant light than could be wished. Keats describes Hunt as "vain, egotistical, and disgusting in matters of taste and morals," and goes on to say, "Hunt does one harm by making fine things petty and beautiful things hateful. Through him I am indifferent to Mozart." These letters, indeed, often exhibit Keats in a censorious attitude towards his friends and companions that is scarcely agreeable; but they also contain not a few instances of a happy disposition to extract enjoyment from little things. Thus, "I am sitting opposite the Shakspeare I brought from the Isle of Wight, and I never look at it but the silk tassels on it give me as much pleasure as the face of the poet itself." A great poet no doubt includes a great critic; but Keats somehow does not show to the best advantage when he talks criticism, as he sometimes does in the high-serious way. Occasionally he mounts upon oracular stilts, and when it suits him he can achieve delightful unintelligibility. "Lord Byron cuts a figure, but he is not figurative. Shakspeare led a life of allegory; his works are the comments on it." Shakspeare, by the way, is misquoted in one place, where Keats says, "I wish I could hear from you to make me 'as whole and general as the casing air.'"

The following, as a companion picture to Coleridge's well-known account of the "slack, not well-dressed youth" whom he met one day walking in the lanes between Highgate and Hampstead, and who, after they had parted, turned back to say, "Coleridge, let me shake your hand," will be read with interest:

"Last Sunday I took a walk towards Highgate, and in the lane that winds by the side of Lord Mansfield's park I met Mr. Green, our demonstrator at Guy's, in conversation with Coleridge. I joined them, after enquiring with a look whether it would be agreeable. I walked with him a(t) his alderman-after-dinner pace for near two miles I suppose. In those two miles he broached a thousand things. Let me see if I can give you a list: Nightingales, Poetry—on Poetical Sensation—Metaphysics—different genera and species of Dreams—Nightmare—a Dream accompanied with a sense of Touch—a Dream related—First and Second Consciousness—the difference explained between Will and Volition—so m(an)y metaphysicians from a want of smoking the second consciousness—Monsters—the Kraken—Mermaids—Southey believes in them—Southey's belief too much diluted—a Ghost story—Good morning—I heard his voice as he came towards me—I heard it as he moved away—I had heard it all the interval—if it may be called so. He was civil enough to ask me to call on him at Highgate. Good night!"

What a pity Keats did not preserve for us the explanation of the difference "between Will and Volition"! And how tantalising it is to have so little exact information about that regrettable dilution of Southey's belief in mermaids!

Although it is perhaps impossible that a great poet should not occasionally say fine things in his familiar letters, the letters of Keats certainly give little or no evidence, direct or indirect, of any mastery of prose style. One can anticipate the rejoinder, "they are manifestly written without any thought of style, and that is why they are so interesting." This is true; but a man who can write a good prose style when he will can hardly help falling into it at times whether he will or no, let him be never so careless and indifferent; and, excepting the beautiful and touching preface to "Endymion"—in which, however, the beauty is not specifically a prose beauty, the piece itself being rather, as Shelley calls it, a "prelude" than a preface—it would be difficult to point to a single really good passage of prose writing by Keats; and there is not another great poet among his contemporaries of whom this can be said. He can tell us indeed that Invention is the polar star of poetry, Fancy the sails, and Imagination the rudder; but it may be doubted if this helps us very much to understand the nature and separate functions of Invention, Fancy, and Imagination; and in the very letter from which this well-known sentence is quoted what an unsound view of imaginative art is revealed! Speaking of "Endymion," he says:

"It will be a test, a trial of my powers of Imagination, and chiefly of my Invention—which is a rare thing indeed—by which I must make 4,000 lines of one bare circumstance, and fill them with poetry."

According to the theory here implied, amplification—the deliberate elaboration and multiplication of ornament—in Mr. Ruskin's phrase, "the construction of decoration"—is a poet's worthiest end and aim. Happily Keats outgrew this false conception of art; otherwise we should never have had "Isabella," "The Eve of St. Agnes," the splendid "Hyperion," and the five faultless and imperishable odes.

WILLIAM WATSON.

"THE STATESMEN SERIES."—Lord Derby. By T. E. Kebbel. (W. H. Allen.)

THE "Statesmen Series" continues to deserve the success which its earlier volumes obtained. The new life is that of Lord Derby, entrusted to the hand of Mr. Kebbel. He gives us work of the same quality as his former political writings. His theories of a logical and developing Toryism are always interesting and ingenious, if not altogether convincing. He presents a well-worn subject with clearness, and is able to invest it with a flavour of novelty by judiciously conveying the intimation that he is himself a politician as well as a writer of experience and knowledge; and, writing with personal esteem for a man whose personality at any rate strikes an eye for the picturesque, he is able to quicken his readers with a similar sensation of pleasure.

There was not a great deal to be done with the subject. There was no wealth of new material to be exploited; no meze of misrepresentation to be threaded; not even a startling paradox for the author to propound. It is to be feared that Lord Derby has been almost forgotten by his own party, and that he never was remembered by any other; and when there is no orthodox creed, you cannot startle the faithful by hazarding a heresy. To present Lord Derby in a new light would have been quite superfluous and barely possible—it was enough if he could be brought to the light again at all. Mr. Kebbel had nothing but the ordinary published information and the reminiscences of Lord Derby's friends and his own to draw upon. But he has done his work well; and although he offers it, in his preface, with some apology as a provisional and tentative portrait, we may accept it at rather more than its author's value, pending the time when a not very probable craving on the part of the public may call for and obtain a definitive life of Lord Derby.

Mr. Kebbel might, however, have done rather more justice to the Whigs without doing any injustice to the facts. Saying, no doubt, what has been commonly said before, he intimates that Lord Grey's government entered into a "plot" to release O'Connell in 1831 from punishment for a violation of the Associations Act, because they wanted his vote in the House of Commons.

"Whether right or wrong, it was the general belief at the time that his escape from justice was contrived by the ministers themselves. That Stanley was not privy to the plot till it was too late to prevent it we may easily believe. But he probably acquiesced in the necessity which prompted it, and he seems to have had no difference with his colleagues on the subject."

On the proceedings, however, it is difficult to see what evidence there is in fact for this no doubt prevalent belief. The delays which saved O'Connell from being sentenced before the dissolution appear to be entirely accounted for by the acts of legal officials, and not at all to be due to ministerial intervention. O'Connell, who had at first simply demurred to the first fourteen counts of the indictment, wished to traverse the facts and be tried on the merits; and on February 5 judgment was given, after argument, allowing him to do so on terms which certainly tended to expedite both trial and, if he were found guilty, sentence. The conduct of the sheriff in granting his application for time to challenge jurors—conduct which cannot be complained of—made it impossible to have a trial on the day originally appointed, namely, February 17. At this point O'Connell, finding no wavering on the side of the Crown, surrendered and withdrew his plea of not guilty; and judgment for the Crown was entered on the first fourteen counts and a noli prosequi on the rest. Nothing remained but to call up the traversers for judgment, which, according to practice, could not be before the first day of next term, April 20; and in the meantime the Crown advisers took the usual preparatory steps, and Stanley declared in the House of Commons that O'Connell "will certainly be called up for judgment." On April 20 he was, with the other traversers, called on his recognisances; and some of the traversers appeared, though he did not. They desired to have a motion argued in arrest of judgment, and an early day was fixed for the purpose. If the Attorney-General failed to seize the earliest instant for demanding judgment on O'Connell, we have it on his word, which there is nothing whatever to impugn, that he did so from pure accident, and upon no suggestions or instructions. The dissolution on April 22 put an end to the Act under which the traversers were indicted. Still, a month later the Government took the opinion of both Irish and English law officers, whether O'Connell could not still be called up for judgment, and their opinion was unanimous that he could not. In order to support the hypothesis of a plot to buy O'Connell's vote by letting him off his punishment (of which there is no evidence), one must suppose not only that Blackburne certainly, and Stanley probably, were guilty of deliberate falsehood, but that the law officials were allowed to go on preparing for a step which it had been predetermined should never be taken, and that five law officers were solemnly invited to consider, and did consider, a legal point for private ministerial use only, which both counsel and client must have known to be no longer of any importance whatever. So, too, Mr. Kebbel treats the tradition of a "Lichfield House compact" in 1835 as indubitable matter of fact, although the documents published recently in Mr. Walpole's Life of Lord John Russell prove beyond a doubt that no such compact ever existed. In this case, O'Connell's support was tendered by him and not invited by Lord John, nor was there any bargain or compromise in respect of it. Why is not the same to be assumed of O'Connell's support in the spring of 1831, there being no evidence to the contrary? It is the more necessary to be scrupulous upon points such as these, because just now the Whigs have no friends. There was a time when they blew their own trumpet with irritating complacency and deafening loudness. But Nemesis has overtaken them. No one defends them now. Both parties have reaped where the Whigs sowed; both have borrowed freely from their principles and policy, and made haste to forget the debt. The Whigs, with all their faults, did great work in their day, and history ought to be on its guard not to do them any gratuitous injustice now that their day is over.

Lord Derby was a man who seemed to combine in himself opposite qualities in a singularly paradoxical degree. He began political life as a fighting Whig and ended it almost a Tory roi fainéant. He was a scholar of the kind that is always found one flesh with the gentleman, and yet de'ighted to rush away to the b'ats and brawls of Newmarket, and to indulge in something like the language of a blackguard. A peer of the most ancient descent, "fourteenth Earl of Derby in hereditary succession," he was also one of the best men of business in Lancashire. Like so many eminent statesmen, he passed through that process which presents just now a peculiarly interesting problem in morals, the process of changing his opinions and his party. In his case accident and the prepossessions of youth had pledged him to a party before his opinions were mature, or his understanding was convinced. His talents at once gave him a rogue among the Whigs, to whom young and well-born statesmen were always welcome. He revelled in the delight of battle, and fought the fight of Reform without having sufficiently reflected on the consequences of victory. They came upon him by surprise, and at the age of thirty-six he was obliged to quit the party to which by nature and temperament he never ought to have belonged. His position among his new adherents was one out of which it was difficult to frame an enduring reputation. A policy of resistance was forced upon him; and between the great constructive work of Sir Robert Peel and the constructive activity of the administration of 1874 there was a long epoch when the new Conservative party oscillated between the opposition of negation and administration upon sufferance. Mr. Kebbel thinks that Lord Derby's great mistake was in refusing to try to form a Government in 1855; and that if he had then boldly attempted the task he might have terminated the Crimean war with success, and have secured to the Conservative party a perhaps long lease of life. But, in truth, the party was not yet "educated" and disciplined into a homogeneous body, nor did Lord Derby's talents lie that way. To Mr. Disraeli belongs the credit of that creation; nor is it likely that any other course would have made Lord Derby other than we find him—a brilliant and gallant leader, and an ornament of his order, but as a statesman perilously near to that vast multitude whose names are writ in water.

J. A. HAMILTON.

Two Summers in Greenland. By A. Riis Carstensen. (Chapman & Hall.)

AN artist's adventures among the ice and islands, and in the fjords and mountains, of a country so interesting and peculiar as Greenland are pretty sure to contain much that is novel and interesting; and as in the present case the artist happens to be gifted with a facile pencil, a ready pen, and the faculty of shrewd observation, the result is a particularly pleasant and entertaining book of travel. It is, as the author explicitly states, not a scientific work, but the impressions of a man who for two summers wandered over many parts of the Greenland coast, and whose main desire was to see the landscape and depict the effects of colour and light with truthfulness. Judging by the excellent quality of the numerous illustrations, the primary object of Mr. Carstensen's wanderings must have been fully attained; and he also found time to make a series of notes on men and things, which, like his drawings, have all the freshness and reality of sketches from nature.

The introduction contains a historical sketch of the country, from the time of Erik the Red to the establishment by the zeal and self-sacrifice of the Norwegian pastor, Hans Egede, of the European institutions which continue at the present day. The author's own experiences gain additional interest from the fact that his first voyage was made with the Greenland Exploration Expedition of 1884, under the leadership of Lieutenant Jensen, of the Danish Navy, whose extensive surveys and explorations are so well known to geographers; while on the second occasion, in 1888, he sailed in company with Mr. Stenstrup, the mineralogist, and the other men of science who were sent out in that year by the Commissioners for the Geographical Investigation of Greenland. On the return voyage, the ship was nearly driven by south-west gales into the Godthaab fjord, just about the time that Dr. Nansen arrived there after his successful accomplishment of the remarkable feat of crossing the icy plateau of Greenland from east to west.

The author sums up his impressions of Greenland and its people as a mixture of the merry and the sad:

"No part of the world enjoys the boon of perfect happiness. Life is a struggle in civilized lands as well as in the uttermost parts of the earth, and will probably always remain so. The explanation of the fact that the scanty population of Greenland live miserably, and suffer privations year by year, must to a large extent be sought for in their own improvidence and disregard for personal comfort. Greenlanders have not learned to save when there is plenty and in Greenland there is, contrary to what prevails in many other countries, either plenty or nothing. It is, in one sense, a land of extremes. Thus, when light appears, it remains light both night and day, while in the winter it is necessary to keep the lamp always alight. Again, when animals and birds arrive, they never come singly, but in flocks, and each species has its own season and locality. In strolling among the hills we either find them so devoid of living beings that we are struck by the desolation, or we meet with such an abundance of animal life that we are almost unable to recognise the same country."

The improvidence of the natives seems to have been impressed upon the author's mind by some very striking instances. In the South Ström fjord, the chief reindeer-hunting ground of Greenland and the rendezvous for hunters from south and north, there were remains of former camps where antlers had been "piled up in pyramids as high as the hunters had been able to throw them," and they were also "literally scattered over the entire country." It is estimated that, since the introduction of rifles, the number of deer killed annually has decreased from twenty-five thousand in the first few years to about one thousand at the present time, and the herds will probably continue to diminish until they become too scarce to be worth hunting. It is supposed that during the briskest period of the slaughter "one-half of the flesh was abandoned on the rocks, while a great many deer were killed only for the sake of their hides and tongues." In fact, like other hunting nations, the Greenlanders are doing their utmost to extirpate game:

"The eider-duck, for instance, which probably has no better breeding-place in the world than the islands on the coast, and might render a large yearly income, has no rest anywhere, and a Greenlanders will wantonly destroy bird, young ones, and half-hatched eggs. All that has been done by the Danes to teach them to be provident has been in vain. Has the winter been severe, and have they been compelled to face hardships in the way of cold and hunger, they no sooner feel the spring air than all is forgotten. Then there is plenty of provision for everybody, and they soon put on fat, about the only way in which many of them lay up a supply for coming hard times."

Mr. Carstensen considers that the resistance to civilisation shown by the Esquimaux, or, as he calls them, Eskimos, is due to the artificial means used to preserve their language from any admixture with the Scandinavian languages:

"Ideas follow language, as bodily health is followed by courage and energy. As long as the Greenlanders remain an Eskimo he will never learn to keep cattle, cultivate turnips, develop his fisheries, preserve the eider-ducks on his islands, trade with foreigners, or at all conceive ideas for himself. All improvements are executed for him, and he will very likely always require someone to lead him. During the time that Denmark has possessed Greenland, the population has, by frequent intermarriages, become so crossed that Scandinavian are as frequently met with as Danish faces, and if young Danish mechanics continue to settle there for another hundred and fifty years, there will probably be no traces of Eskimo origin left. Then the world may witness that Denmark, out of humanity and admiration for something strange and scientifically interesting, has sunk a population of Scandinavians to the average level of Eskimos and Indians."

The foregoing extracts will show that the author had eyes and ears for much besides the scenery and colouring of the solemn landscapes, and the free hills and dales of "the land," as it is affectionately called by the Danish residents; but though he gives us plenty of anecdote and some food for thoughtful reflection, he shows, as might be expected, a keen appreciation of the beauties of nature, as well as considerable power of picturesque word-painting. Here, for instance, is a description of a fjord near Holstenborg, which, by the way, might equally serve for some of the magnificent inlets on the west coast of Norway:

"It was not unlike the mouth of an immense carnivorous animal, whose teeth were mountains some four to five thousand feet high. As the boat proceeded the scene changed, and the eye was attracted from one picture to another seeming to surpass it; but it was after having landed on the furthestmost shore that the landscape became altogether imposing. The air was transparent and calm. In the west the waters merged into the sky, both resembling an endless space, wherein hills, trees, or islands were reflected as distinctly, both in outline and colour, as the objects they were a natural picture of, forming floating masses whose distance from the eye it was impossible to define, looking near and at the same time very far."

"A green birch forest was in the shadow on the plain where our tent was erected, and beyond that mountains of five thousand feet rose abruptly. Their summits, golden with the rays of the low sun, contrasted strongly with the deep blue sky; and, as though to remind us of the northern latitude of the spot, the ice in their clefts glittered with a force that emphasised the depth of colour. A mysterious sound floated in the air. It came from some waterfalls, with clouds of spray flying over the vigorous greensward at their feet. Never have I beheld a place coming nearer to the idea which I imagine that our forefathers entertained of Valhalla. Here was the very eternal day of Valhalla, being unlike the fleeting one of earth in that the subdued light of midnight heightened the mysteriousness of the place."

Altogether, we can understand why, in spite of the mosquitoes, the author professes himself unable "to imagine a pleasanter manner of spending a summer." A rough map enables us to trace most of his wanderings, though the routes taken are not shown. There is, however, no index; and the author has made a curious blunder in confusing the term "ice-blink" with the inland ice and calving glaciers. The "ice-blink," as all Arctic travellers are aware, is a singular appearance in the sky, which indicates, many miles beyond the limit of direct vision, the position, nature, and extent of large masses of ice. It is a shining streak of white, or yellowish white light, and is evidently caused by the glare reflected obliquely against the atmosphere from the surface of the ice-packs or glaciers. But these are matters of minor importance in a record of this kind, and it is safe to predict that Mr. Carstensen's readers will close his book with the feeling that they have spent some pleasant hours with a remarkably agreeable and well-informed companion.

GEORGE T. TEMPLE.

NEW NOVELS.

When we were Boys. By William O'Brien. (Longmans.)

Lady Faintheart. By H. B. M. Watson. In 3 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

Blindfold. By Florence Marryatt. In 3 vols. (White.)

The Firm of Girdlestone. By Conan Doyle. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Last of the Cornets. By Col. Rowan Hamilton. In 2 vols. (White.)

The Ring of Amasis. By the Earl of Lytton. (Macmillan.)

Dinna Forget. By John Strange Winter. (Trischler.)

For the Good of the Family. By Kate Eyre. (Digby & Long.)

Tracked and Taken. By Dick Donovan. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. WILLIAM O'BRIEN'S novel scarcely needs the amount of advertisement which has been expended upon it to attract public notice. It was brought into the world under conditions which ensured it from the outset a considerable share of attention, and the mere announcement of its publication aroused an amount of curiosity sufficient to float—as a mere commercial speculation—half a dozen ordinary novels. The author, though hitherto unknown as an author, had been prominently before the public as a politician of an advanced type, with a somewhat pronounced manner of exhibiting the courage of his opinions; and popular anticipation might be pardoned if it gave his book credit in advance for a greater share of partisan tirade than of artistic merit. If such has been the case, we may at once predict as the result some genuinely agreeable disappointment. When we were Boys cannot, it is true, claim anything like a first rank among works of fiction; its faults are more than can be counted on the fingers of the hand, and though the peculiar circumstances of its production may explain these, they do not excuse them. But in many respects it is a powerful book, and the political virulence one might not unreasonably have looked for in its pages is scarcely discernible. Of course, the object throughout is to enlist sympathy on behalf of the downtrodden Celt, and to throw into relief some of the worst consequences of Saxon misrule. But the process is accomplished with so much magnanimous forbearance that the Saxon reader, instead of writhing under the lash, feels a grateful sense of being brought into court for errors more of head than of heart; it is the blundering stupidity of the conqueror, not his deliberate cruelty, that seems to be made the ground of indictment, and in this there is much comfort to be found. Though sometimes severe, the writer is never blatant; and the characters throughout his book are drawn with a fidelity and moderation that robs them of all offensiveness. Indeed, the story is merely a record of hotheaded enthusiasm, culminating in a rebellious outbreak confined for the most part to the youthful population; and, viewed in this light, it becomes little more than an illustration of the futility of attempting under certain circumstances to attain constitutional ends by other than constitutional means. Of any constructive scheme of politics—beyond the vaguely outlined ideal of an "Irish Republic"—there is no trace to be found in the book. Its merit from the reviewer's standpoint lies in its humorous and lively descriptions and its incisive grasp of character. Lord Drumshaughlin, the absentee Irish landlord; Mabel Westropp, his daughter; Hans Harman, the agent; Ken Rohan, the hero; Mike McCarthy, the American captain; Father Phil, and a host of others, are admirably drawn portraits. But the book is much too long. Five hundred and fifty closely printed pages are a sore trial to any reader's patience; and the author, though fertile in allusion and ready in wit, is apt to be carried away by the exuberance of his own creative powers, and often induces satiety in the effort to arouse excitement. In fact, the whole narrative would be much improved by judicious excisions, and an opportunity might then be afforded of correcting some of those glorious inaccuracies of spelling and allusion to which genius may, when first spreading its wings, be allowed to rise superior.

There is scarcely any more painful object to contemplate than a vast monument of misdirected and useless labour. The author of Lady Faintheart is not only a person of thought and culture, but is obviously gifted with an unusually acute vein of analytical subtlety, and an industrious determination to exercise it for the benefit of the reading public. The result is that he has with toilsome and patient minuteness sketched out for us through three volumes a history which, it is sadly to be feared, very few people will have the patience to read. Millicent Hetherdene, the heroine, a young woman fired with enthusiasm in the direction of social reform, is an admirable character. Excellent, also, in their several ways, are Harold Aylmer, her lover, Winifred Aylmer, her female friend, George Holroyd, a male companion and sympathiser, and others of the dramatis personae. Unfortunately, they all happen to be what Lord Beaconsfield would have called "superior persons," and these are precisely the people that we do not much care to read about in novels. We do not always understand them, and they wound our vanity accordingly. And in the absence of any plot, of any surprises, of anything dramatic, or sensational, or humorous, or pathetic, it is almost too much of an author to ask us to take an interest with him in the tortuous mental strategy of natures whose poetry and simplicity have been swamped by the influence of some emotional craze or speculative theory. Clever the book undoubtedly is, but the cleverness is scarcely of a kind to attract a large circle of admirers.

Hypnotism has of late made such rapid progress towards arriving at the dignity of a science, and such awkward possibilities seem imminent in view of its mysterious powers, that it must now be freely accorded a place among the legitimate stock-in-trade of the plotmonger. It is precisely the sort of subject which suits the genius of Florence Marryat, and under her hand the theme receives satisfactory and not overstrained treatment. Blindfold is a novel in two distinct parts, marked by almost entire change of characters and scenes. At the outset we have a picture of free and easy Australian life. Jack and Jem Dorrian, twin brothers, possessed of enormous wealth, have emigrated from England, and are living a dissolute life in the neighbourhood of Melbourne. Quarrelling, for the first time in their lives, over a worthless woman, Jem receives a blow from his brother, rides away into the bush, and shortly after is reported as dead. The distracted survivor turns his back on the land of his adoption; and the scene is shifted to Europe, where, in his wanderings, John Dorrian meets with a woman worthy of his love named Olga Adrastikoff, who has the misfortune to be enslaved by the superior will of her so-called brother Paul, a rascally foreign adventurer. Though not by any means the best of this lady's works, Blindfold is a pathetic and powerful story. Readers on finishing the book will probably complain of a sad disregard of poetic justice in the escape of the villain, whose hand is stained with a cruel murder.

Dr. Conan Doyle has abandoned the paths of history which he followed so successfully in his first novel, and has now given us in The Firm of Girdlestone some aspects—and for the most part rather disreputable ones—of City and financial life. Possibly the chronicles of a strictly honest house would scarcely furnish material sufficient for a thrilling narrative, and the introduction of a certain amount of unscrupulous rascality is in a manner essential to the plot; at all events, it may be hoped, for the credit of London business life, that it does not boast of many such sanctimonious knaves as John Girdlestone, or such cold-blooded ruffians as his son Ezra. These worthies, being foiled in their endeavour to retrieve failing fortune by a corner in diamonds, and continually disappointed by the safe return from abroad of rotten ships insured for twice their value, cast their eyes upon Kate Harston, an heiress, whose fortune, in case of her death during minority, will revert to her guardian, the elder Girdlestone, and deliberately plot her murder. So much of the book is occupied with the nefarious schemes of this pair of villains that there is little room left for development of the other characters; and the hero, Tom Dimsdale, has comparatively little to do. Dr. Doyle can write an excellent story, and this is one; but, taken all round, it is not worthy to appear on the same shelf with Micah Clarke. The present work has been appearing piecemeal in the columns of a periodical. The fact itself may possibly have nothing to do with the merit of the composition, but it will indeed be a matter for regret if the exigencies of writing to order and up to time are likely to exercise a deteriorating effect on the workmanship of so promising an author. Interesting and well-told as The Firm of Girdlestone undoubtedly is, there are half a dozen second-class novelists of the day who could have written it; and there is an absence of all that wealth of loving care that was lavished so freely on every page of the author's earlier book, and of the elaborate finish that stamped it as a work of art.

The Last of the Cornets is exactly the sort of tale which might have been written, in memory of a beloved younger comrade, by some old military raconteur, whose world has never extended beyond the messroom, the garrison town, and the hunting field. There is no pretence of any plot, and scarcely any connected thread of incident. The two volumes are a record, for the most part, of various scenes of regimental life, in which Allan McDonagh, "the last of the Cornets," plays a prominent but not very important part; a record of mess dinners, hunts, steeple-chases, horse-dealing, flirtations, regimental scandals, and numerous adventures of a more or less interesting character. The narrative is not devoid of a certain racy descriptiveness, and is embellished with the phraseology most familiar to habitués of clubland and the turf.

Readers of Tom Moore are not so plentiful now as they were fifty years ago, and probably few of the present generation are familiar with one of his juvenile poems entitled "The Ring." It is a ballad founded on the German legend of a Prince Rupert, who on his wedding morning places his betrothal ring upon the finger of a statue, and is forthwith claimed as bridegroom by a bodily impersonation of the statue, which for many nights interposes itself between him and his real bride in the shape of a loathsome corpse, until exorcised by the aid of a local saint. Some variant form of this legend may perhaps have been followed by Lord Lytton in his lately reprinted work The Ring of Amasis, although under his hand the narrative receives an altogether different setting. The original story published twenty-six years ago under this title was employed, the author tells us in his preface, "for the illustration of a psychological problem." Though the outlines have been entirely recast, the object in view appears to be the same, but the precise nature of the psychological problem is too complex to be discussed within short limits. Such light as can be thrown upon the subject is, perhaps, afforded by the extracts from the Journal of Conrad von Rosenneck, which are scattered at intervals through the book; and readers of a fatalistic turn will no doubt appreciate it.

Dinna Forget, by John Strange Winter, lacks the airy grace and genial humour of A Little Fool, which was noticed by the present writer in the ACADEMY a short time ago; but the plot is of a more solid character and the treatment more powerful. Lord Aylmer's nephew and heir-presumptive, Dick Aylmer, has married Dorothy Strode, a penniless maiden, and keeps her in London under the assumed name of Harris, in order to hide the matter from his uncle on whom he is dependent. The old nobleman, who is a past-master in the arts of libertinism and intrigue, happens to see his nephew at the theatre in company with Mrs. Harris, whose beauty captivates him; and, quite mistaking the nature of the relations between the couple, he resolves to add her to his list of conquests. With this view he procures an Indian appointment for Dick, and in the absence of the latter commences an artfully devised series of operations against the unsuspecting bride. As is the case with all this lady's works, the characters in Dinna Forget are drawn with fidelity and distinctness, and the action is lively throughout.

A place among entertaining novelettes may freely be accorded to Miss Eyre's For the Good of the Family. It is a rather clever tale of impersonation, the dénouement being effected in the inevitable fashion by means of an old acquaintance, who turns up at the critical moment. In this case the detecting agent happens to be a widow lady, who, when justice has been satisfied by the opportune death of the offender, resolves "for the good of the family" to keep the scandal locked within her own bosom; at least, such seems the most plausible interpretation of the title. There is a pathetic record of unrequited affection running through the tale; but readers will probably not be disappointed in the ending.

Stories of the detection of crime are constantly being put upon the market; but there is a certain fascination about them, and they are pretty sure of a welcome reception from a large class of readers. Tracked and Taken is fully up to the average in point of merit, and contains some well-told and exciting descriptions. In many cases the tales are founded upon genuine historical incidents, the well-remembered fraud on the Burlington Gardens branch of the Bank of England, for instance, being laid under contribution, with only a slight alteration of names and leading details.

J. BARROW ALLEN.

CLASSICAL SCHOOL BOOKS.

A History of Greece. By C. W. C. Oman. (Rivingtons.) The schoolmaster's choice of a manual for his class will be made considerably easier by the publication of this new history. Mr. Oman, in accordance with what seems to be the taste of the day, omits the legends and many of the picturesque personal stories which used to give a certain piquancy even to school histories of Greece; but he has written a clear, vivacious, and interesting summary of the history, well up to modern research, and recalling in many happily chosen phrases memories of the great Greek authors on whom it is based. Considering the size of the volume, we find it amazingly full of information, and it combines readableness with solidity in a very taking fashion. It is a general view that Mr. Oman gives us, and the proportions of each object in the view have been carefully studied and well observed. Even the military aspect of events, often neglected and slurred over by the civilian writer, is clearly put before us; and we know of no one who makes plainer to non-professional readers the elementary strategy and tactics of Greek commanders. Mr. Oman makes a bold and not improbable suggestion that Kleomenes, the innovating King of Sparta, never committed suicide, but was made away with by the ephors; and the whole book is pleasantly fresh in its handling of well-worn topics. We are not sure that Mr. Oman is quite accurate in telling us that the sayings of the priestess of Apollo were always delivered in hexameter verses. Herodotus quotes some prose-oracles from Delphi, and Plutarch (De Pyth. Or.) speaks as if prose was regularly used at one time. Is it true again, that the ephors "made Ariston divorce his barren wife"? Is not Mr. Oman thinking of the attempt (which failed) to make Anaxandrides do so? It is curious, and a little disheartening, to notice how our last two English historians of Greece flatly contradict each other in their estimate of the historical value of Homer's poems. Mr. Oman is of opinion that Homer throws "a flood of light" upon the prehistoric age in Greece, and that he painted an "idealized picture of the actual political and social life of his own day." Mr. Abbott wrote (1888) that Homer "is of little or no value as evidence of the early civilisation of Hellas."

Models and Exercises in Unseen Translation. By H. F. Fox and Rev. T. M. Bromley. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) This collection differs from its now numberless brethren in two respects: (1) It is longer, and therefore contains more variety, and can afford to mix together such familiar passages as "Strenuus et fortis causisque Philippus agendis" (pp. 88-9), or Evander's welcome to Æneas (pp. 138-9), with pieces of Statius, Martial, and Manilius—authors lying outside the absurdly contracted range of ordinary classical reading; (2) It begins by giving specimens of, as well as for, translation; the first eighty and odd pages consist of Latin and Greek passages, rendered on the opposite pages by well-known scholars, such as Mr. Raper, Profs. Campbell and Goodwin, Mr. J. A. Symonds, Mr. A. Sidgwick, and others, including the editors. There is much to be said for this plan of showing people how to do it well, before setting them down to do it. We doubt, however, the wisdom of giving verse renderings of specimens, as e.g. on pp. 71-3; if given at all they should be of the best. What a disservice it is to scholarship that a clever lad should be led to suppose that the notable passage in the Oed. Col.

τὸ μὲν τις οὐ, νεαρὸς οὐτὲ γῆρας σημαίνειν, ἀλλ' ὅσῃ χειρὶ πέρας· ὁ γὰρ αἰὲν ὄρων κύκλος λέβσσει νιν Μορίου Διὸς χὰ γλαυκῶπις Ἀθήνα—

is well rendered by an experienced translator as follows:—

And young or old no captain's arm
Shall ravage or downhew it,
For the sleepless orb of Morian Zeus
And grey-eyed Athene view it!

We do not quite like Mr. Sidgwick's "muffled might of fetters," for χαλινῶν ἀναδύει μένει in the Agamemnon (p. 49). Æschylus clearly means "muffling," not "muffled," and χαλινῶν, is more specific than "fetters." A more serious defect is the absence of an index, which a book of these dimensions seriously needs. Is there any authority for such a scansional monstrosity as "flexoanimo" (p. 201)? Any reason why part of the same passage should occur on pp. 156, 187? Why, in the heading of lxxii., does a well-known line of Catullus appear as "Nox est una longa dormienda est"? Why should Browning be mangled to make a heading for lxxv.:

"O, to be in England!

Now that summer's there?"

For "summer" read "April." These are trifles, but books to encourage exact scholarship should be exact. It is wise, we think, to give headings to such pieces as these. We doubt if it is wise to scatter passages quite so broadcast, with no arrangement under authors, or subjects, or periods. And more care was wanted in revising proofs—cf. l. 14 of cxix; and the punctuation of the last line but one of cxlix. The selection of Greek pieces (pp. 243, 423), is good, but defective in choric passages.

Models and Materials for Greek Iambic Verse. By J. Y. Sargent. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) Yet another attempt, and that by a practised hand, to facilitate and amplify a knowledge of Greek by means of verse composition. Mr. Sargent gives us about 150 pages of characteristic Greek passages from the dramatists, arranging them in subjects alphabetically—e.g. Advice, Battle, Change, Gods, Law, &c.—some mere maxims, some passages of considerable length; but all not only well worth reading in themselves, but possessing, in a greater or less degree, some affinity to passages of English classical literature, which passages follow (pp. 155-240), and are intended to be translated by the light of the already perused Greek passages. Sometimes the resemblance is close, sometimes a mere hint or touch. But undoubtedly this is the way to give really intelligent boys who read English poetry a real interest in converting it into Greek. Our own feeling is that this, though a good and useful thing, does not meet the main difficulty, which is how to make Greek composition useful to intelligent boys who do not care about English poetry. The former class will be helped, by this book, to do something which they will in some measure do for themselves; the latter class will, we fear, be untouched by it. Still, the tracing of the countless resemblances—e.g. between Sophocles and Shakspeare—is in itself a gain, whether we turn the latter into good iambs or not. The last part of the book (pp. 240-301) contains miscellaneous pieces of English, with references to passages in the Greek tragedians, which may be profitably consulted before embarking on a rendering. Some of these pieces—e.g. that on p. 243—are somewhat hackneyed; and the passage from "Comus" (p. 258) has been rendered, with the rest of that poem, by Lord Lyttleton. Why is the attendant spirit called Thirsis here? There is an index of references, well put together—a much better thing than a vocabulary for advanced students.

Homeric Grammar for Schools. By F. E. Thompson. (Rivingtons.) A school Homeric grammar is distinctly a need at present. The sketch prefixed to Mr. Monro's Iliad is admirable; but it is a little difficult for boys, perhaps owing to condensation. Apart from this sketch there is, so far as we know, no respectable English school-book on the subject. We cannot, however, assert that Mr. Thompson has quite filled the gap. His Accidence, certainly, is in parts neither lucid nor correct. In scholarship Mr. Thompson seems to depend wholly on Mr. Monro's larger Homeric Grammar. Of advances in philology made since that book was published, he seems to know very little; and, though he occasionally quotes Messrs. King and Cookson, we do not feel sure that he has always apprehended their meaning. We are happy to be able to say that the Syntax is much better done, and is more worthy of Mr. Thompson's high reputation as a grammarian. But, as a whole, the book is not quite adequate. Several questions in different parts of the volume are disposed of with the remark that more details will be found in Mr. Monro's Grammar. But this is just what the school-reader will not want to be told. On the whole, we fear that, while Mr. Thompson's work may be useful to many, it will not take its place as a standard school-book until it has been carefully revised.

Sportella: or, Unseen Passages for Higher Forms. By J. H. Fowler. (Rivingtons.) Books of this kind are plentiful. They generally, however, err in selecting too freely from well-known authors, so that it is always a chance if the piece be or be not "unseen" to individual boys in higher forms. Mr. Fowler has striven to avoid this fault by discarding such well-known authors as Virgil and Sophocles, and ranging outside the familiar field. In Part I. (Latin), we find passages from Seneca and Valerius Maximus, Terence and Propertius, Plautus and Suetonius, Persius and Martial, as well as from the less hackneyed parts of Cicero and Ovid; while in Part II. we meet not only Plato and Xenophon, but Minnermus, Theophrastus, Apollonius Rhodius, and even Polybius. One of the extracts—104, from Xenophanes—is not only a good testing piece, but contains advice, brightly put, which most boys need greatly. The book would give intelligent boys a useful reminder of the variety both of Latin and Greek literature. We incline to think, however, that some longer extracts would improve it, particularly if it is to be used for oral construing. An index also is desirable.

NOTES AND NEWS.

We are glad to learn that Messrs. Smith and Elder have in preparation a shilling volume of Selections from Robert Browning's Works, and that the Browning Society is trying to get one of its members to write a shilling handbook to Browning. Meanwhile Mr. B. Sagar is working at his Browning Lexicon. Port Elizabeth in South Africa and Copenhagen are the last two places abroad at which Browning reading clubs have been founded. One has also been started in the East of London.

THE publication of Dr. Nansen's account of his recent expedition to Greenland has been postponed till October.

MR. THOMAS STEVENS, of "Round the World on a Bicycle" fame, who was the first person from the outside world to meet Mr. Stanley on his return from "Darkest Africa," having been sent out in search of the explorer by the New York World, has written an account of his adventures in a work called Scouting for Stanley in East Africa, which will be published about June 25 by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN will publish next week Archdeacon Farrar's impressions of the Passion Play at Ober-Ammergau. The book will be daintily got up, and will contain views of that small Bavarian village which is now attracting a weekly average of four thousand visitors from all parts of the globe.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN is publishing a volume of poems by a new writer, "Cyfaill," containing translations from Plutarch and Sappho, as well as original verse.

A NEW collection of Australian stories, edited by Mrs. Patchett Martin, entitled Under the Gum-tree, will be published by Messrs. Trischler & Co. about the end of June. Among the chief contributors are Mrs. Campbell Praed, "Tasma," Mrs. Lance, Mr. H. B. Marriott Watson, Mr. Robert Richardson, Dr. Mannington Caffyn, Mr. Edmund Rawson, and Mr. Hume Nisbet.

A VOLUME of Manx Folk-Stories, by Mrs. J. W. Russell, entitled Shadow-Land in Ellan Vannin, is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for early publication.

THE tenth volume of Prof. Buchheim's "Series of German Classics," consisting of an annotated edition of Schiller's Jungfrau von Orleans, will be published very shortly by the Clarendon Press. In an historical and critical introduction the editor contends that the strictures pronounced by certain critics on this brilliant tragedy are groundless.

MESSRS. DEAN & SON have nearly ready for publication Bismarck Intime, by a Fellow Student; and Scenes Through the Battle Smoke, by the Rev. Arthur Male, who served as an army chaplain in the Afghan and Egyptian campaigns, with illustrations by Mr. Sidney Paget, military artist to the Illustrated London News.

MESSRS. DEAN & SON also announce a work on Canary Birds, by Dr. Karl Eues, containing an account of the history of the canary, full details as to the various breeds, and chapters on pairing, colour, breeding, feeding, aviaries, and diseases.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. announce for publication in a few days The Lumley Wood Mystery, by Mrs. G. A. Lethbridge Banbury, with numerous illustrations by Mr. J. Bernard Partridge.

MESSRS. REMINGTON & Co. will this week issue a novel, by Mr. Hugh Downe, entitled Innocent Victims, which deals with the labour and strike questions in the metropolis, and their effects upon the workman's family.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHN & Co. will issue very shortly in their "Young Collector Series" a volume on Chess Problems: their Composition and Solution, by Mr. James Rayner, problem editor of the British Chess Magazine.

THE committee of the Alpine Club have decided to endeavour to bring out a new edition of Ball's Alpine Guide as the most fitting tribute to the memory of the first president of the club, and in order to retain for the work its place in the front rank of Alpine guide books. The first edition of the book, appealing as it did, especially at the time of its appearance, to a limited public only, was not a success from a financial point of view; and the committee have, after careful examination, come to the conclusion that it will be necessary to raise a fund amounting to £750 before the work of a second edition can be taken in hand. They therefore now appeal to the members of the Alpine Club, to the friends of Mr. Ball who desire to perpetuate his memory, and to all who take an interest in the Alps and in Alpine literature, for promises of subscriptions towards that fund. Such subscriptions will be payable when the aggregate sum promised amounts to £750; should that sum not be reached, the entire project would have to be abandoned. It is intended that subscribers of one guinea and upwards shall receive a copy of the entire work free. The fund and the superintendence of the work will be under the control of the committee for the time being of the Alpine Club. The editor of the Alpine Journal has consented to undertake the duties of editor-in-chief.

A NEW edition is about to be published by Messrs. Dean & Son of The Illustrated Book of Wonders, Events, and Discoveries, by John Timbs. Chapters are included on the submarine telegraph, by Mr. Peter Lund-Simmonds, and on the ragged school movement, revised by the secretary of the Ragged School Union, and extended to the present date.

ON Wednesday next, June 18, Messrs. Sotheby will sell the MSS. left by Wilkie Collins. These include not only the original drafts of most of Wilkie Collins's published works, but also the MS. of plays and Christmas stories in which he collaborated with Dickens, and some verses which Dickens wrote for these plays. The catalogue, which is exceptionally full, is illustrated with three facsimiles.

THE annual meeting of the National Indian Association will be held on Wednesday next, June 18, at 4.30 p.m., at the Westminster Palace Hotel, with Lord Reay in the chair. Lord Herschell, Sir Alfred Lyall, and Sir Charles A. Turner are among those who are expected to address the meeting.

THE eighth volume of the new edition of De Quincey's Collected Writings (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black) consists of Speculative and Theological Essays, brought together by the editor, Prof. Masson, from various quarters. All of them had previously appeared in the Collective Edition; but Prof. Masson's industry has not been able to discover in what magazine the paper "On War" first appeared. For frontispiece there is given a reproduction of Herschel's figure of the nebula in Orion, which gave occasion for one of De Quincey's famous passages of imaginative writing.

MR. A. PATCHETT MARTIN writes to us that his Life of Lord Sherbrooke will not be published at so early a date as has been stated elsewhere. He also corrects a slip in the ACADEMY of last week, according to which the prefixed memoir was represented as being "by" and not "of" Sir John Coope Sherbrooke. Sir John, who was a distinguished Indian and Peninsular veteran, died in 1830.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

WE hear that the Rev. A. H. Sayce has resigned, as from the end of the present year, the deputy professorship of comparative philology at Oxford, to which he was appointed in 1876, on Prof. Max Müller's retirement from the active duties of the chair.

THE name of Prof. W. W. Goodwin, of Harvard—author of Syntax of the Moods and Tenses of the Greek verb—has to be added to those given in the ACADEMY of last week upon whom the honorary degree of D.C.L. will be conferred at the Oxford Commemoration. We understand that it would have been included in the former list if it had then been certain that the professor could be present.

THE council of the senate at Cambridge have elected the Rev. Dr. Henry Barclay Swete to the regius professorship of divinity vacant by the resignation of Bishop Westcott. Dr. Swete was formerly a fellow of Caius, and at present holds the chair of pastoral theology in King's College, London. His chief work is a critical edition of the Septuagint for the Pitt Press, of which the first volume (Genesis to 2 Kings iv.) appeared in 1887.

THE Oxford Magazine states that the curators of the Bodleian have unanimously resolved to take in hand, and produce as rapidly as may be, a summary catalogue of the MSS. in the library.

THE following public lectures are announced at Oxford: On Friday, June 13, "Bulgaria, Historical and Literary: the Resurrection of a Nation," by Mr. W. B. Morfill, reader in Slavonic; on Saturday, June 14, "The Influence of British Rule on Law in India, as compared with the History of Law in the Provinces of the Roman Empire," by Mr. James Bryce, regius professor of civil law; and, on the same day and hour, "Personal and Literary Characteristics of the Emperor Baber," by Mr. Sidney J. Owen, reader in Indian history.

THE readership in Roman law at Oxford becomes vacant at the end of the present term.

THE General Board of Studies at Cambridge propose that the status of Mr. Adam Sedgwick, who has taught comparative morphology since Prof. Balfour's lamented death, should be raised from that of university lecturer to reader, though they are unable to recommend a larger salary than £100.

PROF. ADAMS—following an example which, so far as we know, is more honoured at Cambridge than at Oxford—has contributed £100 towards the purchase of a site for the Newall Telescope.

THE University of Edinburgh has conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws on Mr. H. M. Stanley—on June 10, the very day on which he was unable (by reason of other engagements in Scotland) to receive the same distinction at Cambridge.

THE annual gathering of students, past and present, of Queen's College, Harley Street, will be held on Saturday next, June 21, at 4 p.m., when an address will be given by Bishop Barry.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A DAUGHTER OF THE NILE.

SHE, she was laid away
From the living light of day,
In the early far-off ages, while yet the Sphinx was young;
And the quiet earth hath kept her
Since they who wailed and wept her Oried their cry of lamentation in the old Egyptian tongue.

She, she has rested well,
For yet a glance can tell
The latest hands that touched her were loving, longing hands;
Then let her calmly slumber,
Through years we shall not number,
At peace for endless aeons in the drifting desert sands.

M. P.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE June number of Folk-Lore (David Nutt) opens with an article by Mr. J. G. Frazer, on "Some Popular Superstitions of the Ancients," which should be read by all who may find themselves unable to study his two elaborate volumes entitled "The Golden Bough." He here collects, chiefly from the less-known classical authors, a number of superstitious practices of the old Greeks and Romans, for which he finds parallels among modern savages. A notable feature in the article is its convincing clearness. Prof. A. O. Haddon continues his "Legends from Torres Straits"; and Mr. Alfred Nutt contributes an elaborate report upon the progress of study in Celtic myth and Saga during the past eighteen months. Finally, the Index of Archaeological Papers is continued from the Archaeological Review.

THE June number of the Library (Elliot Stock) has two notable papers. Mr. E. Gordon Duff has brought together all that is known about "Frederick Egmond, an English Fifteenth-Century Stationer." The title is not very happily chosen; for Egmond was not an Englishman, and it appears that he had books printed for him at Paris (for Parrhisius read Parrhisius, hic) as late as 1521. Missals and Breviaries for English use were printed for him at Venice between 1493 and 1495; and these are chiefly preserved, often only in fragments, in the college libraries at Oxford and Cambridge. The other article is an obituary notice of William Blades, signed D., which points out his services in the foundation of scientific bibliography by the side of Henry Bradshaw. We may also mention a notice of the pamphlet upon printing at Avignon in 1444, which was reviewed in the ACADEMY of May 17.

THE HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE.

THE following are the speeches delivered by the Public Orator, Dr. Sandys, in presenting the several persons on whom honorary degrees were conferred in Congregation at Cambridge on June 10:

PROF. JOWETT.

"Primus omnium incedit hodie Collegii Balliolensis magister, Academiae Oxoniensis haud ita pridem procancellarius, vir Academiae pulcherrimae inter decora praecipua iamdudum numeratus. Litteras Graecas per dimidium fere vitae suae spatium professus, liberalitate amplissima et historiae et philosophiae antiquae thesaurus, etiam eis qui Graece nesciunt, nuper identidem reclusit. Thucydidis obscuritatem stilo imprimis lucido interpretatur, opus eius immortale non modo aetatis huius actis diurnis sed etiam populi Atheniensis lapidibus inscriptis aliquanto maius esse Britannia ostendit. Ipso Platone de caelo suo in vitam nostram cotidianam deducto, (ne alios commemorem) oratori certe maximo Britannico, quem nuper amissimus, litterarum tractus prius ignotos patefecit. Aristotelis denique Politica patrio in sermone non minus feliciter reddidit quam luculenter illustravit. Idem, velut alter Socrates, quid alii revera in animo gestent, quam sagaciter indicat, quam sollester elicit! Oollegio suo insigni quam fidelis; discipulis suis, qui totius Academiae totiens velut flos et robur existerunt, quot annos quam totius deditus! Tali in viro quis non tutoris et magistri imaginem antiquam nobis redditam statim agnoscat?"

"Di maiorum umbris tenuem et sine pondere terram spirantesque crocos et in urna perpetuum ver qui praeceptorem sancti voluere parentis esse loco."

CANON LIDDON.

"Isidis in ripa diutius moramur, Academiae templum libenter intramus, oratorem ibi magnum intuemur argumenti magni, argumenti divini conatibus, Academiae prope totius aures mentesque erectas tenentem. Thamesi flumine postea decessit, eundem urbis maximae maximo in templo coram immensa civium multitudine eloquentia solita contionantem agnoscimus. Hodie vero Cami prope marginem rursum eundem contemplati, ante omnia recordamur quali amicitia, Sancti Pauli canonicorum in ordine, cum collega suo Cantabrigiensis, postea episcopo Dunelmensi consecrato, coniunctus fuerit. Amicitiam illam testatur Patrum Apostolicorum ab episcopo illo editorum dedicatio, testatur oratio qua amicus superstes episcopi desideratissimi memoriam prosecutus est. Non tamen obliviscimur quanto studio collegae sui Oxoniensis, linguae Hebraicae quondam professoris, vitae conscribendae sese dedicaverit, quem ne episcopatus quidem honores iam tandem merito oblati opere ab incepto revocare potuerit. Interim Sancti Pauli in aede venerabili, in statione sibi divinitus commissa, moderatione quanta eloquentiam suam non partium studiis excitandis accommodavit sed religioni purae populo toti commendandae consecravit! Arcis divinae super muros velut speculator et custos positus, caeli praesagia quam acriter prospicit, quam fideliter denuntiat! Talium certe virorum exemplo vatis Hebraei verba antiqua denuo vera esse facta crediderim:

"Super muros tuos, Ierusalem, constitui custodes; tota die et tota nocte in perpetuum non tacebunt."

SIR ANDREW CLARK.

"Salutamus deinceps salutis ministrum, Aesculapii e filiis unum, quem idcirco praesertim Machaona nominaverim quod saeculi nostri oratorum cum Nestore ipso totiens consociatus est;—nisi forte, Romano potius exemplo delectatus, mavult Aesclepiadis illius disertissimi nomen mutuari, quo medico et amico utebatur Lucius Licinius Crassus, saeculi sui oratorum eloquentissimus. In re publica partium liberalium studiosus, in re privata liberalitate singulari insignis, non modo medicinae sed etiam philosophiae et religionis penetralia ingressus est. Etiam antiquos meministis quondam non de corporis tantum salute sed etiam de rebus fere omnibus quae vitam anxiam et sollicitam reddant ab ipso Aesculapio solitos esse oracula exposcere. Viri talis igitur, velut iuriconsulti Romani, domus est velut civitatis oraculum, unde cives eius, ut Apollo Pythius apud Ennium dicit, consilium expetunt, non salutis tantum sed etiam 'summarum rerum incerti,' quos incepti certos 'compotesque consilii dimittit.' Ergo virum, quem aut litterarum aut scientiae aut medicinae doctorem nominare potuissimus, iuris doctorem non immerito creamus."

MR. JONATHAN HUTCHINSON.

"Etiam alter Aesculapii filiorum, Podalirius (nisi fallor), hodie nobis sese praesentem obtulit, quem a fratre suo idcirco distinguere neque possumus neque volumus, primum quod professoris in munere quondam erat collega eius coniunctissimus, deinde quod forte quadam domum vicinam atque adeo proximam incolit, denique quod dignitate non minore collegio alteri praesidet, ubi Britanniae chirurgi per tot annos quasi penates suos posuerunt. Medicinae studiois nota sunt scripta eius per seriem longam edita, in quibus pars ea medicinae quae manu curat illustratur, et litterarum monumentis mandatur. Neque silentio praeterire possumus quaecumque de pathologia praesertim, quam quondam profitebatur, accuratissime scripsit; scilicet mortem ipsam, quae aliis tacet, huic velut rerum naturae vati et interpreti constat esse eloquentem. Neque prorsus intacta relinquimus quicquid de morborum contagione disputavit. Medicorum nemo fortasse Horatii verba in re medica saltem eruditius illustravit:—

"delicta maiorum immeritus lues."

MR. GEORGE RICHMOND.

"Nullum artis genus nunc certe inter nosmet ipsos in honore habetur magis quam id quod virorum insignium imagines pictas posteritati tradit. Consentaneum igitur eum potissimum laurea nostra hodie coronari qui in ea praesertim provincia velut omnium princeps diu regnabat. Sex et quinquaginta anni, magnum vitae humanae spatium, tempore ex eo praeterierunt, quo virum de Afris in libertatem asserendis bene meritum coloribus vividis primum expressit; sex autem et triginta, ex quo Novae Zeelandiae episcopi primi imaginem iterum depinxit. Longum est aliorum imagines prope innumerabiles percurrere; tria quattuorve milia fuisse perhibentur. Id tantum dico, plurimos per annos inter aequales eius vix quemquam paulo insigniorem existisse, cuius vultus imitando non reddiderit. Gratulamur patri, quod in filio suo, saeculi huius tot formarum sive pulchrarum sive alter insignium pictore eximio, fabularum antiquarum interprete elegantissimo, et nominis et artis suae revera dignum nactus est heredem; viroque tam venerabili, dum vita inter suavem dierum praeteritorum recordationem leniter vesperscit, omnia fausta et tranquilla ex animo optamus. Dixit olim medicinae pater vitam esse brevem, artem vero longam; huic autem artificii laetatur longam concessam esse vitam, artemque eius confidenter auguramur diu fore superstitem."

DR. JOHN EVANS.

"Archaeologiae studia nonnulli certe arida mentis nutrimenta arbitrantur. Hic autem etiam difficili in materia ingenii sui non minus facili quam felici alimentum invenit, qui etiam silices duros diu habuit in deliciis, ex ipsoque saxo doctrinae scintillam saepe numero excoxit,

"suscepitque ignem foliis atque arida circum nutrimenta dedit, rapuitque in fomite flammam."

Quicquid lapidis, quicquid aeris, quicquid auri et argenti Britannia antiqua usurpabat, assidue conquisivit; conquistum erudite illustravit. Britanniae nummorum investigator acerrimus, propterea etiam ultra fretum Britannicum numismate aureo honoris causa donatus est. Neque antiquis tantum thesauris operam dedisse videtur, sed etiam Societatis Regiae praefectus aerario, tot scientiis auxilium quotannis certatim flagitantibus, pecuniae publicae dispensator providus, aequus, benignus exstitit. Quondam Geologicae, iamdudum Numismatologiae Societati praepositus, nunc etiam Antiquitatis peritorum Societati maximae summa cum dignitate praesidet. Quot scientiarum trans provincias aquilas suas felices tulit! Quid si non (velut alter ille quem hodie expectabamus)—quid, inquam, si non 'nomen ab Africa lucratus rediit,' tamen laudes eius Musae nullae clarius indicant, quam Calabrae Pierides, neque

"si chartae taceant quod bene feceris mercedem tuleris."

Audite igitur ipsum Ennium viri huiusce praeconia praesagientem:—

"doctus, fidelis,
suavis homo, facundus, suo contentus, beatus, scitus, secunda loquens in tempore...
multa tenens antiqua."

PROF. SYLVESTER.

"Plusquam tres et quinquaginta anni sunt elapsi ex quo Academiae nostrae inter silvas adulescens quidam errabat, populi sacri antiquissima stipe oriundus, cuius maiores ultimi primum Chaldaeorum in campis, deinde Palaestinae in collibus, caeli nocturni stellas innumerabiles, proles futurae velut imaginem referentes, non sine reverentia quadam suspiciebant. Ipse numerorum peritis praeclearus, primum inter Londinenses Academiae nostrae studia praecipua ingenii sui lumine illustrabat. Postea trans aequor Atlanticum plusquam semel honorifice vocatus, fratribus nostris transmarinis doctrinae mathematicae faciem praeferebat. Nuper professoris insignis in locum electus, et Britanniae non sine laude redditus, in Academia Oxoniensi scientiae flammam indies clariorem excitat. Ubi cumque incedit, exemplo suo nova studia semper accendit. Sive numerorum deuplar explicat, sive geometriae recentioris terminos extendit, sive regni sui velut in puro caelo regiones prius inexploratas pererrat, scientiae suae inter principes ubique conspicitur. Nonnulla quae Newtonus noster, quae Fresnelius, Iacobius, Sturmianus, alii, imperfecta reliquerunt, Sylvester noster aut elegantius explicavit, aut argumentis veris comprobavit. Quam parvis ab initis argumenta quam magna evoluit; quotiens res prius abditas exprimere conatus, sermonem nostrum ditavit, et nova rerum nomina audacter protulit! Arte quali numerorum leges non modo poetis antiquis interpretandis sed etiam carminibus novis pangendis accommodat! Neque surdis canit, sed 'respondent omnia silvae,' si quando, inter rerum graviorum curas, aevi prioris pastores aemulatus,

"Sylvestrem tenui musam meditatur avena."

MR. ALEXANDER J. ELLIS.

"Claudit seriem viri eiusdem aequalis, qui doctrinae rudimentis primum Salopiae, deinde Etonae, denique Trinitatis in collegio maximo imbutus, eadem in Academia idem e studiis lauream suam primam reportavit. Sed ne his quidem finibus contentus, etiam musices mysteria percrutatus est, et philologiae provinciam satis amplam sibi vindicavit. Quanta perseverantia etiam contra consuetudinem, ut Quintilliani verbis utar, 'sic scribendum quidque indicat, quomodo sonat!' Quanta subtilitate de linguae Graecae et Latinae vocalibus disputat; quam minuta curiositate etiam patrii sermonis sonum unumquemque explorat! A poetis nostris antiquioribus exorsus, non modo saeculorum priorum voces temporis lapsu obscuratas oculis et auribus nostris denuo reddidit, sed etiam nostro a saeculo in dialectis variis usurpata litterarum appellationem, signis accuratis notatam, posteritati serae cognoscendam tradidit. Venient anni (licet confidenter vaticinari) quibus dialectorum nostrarum tot varietates, non minus quam Arcadum et Cypriorum linguae antiquae, hominum e cognitione prorsus obsolescent; tum profecto viri huiusce scriptis cura infinita elaboratis indies auctus accedet honos.

"Mortalia facta peribunt, nedum sermonum stet honos et gratia vivax."

Interim a nobis certe sermonis Britannici conservator animi grati testimonium, honoremque diu debitum, diu duraturum, accipiet."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAISSAC, Jules. Les grand jours de la sorcellerie. Paris: Klincksieck. 10 fr.
BULLE, O. Dante's Beatrice im Leben u. in der Dichtung. Berlin: Hütig. 2 M. 50 Pf.
CHABOT, A. Promenade en Hollande de Rouen au Helder. Paris: Quantin. 3 fr. 50 c.
DONAT, l'ars minor de: traduction française, p.p. Léon Dorez. Paris: Picard. 7 fr.
GERSPACH, Les tapisseries coptes. Paris: Quantin. 8 fr.
HAUBAU, B. Des poèmes latins attribués à Saint Bernard. Paris: Klincksieck. 3 fr. 50 c.
LEMOIRE, Max. Lettres du Brésil. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
SCHYNS, Père. A travers l'Afrique avec Stanley et Emin-Pacha. Publié par Ch. Heepers. Paris: Hinrichsen. 8 fr. 50 c.
VITROLLES, Amélie de, sa vie et sa correspondance. Paris: Didier. 15 fr.
VOGEL, E. Marco da Gagliano. Zur Geschichte des Florentiner Musiklebens von 1670 bis 1680. Leipzig: Breitkopf & Härtel. 3 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- AZEBERT, F. Les sièges célèbres. Paris: Delagrave. 5 fr.
CORRESPONDANCE diplomatique du Comte Pozzo di Borgo et du Comte de Neesselrode, 1814-1818. T. 1. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 7 fr. 50 c.
DUBOUT, Axel. La fin du parlement de Toulouse. Toulouse: Armaing. 5 fr.
FRÜHLICH, F. Das Kriegswesen Olsars. 2 u. 2. Tl. Zürich: Schulthess. 1 M. 40 Pf.
GABRI, G. Der Begriff der Vis maior im römischen u. Reichsrecht. Berlin: Siemenroth. 4 M.
HAYCK, A. Kirchengeschichte Deutschlands. 2. Tl. 2. Hälfte. Aufösung der Reichskirche. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 6 M.
ISMENHOF, J. Das nassauische Münswesen. Wiesbaden: Lützenkirchen. 10 M.
JUBAINVILLE, H. d'Arbois de. Recherches sur l'origine de la propriété foncière et des noms de lieux habités en France (périodes celtique et romaine). Paris: Thorin. 16 fr.
PLANDER, M., monachi, epistolae, ed. M. Treu. Breslau: Koebner. 6 M.
SCHUBERT, R. Herodots Darstellung der Cyrrassage. Breslau: Koebner. 2 M. 40 Pf.
THOMAS, le général. Les grands cavaliers du premier empire. 1^{re} Série. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 7 fr. 50 c.
URKUNDBUCH. Dortmund. Bearb. v. K. Rübel u. O. Rose. II. Bd. 1. Hälfte. 1873-1894. Dortmund: Köppen. 10 M.
URKUNDBUCH. IV. est- u. curländisches. 2. Bd. 1496-1448. Riga: Deubner. 30 M.
WELSHINGERS, H. Le roman de Dumouriez. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
ZIMMER, Jules. Les empereurs du XIV^e siècle: Habsbourg et Luxembourg. Paris: Didier. 7 fr. 50 c.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERTHELOT, La révolution chimique: Lavoisier. Paris: Alcan. 6 fr.
BOIRAC, E. La dissertation philosophique. Paris: Alcan. 6 fr. 50 c.
BLANCHHORN, M. Beiträge zur Geologie Syriens: Die Entwicklung d. Kreideystems in Mittel- u. Nord-Syrien. Berlin: Friedländer. 80 M.
BUSE, F. Beobachtungen ab. die atmosphärische Polarisation. Arnberg: Ritter. 1 M. 50 Pf.
FERTICH, G. Die elektrischen Fische. Nach neuen Untersuchgn. anatomisch-zoologisch bearbeit. 2. Abth. Die Torpedineen. Leipzig: Veit. 80 M.
HORNES, B. u. M. AUNGER. Die Gastropoden der Meeres-Ablagerungen der 1. u. 2. miocänen Mediterran-Stufe in der österreichisch-ungarischen Monarchie. 6. Lfg. Wien: Holder. 20 M.
JURICH, K. W. Die Verunreinigung der Gewässer. Berlin: Gaertner. 10 M.
SCHULTZ, E. Fauna piscium Germaniae. Potsdam: Döring. 1 M. 50 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ARRAS, Gantier d', Œuvres de, p.p. E. Loeseth. T. 1. Eracle. Paris: Bonillon. 9 fr.
HÖFFER, F. u. M. KRONFELD. Die Volksnamen der niederösterreichischen Pflanzen. Wien: Seidel. 4 M.
KLEINPAUL, R. Die Rätsel der Sprache. Grundlinien der Wortdeutung. Leipzig: Friedrich. 10 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS.

Halle (Saale): June 6, 1890.

I beg to state that I entirely agree with the correspondent who signs himself "One of the English Delegates" on p. 373 of the ACADEMY of May 31. His sentiments on the subject are mine; and in case his testimony should seem incomplete without a name, you may take mine.

A. MÜLLER.

[We have received a further letter from the English Delegate, who has no reason to conceal the fact that he is Mr. E. Delmar Morgan; and also a letter on the other side from M. Jules Oppert. But, in view of the steps that have already been taken to summon a Congress at London in 1891, it seems most undesirable to continue a controversy with regard to what is past and had better be forgotten.—ED. ACADEMY.]

THE DEDICATION OF SHAKSPEARE'S SONNETS.

London: June 2, 1890.

In the new volume of the German Shakespeare Society's Jahrbuch is a review by Mrs. Charlotte Stopes of my recently published Commentary on the Sonnets. With regard to Mrs. Mary Fitton, Mrs. Stopes repeats to a considerable extent what she said in a recent communication to the ACADEMY; and I do not think it necessary to add anything to my reply in the ACADEMY for March 8.

In this learned lady's article in the Jahrbuch there are several other matters of interest and (so I venture to think) some errors to which, if considerations of space allowed, I might advert. I restrict myself, however, to one matter to which Mrs. Stopes evidently attaches great importance; and it has been, I believe, adverted to before—the apparent incongruity between the dedication of the Sonnets, supposing it addressed by Thomas Thorpe (T. T.) to William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, and the tone and manner which Thorpe adopted in dedicating a book to the same nobleman in 1616. It is argued, therefore, that "Mr. W. H." cannot possibly have been the Earl of Pembroke. Some facts, however, in relation to some of Thorpe's dedications will, as it seems to me, go far to show that the argument drawn from this seeming incongruity and difference is without validity. And it should be remembered, as was pointed out by Dr. Furnivall, that the dedication of the Sonnets is of course affected by the concealment intended in the designation "Mr. W. H.," while there is no similar disguise in the dedication of 1616. But the facts I am about to adduce will render it scarcely necessary to take this consideration into account.

For convenience of reference, it may be desirable to give the dedications to which I have just alluded. First, that of the Sonnets:—

"To the Onlie Begetter of these Insuing Sonnets
Mr. W. H.
All Happinesse and that Eternitie Promised by Our Ever-living Poet
Wisheth the Well-wishing Adventurer in Setting Forth.
T. T."

The dedication of 1616 is prefixed to a volume containing translations of "Epictetus Manuall, Cebes' Table, Theophrastus' Characters," all executed by John Healey:

"To the Right Honourable William, Earle of Pembroke, Lord Chamberlain to his Maestie, one of his most Honourable Priue Counsell, and Knight of the most noble Order of the Garter, &c.

Right Honourable

It may worthily seeme strange unto your Lordship, out of what frenzy one of my meanenesse hath presumed to commit this Sacriledge, in the straightnesse of your Lordship's leisure, to present a peeces for matter and model so vnworthy, and in this scribbling age, wherein great persons are so peestered dayly with Dedications. All I can alledge in extenuation of so many incongruities, is the bequest of a deceased Man, who (in his life time) hauing offered some translations of his vnto your Lordship, euer wisht if these ensuing were published they might onely bee addressed vnto your Lordship, as the last Testimony of his dutifull affection (to vse his own termes The True and reall vpholder of learned endeauours).

This therefore being left vnto me, as a Legacie unto your Lordship: pardon my presumption, great Lord, from so meane a man, to so great a person: I could not without some implety present it to any other, such a sad priuiledge haue the bequests of the dead, and so obligatory they are, more than the requests of the liuing: In the hope of this honourable pardon and acceptance I will euer rest

Your Lordship's humble deuoted

T. Th."

Now, when Thorpe speaks of the "strangeness," the "frenzy," the "sacrilege," displayed in his addressing Lord Pembroke, it may well seem an unavoidable inference that he had never before addressed a dedication to that nobleman. And, when he speaks of the wish of the "deceased man" that, "if these ensuing were published," they might be dedicated to Pembroke, it seems an equally clear inference that he was offering an entirely new and previously unpublished book. How far such conclusions would be from the truth may be easily shown. There had been issued, in fact, an edition of the same book (excepting only the Theophrastus) in 1610. Nor is this all. This edition had been published by Thorpe; and the dedication, signed by him, "Th. Th.," was addressed to John Florio, asking, apparently, from the allusions to Maecenas and Augustus, that Florio would use his influence with King James on behalf of Healey, the translator of the book, "out of the Greeke originall." Then, as to Thorpe's previously addressing Pembroke, how many times this had occurred we cannot tell, but certainly he had dedicated to Pembroke in 1610 another translation of Healey's, "St. Augustine, of the Citie of God." The dedication to this book is very curious, and the designation of Pembroke as "Patron of Muses and Good Mindes" is entirely in accordance with his having been the friend and patron of Shakspeare. So, too, the expression "graceful Lord" should be viewed in relation to the eulogies of personal beauty in the Sonnets; for, as "gracious" precedes, "graceful" cannot be synonymous. Indeed, the whole dedication, as written the next year, is much more appropriate for comparison with the dedication to the Sonnets than the dedication of 1616 already quoted:

"To the Honorablest Patron of Muses and Good Mindes, Lord William, Earle of Pembroke, Knight of the Honorable Order, &c.

"Right gracious and gracefull Lord, your late imaginary, but now actual Traueller, then to most-conceited Viraginia, now to almost-concealed Virginia; then a light, but not lewde, now a sage and allowed translator; then of a scarce knowne nouice, now a famous Father; then of a deuised country scarce on earth, now of a desired Citie sure in heauen; then of Utopia, now of Eutopia; not as by testament, but as a testimonie of gratitude, obseruance, and hearts-honour to your Honor, bequeathed at hence-parting (thereby scarce perfecting) this his translation at the imprinting to your lordships protecting. He, that against detraction beyond expectation, then found your sweete patronage in a matter of small moment, without distrust or disturbance in this worke of more worth, more weight, as he approved his more abilitie, so would not but expect your Honour's more acceptance."

The dedication concludes:

"Wherefore his legacie laide at your Honour's feete, is rather here delivered to your Honour's humbly thrise-kissed hands by his poore delegate. —Your lordships true-deuoted,

Th. Th."

From this mention of a "legacy" it may seem that Healey was already dead, but this can scarcely have been the case. Probably he had gone for a time to the continent; or the "hence-parting" may be a fiction. Healey's previous work was "The Discovery of a New World; or, a Description of the South Indies, Hetherto Vnknowne. By an English Mercury," of which there is a copy in the Grenville Library, British Museum (no date.) The dedication is addressed "To the True Mirror of Truest Honour, William Earle of Pembroke." The conclusion is:

"Such am I: consecrated to your Lordships service: and vnder the protection of this mine owne seale, aduenture to present you with A discouerie and no discouerie, of a world and no world, both knowne and vnkowne, by a trauelier that neuer trauelled. Written first in Latine, and no Latine, and now translated, and yet not translated, by the same man, yet not the same man that first of all pend it.

"Your Honours most zealously deuoted:

"I. H."

Here there is mystification enough, but the answer to the riddle is not very difficult to find. The meaning probably is that Healey's book was based on Joseph (afterwards Bishop) Hall's Mundus alter et idem, without being a strict and exact translation. What is said in Thorpe's Dedication of 1610 concerning "Viraginia" refers, no doubt, more particularly, to the second part of the book, "The description of Shee-lande, or Womandecoia," called "Viraginia" by Hall. The dedication of this book or translation was clearly Healey's; but, from the words of Thorpe in 1616, it would seem that he credits Healey with writing the dedication of Augustine which he himself had signed "Th. Th."

From the quotations I have made it may be seen how little weight is to be allowed to incongruities in Thorpe's dedications. Perhaps we are to infer, though this is by no means certain, that the matter of Thorpe's dedication of the "Citie of God" had been suggested to him by Healey before leaving. This would partially account for what he says, in the dedication of 1616, about Healey's having "offered some translations of his" to Pembroke, though why Healey should prefer that Thorpe should sign the dedication may seem somewhat strange to us. And in relation to the Sonnets, it is by no means impossible, or even improbable, that the matter and form of the dedication was in part suggested by Shakspeare, though signed with the initials of Thorpe.

Mrs. Stopes, I should add, though denying that Herbert was the "W. H." of the dedication, yet allows that "the view that the Sonnets were addressed to Herbert seems clearly enough supported to be believed." But if the latter position is true, the former is not likely to be long maintained.

THOMAS TYLER.

THE SPELLING OF "WAS," ETC., IN THE ALLITERATIVE POEMS.

Cambridge: June 2, 1890.

In the poem of "The Pearl," ed. Morris, l. 15, the word "was" is printed "watz"; and so in other places. In l. 65 it is spelt "wace," and rimes with "face." In the latter case the symbol denotes voiceless s, as Mr. Sweet duly notes.

I write this in the hope that someone will put me right if I am wrong. If I am right, then one more difficulty is cleared away. If I have been anticipated, I should be glad of the reference. To me it is nothing new; I said as much, orally, many years ago.

My theory is that, in the word "watz," there are two misprints, and that it should be printed "wacz." So, in l. 17, the second word should be printed "docz"; cf. Mod. E. does. It is well known that c and t are often written alike. Many a time have I seen the word "certes" written with no difference between the symbols for c and t. Again, the character z, when final, often means s; in fact, it occurs in the seventh line of "The Pearl," where I should print the last word but one as "sydex"; it is, in fact, the Mod. E. sides. I explain c as a voiceless s, and z as a voiced one. The compound cz possibly denotes that, at this period and in the West Midland dialect, the sound was shifting (in "was," "does," &c.) from the voiceless to the voiced sound; and so, to make sure, the scribe gives us a touch of both. This gives some sense, at least, to the symbol. The spelling with t seems to me ridiculous, as no such sound as t was ever heard in the word "was" at any period of its history.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE "IMITATIO CHRISTI."

London: June 4, 1890.

The Codex Paulanus, which came from Weblingen, and is now in the monastery of St. Paul in Carinthia, has been pointed to as proving the existence of the Imitatio Christi before the time of Thomas a Kempis, as it bears the dates of 1384 and 1385. If these dates were genuine, it would, of course, do away with the claim of Thomas to be the author of this famous work; and Wolfgruber has made the most of this in his book on G. Gersen, though the facsimile given by him disproves its genuineness.

In order to make this clear, Dr. Cruise has visited the monastery of St. Paul and taken photographs of six pages of the MS., which he has now published with a "Note" in the Précis Historiques for May (Brussels). Any unprejudiced person can see at once from the position of the dates and from the form of the letters that they are a later addition, and consequently of no value in the controversy, especially as the best palaeographers agree that the MS. belongs to the end of the fifteenth century, as do many other MSS. which claim a similar antiquity.

PHILO-KEMPENSIS.

THE MASTS AND YARDS OF A SHIP AND THE SIGN OF THE CROSS.

Yale University: May 29, 1890.

The reviewer of Blair's Bellesheim's History of the Catholic Church of Scotland (ACADEMY, May 17) is inclined to ridicule the author for one of his observations. He says:

"Students of early Christian literature are familiar with the piety which saw the sign of the Cross in a thousand familiar objects; but Dr. Bellesheim finds a proof of similar devotion on the part of the monks of Iona in the fact that 'even the masts and yards of their ships were arranged in cruciform fashion.' . . . But weaknesses like this on the part of Dr. Bellesheim, we are bound to say, are exceptional."

This particular weakness, if it be one, is also a weakness on the part of Dr. Reeves, and apparently also of Adamnan. On pp. cxiv.-cxv. of Reeves's Adamnan (edition of 1874), the author remarks:

"The sign of the cross was considered effectual to banish demons, to restrain a river-monster, to prostrate a wild beast, to unlock a door, to endow a pebble with healing virtues. . . . Even at sea, the cruciform relation of the masts and yards was regarded as conducive to a favourable voyage."

Dr. Reeves refers to Bk. 2, chap. xlvii., where the following passage occurs:

"Jussu tum nautae antennis, crucis instar, et vela protensis sublevant rudentibus, prosperisque et lenibus flabris eadem die nostram appetentes insulam, sine ulla laboratione, . . . devehimur."

ALBERT S. COOK.

THE WORD "HANSELYN" IN CHAUCER.

London: June 10, 1890.

Neither of your correspondents, it would seem, has observed that there was a baronial family in England named Hanselin, large land-owners in Notts and Derbyshire. Ralph Hanselin was a well-known man in the middle of the twelfth century. To those acquainted with the Norman fondness for sobriquets, it will occur that this form "Hanselin" should be compared with "Court-mantel," a nickname of Henry I. This would carry back the history of the word in England, and would favour Prof. Skeat's French derivation. In Domesday, the above name appears as "Alselin."

J. H. ROUND.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 15, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "The Cardinal Virtues," by Mrs. Sophie Bryant.
MONDAY, June 16, 2.30 p.m. Geographical: Anniversary Meeting.
8 p.m. Aristotelian: Annual Meeting.
TUESDAY, June 17, 8.30 p.m. British Museum: "The Manners and Customs of the Babylonians," III., by Mr. G. Bérthelin.
7.30 p.m. Statistical: "An Examination of the Coal and Iron Production of the Principal Countries of the World, with reference to the English Coal Question," by Mr. G. G. Ohlsholm.
8.30 p.m. Zoological: "Some Cases of Repetition of Parts in Animals," by Mr. W. Bateson; "The Diurnal Lepidoptera collected by Mr. W. Bonny, of the Emin Relief Expedition, on the River Aruwimi, Central Africa," by Mr. Henley Grose-Smith; "The Hemiptera collected by Mr. Bonny," by Mr. W. L. Distant; "The Coleoptera collected by Mr. W. Bonny," by Mr. H. W. Bates; "Descriptions of new Species of Lepidoptera Heterocera from Central and South America," by Mr. Herbert Druce.
WEDNESDAY, June 18, 4.30 p.m. National Indian Association: Annual Meeting.
8 p.m. Geological: "The Borrowdale Plumbago, its Mode of Occurrence and Probable Origin," by Mr. J. Postlethwaite; "The Valley-Gravels about Reading, with special reference to the Palaeolithic Implements found there," by Mr. O. A. Shrubsole.
8 p.m. Microscopical: "The Foraminifera of the Red Chalk of Norfolk, Lincolnshire, and Yorkshire," by Messrs. H. W. Burrows, C. D. Sherborn, and the Rev. G. Bailey.
THURSDAY, June 19, 8 p.m. Linnean: "Observations on the Protection of Buds in the Tropics," by Mr. M. Cressie Potter; "The Distribution of the South-American Bellbird belonging to the Genus Chamaeophanes," by Mr. J. E. Harting; "The Vertical Distribution of Plants in the Caucasus," by Dr. Gustav Radde; "Notes on Forficulidae, with Descriptions of New Genera and Species in the British Museum," by Mr. W. F. Kirby.
8 p.m. Chemical: "Invertase: a Contribution to the History of an Unorganised Ferment," by Messrs. O. O. Sullivan and F. W. Tompason; "The Action of Carbonic Oxide on Nickel," by Mr. Mond and Drs. Langer and Quincke; "The Interaction of Iodine, Water, and Potassium Chlorate," by Mr. H. Bassett; "The Milk of the Gamoose," by Messrs. A. Pappal and H. D. Richmond.
8 p.m. Historical: "The Expulsion of the Jews in 1290," by Mr. G. H. Leonard.
FRIDAY, June 20, 5 p.m. Physical: "The Stretching of Liquids," by Prof. A. M. Worthington; "The Measurement of Electro-magnetic Radiation," by Messrs. O. V. Boys, A. E. Briscoe, and W. Watson; "Notes on Secondary Batteries," by Dr. Gladstone and Mr. W. Hibbert.

SCIENCE:

The Seat of Authority in Religion. By James Martineau. (Longmans.)

THE first part of this volume, occupying about a fifth of the whole work, contains a restatement of the author's religious and ethical opinions. The remainder is devoted to hostile criticism of the authority claimed by Roman Catholics for their Church, and by orthodox Protestants for the New Testament. Of the former portion little need be said. It merely reproduces the substance of some papers contributed by Dr. Martineau to an American periodical more than fifteen years ago, and contains nothing that he has not since set forth with greater fulness and force in his Types of Ethical Theory and his Study of Religion. It seems to me that both in morals and metaphysics his views are not only erroneous but antiquated, and quite out of touch with the thought of the present day. But the eloquent pages in which they are repeated may secure a more respectful hearing for what comes after them. Even a protest against external authority may carry some authority with it, if by that word we understand personal influence as affecting belief. Even very superior minds are susceptible of such influence; and the most Euclidian reasoning gains in weight by producing an impression that the author knows all about his subject and is ready to prove whatever he says. But, above all, an exorbitant value is attached to what are thought "concessions"; and just as Dr. Martineau's known liberality in theology must have considerably fortified his theistic arguments in popular estimation, so now, by a just compensation, his daring Biblical criticism will at least escape the imputation of being prompted by hostility to religion.

Biblical criticism, in fact, constitutes the staple of Dr. Martineau's attack on the principle of external authority in religion. His polemic against ecclesiastical infallibility, although, in my opinion, adequate to the purpose, is brief, and contains no argument with which persons interested in such questions have not been made sufficiently familiar during the last twenty-one years. But as young people are growing up who know nothing of the controversies that raged round the Vatican Council—I fear there are well-dressed youths and maidens among us who never heard of the Franco-German war—and who read none but new books, the old arguments must be repeated in new form; and nowhere have they been so luminously or powerfully stated as in this chapter on "The Catholics and the Church." There is one page in particular for some passages of which I must make room as a good example of Dr. Martineau's wonderful style:

"No one can desire to deny the claim of SANCTITY for the Catholic Church, if he have studied its influence through dark and troubled ages, and on a long train of devout and devoted minds. That Church has proved its capacity to defy every injustice except its own, to pity every suffering needless to itself, to banish every darkness deeper than the cloister-shade. It has worked out an ideal of character—and approached it in many high examples—truly original as compared with the standard of pagan times, and marked, without sacrifice of force, by a depth and sweetness and patience of self-surrender never known before. But these are Catholic phenomena only because they are Christian. They have re-appeared in all the great sections of divided Christendom; they are a growth from the new piety and tender humanity which have been the response of the heart, wherever the eye of Christ has fixed its look. Who dares to claim these as marking an ecclesiastical monopoly of supernatural grace? . . . If the word [sanctity] denote self-dedication to a perfect moral will, this interior state of mind will manifest itself in an habitual elevation of aim, purity of life, disinterestedness of work, quickness of compassion, and balanced loyalty to truth and love, legible to every eye familiar with the language of character. When I pass through Church history in search of these, I doubtless find them, but in such sparse and partial gleams from a wilderness of passion and of wrong, that secular history itself, though less inspiring in its supreme heights, is less dreary in its ordinary levels, and less dreadful in its darker depths" (pp. 152-53).

One often hears it stated that there is no logical alternative between the Roman creed and the negation of all theology, or at least of revelation. In a recently published and very interesting volume called The Religious Systems of the World, I find two lecturers so opposed as Mr. Edward Clodd and Mr. Costelloe joining hands on this ground. Each, of course, hopes to win over the orthodox Protestants to his side. But to me, at least, the alleged alternative seems illusory; and I would earnestly warn my rationalistic friends, as Vernon Lee has already warned them, not to dissociate themselves from the Protestant cause. Every conversion to Rome acts like an aerolite, increasing not only the bulk but heat of the receiving body, a heat which if such conversions go on long enough will burn up them and their rationalism together; while, with the triumph of Catholicism, the qualities which they now admire in their Catholic acquaintances will have disappeared, being in fact due to the infiltration of Protestant ideas.

However this may be, the second part of Dr. Martineau's argument detailing the results of New Testament criticism, while primarily directed against the pretension of orthodox Protestantism to set up the Bible as an authoritative standard of religious belief, is equally though less directly fatal to the Church's claims. These could not survive the proof of a single flaw in their alleged scriptural basis, much less can they be upheld in presence of the demonstration that Gospels and Epistles are penetrated with fiction and fallacy from beginning to end. The sweeping negations of Dr. Martineau seem already to have deeply distressed his admirers in the Spectator; and they will doubtless come as an unpleasant surprise to many an English theologian whose misgivings had been lulled to rest by the repeated and unblushing assurance that in Germany itself reaction was triumphant, that the methods and conclusions of the Tübingen school had been flung to the winds, that the early date of the Synoptics, of Acts, even of the Fourth Gospel, of all or nearly all the Pauline Epistles was generally admitted. He will find in these pages position after position of the Tübingen critics still maintained with the most irritating unconsciousness that it has been shouted down by the clamour of an ignorant or interested mob. Nor can he be comforted by the ungenerous taunt that Dr. Martineau still clings in extreme old age to the theories of middle life. This veteran, whose freshness and vigour would more easily be envied than emulated by many a tyro, has been careful to keep himself abreast of contemporary research; and the study of such authors as Scholten, Hatch, Pfeiderer, Holtzmann, Harnack, and Weizsäcker, to whom he freely acknowledges his obligations in the preface, has clearly not influenced him in a reactionary sense. Of course, it is not implied that the scholars just enumerated are agreed in all their conclusions, or go equally far in impugning the first-hand authority of the New Testament history, or that any one of them would assent to the extreme negations of Dr. Martineau himself. So consummate a rhetorician may not always have avoided the temptation of a little overstating his case. But for the purpose of his inquiry, it really does not matter whether "Mark" is or is not the "Ur-Evangelium," whether Acts and the Fourth Gospel were composed towards the beginning or towards the middle of the second century, how much of the Apocalypse was borrowed from a purely Jewish source. Make the sand hill a little higher or a little lower, it is equally incapable of supporting any solid edifice of belief. Where scholars of the utmost learning, patience, and honesty are not agreed, the pious but unlearned individual can be sure of only one thing, namely, that it would be a revolting injustice to make his eternal or temporal salvation depend on their agreement.

It is worth noting that Dr. Martineau occupies a position even more adverse to the old school of Unitarians than to the orthodox churches. Doctrines which they rejected are now admitted to be perfectly scriptural. Christ's divinity is proclaimed by the Fourth Evangelist; His pre-existence, His heavenly descent, and the vicarious satisfaction made by Him for man's sin are taught in the uncontested Epistles of St. Paul. On the other hand, His Messiahship and His future commission to judge the world—points still upheld by the old Unitarianism as integral to Christian faith—are, in Dr. Martineau's opinion, unbecoming pretensions that were, or would have been, repudiated by the historical Jesus. Whether he still holds to his faith of fifty years ago in the moral perfection of Jesus as constituting in itself a revelation of God to man is not clear; but it seems to me that, amid the general discrediting of evangelical testimony, such a claim could only be upheld on rather arbitrary and subjective grounds.

There is a striking analogy between Dr. Martineau's theory of religious evidence and that expounded one evening by Dr. Chalmers to the young Thomas Carlyle. Christianity is written in us with sympathetic ink; the Bible awakens it. Only the two theologians would have differed widely in their interpretations of the writing exhibited to view, and as to whether more was displayed or disfigured by the source of illumination; for what to the one would be a genial warmth, to the other would be a scorching and consuming fire.

"Christianity as defined or understood in all the Churches which formulate it has been mainly evolved from what is transient and perishable in its sources; from what is unhistorical in its traditions, mythological in its preconceptions, and misapprehended in the oracles of its prophets. From the fable of Eden to the imagination of the last trumpet, the whole story of the Divine order of the world is dislocated and deformed. The blight of birth-sin with its involuntary perdition; the scheme of expiatory redemption with its vicarious salvation; the incarnation with its low postulates of the relation between God and man, and its unworkable doctrine of two natures in one person; the official transmission of grace through material elements in the keeping of a consecrated corporation; the second coming of Christ to summon the dead and part the sheep from the goats at the general judgment—all are the growth of a mythical literature, or Messianic dreams, or Pharisaic theology, or sacramental superstition, or popular apotheosis. And so nearly do these vain imaginations pre-occupy the creeds that not a moral or spiritual element finds entrance there except 'the forgiveness of sins.' To consecrate and diffuse, under the name of 'Christianity,' a theory of the world's economy thus made up of illusions from obsolete stages of civilisation, immense resources, material and moral, are expended, with effect no less deplorable in the province of religion than would be, in that of science, hierarchies and missions for propagating the Ptolemaic astronomy, and inculcating the rules of necromancy and exorcism. The spreading alienation of the intellectual classes of European society from Christendom, and the detention of the rest in their spiritual culture at a level not much above that of the Salvation Army, are social phenomena which ought to bring home a very solemn appeal to the conscience of stationary churches. For their long arrear of debt to the intelligence of mankind they adroitly seek to make amends by elaborate beauty of ritual art. The apology soothes for a time, but it will not last for ever" (p. 650).

In reading over this superb declamation, I know not which more excites my wonder, the breadth of Dr. Martineau's rhetoric, or the limitations of his logic. For, on his own showing, two supreme forces must be held jointly responsible for this rank growth of poisonous illusion, the infallible conscience of man, and the all-wise providence of God.

ALFRED W. BENN.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME SEMITIC ETYMOLOGIES.

The Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.:
May 7, 1890.

1. Selah.—The great crux interpretum in the Psalms is the word סֶלָה. I do not care to mention here all the different interpretations and theories; they are well known to Old Testament students. The general opinion is that it is a musical term. I connect סֶלָה with the Assyrian su-la-a, "beseeching," "prayer"; sul'a, "to pray," properly "to lift up the hands," &c.; and explain it as "prayer." In the Codex Sinaiticus, the word stands always in a separate line, and is written in red characters. סֶלָה, prayer, meant that the chanting of the Psalms was interrupted by silent or loud prayer. Thus, in Psalm ix. 16, we read: "Jehovah has made himself known; he has executed judgment, snaring the wicked in the work of his own hands." Now follows higgayôn selah, i.e., meditation and prayer by the congregation; and then v. 17 continues in the same strain as v. 16. This etymology of סֶלָה gives, for the first time, the key to the understanding of the διδύματα of the LXX. Διδύματα denoted the prayer of the congregation, inserted after certain verses in the Psalms. If selah were a musical term, we should, above all, expect it in the Hallel-psalms, where it does not occur at all.

2. Asia.—Jules Oppert, following J. K. Voss and Ukert, derived the name Ἀσία from the Hebrew-Phoenician עַרֵב, an etymology accepted by all philologists and historians. No one, however, has found hitherto a satisfactory etymon for the name ἡ Ἀσία. That ἡ Ἀσία is not an original Greek word is proved by the fact that it does not occur in Greek literature before Pindar and Aeschylus (Pind. Ol. vii. 33 and Aesch. Prom. iv. 11). In Soph., O. C. 694, it is used in the meaning of "east" in general. The continent of Asia was called by the Homeric Greeks Ἠρεῖος (from ἥρεος), which has probably an entirely different etymon from ἥρεος, Epirus, the mainland of Greece. Suidas defines Ἀσία χώρα ας ἡ τῆς ἀνατολῆς (modern Natoly), which definition supports my etymology from the Semitic verb asû. In Hebrew, אָסַף is used for the rising of the sun (Gen. xix. 23, Ps. lxxix. 6, Neh. iv. 15). The same is the case in Assyrian. In II. Rawlinson 39, 14 ff., we read asû (Akkadian BA-AB-BAR), followed by erebu and erebu ša šamši (whence Ἑσπέρην); and, in l. 17, we read BA-AB-BA-RA=si-it šamši, "sunrise," followed by ereb šamši, "sunset"; asû ša šamši and erebu ša šamši="to rise and to set," said of the sun, are often found together—e.g., IV. Rawlinson 3, 34b, we read murus qaqqadi istu sit šamši ana ereb šamši, "sickness of the head from sunrise to sunset" (see, also, IV. Rawl. 15, 36, and 38). In the Ešarhaddon Inscriptions (I. Rawl. 45, 7a), we are told that the king marched without a rival, ultu sit šamši adi ereb šamši; and in Haupt's Nimrod Epos (p. 6019), the scorpion-men are described as šahip huršân, ana a-ši-e šamši u ereb šamši inassarû šamši, "whirling down mountain forests, they watch the sun from sunrise to sunset." Thus, Asia means the land of the rising sun (cf. Zi-pen = Japan; Techmer's Zeitschrift, ii., p. 75). The name very likely was coined among the Greeks in Cyprus and Crete, where the Assyrians had settlements about the time of Sennacherib (705-681 B.C.). The Assyrians were the people who said that they came istû mat asiê šamši, the ol êk tḥt Ἀσίας. They themselves called the country west of Assyria (especially Phoenicia) mar-tu-ki = mat ereb šamši, "the land of the setting sun." (I will add here that I am aware of Pott's Etymolog. Forschungen,² ii. 2, 875-6, and other works).

3. Africa.—Having found the etymology of Asia, I thought of a similar one for Africa. What Pott says in Techmer's Zeitschrift (iii., 249 ff.) is entirely unsatisfactory. My start was made from the Latin. The oldest form is the noun Afer, Afri, whence the adjective Africanus, Africanus. These passed into Greek as Ἀφροί and Ἀφρικανός. The Romans heard the name from the Carthaginians, and it points to a Semitic etymology. To the early settlers at Carthage, the land south of their country seemed to be nothing but dust, and thus they called it the עֶפְרָא (cf. the modern Sahara, "the grayish," from the colour of the sand). This name was adopted by the Romans, and passed over to the Greeks. That the name Africa originally denoted only the land around Carthage and between the Syrtes is proved by Dio Cassius 42, 9, and 53, 12; Ptol. iv. 3 and viii. 13-16.

4. Môbaç.—H. Ewald, and, above all, Paul de Lagarde, have proved that Semitic מ corresponds in the earlier period to Greek τ; מ = θ; while in later times the order was reversed, Semitic מ was transcribed by θ, and τ by ρ. On the basis of this I should say that the earliest Greek form for מוֹבָא was neither μοῦβα nor μὸβαν, still less μοῦβαν* (reconstructed by A. Müller in Bezenberger's Beiträge, i. 299), but κίτῶν, usually put down in the dictionaries as belonging to a Sicilian dialect. One of the most interesting examples illustrating this law of transliteration in early and late Greek is the following: Utica, Greek Ἰρύνη (in Africa), is derived from the Semitic root עֶרֶק, Utica meaning the old town in distinction from Carthage as the Kartha-hadašta, the new town. It shows in its Greek form a very ancient vocalism. From the same verb צָרַח, in the meaning of "to set free" (see Lane's Arabic Dictionary, p. 1946, col. 3), I derive the word ṣāḥaṭ, which has never before been explained. Ṣāḥaṭ is equal to the Arabic partic. pass. m'takun, "a man set free," a libertus. It is usually said that ṣāḥaṭ is a secondary formation from ṣāḥar. I believe that ṣāḥaṭ and ṣāḥar are different words; ṣāḥaṭ belongs to post-classical Greek, when ῥ was rendered by θ and Ϝ was equal to τ.

5. Ἀθήνη, the goddess Athene, and Ἀθήναι, Athens, hitherto derived one from the other, are merely homonyms. Ἀθήναι, Athens, goes back to the root ḥ-m (cf. ἡμερος for ἡμέρας), while Ἀθήνη is derived from ḥ-m for ḥ-m. This stands for ḥ-m—sent in Latin sentire (cum aliquo), "to help," "to go to help" (also see Doric ἡμερα, ἡμερα, and ἡμερα). Thus, Ἀθήνη for ἡμερα—"the helper," "the protector."

6. Pillegesh, "concubine."—The Hebrew פִּלְגֶשֶׁת in Gen. xxii, xxiv, and xxv–xxvi, &c., 1 Ohron. i. 32, &c., is borrowed from the Greek, and not the Greek from the Semitic.

In conclusion, allow me to express my best thanks for your appreciation of my Index to the American Journal of Philology, vols. i.–x. (ACADEMY, April 12, p. 256). I would state, however, that the principle on which it is arranged is by no means borrowed from the "P. Q." indexes of Mr. Griswold, but is an old German device, found, e.g., in Fleckeisen's Jahrbüchern, &c.

W. MUSS-ARNOLT

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the meeting of the Zoological Society for scientific purposes, to be held on Tuesday next, June 17, papers will be read by three specialists on the Diurnal Lepidoptera, the Hemiptera, and the Coleoptera, collected by Mr. W. Bonny, of the Emin relief expeditions, on the Aruwimi river in Central Africa.

A SYNONYMIC catalogue of Neuroptera Odonata, or Dragonflies, by Mr. W. F. Kirby, will be published shortly by Messrs. Gurney & Jackson, Mr. Van Voort's successors. It is the author's intention, as soon as this work is out of hand, to proceed to press with the first volume of his great catalogue of moths, Lepidoptera Heterocera, upon which he has been working for nearly twenty years.

THE library of the Association for the Improvement of Geometrical Teaching has recently received from Dr. Hirst, its first president, the gift of a valuable collection of about forty volumes on geometry. The appeal addressed to authors and publishers has been very favourably responded to; and the association has also acquired by purchase an interesting collection of upwards of twenty older text-books, including the Elements of Algebra, by Nicholas Saunderson, the blind Lucasian professor, and Stirling's Methodus Differentialis.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—(Tuesday, May 13.)

Dr. J. G. GARSON, vice-president, in the chair.—Mr. Francis Galton exhibited a new instrument for measuring the rate of movement of the various limbs. The method adopted was explained by referring to the action of a spring measuring tape. When the end of one of these is pulled out and then let go, it springs sharply back, the tape running cleanly through a slit. If it runs back more quickly than the hand could follow it, then, if the end of the tape be retained in the hand that gives the blow, the tape will run through the slit at the exact rate at which the blow is given. The hand need not be near the tape; it may be connected with it by a long thread, and the instrument will thus be guarded from injury. The thread during part of its course is arranged to travel vertically, and passes through a small inverted cone which is fixed to it; it then passes loosely through a cylindrical bead of white ivory, the lower end of which rests on the base of the cone. When the moving thread is suddenly arrested, the bead is tossed up to a height dependent on the velocity of the thread at the time and place when it was stopped. The momentary pause of the white bead when it ceases to ascend, and before it begins to descend, enables the height it has attained to be read off upon an appropriate scale, which tells at how many feet per second the thread was moving at the time it was checked.—Dr. G. W. LESTER read a paper on "The Ethnographical Basis of Language, with special reference to the Customs and Language of Hunza." The Hunzas are nominal Muhammedans, but they use their mosques for drinking and dancing assemblies. There is little restriction in the relation of the sexes, and the management of the state in theory is attributed to fairies. No war is undertaken unless the fairy gives the command by beating the sacred drum. The people are not true Muhammedans, but represent what is still left of the doctrine of the Sheikh-ul-Jabl or the Ancient of the Mountain, the head of the so-called Assassins. The language of the Hunzas is one of the most primitive, and has not yet emerged from the state in which it is impossible to have such a word as "head," as distinguished from "my head" or "thy head" or "his head." For instance, ak is "my name," and ik is "his name"; take away the pronominal sign, and k alone is left, which means nothing. Aus is "my wife," and gus "thy wife"; the s alone has no meaning. In some cases, it seemed impossible to arrive at putting anything down correctly; but so it is in the initial stage of a language. In the Hunza language that stage is important to us as members of the Aryan group, as the dissociation of the pronoun, verb, adverb, and conjunction from the act or substance only occurs when the language emerges beyond the stage when the groping, as it were, of the human child between the meum and tuum, the first and second persons, approaches the clear perception of the outer world, the sum, the third person.—Mr. A. P. GOODWIN read some notes on "The Natives of the Interior of New Guinea," and exhibited a fire-stick.—Mr. G. F. LAWRENCE exhibited two crania from the Thames.

CAMBRIDGE PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Thursday, May 22.)

Dr. SANDYS, president, in the chair.—Dr. Fennell read the following note on Hor. Od. i. 12. 32–41. The reader proposed to fix the date of this Ode at B.C. 26, rather earlier than Franke and Orelli. He defended the reading Catonis nobile letum, and proposed to place a note of interrogation after Fabriziumque. From B.C. 29 onwards Augustus was posing as a Cato, professing to imitate the regard for the Roman constitution displayed by Cato Uticensis, and was condemning by his conduct the policy of Julius Caesar. All the Roman worthies mentioned seem to be intended as prototypes of Augustus—Romulus as founder and law-giver, Numa as a promoter of religion, Tarquinius Superbus as a promoter of public works (not to mention the Sibylline Books), the rest as censors or promoters of public works, except Regulus and Paullus, who, like Cato, were prodigi animas magnas. Now in the year 26 B.C. Augustus was morte unalem potens laurum (Od. 3. 14. 2) in Spain; while Phraates, with the help of hordes of Scythians, was recovering Parthia (cf. Od. 3. 29. 26; Od. 1. 26. 5; and two Odes which may be dated a year later, B.C. 25, Od. 1. 19, and Od. 2. 2; and an Ode which is clearly dated B.C. 25, Od. 3. 8. 23). With Augustus in the far West and rumours of vast movements in the East, the Parthians might be said to be Latio imminentes with more propriety than at any other time of Horace's life. Contrast the security expressed after Augustus's return from Spain (Od. 3. 14). This date, B.C. 26, also suits the obvious reference to Augustus's nephew, Marcellus. The position of que after et (l. 37) shows that Regulum et Scuros form one group, Paullum Fabrizioque another group, the first of each group, like the last person mentioned in the previous stanza, being prodigium animas magnas.—Dr. Verrall read notes on Vergil as follows:

Am. 9. 48, 403. The explanation of these passages turns on a usage known to all the Latin poets, and in some (e.g. Propertius) extremely common, but not always sufficiently recognised. It in both places means not and but also. In v. 48 it is admitted that, if et be taken as joining comitatus to improvisus, the sense is unsatisfactory. Correctly taken, the literal translation is "Turnus, having with twenty horsemen flown far before the main body, also (or actually) reached the city unexpected," i.e., he was positively at the city before his coming was noticed. A similar Greek καί, the use of which the Latin here imitates, would excite no remark. In v. 403 we render literally "Drawing up his weapon, as he looked up to the moon, he also prayed thus in speech." The act of poisoning the weapon with the look to the moon was itself an unspoken prayer to Diana, to which is added the spoken invocation. For the difficulties of other interpretations, see Conington's notes. Am. xi, 199–202:

Tum litore toto
ardentis spectant socios semistatue servant
busta, neque aenali possunt nox umida donec inertit caelum stellis ardentibus aptum.

In the last line the reading ardentibus has overwhelming MS. authority. That of a few MSS., fulgentibus, seems to be a mere alteration intended to remove the repetition ardentis ardentibus. Conington prints ardentibus, but in a dubious note seems to regard it as careless and unsatisfactory writing. But in fact the whole point of the passage turns, as it ought to do if the reading be sound, on the repetition of the word. If the concluding words are to have point, they should express that aspect of the night which made it a consolation to those who had watched till night the burning pyres of the slain. This point, in the manner of Vergil, is given with a single touch. As applied to such a word as socii the epithet ardentis would most naturally be understood in a moral sense, describing the glow and vigour of the soldiers in life (cf. iunenum manus emicat ardens, &c.). In this context the epithet combines this sense with the literal sense of glowing or burning in the fire; and thus the following words semistatue servant busta present the sinking of the fires as a symbol of the extinguished life. From this painful sight the watchers are unable to tear themselves away "until dewy night brings overhead her sky set with stars that also burn." The course of the language manifestly presents the thought that the fire which dies out in the funeral piles dies away into the stars and there reappears. Here is the consolation. Ancient thought and imagery, in figuring the soul as a fire, also conceived that fire as naturally inhabiting the stars, as thence derived into mortal bodies and thither returning when released. The sight of the glowing stars therefore reminded the mourners symbolically and actually that the glowing spirits still lived on, and was in fact a comforting assurance against the seeming triumph of death. The way for this parable has already been prepared a few lines before, when the burning heaps are thus described:

spolia occisis derepta Latinis conidunt igni galeas ensaque decores frenaque feruntque rotas.

Conington (after Servius) notes that ferunt is an epithet proper to the chariot wheels in life, if we may so say, when they were heated in the race, though it is also adapted in another way to the context and to the state of the wheels upon the pyre. The union of the two associations is parallel to that in ardentis socios and, though not so happy, is justified when it is seen in connexion with the subtle and singularly beautiful climax to which the whole description is worked up.—Dr. Postgate proposed in Hor. Od. 4. 4. 65, for the corrupt

"merses profundo: pulchrior eunat," to read exiit. This reading completely explains the variants: eunat of most MSS., exiit of two inferior MSS., a post-Augustan future of exire replacing the perfect, as transiet for transiit (Od. Med. of Verg. Am. 10. 785, cf. Tib. 1. 4. 27, where all the MSS. have transiet), and the exiit which we gather from Rutilius Numatianus l. 130 (a palpable imitation of Horace) that he found in his text. Dr. Postgate supported the use of exiit,

"at once emerges," by references to Kühner, Lat. Gr., ii., p. 101 and p. 97. In Pind. Nem. 5. 43, ἤτοι μετακταντα καὶ νῦν τὸν μάρτυρ' ἀγάλλει κείνος δμῶσπορον ἔθνος, Πυθελί (Fennell's reading, MSS. τὸς μάρτυρς κείνου δ. ἔ. Πυθελί), he proposed to retain κείνου, as there is no authority for taking ἔθνος, "family" or "race," in the sense of "offspring" or "descendant," either in Pindar or out of it; and ἀγάλλει is used as in Ol. 1. 89 (the only other place where it occurs in Pindar) of paying outward honour to a person. The sense of μάρτυρς, consociatus, assigned to it by Rumpel, Lex. Pind., and others, is not borne out by the passages quoted by him.—Mr. J. H. Moulton read the following notes: ἐνδύω must=ἰνδύω, but this is ἰνδ-ω, cf. szuo. Did not ἐνδύω for *ἐξύω come by a wrong division of ἐνδύω, through association with δύω? latter perhaps="sink" or "fall" same √ as δύνω. ἀρετή for nr-a-tā, from nr-, "man"; so ἀρετήρα (sic leg. in Il. 22. 857) for nr-o-tā-ti. (In the last suggestion I find Mr. P. Giles has anticipated me.) ἀγίνω, a verb in the -νω class from √gel, with the prep. n- (wk. form of en); the verb is found in the oldest Zend compounded with vi (vi-zaiabā, Y. 53. 7, "defend ye"). ākros: āk. ley. in Theocr. 28. 15; for n-giro-s, the negative of Vedic ni-āra-, "careful." ἀσφῶδελος perhaps means "earth's spear" or "spit"; ? I.E. asghā, Goth. asgo, "ashes," and ὀδελός (ὀδελός). The plant has a very spiky appearance. famestra for dhemes-tr-a, ultimately √dhen, "shine," in phāru. I accept this old etym., believing Osthoff's account of phāru very strained. The √s dhen, dhā, dhau, are related as gem and gā, mau and mā, &c. flu, √dhlug, "to flow away," cf. Ger. trocken, E. dry, drought. lypus most simply explained by comparing Skt. lop-āka, lop-āka, "fox." Probably the words for "fox" and "wolf" have been confused in other cases also. opior, neo-opius, &c., from op=eri, and √ain in aios aivēu. Thus opior=ἐπαύω, "approve." oppido=ἐπιπιδω, lit. "planely," hence "plainly." prandium (against Stolz) must come from prando. This seems made up from pranus=prām+ius (ppp. of ēdo, Gk. ἀρι-στυν). Prām*=Dor. prāv, which is not (as Brugmann) for prādv, but parallel to clām, from pro, &c., in weakest ablant and the loc. suff. -ā-m. uivus. The neuter -os stem, to which the gender of this word has been traced, I recognise in Zend vaeto, "pain." Thus uivus was contaminated with uivō=Fids.

CLIFTON SHAKSPEARE SOCIETY.—(Saturday, May 24.)

MISS FLORENCE HERAPATH in the chair.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths read a paper on "The Nobleness of 'A King and No King,'" saying that, although hearsay evidence or superficial skimming is often thought to be ample for coming to a conclusion about the merits or demerits of a play by Shakspeare or his contemporaries, it is only when by renewed acquaintance we are able to penetrate into the inner meaning and teaching of a play, and to recognise its tendency as a whole, that we are able to form a fair judgment upon it. Partly through the subjects chosen, partly through the exigencies of the dramatic form, and partly through the coarsenesses which are but a reflex of the superficial fashion of the time and which can be easily removed, a popular vote on the worth of Shakspeare's plays in their entirety would be adverse to his reputation. Neither Shakspeare nor any other moral teacher could have had much influence for good without first realising and picturing the evils that needed remedy. While the human soul clings to Shakspeare as a true friend, and finds in him a wise counsellor, because it recognises the constant outbursts of noble thoughts with which the plays abound, it knows nothing of more than half his work. If, then, in the case of such a master mind as Shakspeare's there has been a difficulty in getting the majority of thinkers to give intelligent consideration to a play as a whole, the chances of the play of a writer who lacks Shakspeare's power of expression getting even respectful notice are infinitely small. Beaumont and Fletcher's "A King and No King" requires to be read and re-read before its beauties and its worth, which do not lie upon the surface, can be appreciated. Its theme is that of an affection which, in the childhood of the world, had divine sanction but which a progressive morality rightly forbade. It would therefore naturally be expected that a shallow prudery, ignorant of the details of this fine play, would turn aside from it and so miss the opportunity of studying a delineation of character rarely surpassed by Shakspeare himself, and the treatment of a subject from a moral standpoint which might have been the great dramatist's own. Although the passion which first moved Arbaces and Panthea was in its inception a guilty one, yet, as it was not encouraged and was finally overcome, there is nothing in the fact that the play brings them together as lawful man and wife which should deprive it of taking high rank with those sermons which the stage has so often preached. Beaumont and Fletcher, unlike writers of less calibre, do not show only one side of the character of Arbaces, who dominates the play; but they allow us to see his natural traits even when subject to his absorbing passion, and to catch glimpses of his better nature which eventually triumphs. The conduct of Arbaces and Panthea in the fourth scene of the fourth act, which contains much high-souled pathos and a keen insight into the working of the soul, reconciles us to their happy union at the end, when it is proved that they have no blood relationship, and destroys the force of Prof. Ward's objections (Dramatic Literature ii., 184-5) to the termination of the play. Among many points worthy of detailed literary consideration are the charming portraiture of the patient and dignified Tigranes; the attractiveness of Mardonius, the candid and worthy counsellor of the king; the sweetness of the character, and the intensity of the devotion, of Spaconia; the vivid presentation of the cowardly Bessus, who, bearing some resemblance to more than one Shaksperian character, is not a copy of any. These, with the delineation of the faithful Gobrias, and the life-like personages of the subordinate scenes, together with the harmony of the whole play, make "A King and No King" a noble drama of which the English language may well be proud, and which in characterisation and homogeneity of plot rises as far above some of Shakspeare's plays as it falls in that felicity of expression which is so peculiarly Shakspeare's own, and which upon further acquaintance we recognise as the gift which distinguishes him from all writers of his own or any other age. This has never been better put than by David Masson (British Quarterly Review, Nov. 1852, pp. 530-2).—Miss Louisa Mary Davies, in a paper on "Spaconia," said that the women of the plays written by Beaumont and Fletcher are not real women at all, but puppets, each carrying round her neck the author's label, executing the duties and delivering the sentiments popularly supposed to be in accordance with the character she represents, and after the play is over disappearing from our ken. No yearning possesses our minds to follow these creations into the unknown future. We know that they are carefully packed away with special regard to the machinery, and that if we see them again they will caper and smirk with just the same grace, that their remarks will be of the same paper-pattern order and delivered with "faultily faultless" precision and intonation. An analysis of Spaconia's words and deeds shows her to be one of these literary representations of abstract character and, very much as a pet dog, a charmingly pretty illustration of humble, faithful, self-effacing attachment. Who has not felt a weak hankering to know how Beatrice got on after she had put her pretty neck under the yoke, or who has not in imagination followed Miranda across the tempestuous Atlantic to anchor in the Bay of Naples, or Katherine on her return to her very unsettled ménage? But there is no such feeling about Spaconia.—Mr. L. M. Griffiths, in a paper entitled "The First Authentic Performance of 'A King and No King,'" called attention to the details of the welcome given to the Palgrave when he came to England in October, 1612, as the acknowledged suitor of James's eldest daughter, Elizabeth, and also to the festivities on the occasion of their marriage, which took place, notwithstanding the death of the Prince of Wales in the meanwhile, in the following February. Fourteen plays, of which one was "A King and No King," were performed by the King's servants. £8000 was spent on the preparation of two days' display of fights and fireworks on the Thames, as an introduction to the wedding festivities. On the evening of the Sunday of the marriage, a masque, written by Campion, was presented. On the following evening the gentlemen of the Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn were responsible for entertainments which included a masque by Chapman, the production of which cost £1536 8s. 11d. In the course of the week a masque, of which Beaumont was the writer and Bacon the chief contriver, was given by the Gentlemen of Gray's Inn and the Inner Temple.—This meeting brought to a close the work of the society's fifteenth session. The plays for next session are "Macbeth," "The Knight of the Burning Pestle," "Pericles," "Antony and Cleopatra," "The Duchess of Malfi," "Troilus and Cressida," "Coriolanus," and "The Virgin Martyr." The hon. sec. (9, Gordon-road, Clifton, Bristol) will gratefully acknowledge the receipt of anything for the society's library, which now consists of 438 volumes.

FINE ART.

THE SCOTTISH NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

THE trustees of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery opened last Saturday, in the upper halls of their building in Queen Street, Edinburgh, a supplementary exhibition, consisting for the most part of items bearing upon the subject of portraiture. That portion of the display which is most distinctly germane to the especial objects of the main collection is the series of nearly two hundred engraved portraits of eminent Scotsmen hung in the Western Gallery. A few of these have been acquired by recent purchase or gift, but the majority are selected from an extensive and very varied collection of prints bequeathed some years ago to the Board of Manufactures, who are the trustees of the Scottish Portrait Gallery, by the late W. F. Watson, of Edinburgh. From the same source entirely is derived the series of over a hundred line-engravings placed on view in the large Central Hall of the galleries. For fineness of impression and for general art-qualities these form undoubtedly the most valuable portion of the bequest; they are especially rich in seventeenth and eighteenth-century French work, though the admirably vigorous prints of such members of the Dutch school as W. Jacobszoon Delft and Jonas Suijderhoef are also well represented. In the same hall is shown a series of delicate drawings, mainly in pencil on tinted paper, heightened with white, reproducing old Edinburgh buildings of picturesque or historic interest. These were executed by the late James Drummond, the first curator of the National Gallery of Scotland, between the years 1848 and 1867; and they possess great interest as preserving the aspect of edifices the majority of which have now disappeared before modern improvements.

An excellently varied and decorative appearance is given to both galleries by the large series of casts of antique busts which are arranged among the prints. These form part of the Albacini collection, purchased in Rome in 1839, by the Board of Manufactures, through Andrew Wilson, the landscape painter and well-known connoisseur. At that time they were undoubtedly the finest series of the sort that existed. Hitherto they have been exclusively devoted to the use of the students in the art schools under the direction of the Board.

Among the more recent additions to the Portrait Gallery proper is a much injured, but still interesting and authentic, portrait of James V. of Scotland—a half-length following the same general type as those at Hardwick, where the monarch appears in company with his second Queen, Mary of Guise; a cabinet three-quarter length of Thomas Duncan—a good example of Robert Scott Lauder, presented by his daughter; a cabinet-sized half-length of Lord Clyde, by T. Jones Barker, the gift of Lord Rosebery; and the best extant portrait of Dr. John Brown, the author of Rab—a little work in oils by George Reid, a far more adequate rendering of that much-loved and greatly-gifted Scotsman than the crayon study by Swinton, already in the gallery. Among other recent acquisitions are marble busts of Prof. Sir John Leslie, by John Rhind, after Samuel Josephs; of Prof. Aytoun, by the same sculptor, after Patrio Park; and of Charles Maclaren, the geologist and editor of the Scotsman, by J. Hutcheson, after W. Brodie.

OBITUARY.

PHILIPPE BURTY.

AN attack of apoplexy, which befell him during a sojourn in the South of France, has deprived the public of the services of a valuable art-writer, who added a remarkable connoisseurship to an agreeable employment of the pen. Instructed English readers knew M. Burty very well, a dozen years ago, when he was an habitual contributor to the ACADEMY; and that was, no doubt, about the best period of his literary career. He had by this time amassed much knowledge, and had acquired the faculty of imparting it with the literary charm which practising artists do not possess; and his hours were not so engrossed as they have been of recent years, when, to his labours in writing, there have been added the work which falls to any Inspecteur des Beaux-Arts who chooses to take his appointment seriously. But M. Burty had made his debut in writing long before the years during which he was wont to contribute to the ACADEMY. He was on the staff of the Gazette des Beaux-Arts from a very early date, and nearly twenty-five years ago published a volume on the Industrial Arts. Subsequently he was attached to the République Française, under the leadership of Gambetta; and in that newspaper, as elsewhere—and as indeed in his agreeable little volume, Maîtres et Petits-Maîtres—Philippe Burty displayed a certain independence of vision, and the spirit of a thoroughly modern criticism. He was the upholder of such men as Corot, Millet, and Rousseau—the French Romantics in fine—long before the period at which they received the extravagant and rather ignorant eulogies of a noisier school of criticism. In his appreciation of Japanese art, M. Burty was likewise the discreet and moderate forerunner of the recent extravagance of taste. And there is still one subject, whose present popularity with the collector owes something to him—the subject of original etching. He early advocated the recognition of the art of Mr. Seymour Haden, and he furnished the French public with that information upon Méryon, which, until then, it had presumably lacked. A critic of admirable intelligence, it would have been difficult for Philippe Burty not to have been something of a collector. Those who visited him of recent years, in his flat on the Boulevard des Batignolles, were aware that he had surrounded himself with chosen treasures. An eighteenth-century tapestry was opposite to a picture of Chardin's, so simple, yet so charming, that it must have commanded the admiration of M. Burty's friend—Edmond de Goncourt—from whom, doubtless, he had learnt something of his appreciation of the French eighteenth-century school. Elsewhere there would be a remarkable kakemono, and old pottery of Rouen, and in a book-case there were well-bound examples of volumes tirés à petit nombre. His modern etchings M. Burty had disposed of under the hammer in London some fifteen years ago; and the priced catalogue of his sale at Sotheby's is among the most interesting records at the disposal of the collector of original modern prints, from Geddes and Goya to Haden and Whistler, or to Braquemond and Jacquemart.

We append the following facts from a French source. M. Burty was born at Paris in February, 1830, and he died at Parays, near Astaffort, Lot-et-Garonne, on June 3. In his youth he was a pupil of Chabal-Dussurgey; and he was chosen by Eugène Delacroix to be his literary executor, in performance of which duty he edited Delacroix's Letters (1878, second edition, 1880). His most important works, not specifically mentioned above, were: The Etchings of Seymour Haden (London, 1866); Chefs d'œuvre des arts industriels (1866); Enaux cloisonnés, anciens et modernes, illustrated with coloured reproductions of drawings of Hokusai (1868); Paul Huet, with a catalogue of his work (1869); Eaux-fortes de Jules de Goncourt (1876); an introduction to Twenty-five Designs of Eugène Fromentin, reproduced in etchings by Mr. Montefiore (London, 1877); Bernard Palissy, in the series of "Artistes Célèbres" (1886); and a very rare pamphlet, entitled Pas de lendemain (1889). He was appointed Inspecteur des Beaux-Arts in 1881, and was also a chevalier of the legion of honour.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"THE ART OF JUDAEA."

49 rue d'Ulm, Paris: 7 Juin, 1890.

Votre numéro du 31 Mai contient une lettre, datée de Gaza, où M. Flinders Petrie vous fait part de l'impression que lui a laissée la lecture de la traduction anglaise du quatrième volume de L'Histoire de l'Art dans l'Antiquité, que je publie en collaboration avec M. Chipiez.

Il y a là, sur les restaurations de M. Chipiez, des appréciations que je ne relèverai pas; les questions de goût ne se discutent point. Je me bornerai à rappeler qu'à l'Exposition universelle de 1889 un jury international, dont faisaient partie plusieurs éminents architectes anglais, n'a pas été de l'avis de M. Flinders Petrie et a décerné aux restaurations de M. Chipiez la plus haute récompense dont il pût disposer, une médaille d'honneur. Je sollicite seulement de votre courtoisie la permission de répondre à quelques-uns des reproches d'omission ou d'erreur que m'adresse votre correspondant. Je tiens trop à la bonne opinion des lecteurs de l'ACADEMY pour ne pas chercher à me justifier à leurs yeux.

Dans le premier paragraphe de sa lettre, M. Flinders Petrie me blâme de n'avoir pas parlé des monuments connus sous le nom de "Tombeaux des rois" et "Tombeaux des juges," ni des osuaires en pierre qu'a si bien décrits M. Clermont-Ganneau. Il sait, comme moi, que ces monuments datent de la période gréco-romaine; mais il allègue que nous avons compris dans notre travail des monuments qui datent du règne de Justinien; or rien n'est moins exact. Nous avons, il est vrai, mentionné et figuré la Torte dorée (fig. 123); mais c'est uniquement parce qu'elle renferme des éléments qui, de l'avis des meilleurs juges, remontent peut-être à une époque très reculée. Si M. Flinders Petrie nous avait lu à tête plus reposée, ailleurs que dans son campement de Tell Hesi, il aurait reconnu que nous n'avons pas voulu conduire l'histoire du peuple juif et de son art au delà du retour de la captivité, ce que rentre dans le plan général de notre ouvrage, dont les cinq premiers volumes sont consacrés à l'étude des arts qui ont précédé l'art grec et qui ont pu lui fournir certaines des données qu'il a mises en œuvre. Il ne nous aurait donc pas reproché d'avoir omis les sculptures du Haouran et de Palmyre, où l'influence de la sculpture romaine est partout si marquée; il aurait compris pourquoi nous avons laissé de côté la numis-matique juive, qui date tout entière de la période assoménienne. Sans doute nous avons reproduit quelques monnaies juives; mais ce n'est pas "at random," comme le dit notre critique; c'est parce que nous trouvions dans ces pièces des preuves d'un goût persistant pour cette décoration végétale qui, comme nous l'apprennent les livres saints, tenait une si grande place dans les monuments de l'âge des rois.

Si nous n'avons pas parlé de Ramet-el-khalil, c'est qu'il n'y a là que des arrassements dont il est impossible de tirer grand parti. Ce sont les restes d'une enceinte analogue à celle d'Hébron; or celle-ci, dont nous avons étudié le plan et l'appareil et dont nous avons donné deux vues, a le grand avantage d'être encore debout et admirablement conservée. Quant à la colonne qui est restée au fond de la carrière qu'enveloppent les constructions de l'église russe, si nous ne l'avons pas mentionnée, c'est que, selon toute apparence, elle était destinée au temple d'Hérode, dont nous n'avions pas à nous occuper; il y a une curieuse concordance entre la longueur de ce fût, environ 12 mètres, et les 29 coudées que Joseph assigne aux colonnes de la Βασιλική σπυα d'Hérode. La stèle de Mesha appartient bien à la période où nous étions décidé à nous renfermer; aussi avons nous eu l'occasion d'en faire mention à quatre reprises (pp. 132, 176-179, 395, 414, de l'édition française). Nous n'en avons pas donné d'image, parce que nous n'écrivions pas une histoire de la paléographie sémitique; et que cette stèle ne contient aucun élément décoratif. Quant aux dessins de Cassas que l'on nous blâme d'avoir reproduits, nous croyons qu'ils sont intéressants, parce qu'ils représentent les tombes en question telles qu'elles existaient il y a un siècle; elles étaient alors mieux conservées qu'aujourd'hui. Je renverrai au texte de l'ouvrage ceux qui désireraient savoir pour quelles raisons nous avons admis le principe de la restauration que présente cet artiste auquel on n'a pas rendu la justice qu'il méritait.

Je ne veux pas étendre outre mesure cette lettre, peut-être déjà bien longue, en discutant point à point les observations de notre censeur. Je n'ai pas à défendre mon traducteur que je ne connais pas, l'éditeur de Londres n'ayant pas pris le peine de m'envoyer, pour ce volume, la traduction anglaise. Je me contenterai d'une dernière remarque, que prouve que M. Flinders Petrie a lu un peu vite l'ouvrage qu'il juge si sévèrement. Il s'amuse d'une description que j'aurais donnée de la campagne des environs de Gaza pendant l'été; j'y aurais vu, ou plutôt j'y aurais rêvé "des ruisseaux courant sur des pelouses vertes ou tombant en cascades sur d'énormes blocs de rochers." Ce n'est pas sans une profonde surprise que je lus ce passage de l'article. Je ne connais pas Gaza; mais j'ai parcouru la Judée, du nord au midi; je sais qu'il n'y faut rien chercher de pareil, ni en été, ni même au printemps. J'ai eu beau me relire; je n'ai rien trouvé de pareil dans mon livre v., consacré à la Palestine et où le nom même de Gaza ne paraît que dans une courte note. Je me suis demandé si mon traducteur anglais aurait par hasard ajouté cette description fantaisiste; mais, de quelques crimes qu'on l'accuse, je ne puis croire qu'il ait pris cette licence, que justifierait par trop le fameux proverbe. En désespoir de cause, j'en suis à chercher si le critique qui m'est si peu indulgent n'a pas fait une confusion entre Gaza et Seïd-el-Ghazi, petite ville turque située en Asie-Mineure, dans l'ancienne Phrygie-Epirotée. Les environs de Seïd-el-Ghazi, tel que je les décris au § 1 du chapitre iii. du livre vi., que traite des Hétéens, offrent bien quelques-uns des traits contre lesquels mon contradicteur s'inscrit en faux; encore ne reconnais-je point là, dans les mots anglais que M. Petrie met entre parenthèses, la traduction exacte d'aucun des termes dont je me suis servi pour peindre ce canton pittoresque et boisé, que connaît si bien M. Ramsay, la forêt de pins qui renferme les tombes des rois de Phrygie. Il y a là une énigme que je ne me charge point de résoudre.

On peut pardonner quelque mauvaise humeur et quelque précipitation dans la lecture d'un gros volume à l'explorateur qui, par amour de la science, se condamne, en plein mois de Mai, à rester encore campé dans le voisinage de Gaza. Je n'en veux donc pas à M. Flinders Petrie, dont j'apprécie fort les beaux travaux sur Naucratis. Il peut compter que, lorsque, bientôt, j'aurai à m'en servir pour étudier l'archaïsme grec, je les lirai et les citerai avec plus de bienveillance et un soin plus scrupuleux qu'il ne l'a fait pour les miens. En attendant, je lui souhaite un heureux succès dans ses fouilles de la Philistide.

GEORGES PERROT.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE Rev. John Woodward, of Montrose, is about to publish, by subscription, a work on Ecclesiastical Heraldry, the result of thirty years' study and examination of examples both in Britain and in most parts of the continent. The first portion of the book will deal with the general use of armorial insignia by the ecclesiastics of the Western Church, from the earliest times to the present day. The second part will be founded on the author's Notices of Arms of Bishops, published in 1868, and then dedicated by special permission to the Queen. This, which has been long out of print, will be corrected and greatly enlarged by the addition of notes on the arms of the chief abbays and religious houses in England, by the blazons of the popes from 1144, and by an account of the devices of the chief foreign religious orders and communities. Mr. Woodward's reputation as a careful and learned herald is sufficient guarantee for the value and interest of the forthcoming work.

THE exhibitions to open next week include the summer exhibition of water-colours of the Dudley Gallery Art Society, at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly; a series of marine paintings by the veteran Russian artist, Ivan Aivazovsky, at the Goupil Gallery, New Bond-street; and a large picture by Prof. Emil Neide, of Königsberg, entitled "Tired of Life," at 95A Regent-street.

MR. JAMES LORD BOWES, the Japanese Consul at Liverpool, will give a conversazione on Thursday next, June 19, to the members of the Museums' Association, when his own unrivalled private collection of Japanese art work will be on view.

IN the recent discussion apropos of the Royal Academy's present purchases out of the Chantrey Fund, one point of great importance was, we think, not referred to. No one acquainted with the terms of Sir Francis Chantrey's will could possibly take exception to the purchase of pictures, if they were good pictures, wrought by Academicians. It was clear that the young and old, the famous and the uncelebrated, had alike a right to expect recognition in the purchase of excellent work. We are not so sure, however, as to the wisdom—we do not for a moment say the legality—of allowing any of those Chantrey pictures, which combined should form a modern Luxembourg, to form part of such loans as from time to time proceed from South Kensington to the provincial exhibitions. Yet this proceeding is unfortunately sanctioned. At the present time, for instance, Mr. Frank Bramley's admirably painted and singularly dramatic canvas, "A Hopeless Dawn," lends what must be after all ineffectual and in any case unjustified assistance to the attractions, such as they are, of a country picture-show.

RECENT numbers of the Proceedings of the Asiatic Society of Bengal contain reports on old coins, acquired by the government as treasure-trove, by Dr. Hoernle, the philological secretary. The most important find here recorded is that of 175 silver pieces of the class called Indo-Sassanian, which were discovered in Marwara. According to Dr. Hoernle, they resemble the genuine Sassanian type more closely than any hitherto known. They belong to two series: one imitating the coins of the Sassanite king Firuz (A.D. 459-486) in minute details, though of rude execution; the other substituting a barbaric head for that of Firuz. On none is there any legend. It is known from history that about 470 A.D. the White Huns, under their leader Toramana, annexed the eastern provinces of the Sassanide kingdom, and passed on to the invasion of India. It is further known that Toramana imitated the contemporary Gupta coinage, as well as that of Kashmir, putting his name on them. Dr. Hoernle, therefore, argues that these Indo-Sassanian coins also belong to Toramana, at an earlier period of his conquests. In this connexion it is interesting to note that the barbaric head, with its thick lips and large nose, is not unlike that on the gold coins of the Indo-Scythian king Kadphises.

THE STAGE.

THE DALY COMPANY AT THE LYCEUM.

MR. AUGUSTIN DALY'S admirable company of comedians arrived from America at the end of last week, and began on Monday night a ten weeks' engagement at the Lyceum Theatre. This, if we remember rightly, is at least their third visit to England. It was the enterprise of Mr. Terriss that brought them over in the first instance—an enterprise probably unrewarded, though their artistic success on that occasion paved the way for the popular triumph that followed. The Daly company of comedians—in spite of the comparative stupidity of several of the pieces that they play—should indeed be welcomed; and nothing could have been more cordial than the reception which was theirs on Monday night. They appeared in "Casting the Boomerang." The piece is an old one, and an old one not renewed. It is by no means written up to date, as it conceivably might have been. It is adapted from the German, and is therefore—especially when considered in contrast with a farcical comedy by Mr. Pinero distinguished by a plentiful lack of wit. As literature, it does not exist. Yet if the Daly Company were not about to appear in something a little better, we should say that it was quite worth seeing. As it is, we should be inclined to advise the intending visitor to refrain until the performance of "The Country Girl," or of "The Taming of the Shrew," or of "As You Like It."

And yet there is probably no piece in which the Daly company appear—not even "Nancy & Co.," or the "Railroad of Love"—which attests so completely as does "Casting the Boomerang" their own mastery of their art. It is not enough to say that the piece is played with smoothness and finish, and with that ensemble which is begot by long practice. Nearly all that is enjoyable in the piece is invented and created by the actors; but we have no doubt that Mr. Daly, in making his adaptation, took into account the immense capacity of his comedians—he did at least provide a vehicle for the carriage and display of their accomplished craft. The company is good and highly qualified all round, though prominence is not unjustly given, in the announcement, to four members of it. These are Miss Ada Rehan, Mrs. Gilbert, Mr. John Drew, and Mr. James Lewis. In Miss Ada Rehan we have before now recognised the greatest actress of comedy who speaks the English language. Whether the much-disputed word "genius" may be fitly applied to her is perhaps matter of question; but she has, in any case, quickness of perception, sound judgment, ripe experience, and—the better to make use of these—physical means quite beyond the common. The present writer has not seen her many times—only, indeed, in three different parts—yet that has been sufficient to betray in Miss Rehan the presence of manner, mannerism, what it is now the fashion to call a "method"—a thing dictated, generally, by the personality of an artist. Miss Rehan is none the less desirable a spectacle—and none the less refreshing—by reason of this individuality of presentation, which, after some slight experience of her, is seen to pierce through every performance. Her resources are extraordinary—alike her physical means, the exactness of her execution, and the subtlety with which she enters into the smallest point with which she is in any degree concerned. We cannot attempt an account equally laborious—and in the end equally sterile and unindicative—of the precise artistic position of Miss Rehan's best-known comrades. These, too, have their methods—their limitations. Yet Mr. Drew, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Gilbert have, like Miss Rehan, all the variety that is permitted within the circle that their personalities describe. Mrs. Gilbert, a representative of elderly women, of the drier and restricted type—at the opposite end of the scale to Mrs. John Wood, with her acidulated abandon; and to Miss Sophie Larkin, with her happy artistic combination of good nature, pretentiousness, and unerring, though underbred, propriety. These ladies, with their more obvious sense of humour, delight us more perhaps than Mrs. Gilbert ever could do. Yet is Mrs. Gilbert's performance inestimable in its place, just because it is faultless. Mr. Drew is an actor of rare energy, somewhat eclipsed, as it happens, in the "Casting of the Boomerang," and somewhat too amply emphasised in "The Taming of the Shrew." Mr. Lewis is a character-actor of extreme piquancy and funny suggestiveness. These people have their art at their fingers' ends. It may be said of them, with truth, we believe, that their familiarity with every effect that is to be got out of "Casting the Boomerang" in particular is so great that they could with ease have given an entirely finished and delicate performance of it upon the landing stage at Liverpool within two minutes of their alighting from a Cunard boat.

It occurs to us to add a word in praise of two or three less well-known members of the Daly company who, in the piece we have been mainly discussing, conduct themselves with admirable art. The piece, if it has any value, has value by reason of the number of piquant character-sketches which it affords, or permits rather, to its interpreters; and no two character-sketches are more amusing than those which we owe to Mr. Frederick Bond and Mr. Charles Leclercq—the one of them an entertaining representative of a ballet master who thinks of action what Mendelssohn thought of music, that it is far more expressive than words; the other impersonating a professor who is at the same time a low-class publisher—one of a class, perhaps, abundant in America, who live upon the vanity of would-be authors. Then there is a soubrette of the rougher kind, ingeniously performed by Miss Kitty Cheatham. But, indeed, it is the speciality of a Daly company's performance that not a single part is inadequately played. We note this with pleasure; but our pleasure will be increased materially when, a few weeks later on, this admirable troop of comedians addresses itself not so much to the interpretation of farce as to the interpretation of literature.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

THE performance of "Die Meistersinger" at Covent Garden last Saturday evening was one of exceeding merit. Mme. Tavarly, the new Eva, is evidently quite at home in Wagner's music, and she proved herself an accomplished and experienced actress. M. J. de Reske as the Walther achieved a brilliant success; but he was not properly heard in the finale of the first act, when Sig. Mancinelli conducted with more zeal than discretion. M. Lassale was the Hans Sachs. His singing was most artistic, but his appearance was perhaps a little too refined for the rough cobbler-poet. M. Montariol was an excellent David; and M. Ismardon as Beckmesser not only sang well, but entered more thoroughly into the spirit of his part than was the case last year. Mme. Bauermeister and MM. Abramoff and Winogradoff rendered able service. The chorus greatly distinguished itself. Signor Mancinelli, with the single exception above mentioned, conducted most efficiently.

The sixth Philharmonic Concert on June 5 opened with Bach's Concerto in G for strings. The music, notwithstanding its learned character, is wonderfully light. It was announced as given for the "first time in England," although it had been performed at the Crystal Palace in 1877, and again in 1883. The novelty of the evening was Moszkowski's second Suite for orchestra (Op. 47), one of the composer's most recent works. In 1885 his symphonic poem "Jeanne d'Aro" was produced by the same society; it obtained much success, and indeed gave promise of better things. The promise has now been fulfilled. The new Suite shows more mature thought and more skilful workmanship. The first and second movements—Prelude and Fugue—contain solid writing, and the Fugue is worked up to an effective climax. The Scherzo, with its Beethovenish rhythm is decidedly pleasing. The Larghetto, however, with its flowing themes and polyphonic writing, is most to our liking. A charming Intermezzo is followed by a Marcia, which bears too strong a trace of Wagner's influence generally, and of "Die Meistersinger" in particular. The work was brilliantly performed; and at the close the composer, who conducted, was recalled. Sig. Buonamici, a pianist of great talent, played Beethoven's E flat Concerto. It was a thoroughly sound rendering, yet we should have liked at times a little more dignity. Sir A. Sullivan's Overture to "Macbeth" was admirably performed. Miss Lena Little sang with much taste and feeling Berlioz's quaint air "Le Captive"; and Mr. Max Heinrich gave Schubert's grand song "Die Allmacht," with Liszt's scoring, in an able and forcible manner. The programme included two of Mr. Goring Thomas's charming vocal duets, and Meyerbeer's "Struensee" Overture.

Señor Sarasate gave his first concert at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon. A brief record is all that is necessary, for the programme contained no novelties, and the Spanish virtuoso played with his accustomed taste and brilliancy. Schubert's long but interesting Fantasia in C for piano and violin was so well interpreted that the audience clamoured for an encore, and were treated to the "Kreutzer Variations." Mme. Bertha Marx, an excellent pianist and able accompanist, gave some solos. Her reading of Chopin's Ballade in G minor, though technically correct, lacked tenderness and poetry.

On the same afternoon, Mdle. Clothilde Kleeberg was giving her first pianoforte recital at Princes' Hall. We heard her play some of Schumann's Kinderscenen—here a little overmarking, there a little dragging; but, on the whole, a good reading. Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in F minor (Op. 35, No. 5) was dashed off in brilliant style. Special praise, however, must be given to this talented lady for her performance of Beethoven's Variations on the "Eroica" theme. Her technique was really fine, and her conception of the music excellent. Mdle. Kleeberg's programmes deserve notice; they are well drawn up, and consist almost entirely of novelties or seldom-heard pieces. Chopin and Liszt are each represented by one piece; and one meets so frequently with these composers' names on programmes that familiarity has bred fatigue. The programme of the second recital contains no less than six pieces by living composers dedicated to the concert-giver.

Mme. Sophie Menter held her only pianoforte recital this season at St. James's Hall on Monday afternoon, June 9. A Prelude and Gigue from Bach's Suite Anglaise in A minor, and some familiar Scarlatti pieces, were well rendered. Mme. Menter has often performed Beethoven's Sonata in E (Op. 109), but we do not remember ever to have heard her interpret it with such charm, feeling, and repose. Some Liszt transcriptions of Schubert brilliantly played were much applauded. But the great feat of the afternoon was the performance of the "Tannhäuser" Overture as arranged by Liszt. Let us frankly admit that Wagner's music was spoilt, and then let us marvel at the technical skill, and at the strength and brilliancy displayed. Mme. Menter was recalled twice at the close. She claimed the indulgence of the audience as she had torn one of her finger nails. It was perhaps a wise, but, as the result proved, an unnecessary precaution.

M. Paderewski gave an orchestral concert on Tuesday evening at St. James's Hall. He played a Concerto in A minor of his own composition. The thematic material of the opening Allegro is interesting, but in the developments there is too much of the virtuosic element. In the slow movement "Romanza," Chopin is taken as the model. The Finale is the weakest of the three movements. M. Paderewski interpreted his work with great brilliancy, and was recalled more than once at the close. He likewise performed Saint-Saën's showy Concerto in C minor (Op. 44) and Liszt's Fantasia Hongroise. He played well, but the programme lacked variety. He was called to the platform at the close, and gave his "Menuet." Mr. Willy Hess performed Mr. Henschel's Ballade for violin in a most artistic manner. Mr. Henschel conducted the orchestra with his usual ability.

Miss Fanny Davies gave a concert at Princes' Hall on Wednesday afternoon, and the programme was devoted to the works of Clara and Robert Schumann. Mme. Schumann's pianoforte Trio in G minor is a carefully-written work; but the influence of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and her husband, is far too strong for us to be able to speak of it as an original one. The music was sympathetically interpreted by Miss Davies, Herr Straus, and Sig. Piatti. The concert-giver played the characteristic Kreieriana with much taste and expression, though, in some of the numbers, with scarcely sufficient vigour. Miss Fillunger sang in an artistic manner some interesting Lieder by Clara Schumann. The "Liebst du um Schönheit" is a little gem.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

THE BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

On antique paper, cloth, 4s. 6d.; hand-made paper, Roxburgh, 7s. 6d. net; Large Paper, 21s. net.

Newspaper Reporting in Olden Time and To-day.

By JOHN PENDLETON,
Author of "A History of Derbyshire," &c.

CONTENTS:—

Reporting in Olden Time.	A Gossip about Shorthand.
The Reporter in Parliament.	The Reporter's Work.
Incidents and Traditions of "The Gallery."	Some Experiences and Adventures of Reporters.
Reporting To-day in the "House."	Writings on Newspapers and Reporters.

In the same Series, price 4s. 6d. and 7s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION OF

How to Catalogue a Library.

By HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.,
Author of "How to Form a Library."

CONTENTS:—

Introduction on Cataloguing generally.	The Arrangement of a Catalogue.
The Battle of the Rules.	Something about MSS.
Print v. MS.	Rules for a Small Library.
How to Treat a Title-Page.	A List of Latinized Names of Places.
References and Subject Index.	A List of Classical Names.

An unusually copious Index is added.

"Mr. Wheatley's volume confers lustre upon the series in which it appears. Not only does it contain a large amount of bibliographical information, all conveyed in the pleasantest way, it is a practical treatise upon cataloguing. To all in control of libraries, to the collector as much as the librarian, the book directly appeals, and the information under the head of 'How to Treat a Title-Page' is of supreme value. For the benefit of his readers, moreover, is issued an abridged list of the Latin names of places, which to those who do not possess the two series of the invaluable 'Typographical Gazetteer' of Ottow will be of highest importance. Under the head of 'Dates' information which though known, of course, to bibliographers, is anything rather than a general possession, is furnished. In whatever light this little volume is regarded it is a prize. Its size is out of all proportion to its worth."

Notes and Queries.

Also, in the same Series, price 4s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION.

The Enemies of Books.

By the late WILLIAM BLADES,
Author of "The Biography and Typography of Wm. Caxton."

CONTENTS:—

Fire.	The Bookworm.
Water.	Other Vermin.
Gas and Heat.	Bookbinders.
Dust and Neglect.	Collectors.
Ignorance.	Servants and Children.

"To the book-lover every page of this monograph will be a delight, and so we commend it to all whom it may concern."—Literary World.

The other Volumes in the BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY are—

FOREIGN VISITORS in ENGLAND, and WHAT THEY THOUGHT OF US. By EDWARD SMITH
THE BOOK of NOODLES; Stories of Simpletons; or, Fools and their Follies. By W. A. CLOUSTON.
THE STORY of SOME FAMOUS BOOKS. By FREDERICK SAUNDERS.
GLEANINGS in OLD GARDEN LITERATURE. By W. C. HAZLITT.
THE DEDICATION of BOOKS. To Patron and Friend. By HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.
MODERN METHODS of ILLUSTRATING BOOKS.
THE LITERATURE of LOCAL INSTITUTIONS. By G. L. GOMME, F.S.A.
OLD COOKERY BOOKS and ANCIENT CUISINE. By W. C. HAZLITT.
HOW to FORM a LIBRARY. By HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Ready immediately, at all the Libraries, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME.

BY A FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great Ex-Chancellor.

Just ready, at all the Libraries, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth 10s. 6d.
INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS OF THE COURT OF THE TUILERIES.

THE EVE OF AN EMPIRE'S FALL.
Before the Franco-German War. By Madame CARETTE, Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

Third Edition, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, 6s. Authorised Translation.

MY MISTRESS, THE EMPRESS EUGÉNIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries. By her Private Reader, Madame CARETTE (née BOUVET).
"We recommend every one who admires good work to buy and read it."—Morning Post.

Cloth gilt, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; post free, 2s. 8d.
STANLEY; AND HIS HEROIC BELIEF OF EMIN PACHA. By E. P. SCOTT. With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.
"Mr. E. P. Scott, himself an African traveller, gives a clear, readable, and interesting narrative of the rescue Expedition, to which he has prefixed an account of Stanley's early career."—Vanity Fair.

London: DEAN & SON, 160a, Fleet Street, E.C.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE,

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl, R.A.; Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post to any address.

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11 LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,400,000.
PROFITS DIVIDED, £4,000,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS,
£7,700,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTBD. 1835.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS
THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipes and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5 lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,

Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free
LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J. ALLANSON PICTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
This Evening, at 8, THE GREEN BUSHES.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Gratian, and Albert Chevalier; Madames Elizaboth Robin, Carlotta Leclercq, Lester, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lily Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30 by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. C. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 8, THE HEAVENS.
Messrs. H. Kombe, Edward Highton, and Charles Hawtrey; Madames Maude Millet, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8, by A BAD PENNY.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.
To-night and Every Evening, at 8, will be acted an Original Farce, by Mr. A. W. Pinero, called THE CABINET MINISTER.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 8, SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.
Messrs. Charles Wyndham, G. Gladstone, W. Blakeley, W. Draycott, S. Valentine, F. Atherton; Madames M. A. Victor, E. Leyshon, Frances, E. Penrose, and Mary Moore.
Preceded, at 8.10, by LIVING TOO FAST.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, GEO. EDWARDS.
To-night, at 8, RUY BLAS AND THE BLAZE ROUE.
By A. C. Torr and Herbert F. Clark. Music by Herr Meyer Lutz. The dances by John D'Auben.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BERNBORN-THOM.
Every Evening, at 8.40, A VILLAGE PRIEST.
Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Allan, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Norreys, Mrs. Gaston Murray, Mrs. Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Lessee, Mr. F. J. HARRIS.
Manager, Mr. H. GITTUS LONSDALE.
This Evening, at 8, THE WHITE WITCH.
At 8.50, JOAN; OR THE BRIGANDS OF BLUEGORIA.
Messrs. Pella, Blapham, Lennor, Lamb, Power; Madames A. Fano, Pearce, Nicholson, Lowther, Chetwynd, Milla, Donilly, and the Misses Clarke.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THEODORA.
Messrs. W. H. Vernon, Charles Cartwright, Cecil Morton Yorke, George Bernage, George W. Cookburn, Alfred B. Cross, H. de Solia, H. Sturge, Charles Lander, G. L. Grange, and Leonard Boyne; Madames Dolorus, Drummond, Clarice Trevor, Marie Stuart, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGEE.
Every Evening, at 8.15, MAJORIE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Madames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNTON.
Every Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thornton, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe, O. Yorke, F. Grova, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Madames Winifred Emery, Hanbury, Colette, and Sylvia Hodson.
Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

MESSRS. D. C. HEATH & CO.'S SCHOOL BOOKS (BOSTON, U.S.A.).

HEATH'S PEDAGOGICAL LIBRARY.

- LECTURES on PEDAGOGY, Theoretical and Practical. By GABRIEL COMPAYRE. Professor in the Normal Schools of Fontenay and St. Cloud. Translated, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendix, by W. H. PAYNE. Crown 8vo, 6s.
- METHODS of TEACHING HISTORY. Edited by G. STANLEY HALL. Crown 8vo, 6s.
- BIBLIOGRAPHY of EDUCATION. Arranged under Subjects and Indexed under Authors. Collected and Edited by G. STANLEY HALL and J. M. MANSFIELD. Crown 8vo, 6s.
- INDUSTRIAL INSTRUCTION. A Pedagogic and Social Necessity. Together with a Critique upon Objections Advanced. By ROBERT SEIDEL. Translated by MARGARET K. SMITH. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- THE RULING PRINCIPLE of METHOD applied to EDUCATION. By ANTONIO ROEMISI SEBASTI. Translated by Mrs. W. GERT. Crown 8vo, 6s.
- LEONARD and GERTRUDE. By PESTALOZZI. Translated and Abridged by EVA CHAMING. With an Introduction by G. STANLEY HALL. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- HABIT and its IMPORTANCE in EDUCATION. An Essay in Pedagogical Psychology. By Dr. PAUL RADESTOCK. Translated by F. A. CASPARI. With an Introduction by G. STANLEY HALL. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- ÉMILE; or, Concerning Education. By JEAN JACQUES ROUSSEAU. With an Introduction and Notes by JULES STENG. Translated by ELEANOR WORTHINGTON. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

HEATH'S MODERN SCIENCE SERIES.

- ELEMENTS of INORGANIC CHEMISTRY. Descriptive and Qualitative. By JAMES H. SHEPARD. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.
- ELEMENTARY PRACTICAL PHYSICS. A Guide for the Physical Laboratory. By H. N. CHUTE, M.S. Crown 8vo, 6s.
- FIRST BOOK in GEOLOGY. Designed for the Use of Beginners. By N. S. SHALER, S.D. With 180 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.
- ELEMENTS of CHEMICAL ARITHMETIC. With a Short System of Elementary Qualitative Analysis. By J. MILNOR COIT, M.A. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- PRACTICAL ZOOLOGY. By P. B. COLTON, Professor of Natural Science, Illinois University. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- CHEMICAL PROBLEMS. By J. B. GRAYFIELD, Ph.D., and P. S. BURNS, B.S. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE STATE. Historical and Practical Politics. By W. WILSON, LL.D., Author of "Congressional Government." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TESTA. A Book for Boys. By PAOLO MANTEGAZZA. Translated by D. L. VENTURA. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

THE MANUAL TRAINING SCHOOL. By O. M. WOODWARD, Ph.D. With numerous Illustrations, from Life, of Shop Exercises in Woods and Metals. Medium 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE ESSENTIALS of METHOD. A Discussion of the Essential Form of Right Methods in Teaching. By CHARLES DE GARMO, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MANUAL of EMPIRICAL PSYCHOLOGY as an INDUCTIVE SCIENCE. A Text-Book for High Schools and Colleges. By Dr. GUSTAV ADOLF LINDNER. Translated by CHARLES DE GARMO, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

A GUIDE to the STUDY of NINETEENTH CENTURY AUTHORS. By L. MANNING HODGKINS, M.A. Contains Chapters on Scott, Lamb, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron, Shelley, Keats, Macaulay, Dickens, Thackeray, R. Browning, Mrs. Browning, Carlyle, George Eliot, Tennyson, Rossetti, Matthew Arnold, Ruskin, Irving, Bryant, Hawthorne, Longfellow, Emerson, Whittier, Holmes, and Lowell. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

INTRODUCTION to the STUDY of SHAKESPEARE. By HIRAM COBURN, LL.D. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

JUDITH. An Old English Epic Fragment. Edited, with Introduction, Translation, Complete Glossary, and various Indexes, by ALBERT S. COOK, Ph.D. Fcap. 4to, 6s.

MANUAL of DESCRIPTIVE GEOMETRY. With numerous Problems. By O. A. WALDO. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

COLLOQUIA LATINA. Adapted for Beginners. By BENJ. L. D'OGGE, M.A. Crown 8vo, 2s.

A DAY in ANCIENT ROME. By EDGAR S. SHUMWAY. With numerous Illustrations. Small 4to, 2s. 6d.

THE EARTH in SPACE. A Manual of Astronomical Geography. By EDWARD P. JACKSON. With numerous Illustrations. 24mo, 1s. 6d.

THE TEACHER'S MANUAL of GEOGRAPHY. I.—Hints to Teachers. II.—Modern Facts and Ancient Fancies. By JACQUES W. REDWAX. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

TOPICS in GEOGRAPHY. By W. F. NICHOLS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE NEW ARITHMETIC. Edited by SKYMOUR EATON. With Preface by TRUMAN HENRY SAFFORD, Ph.D. Fifteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

SIR THOMAS WYATT and his POEMS. By W. E. SIMONDS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HEATH'S MODERN LANGUAGE SERIES.

- PREPARATORY FRENCH READER. By O. B. SUPER, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- PRIMER of FRENCH LITERATURE. By F. M. WARREN, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- HISTORIETTES MODERNES. Recueillies et Annotées. By C. FONTAINE, B.L., LL.D. Vol. I., crown 8vo, 8s.
- LE MARI DE MADAME DE SOLANGE. By EMILE SOUVESSE. Edited, with English Notes, by O. B. SUPER, Ph.D. Paper, sewed, 1s.
- SEPT GRANDS AUTEURS du DIX-NEUVIÈME SIÈCLE. An Introduction to Nineteenth Century Literature. By ALGER FORTIER. Crown 8vo, 8s.
- CONFESSIONS D'UN OUVRIER. By EMILE SOUVESSE. Edited by O. B. SUPER, Ph.D. Paper, sewed, 1s. 6d.
- SELECTED POEMS from PREMIÈRES ET NOUVELLES MÉDITATIONS. By LAMARTINE. Edited, with Biographical Sketch and Notes, by GEORGE O. CURME. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- A PRACTICAL METHOD for LEARNING SPANISH. By ALEJANDRO YARRA. Sixth Edition, crown 8vo, 6s.
- ITALIAN GRAMMAR. By O. H. GRANDGENT, Harvard University. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.
- GERMAN READER for BEGINNERS in School or College. With Notes and Vocabulary. By EDWARD S. JOYNS, M.A. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- SHORT GERMAN GRAMMAR for High Schools and Colleges. By E. S. SHILDON. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- COLLOQUIAL EXERCISES and SELECT GERMAN READER for Schools and Colleges. By WILLIAM DEUTSCH. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- NIELS KLIM'S WALLFABRT IN DIE UNTERWELT. By LUDWIG HOLBERG. Edited by EUGENE H. BABBITT, Harvard University. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- DIE BRAUNE ERICA. By W. JENSEN. With English Notes by E. S. JOYNS. Paper, sewed, 1s.
- DIE JOURNALISTEN. By GUSTAV FREYTAG. Edited, with English Notes, by WALTER D. TOY, M.A. Paper, sewed, 7s. 6d.
- SCHILLER'S BALLADS. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by HENRY JOHNSON, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- ALI BABA and the FORTY THIEVES. Extracted from Dr. WEILL's German Translation of the Arabian Nights. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- A COURSE in SCIENTIFIC GERMAN. By HARRY BLAKE HODGES, Harvard University. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- DIE JUNGFRAU VON ORELEANS. By SCHILLER. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by BENJ. W. WELLS, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- TORQUATO TASSO. By GOETHE. Edited for the Use of Students, by CALVIN THOMAS. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- SEBENHEIM. By GOETHE. Edited, with an Introduction and Notes, by H. U. O. HUSS, Ph.D. Paper, sewed, 1s.
- NOVELLETEN-BIBLIOTHEK. Selected from the Best Writers. By Dr. W. BERNHARDT, with Notes. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.
- MINNA VON BARNHELM. By Von G. E. LESSING. With Introduction and Notes by SYLVESTER PRIMER, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.
- DER ZWERG NASE. With a Sketch of the Author's Life. By W. HAUFF. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- TRAUMERIEEN. By R. LEANDER. Edited and Annotated by A. N. VAN LARLY. Paper, sewed, 1s.
- PHOSPHORUS HOLLUNDER. By L. FRANCOIS. With Explanatory Notes by O. FAULHABER, Ph.D. Paper, sewed, 1s.

HEATH'S MONOGRAPHS on EDUCATION.

- MATHEMATICAL TEACHING and its MODERN METHODS. By TRUMAN HENRY SAFFORD, Ph.D. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- THE STUDY of LATIN in the PREPARATORY COURSE. By Prof. E. P. MORRIS. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- THE STUDY of REFUTIC. By Prof. JOHN F. GEESE, Ph.D. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- ENGLISH in the SCHOOLS. By Prof. F. O. WOODWARD. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- ENGLISH in the PREPARATORY SCHOOLS. By ERNEST W. HUFFCUT. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- HOW to TEACH READING and WHAT to READ in SCHOOL. By G. STANLEY HALL, Ph.D. Paper, sewed, 9d.
- MODERN PETROGRAPHY. An Account of the Application of the Microscope to the Study of Geology. By GEORGE HUNTINGTON WILLIAMS. Paper, sewed, 9d.

HEATH'S SCIENCE GUIDES.

1. ABOUT PEBBLES. By A. HYATT. Paper, sewed, 4d.
2. COMMON PLANTS. By G. L. GOODALE. Paper, sewed, 6d.
3. COMMERCIAL and other SPONGES. By A. HYATT. Fully Illustrated. Paper, sewed, 9d.
4. NATURAL HISTORY. By Mrs. AGASSIZ. With 44 Illustrations. Paper, sewed, 9d.
5. HYDROIDS, CORALS, &c. By A. HYATT. Beautifully Illustrated. Paper, sewed, 9d.
6. MOLLUSCA. By A. HYATT. With 17 Full-Page Illustrations. Paper, sewed, 1s.
7. WORMS and CRUSTACEA. By A. HYATT. Fully Illustrated. Paper, sewed, 1s.
12. MINERALS and ROCKS. By W. O. CROSBY. With Illustrations. Paper, sewed, 1s. 6d.
13. FIRST LESSONS on MINERALS. By E. H. RICHARDS. Paper, sewed, 4d.
14. HINTS for TEACHING PHYSIOLOGY. By H. P. BOWDITCH, M.D. Illustrated. Paper, sewed, 9d.
15. OBSERVATION LESSONS on COMMON MINERALS. By H. L. CLAPP. Paper, sewed, 1s.

WM. ISBISTER, LIMITED, 15 AND 16, TAVISTOCK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPPARD, Lorrain Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLIERS, 27, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 946.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1890.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
DR. GORDON HAKE'S THE NEW DAY, by MAC KENZIE BELL	417
BANCROFT'S HISTORY OF UTAH, by PROF. A. H. KEANE	418
MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD, by the Rev. J. OWEN	419
THE METAPHOR OF FRIAR BOZON, by F. YORK POWELL	420
NEW NOVELS, by G. COTTERELL	422
CURRENT LITERATURE	423
SOME COUNTRY BOOKS	424
NOTES AND NEWS	425
PUBLICATIONS OF SOCIETIES	426
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	427
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	428
ORIGINAL VERSE: "DYING," by the Hon. RODEN NOEL	429
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	430
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"Cockney," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray; Hanseln-Aselien , by W. H. Stevenson; The Vandals and Andalusia , by H. Krebs; Ships' Masts and Yards and the Sign of the Cross , by the Reviewer; "France and the Republic," by W. Markheim	436
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	438
MATHEMATICAL BOOKS	438
SOME BOOKS ON CLASSICAL PHILOLOGY	439
SCIENCE NOTES	440
PHILOLOGY NOTES	440
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	440
MYTHOLOGY AND MONUMENTS OF ANCIENT ATHENS, by TALFOURD ELY	441
THE BURLINGTON FINE ARTS CLUB, by F. WEDMOR	443
A COLLECTION OF BABYLONIAN TABLETS	443
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	444
STAGE NOTES	444
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	444

TYPE-WRITING.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS, Scientific, and of all descriptions. Legal Documents, Specifications, Plans, &c. COPIED with speed and accuracy. Dictations taken in Shorthand or Type-writing by expert Type-writers. Special success attained in work requiring delicacy and care. Highest testimonials. Pupils taught.—Misses E. B. & I. FARRAN 4, Southampton-street, Strand, London.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME ADRIER introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—27, Regent-street, N.W.

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES is the subject of the ESSAY for which prizes of TWENTY GUINEAS are offered by the LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED, of 3, George-yard, Lombard-street, London, E.C. Conditions forwarded upon receipt of a stamp for postage.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100 Mercer's-road, Tufnell Park, N.

MR. W. P. FRITH, R.A., has VACANCIES for TWO more PUPILS at his Studios, where he imparts a sound Art Education. A Separate Class for Ladies. Models provided.—Address, Ashenhurst, Sydenham Place, S.E.

LIMITED OWNERS' RESIDENCES ACTS, 1870-71.—Board of Agriculture.—Landed Proprietors wishing to restore or improve their mansions and other buildings under the above Acts can CONSULT Mr. JOHN HURCH, Architect, who res-ides in Ingestro Hall and other large country houses.—Address, P., John-street, Ad-lyth, London, W.C.

CATALOGUES.

BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.
New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 57, Eobor-square, London.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S NEW CATALOGUES.
THEOLOGICAL CATALOGUE.—Theology and Philosophy, chiefly Foreign. 1890.
ORIENTAL CATALOGUE.—Language, Literature, Antiquities, &c., of the East. 1890.
FRENCH CATALOGUE. 1890.
GERMAN CATALOGUE. 1890.
14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, and 20, S. Frederick-street, Edinburgh

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO.'S LIST.

Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ALEXANDER HERIOT MACKONOCHE: a Memoir. By E. A. T. Edited, with Preface, by EDWARD FRANCIS RUSSELL, M.A., St. Alban's, Holborn. With Portrait and Two Views. [This day.]

Demy 8vo.

THE TESTIMONY of TRADITION. By DAVID MACRITCHIE, Author of "Ancient and Modern Britons." With 20 Illustrations. [Next week.]

Demy 8vo, 16s.

TEXT-BOOK of PHYSIOLOGICAL and PATHOLOGICAL CHEMISTRY for PHYSICIANS and STUDENTS. By G. BUNGE, Professor of Physiological Chemistry at Fale. Translated from the Second German Edition by the late L. C. WOOLDRIDGE, M.D. [Next week.]

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

INTRODUCTION to FRESH-WATER ALGÆ. With an Enumeration of all the British Species. By M. C. COOKE, LL.D. With 18 Plates illustrating all the Genera. [Next week.]

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

THE COLOURS of ANIMALS: their Meaning and Use. Especially considered in the case of Insects. By EDWARD BAGNALL FOULTON, F.R.S. With Chromo-lithographic Frontispiece and 66 Figures in Text. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Medium 8vo, 7s. 6d.

VISITATIONS of ENGLISH CLUNIAN FOUNDATIONS. Translated from the Original Records in the National Library of France. By Sir G. F. DUCKETT, Bart.

Demy 8vo.

PRINCIPLES of NATURAL and SUPERNATURAL MORALS. By the Rev. H. HUGHES, M.A.

Vol. I.—NATURAL MORALS. Price 17s.

Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

DANTE'S TREATISE DE VULGARI ELOQUENTIA. Translated into English with Explanatory Notes. By A. G. FERRERS HOWELL.

LONDON: KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO., LIMITED.

NEW NOVEL BY W. E. NORRIS.

At all Booksellers and Libraries, cloth, 3s. 6d., with Frontispiece.

THE BAFFLED CONSPIRATORS. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "Misadventure," "Major and Minor," "My Friend Jim," &c.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

NEW STORY BY MRS. ALEXANDER.

At all Booksellers and Bookstalls, paper 1s., cloth 1s. 6d.

FORGING the FETTERS. By Mrs. Alexander, Author of "Her Dearest Foe," "The Wooing o't," &c.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

Just ready, cloth, elegant, price 3s. 6d. At all Booksellers and Libraries.

THREE NOTABLE STORIES:—"Love and Peril," "To Be or Not to Be," "The Melancholy Hussar," respectively by the Marquis of LORNE, K.T., Mrs. ALEXANDER, and THOMAS HARDY.

LONDON: SPENCER BLACKETT, 35, ST. BRIDE STREET, E.C.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c. BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE, 21, Albemarle-street, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at LEEDS, commencing on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.

PRESIDENT ELECT—

Sir FREDERICK AUGUSTUS ABEL, C.B., D.C.L., D.Sc., F.R.S., V.P.C.S.

NOTICE to CONTRIBUTORS of MEMOIRS.—Authors are reminded that, under an arrangement dating from 1871, the acceptance of Memoirs and the days on which they are to be read are now as far as possible determined by Organising Committees for the several Sections before the beginning of the Meeting. It has, therefore, become necessary, in order to give an opportunity to the Committees of doing justice to the several Communications, that each Author should prepare an Abstract of his Memoir of a length suitable for insertion in the published Transactions of the Association, and the Council request that he will send it, together with the original Memoir, by book-post on or before August 6, addressed thus: "General Secretaries, British Association, 21, Albemarle-street, London, W. For Section —." Authors who comply with this request and whose papers are accepted will be furnished before the Meeting with printed copies of their Reports or Abstracts. If it should be inconvenient to the Author that his paper should be read on any particular day, he is requested to send information thereof to the Secretaries in a separate note.

BRITISH INSTITUTION SCHOLARSHIPS.—All WORKS in COMPETITION for these SCHOLARSHIPS must be DELIVERED at the ENTRANCE to the WESTERN GALLERIES of the SCIENCE and ART DEPARTMENT, at the North End of Queen's Gate, South Kensington, on THURSDAY, JULY 17, or FRIDAY, JULY 18, between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m. No Works will under any circumstances be received after those dates. A form of Certificate required and a copy of the Regulations, &c., can be obtained on application by letter only (with stamped and directed envelope enclosed) addressed to the Trustees, British Institution Scholarship Fund, 19, York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C.
By order of the Trustees.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom; over 2,000 have passed.

- I. All Army Examinations.
- II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
- III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.

There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at Cramping; unsurpassed Staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CHETWODE CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.

MR. W. S. LOGEMAN, Principal of Newton School, Rock Ferry, is FORMING a small PARTY of BOYS to spend the SUMMER HOLIDAYS at some healthy Seaside place for recreation and study. Instruction in Modern Languages, Classics, or Mathematics as required. References given and required. Inclusive terms, £3 3s. a week, or £10 10s. for four weeks.—Particulars on application.

THE HENNESSY LIBRARY.

THE VALUABLE LIBRARY Of the late

WILLIAM M. HENNESSY, Esq., M.R.I.A.,

The Eminent Irish Scholar and Archaeologist,
Assistant Deputy Keeper of the Public Records,

COMPRISING AN IMPORTANT COLLECTION OF PRINTED BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS,
FACSIMILES of MANUSCRIPTS, STATE PAPERS,
RECORDS, THE MASTER of the ROLLS'
PUBLICATIONS, &c.;

ILLUSTRATIVE OF
The History, Antiquities, Language, Laws, Religion, Topography, Genealogy, Poetry, &c., of Ireland,

INCLUDING
Many Rare Works in good condition and enriched with numerous Manuscript Notes by the late learned owner,

WILL BE SOLD BY AUCTION,

BY
JOHN W. SULLIVAN,

AT HIS

LITERARY, ART, and GENERAL SALE ROOMS,

No. 8, D'OLIER STREET, DUBLIN,

On THURSDAY NEXT, 26th JUNE, and Following Day,

Commencing each day at 1 o'clock.

* Catalogues may be had from the Auctioneer.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.

LIBRARY of the late Rev. WILLIAM NICHOLS, M.A., F.S.A., Woodlands, Somerset.—It is respectfully announced that the important and valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS of the above-named Gentleman will be DISPOSED OF in the City of BATH in the EARLY AUTUMN by Messrs. POWELL & POWELL, at their Auction Mart.

Private buyers or members of the trade requiring information are requested to write to R. E. M. PEACH, 3, Bathwick Terrace, Bath, who will endeavour to answer all communications.
June 10, 1890.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.

The One Hundred and Thirteenth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s.

ALFRED D. FRIPP, R.W.S., Secretary.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEER HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY, 186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

I.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A LONDON TERMINUS.

	6 Months.	12 Months.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes " " " " " " " " " " " "	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Four " " " " " " " " " " " "	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Eight " " " " " " " " " " " "	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Fifteen " " " " " " " " " " " "	3 0 0	5 5 0

II.—FOR SUBSCRIBERS OBTAINING THEIR BOOKS FROM A COUNTRY BOOKSTALL—

	6 Months.	12 Months.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
For One Volume at a time	0 12 0	1 1 0
(Novels in more than One Volume are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Two Volumes " " " " " " " " " " " "	0 17 6	1 11 6
(Novels in more than Two Volumes are not available for this class of Subscription.)
For Three " " " " " " " " " " " "	1 3 0	2 2 0
For Four " " " " " " " " " " " "	1 8 0	2 10 0
For Six " " " " " " " " " " " "	1 15 0	3 3 0
For Twelve " " " " " " " " " " " "	3 0 0	5 5 0

III.—FOR COUNTRY BOOK CLUBS, READING SOCIETIES, &c.

For Twenty-four Volumes at a time	5 5 0	9 9 0
For Thirty-six " " " " " " " " " " " "	8 0 0	14 2 6
For Forty-eight " " " " " " " " " " " "	10 10 0	18 16 0
For Sixty " " " " " " " " " " " "	13 0 0	23 9 0
For Seventy-two " " " " " " " " " " " "	15 10 0	28 2 0
For Eighty-four " " " " " " " " " " " "	18 0 0	32 15 0

For every additional Twelve Volumes, £4 12s. 6d.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

Ready immediately, at all the Libraries, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME.

BY A FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great Ex-Chancellor.

Just ready, at all the Libraries, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth 10s. 6d.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS OF THE COURT OF THE TUILERIES.

THE EVE OF AN EMPIRE'S FALL.
Before the Franco-German War. By Madame CARETTE,
Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

Third Edition, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, 6s. Authorised Translation.

MY MISTRESS, THE EMPRESS
EUGÉNIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries. By her
Private Reader, Madame CARETTE (née BOUVET).
"We recommend every one who admires good work to buy and read it."—Morning Post.

Cloth gilt, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; post free, 2s. 8d.
STANLEY; AND HIS HEROIC
BELIEF OF EMIN PACHA. By E. P. SCOTT.
With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.
"Mr. E. P. Scott, himself an African traveller, gives a clear, readable, and interesting narrative of the rescue Expedition, to which he has prefixed an account of Stanley's early career."—Vanity Fair.

London: DEAN & SON, 180a, Fleet Street, E.C.

NOW READY.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. BENNETT-EDWARDS.
Crown 8vo, 350 pp., 2s. 6d.

SAINT MONICA.

SAINT MONICA.

SAINT MONICA: a Wife's Love Story.
By Mrs. BENNETT-EDWARDS, Author of "The Mammon of Unrighteousness," "Parishes," "In Sheep's Clothing," "Loyella," "A Tantalus Cup," "His Story and Hers," &c.

Bristol: J. W. ARROWSMITH.

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., Limited.

Just published, 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

ON RELIGIOUS LIBERTY in RUSSIA.

Open Letter to the Head of the Russian Synod, Privy Counsellor Constantine Pobiedonosteff.

By HERMANN DALTON.

Eight Editions were sold within three months of the German Edition of this Pamphlet.

ASHER & CO., 13, Bedford-street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

NEARLY READY.

1 vol., demy 4to, untrimmed edges, cloth, gilt top, printed on fine Paper
Ingros, with Etched Illustrations, and Plans, hand coloured,
price £1 11s. 6d.

THE ART and PRACTICE of LAND-SCAPE GARDENING.

By HENRY ERNEST MILNER, F.L.S. Assoc., M.Inst.C.E.

SIMPSON, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., Limited,
Stationers' Hall Court, London.

NEW REALISTIC NOVEL BY EUGÈNE STRACEY.

Picture boards, 2s.; cloth extra, 3s. 6d., at all Bookstalls and Libraries.

HIDDEN in the LIGHT.
By EUGÈNE STRACEY.

DIGBY & LONG, Publishers, 18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, E.C.

Now ready.

INDUCTION and DEDUCTION: a Historical and Critical Sketch of Successive Philosophical Conceptions respecting the Relations between Inductive and Deductive Thought, and other Essays. By CONSTANCE C. W. NADW. Edited by H. LEWIS,
M.D., Army Medical Department. With Memoir and Portrait. One vol., 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

BICKERS & SON, 1, Leicester-square, W.C.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING
for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered
Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.

G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C. and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancerylane, W.C.

TO AUTHORS.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG,
PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines
Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free

IMMEDIATELY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 21s., cloth.

A Rejoinder to ROBERT ELSMERE.

PAUL NUGENT, Materialist.

By HELEN F. HETHERINGTON (GULLIFER)

AND

The Rev. H. DARWIN BURTON.

A reply to Robert Elsmere, written in a thoroughly orthodox spirit, and quite abreast of the latest theories of Physical Science, and German anti-Christian criticism.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, LONDON.

JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

ESSAYS, SPECULATIVE and SUGGESTIVE.

By JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS.

2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

[This day.

DR. WILLIAM JUNKER.

TRAVELS IN AFRICA.

By Dr. WILLIAM JUNKER.

With 38 Full-page Plates and 125 Illustrations in the Text. Translated from the German by Prof. KEANE. Demy 8vo, 21s.

[Now ready.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

NEW NOVEL BY F. C. PHILIPS AND C. J. WILLS.

At all Libraries, 2 vols., 21s.

THE SCUDAMORES.

By F. C. PHILIPS, Author of "As in a Looking Glass," &c., and
C. J. WILLS, Author of "The Pit Town Coronet," &c.

GARDNER & CO., 26, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

HOLIDAYS in NORMANDY.—M. BAR-
BIER, French Master, Glasgow Athenaeum, Examiner to the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, RECEIVES at his Country
Residence in Normandy, for JULY and AUGUST, a few GENTLEMEN desirous of improving their FRENCH by a stay in France. Beautiful country. Every comfort. Tennis. Backward Candidates Coached for Examinations. Highest references.—Particulars, M. BARBIER, Ecrosville, par Louviers, Eure, France.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free
LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of
the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J.
ALLANSON PIOTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—
The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.
(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

THE NEWBERY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED, Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

MISSIONS to the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES. By Rev. F. ARNOLD,
M.A.

THE PRACTICE of MEDICINE in the ANCIENT EAST. By Rev. A.
GAYE, M.A., LL.D.

PILGRIMAGES to ENGLISH SHRINES in the MIDDLE AGES. By
A. G. HILL, Esq.

EMINENT CHURCHMEN.—II. GEORGE HERBERT. By W. H. DAVEN-PORT ADAMS.

LEGEND of the BRIAR ROSE. (Poetry.) By Rev. A. GURNEY, M.A.

A CONFESSOR of the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. (Illustrated.) By Rev. Prebendary RANDOLPH.

A VISIT to LITTLE GIDDING. By E. WALFORD.

FLEMISH PAINTERS.—II. VAN DYCK. (Illustrated.) By G. S.
MACQUOID.

RIVERS of the OCEAN. By AGNES GIBBERN.

"THE VICOMTE'S BRIDE." Chapters I., II. By ERNE STUART.

"A GREAT SUCCESS." (A Short Story.) By E. FAIRFAX BYRNE

"CHANGED LOTS." Chapters I., II. (Illustrated.) By FRANCES ARM-STRONG.

ART COMPETITION.
Sermon Outlines—Instructions on the Creed—Lives of the Saints for Children—Biblical Questions—Reviews—"Useful Books" List—Correspondence, &c., &c.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

"One of the best historical novels since 'The Last Days of Pompeii.'"—Saturday Review.

NOTICE—A SECOND EDITION of "ACTE," by HUGH WEST-BURY, will be ready at all Libraries on TUESDAY AFTERNOON NEXT.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

PEARL POWDER.
2 vols.

By ANNIE EDWARDES,
Author of
"Archie Lovell," "Ought we to Visit her?"
&c.

MADAME LEROUX.
8 vols.

By FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE,
Author of
"That Unfortunate Marriage,"
"Black Spirits and White,"
&c.

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE.
3 vols.

By KATHARINE
WYLDE,
Author of
"An Ill-Regulated Mind,"
"A Dreamer," &c.

HER THREE LOVERS.
2 vols.

By ALICE M. DIEHL,
Author of
"The Knave of Hearts,"
"The Garden of Eden,"
&c.

THE FAILURE of ELIZABETH.
8 vols

By E. FRANCES
POYNTER,
Author of
"Among the Hills,"
"My Little Lady,"
&c.

BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Six-shilling volumes to be obtained at all booksellers at home and abroad.
Complete lists post-free on application.

The latest additions to the series are

QUEENIE'S WHIM, by Rosa M. Carey.

THE ROGUE, by W. E. Norris.

AN UGLY DUCKLING, by Henry Erroll.

ARDATH: the story of a Dead Self, by MARIE CORELLI.

SIR CHARLES DANVERS. [This day.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

DAVID NUTT 270, STRAND.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A FULL ACCOUNT AND COLLATION OF THE GREEK CURSIVE CODEX EVANGELIUM 604.

With Two Facsimiles.

Together with Ten Appendices, containing

(A) The Collation of a Manuscript in his own possession. (B) A reprint with corrections of Scrivener's list of differences between the editions of Stephen 1550 and Elzevir 1624, Beza 1665 and the Complutensian. (C) A full and exact comparison of the Elzevir editions of 1624 and 1682. (D) Facsimile of Codex Paul. 247 (Cath. Eps. 210), with correction of previous descriptions. (E) Report of a visit to the Philipps MSS. (F) Report of a visit to the Public Library at Bale, with Facsimile of Erasmus' second MS. Evan. 2, and a collation of Codex Apoc. No. 15. (G) Report of a visit to the Public Library at Geneva, with corrections of Cellerier's collation of Evan. 75, as supplied to Scholz. (H) Report of a visit to the Library of Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., U.S.A., with information concerning the sacred Greek codices there. (I) Some further information concerning Codex 15, an Evangelistary at Andover, Mass., U.S.A. (J) Note on 1 Tim. iii. 15.

By HERMAN O. HOSKIER.

280 pages, royal 8vo, 4 Facsimile Plates, buckram, 21s.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS.

Essays in Appreciation: Literature.

By WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY.

Editor of the Scotts Observer,
Author of "A Book of Verses."
Fcap. 8vo, 286 pages, cloth, 5s.

N.B.—80 copies are printed on Japanese paper, of which 15 are for sale at £2 2s. net.

All American orders should be addressed to Messrs. Scribner & Welford.

PAUL HEYSE: INCURABLE.

Translated by Mrs. H. W. EVE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

MALORY'S MORTE D'ARTHUR.

Edited by Dr. H. O. SOMMER.

Part II., comprising the Critical Introduction: Apparatus of Various Readings, Notes on Malory's Language, Index of Persons and Places, Glossary, &c., has been sent out to Subscribers.

Part III., comprising the Literary Introduction (including Mr. Lang's Essay upon Malory), later in the year.

D. Nutt begs to remind students of English Literature that Dr. Sommer's Edition is the only complete and scholarly edition of Malory. The Three Parts, comprising upwards of 1,200 pages, royal 8vo, magnificently printed on thick paper with wide margin, £1 10s. net; or a few Large-Paper Copies, £2 5s. net.

SCOTTISH HISTORY BY CONTEMPORARY WRITERS.

THE DAYS OF JAMES IV.

1488-1513.

Extracts from the Royal Letters, Polydore Vergil and Hall, Major, Boece, Myin, the State Papers, &c.

Arranged and Edited by

G. GREGORY SMITH, M.A., Edin., B.A. Oxon.
Pp. 320, cloth, cut edges, 1s.; uncut edges, 1s. 3d.

NOW BEING SUBSCRIBED.

PAINTER'S PALACE OF PLEASURE.

Edited by J. JACOBS.

To form 3 vols., 4to, Small Paper (500 Copies); or royal 4to, Large Paper (50 Copies).

Subscription price, £1 2s. Small, £2 5s. Large Paper
Full Prospectus on application.

* The "Palace of Pleasure," consisting chiefly of Translations of Italian Novels, was the great store-house whence Shakespeare and the other Elizabethan Dramatists drew their plots.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NOTICE.

MR. STANLEY'S NEW WORK.

Owing to delay with the American Edition, Messrs. Sampson Low & Co. announce that their Edition cannot be issued until SATURDAY, the 28th inst.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

THE HOUSE on the SCAR: a Tale of South Devon. By BERTHA THOMAS, Author of "Proud Malise," "Cressida," &c. 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"The story is well told, and the clever treatment of the various situations more than makes up for any lack of freshness in the materials of the plot." Scotsman.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By E. RENTOUL ESLER. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count PAUL P.—Edited by FRANK HARKUT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.
"The book is vividly written and abounds in excitement of various kinds."—Athenaeum

THE STORIES of the THREE BURGARS. By FRANK R. STOCKTON, Author of "Buddar Grange," "The Hundredth Man," &c. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, boards, 1s.

SPRINGHAVEN: a Tale of the Great War. By R. D. BLACKMORE Author of "Lorna Doone," &c. With numerous illustrations by Alfred Parsons and F. Barnard. Small post 8vo, cloth, 6s.
"The story is one of Mr. Blackmore's best. A fine touch of romance reveals the author of 'Lorna Doone' on almost every page." Saturday Review.

Low's Standard Library of Travel.

THE HEART of AFRICA: being Three Years' Travels and Adventures in the Unexplored Regions of Central Africa. By Dr. GEORG SCHWEINFURTH. New Edition. 2 vols., crown 8vo. Numerous illustrations and Map. Cloth, 3s. 6d. per volume.

TWO KINGS of UGANDA; or, Life by the Shores of the Victoria Nyanza. Being an Account of a Residence of Six Years in Eastern Equatorial Africa. By Rev. ROBT. P. ASHE, F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S., &c. New and Cheaper Edition. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Now ready, price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

JULY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

THALIA: a Poem. THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH.
PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the Illustrious Tartarin II. ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 24 Illustrations, drawn by Louis Rossé, F. de Mirbach, &c.
A FAMOUS CHAPBOOK VILLAIN. HOWARD PYLE. 4 Illustrations, drawn by Howard Pyle.
A POETESS: a Story. MARY E. WILKINS.
SOME COLONIAL and REVOLUTIONARY LETTERS. FREDERICK DANIEL.
THE MOONLIGHT of COUNTY OLARE: a Story. JOSEPH STUBBS.
ARCHITECTURE and DEMOCRACY. ROBERT S. PHABODY.
TRUTH and UNTRUTH: a Story. MAT ORIN.
TEXAN TYPES and CONTRASTS. LEE C. HARRY. 17 Illustrations.
SOCIAL LIFE in OXFORD. ETHEL M. ARNOLD. 8 Illustrations, from Drawings by Joseph Pownell, &c.
THE SOAREBROW: a Story. Illustrated. S. P. MCLAREN GREENE.
GIOSEUE CARDUCCI, and the HELLENIC REACTION in ITALY. FRANK SEWALL.
TREASURY NOTES and NOTES on the TREASURY L. E. CHITTENDEN.
A DEAD SOLDIER: a Poem. GEORGE EDGAR MONTGOMERY.
TWO LETTERS: a Story. BRANDER MATTHEWS.
BALTIC RUSSIA. HENRY LANSDOWN, D.D. 9 Illustrations.
&c., &c.; 70 Illustrations in all.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED),
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 1890.

No. 946, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The New Day: Sonnets. By Thomas Gordon Hake. Edited, with a Preface, by W. Earl Hodgson. (Remington.)

It was Dante Rossetti's elaborate review of Madeline and other Poems in the ACADEMY of 1st February, 1871, that first directed prominent attention to the remarkable originality of Dr. Gordon Hake's work; and it is from this review, not as here stated from Rossetti's subsequent review of Dr. Hake's Parables and Tales in the Fortnightly, that Mr. Earl Hodgson quotes in the preface to the volume under notice. In both articles—articles which contained enough original criticism to have enriched a treatise on the art of poetry—Rossetti claimed for Dr. Hake the position of a writer whose genius and whose style were unique. Up to that time the very originality of Dr. Gordon Hake's poetry had, perhaps, caused it to be neglected. But now, following in Rossetti's path, other critics turned their attention to Dr. Hake's verse, and he has since held a place of his own among his contemporaries.

Madeline, however, full as it was of brilliant and often splendid passages, was too remote in diction and too difficult in metre for anything like general acceptance; and it was what Dr. Hake called "parables"—a series of shorter poems in simple metres following the chief poem in the volume—which chiefly kept it in remembrance. Hence, not until the publication of Parables and Tales, which followed Madeline and other Poems, did the author procure more than a succès d'estime. This volume, beautifully illustrated by Mr. Arthur Hughes, and issued in a binding decorated with one of Rossetti's most characteristic designs, contained, in a revised form, the "parables" in the Madeline volume, among which I may name "Old Souls," "The Lily of the Valley," and "The Deadly Nightshade." It also contained, besides other exquisite poems, "The Cripple" (the simple pathos of which is irresistible), and "The Blind Boy," suggested by the touching story of Philip Marston and his devoted sister. If strong human interest, joined to adequate poetic expression, suffice to make poems immortal, then, surely, neither "The Cripple" nor "The Blind Boy" will die.

Chief among Dr. Hake's faults is his tendency towards inversions. These had always disfigured and weakened his verse, and even Parables and Tales was not entirely free from them. Take the following stanza from "The Blind Boy" as an example:—

"The wind is balmy on my cheek,
But now I feel the rain-drop plash,
Let us," he said, "the woodland seek,
And hear it on the foliage dash.
There the ground-ivy we will tread,
And through the grove its perfume spread."

But in New Symbols, the masterly volume which followed Parables and Tales, and in which appeared "The Snake Charmer," "The Birth of Venus," "Ortrud's Vision," and "Ecce Homo," this infirmity was conquered or nearly so. Dr. Hake's three subsequent volumes, however, Maiden Ecstasy, Legends of the Morrow, and The Serpent Play, although rich in the qualities especially associated with his name, did not entirely satisfy the expectations that had been formed from his earlier work. The poet's vein of originality as regards subject was unexhausted, but in style there was undoubtedly a retrogression. His liability to fall into vague forms of expression, enfeebled by old-fashioned inversions, returned, stifling the imaginative glow of his work. Yet such poems as "The Palmist," and a few others, were equal to the earlier masterpieces by which his position had become assured. No student of Victorian poetry can now pass by his work unexamined, and the volume under discussion has been awaited with interest. As the work of an octogenarian, whose previous verses received the cachet of authoritative criticism, it is sure to attract attention.

The first thing that will strike and even surprise the reader will be the fact that one whose previous work was in metres not much used now has written a sequence of ninety-three sonnets. For me, these sonnets have a special interest. When, in my recent introductory essay to Mr. Eyles's Popular Poets of the Period, I urged our poets not to neglect entirely the simple sonnet of alternate rhymes for the Petrarchan form, now so greatly in vogue, I little expected to be so soon reviewing a book of sonnets in the form which Shakspeare and Drayton have made classical. Still less did I anticipate that a distinguished poet and parable-writer like Dr. Hake would select this form of poetry for dealing with a subject so important as that of "the new day" opened up to the poets of the future by the revelations of modern science.

I do not question, however, that Dr. Hake has been well advised in his selection of the form of these rich and musical poems. No doubt there are many poetical effects which, though peculiarly suited to the sonnet of octave and sestet, are out of the compass of the Shaksperian form. But this disadvantage, as I have hinted in the essay above referred to, is more than compensated by sweetness and continuity of flow. Probably what will most attract the reader of this volume is the substance, not the form, of these poems. Opening with some delightful verses descriptive of George Borrow in the gorse and ferns of Surrey, and of Rossetti in his hermit retreats at Kelmscott Manor and Bognor, the series afterwards passes into an impassioned appeal to another friend of the poet's, the fellow-student of Nature to whom the book is dedicated, to utilise the rich material afforded to poets by science and by the progress of modern thought.

According to the preface of Mr. Earl Hodgson, Dr. Hake stands almost alone among our poets in having gone through that study in natural science which he "boldly declares to be a necessary part of the poet's equipment." If this be so—and I have no knowledge to warrant my challenging the statement—the place this little volume will take in contemporary poetry will be a very special one. Dr. Hake says:—

"Genius and Poetry should still advance
As Nature year by year extends her pale,
Till widens past all reach the wide expanse,
Disclosing heights that only She can scale.
Science fulfils the poet's prophecy—
Brings close the landscape that he saw afar,
Even as the glass that takes and gives the sky
Brings home from realms of cloud some burning star.
So even within the farthest galaxy,
The science-poet knows what worlds are growing,
Where Nature's votaries of all wisdom free,
With far-off thought akin to his are glowing."

The editor, in discussing the question whether the scientific study of Nature does or does not in a general way lead to a distaste for poetic art, quotes recent words of Dr. Wendell Holmes, which, as coming from a poet, are astonishing. Mr. Earl Hodgson contrasts Dr. Holmes's cynicism on the subject of poetic art with Dr. Hake's fervour—a fervour so high, and an inspiration so exalted for that "new day" which science is to bring to mankind, that the latter even foresees a time when the great poetic masters of an older day will be deprived of some of their lustre.

The name of the friend to whom the poet's address is made is withheld; but the earlier sonnets of the book show that he was one of a small group of whom Rossetti was the centre at a period of his career upon which neither Mr. Hall Caine, Mr. William Sharp, nor even Mr. Joseph Knight have dwelt. These personal sonnets will recommend the book to many readers whom Dr. Hake's enthusiasm about science may, perhaps, fail to arouse. They are so vivid and so beautiful that I cannot refrain from quoting two of them.

"In the unbroken silence of the mind
Thoughts creep about us, seeming not to move,
And life is back among the days behind—
The spectral days of that lamented love—
Days whose romance can never be repeated.
The sun of Kelmscott through the foliage gleaming,
We see him, life-like, at his easel seated,
His voice, his brush, with rival wonders teeming.
These vanished hours, where are they stored away?
Hear we the voice, or but its lingering tone?
Its utterances are swallowed up in day;
The gabled house, the mighty master gone.
Yet are they ours: the stranger at the hall—
What dreams he of the days we there recall."

"O, happy days, with him who once so loved us!
We loved as brothers, with a single heart,
The man whose iris-woven pictures moved us
From Nature to her blazoned shadow—Art.
How often did we trace the nestling Thames
From humblest waters on his course of might Down where the weir the bursting current stems,
There sat till evening grew to balmy night,
Veiling the weir whose roar recalled the strand
Where we had listened to the wave-lipped sea,
That seemed to utter plaudits while we planned
Triumphal labours of the day to be.
The words were his: 'Such love can never die';
The grief was ours when he no more was nigh."

In descriptions of Nature Dr. Hake was specially strong in his earlier volumes; and, in this respect, the present sonnets show no falling off. Here is a description of the Thames near its source which is worthy of Wordsworth himself.

"Like some sweet water-bell, the tinkling rill
Still calls the flowers upon its misty bank
To stoop into the stream and drink their fill.
And still the shapeless rushes, green and rank,

Seem lounging in their pride round those retreats,
Watching slim willows dip their thirsty spray.
Slowly a loosened weed another meets;
They stop, like strangers, neither giving way.
We are here surely if the world, forgot,
Glides from oversight into the charm, unbidden;
We are here surely at this witching spot,—
Though Nature in the reverie is hidden.
A spell so holds our captive eyes in thrall,
It is as if a play pervaded all."

Everyone will agree with what the editor says about the fine and loving nature which the poet discloses in almost every sonnet in this volume. They are "Without a parallel," says Mr. Earl Hodgson, "until we bring into comparison the sonnets of Shakspeare himself. In this aspect, indeed, in the soul-absorption of friendship, they are more like that wonderful and unapproachable sonnet sequence than anything else in English poetry."

Of the truth of this remark let the following sonnet be given as an example.

"Friendship is love's full beauty unalloyed
With passion that may waste in selfishness,
Fed only at the heart and never cloyed;
Such is our friendship, ripened but to bless.
It draws the arrow from the bleeding wound
With cheery look that makes a winter bright;
It saves the hope from falling to the ground,
And turns the restless pillow towards the light.
To be another's in his dearest want,
At struggle with a thousand racking throes,
When all the balm that heaven itself can grant
Is that which friendship's soothing hand bestows!
How joyful to be joined in such a love
We two,—may it portend the days above!"

It is chiefly in the personal sonnets of this kind that Dr. Hake seems to break through the fetters of antiquated method, and to speak out in his natural voice. Those enfeebling and rather irritating inversions to which he returned in the volumes succeeding New Symbols disfigure too many of the present sonnets; but the moment his imagination becomes warmed by his affection for Rossetti, or for Borrow, or for other friends, it beams with a brightness which would be striking even in a young man, but is wonderful in a poet who is said to have passed his eighty-first year. I cannot do better, both for my readers and for Dr. Hake, than close this article with one of these personal sonnets descriptive, as the editor tells us, of Rossetti at Cheyne Walk.

"Sitting with him, his tones as Petrarch's tender,
With many a speaking vision on the wall,
The fire, a-blaze, flashing the studio fender,
Closed in from London shouts and ceaseless brawl—
'Twas you brought Nature to the visiting,
Till she herself seemed breathing in the room,
And Art grew fragrant in the glow of spring
With homely scents and gorse and heather bloom,
Or sunbeams shone by many an Alpine fountain,
Fed by the waters of the forest stream;
Or glacier glories in the rock-girt mountain,
Where they so often fed the poet's dream;
Or else was mingled the rough billow's glee
With cries of petrels on a sullen sea."

A specially interesting feature of the volume is the frontispiece—an admirable reproduction of the portrait of Dr. Hake by Rossetti, which was exhibited after the painter's death at the Burlington Club.

MACKENZIE BELL,

"HISTORY OF THE PACIFIC STATES OF NORTH AMERICA."—Vol. XXI., Utah. By Hubert Howe Bancroft. (San Francisco.)

IN some respects the present volume compares favourably with most others of the series. It is less discursive; and, with rare exceptions, the style is more sober and freer from the "high-faluting" language which unfortunately forms such a conspicuous feature of this bulky compilation. The history of Utah practically resolves itself into a history of the Mormons; for before the exodus from Nauvoo and foundation of Great Salt Lake City, the vast territory was an almost uninhabited wilderness, with no white settlements of any kind, and traversed only by the teams of emigrants seeking new homes on the shores of the Pacific. Hence the author has been able to dispose of the pre-Mormon times (1540 to 1846) in two short chapters, wisely devoting all the rest of the volume to what may be fairly described as a tolerably exhaustive treatise on the whole subject of the Mormon movement. Thus a considerable section is occupied with events ranging from 1823 to 1846, which occurred not in Utah, but in the more easterly States of Missouri and Illinois. As these states do not fall within the general scope of the work, no repetition will be involved by an arrangement which has for the reader the great advantage of dealing in its entirety with the most remarkable religious manifestation of modern times.

But in his general treatment of the subject, Mr. Bancroft seems almost to abdicate his functions as an historian. Possibly through fear of offending susceptibilities, he has deliberately adopted a plan which practically consists in letting both parties have their say and fight it out between them. He says:

"I have deemed it but fair, in presenting the early history of the church, to give respectful consideration to, and a sober recital of, Mormon faith and experiences, common and miraculous. The story of Mormonism, therefore, as told in the text, is from the Mormon standpoint and based entirely on Mormon authorities, while in the notes I give in full all anti-Mormon arguments and counter-statements. . . . In following this plan I only apply to the history of Utah the same principles employed in all my historical efforts—namely, to give all the facts on every side pertinent to the subject."

But surely something more than this is expected of the historian, who should not only give "facts"—the chronicler does this—but weigh statements, sift evidence, and thus help the reader to some definite conclusions. Take a crucial incident which occurred at the very dawn of Mormonism—Martin Harris's visit to New York, where he submits to Professor Anthon and others a copy of the characters from Joseph Smith's pretended divinely-revealed gold plates. In a note is given Anthon's letter exposing the fraud, and so far so good. But in the text the lying Mormon statement that Prof. Anthon and Dr. Mitchell pronounce the characters to be "Egyptian, Syriac, Chaldaic, and Arabic," is allowed to stand unchallenged by editorial comment. Worse still, in the note itself a seeming attempt is made to weaken the force of Anthon's exposure by the extraordinary remark that, "It is but fair to state that Smith never claimed that the characters were the ordinary Greek or Hebrew, but were what he called Reformed Egyptian." And here the matter is left, although everything turns on the genuine or spurious nature of these "Reformed Egyptian" characters. One might almost suppose that Mr. Bancroft attached some weight to Smith's plea, introducing it with the words, "It is but fair to state." Does he then personally believe in the possible existence of this "Reformed Egyptian"? And if not, was it not his duty to expose the absurdity of the thing? Elsewhere we are told that the word "Mormon" is neither Greek nor derived from Greek, as had been asserted by some "Gentile," but comes from the "Reformed Egyptian" mon, good, and more contracted to mor, so that Mor-mon means literally "more good." And this seriously, or at all events without comment! In the same way the etymology of Mormon's son Moroni, by whom Smith was favoured with his first revelation, is doubtless to be had by reading the name backwards, as thus: I-no-mor, where no is contracted for know, implying that Moroni was a greater than Mormon himself.

Owing to the peculiar view taken by Mr. Bancroft of his duty as an impartial expositor, much of the text gives somewhat the impression of having been written, not merely by a partisan, but by one of the "saints," the notes being afterwards added as a sort of corrective. Thus, of Nauvoo we are told that "hither came they to the city of their god, to the mountain of his holiness." And again: "To the saints it is indeed a place of refuge, the City of Nauvoo, the Holy City, the City of Joseph." Even when obliged to speak for himself, our author utters but an uncertain sound; his language becomes vague and contradictory, as in the summing up of Brigham Young's character:

"He was a sincere man, or if an impostor, he was one who first imposed upon himself. He was not a hypocrite; knave in the ordinary sense of the term he was not; though he has been a thousand times called both. If he was a bad man he was still a great man, and the evil that he did was done with honest purpose."

What sort of impression is the average reader to derive from language of this sort, with its if's and an's and its saving clauses, except that the writer has either not made up his mind, or else is afraid to speak it out. Needless to say that every effort is made to exonerate Brigham in the horrible business of the Mountain Meadows Massacre. It is allowed that there was cause for suspicion, but "no fair colour of testimony" to implicate him or his colleagues. Yet to the ordinary understanding he seems sufficiently implicated by his language before and conduct after the event, and it is not denied that on most frivolous grounds he persistently evaded his duty of bringing the guilty to justice. Partisanship is also betrayed in the assertion that Lee alone was guilty, for with Lee were associated several other Mormons, who afterwards "pledged themselves by the most solemn oaths to stand by each other, and always to insist that the deed was done entirely by the Indians."

But apart from this bias, the work is undoubtedly a valuable contribution to the history of the Latter-day Saints. A vast amount of information is brought to bear on the subject; and this, combined with the copious bibliography, constitutes the volume a standard book of reference for everything connected with the rise and growth of Mormonism. There are many just appreciations; and some branches of the subject, such as the question of polygamy, are ably handled. Here the plan of allowing both sides to have their say is less objectionable, as it is clearly a question for at least academic argument. But even here the historian still maintains a hesitating attitude; and while allowing that a polygamic theocracy cannot be regarded "as conducive to the highest culture," nevertheless deprecates the use of the force required to remove such an excrescence from the body politic. The reader of Mrs. Stenhouse's book will remember that one of the gravest charges brought against the Saints was the secrecy for a long time maintained on this point, so that while the doctrine was openly avowed in Utah, the missionaries in Europe were thundering against it as an abomination, "such as none but a corrupt heart could have conceived." This detestable duplicity, by which thousands of dupes were beguiled, especially in England and Scandinavia, is admitted by Mr. Bancroft; but all he has to say on the subject is that "for a time, in so far as possible, the practice of polygamy in Illinois and Utah was kept secret by the missionaries in England and in Europe." Well, a Mormon might have put it in this cold-blooded way; but something more might surely have been expected from an impartial writer who had not "abdicated his functions as an historian."

The student of phonetics will be interested to know that an account is given of the attempt made at Utah in 1853 to introduce a new system of orthography for the purpose of simplifying the spelling of the English language. The letters, thirty-four altogether, are here arranged without any regard for their physiological relations, but on the simple principle that each sign should represent a single sound and conversely. The Book of Mormon, a primer, and some other documents were actually printed in this curious alphabet. It was also used in keeping Brigham's private ledger, probably as a convenient sort of cryptogram; but all efforts at introducing it into the schools and into general use necessarily ended in failure. Advocates of a reformed spelling do not sufficiently bear in mind that the success of a uniform script must largely depend on a uniform pronunciation, which is unattainable over a wide area. Hence a conventional element must to some extent enter into all orthographic systems, in which ideal perfection is visionary.

A. H. KEANE.

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Theology and Piety alike Free: from the Point of View of Manchester New College, Oxford. (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co.)

In a prefatory notice "to the reader" the editor of this volume tells us

"It is right to say that this book is in no sense official, either on the part of Manchester New College or on that of any of its representative men where discourses are thus reprinted."

But while we have no warrant after this explicit denial to impute a direct purpose to the book as an official manifesto, there is no reason why we should not ascribe to it, what indeed the book itself claims, a close though indirect relation to that event. The book is, in point of fact, an opportune, appropriate, and welcome memorial of the removal of Manchester New College to Oxford, and in my opinion the editor is to be congratulated both on the felicity of his idea and on the mode of its execution. The book is in no sense apologetic; but if justification were needed for the establishment of a non-dogmatic college among our most ancient foundations, whose hoary traditions are permeated with dogma in science as well as in theology (for of all European universities Oxford was the place where such outworn creeds as the Ptolemaic astronomy and mediæval Aristotelianism died hardest), the essays and papers here collected furnish a series of pièces justificatives which the most benighted obscurantist can neither gainsay nor resist.

It has been said that the foundation of Mansfield College furnished the suggestion which, combined with other considerations, induced the heads of Manchester New College to transplant it to Oxford. Whether this be so or not few thoughtful readers of the signs of the times would question that it is the more important event of the two. Without the least wish to underrate the significance of a Nonconformist college at Oxford, no one can deny that the addition to the existing foundations is that of an institution committed to the teaching of dogmatic Christianity. Its divinity professors, though not acknowledging the Thirty-nine Articles either as limits or objects of teaching, must nevertheless inculcate the dogmas of traditional Nonconformity. They must bear in mind the imperious exigencies of chapel trust-deeds, and the still more rigorous tests, though in petto, of the average chapel deacon. Now, Manchester New College, with its "Theology and Piety alike free" propounds an altogether different conception of Christian authority and truth-standards. In this case it is not an additional quantity of the same old wine, at least of "similar vintage and character," as wine merchants phrase it, which is being poured into the old bottles, but a new wine of different growth and of undeniable fermenting power. Why I do not pursue the allusion further is because I do not think that in this case the old bottles will be marred so much as strengthened by the admixture.

It may be gathered from what I have advanced that this memorial volume has at least two meanings, literary and academic. As a collection of thoughtful essays on Liberal Christianity—most of which have already seen the light in other forms—the book has unquestionably a high literary value. But this is, in my judgment, altogether subordinate to its academic significance. Manchester New College goes to Oxford to initiate not only a new method of theology but a new method of truth discovery, and intellectual culture. It aims at reasserting those free principles of education which were accepted by the leading minds of ancient Greece, and the fruits of which we possess in the combined excellence and luxuriance of its varied literature. It purposes to recall the attention of Christians, whose faith has been warped and narrowed by centuries of ecclesiasticism and dogma, to the undogmatic spirit and teaching of the Gospels. It would make too great a demand on my space to adduce even a tenth of the passages that might be quoted showing the objects which the founders of the Manchester New College set before themselves at its foundation, and which they have persistently followed up to the present time. But I must find room for two quotations, one from Prof. Upton's paper (No. viii.), the other from Dr. Martineau's centenary address (p. 312). Prof. Upton says:

"Before liberal theology can take its natural place in the curriculum of our universities as the necessary correlation of the phenomenal sciences, and thus enable these centres of culture to realise their true ideal as organs whose function is the complete unfolding and nurture of the human mind, public opinion must evidently first deliver itself from two grievous tyrannies—the tyranny of theological dogmatism on the one hand, and of scientific dogmatism on the other."

In a similar strain, speaking of the disabilities still attaching to Oxford divinity degrees and certain professorships, Dr. Martineau observes:

"The lecturer's desk can be occupied by no man who has not bound himself by subscription to teach up to the standards of the Church of England; and it is impossible to accept as complete the competency of any one who is thus tied to foregone conclusions. What should we say of such a pledge to prescribed opinions if demanded from a teacher of geology, of history, of ethics? Should we not share his indignation at the proposal, and say that it could never be made except to a man already supposed to be a poor creature? We insist, therefore, on our professors in this faculty being left as free to follow simply the indications of truth as in any other, since whatever becomes dogma—i.e., assented to as decreed—ceases eo ipso to be intellectually known, and loses all living quality of truth."

The uniqueness of the occasion will probably give rise to some speculation as to the consequences of this new departure in university teaching. In my opinion they will not be so marked as certain sanguine persons appear to imagine. The chief importance of the event seems to me to consist in its co-operation with other contemporary impulses of thought in the general direction of free inquiry. It will afford one distinct momentum harmonising with the general tendencies, often tacit and non-assertive, of our best current speculation. Dr. Martineau, however, indulges in a flight of more than millennial audacity in forecasting a period when the Manchester New College leaven, now inserted into the measures of meal, will have so exercised its potent influence that the whole may become leavened. He says:

"Let our great teaching universities feel themselves headless and deformed without a theological faculty manned by instructors and frequented by learners unconditionally free to see what is and create what ought to be, and we shall then know that our hour has struck. Manchester New College will welcome death, for its death will be its transfiguration and final passage into larger and higher life."

While it is impossible to feel anything but admiration for aspirations so generous, it is enough to say that they seem premature. What we are now concerned with is not the self-extinction of the college under hypothetical and distant conditions, but its new birth and chances of vitality and usefulness in the actual present.

It is necessary to add a word on another issue of Theology and Piety alike Free, which Dr. Martineau and his fellow essayists do not seem to have noticed. The principle might be extended to other creeds than that of Christianity. With our millions of Buddhist and Mahomedan subjects there is surely no valid reason why a Buddhist or Mohammedan college might not also find a home in our chiefest seat of learning. One of the pithy sayings ascribed to Ezra is this—"The rivalry of teachers increases wisdom." Christianity has in my opinion nothing to lose and all to gain from close juxtaposition with rival creeds. If this principle of free trade in theological teaching were adopted, Gibbon's supposed consequence of the defeat of Charles Martel—

"the interpretation of the Koran would be taught in the schools of Oxford, and her pulpits might demonstrate to a circumcised people the sanctity and truth of the revelation of Mahomet"— might with due modifications meet with a fair measure of realisation. What seems certain is that the Christianity of the Oxford of the past bears a close resemblance to the hermit virtue which aroused Milton's scorn:

"I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue unexercised and unbreathed that never sallies out and seeks her adversary, but slinks out of the race where that immortal garland is to be run for not without dust and heat."

It is because the auspices of a better time seem furnished by this book, as well as by the event which it worthily commemorates, that I have endeavoured to enlist the interest and sympathies of the readers of the ACADEMY in the most interesting of all academical experiments of our time.

JOHN OWEN.

THE METAPHORE OF FRIAR BOZON.

Les Contes Moralisés de Nicole Bozon frère mineur. Ed. Lucy Toulmin Smith and Paul Meyer. (Société des anciens textes français.)

HERE we have in print for the first time a part of the works of an industrious, literary, and poetic English friar whose long-forgotten name is not on the list of the Scriptores Ordinis Minorum. Written after 1320, these Metaphores were no doubt intended by Nicholas for the use of the popular preachers of his order. Borrowing from some such book as Bartholomew, the Englishman's De proprietatibus rerum (circa 1260), possibly, also, from some collection of Exempla, and certainly from Odo of Cheriton's collection of fables, he adds to these materials some anecdotes of his own gathering, such as the following, which will give a fair example of his style:

"62. Quod contra Christiani contendere non debemus set in ejus misericordia sperare. Inasmuch as nought or at all doth it profit a poor man to plead against a rich, so less still doth it profit us sinners to strive against God. . . much better were it to do as did the abbot of Westminster, who impleaded King Henry for a fair manor. And when he perceived that his business came to nought, he appealed Henry of Winchester to his counsel by leave of the justices, as his tenant of another manor which he held of the abbot, and charged him that he should counsel him the best counsel he could have towards the king. Then the king gave the abbot counsel that he should make peace with the king and the manor should rest with him. I advise that we should do the like toward our Lord Jesus Christ to acquire the right which we claim in the heritage of heaven, whither we shall never come by mastery. But we ought to pray Him, by the tenure He holds of our human kind which by His mercy He took of us, not of favour, but of fee, that we may do, according to His counsel, which He giveth us by His message, saying, 'Make peace with Me! make peace with Me!' Faciant mihi pacem, pacem faciant mihi" (Is. xxvii. 5).

The Metaphores exist in two MSS., Gray's Inn and Cheltenham. The first belonged to the Franciscan convent at Chester, et dono Conewey ministri; the Cheltenham MS. is a little older and of the same family, but unhappily lacks several pages. The text is therefore founded on the former. The British Museum MS., Harl. 1288, of the end of the fourteenth century contains an incomplete Latin translation of Bozon's French text following the Cheltenham MS. pretty closely, which is of some use in establishing the original readings. It is printed in this volume after the French text.

There are a series of valuable notes on the origin of the several stories. The introduction deals briefly with the phonology of the French; and an interesting little vocabulary is appended of the rarer words, which will be found of use to Dr. Murray and to the compilers of the Cambridge Loan-word Lexicon, containing as it does many words of French, English, and Latin origin in the forms afterwards accepted by literary English—such as bucket (buket), dally (daliar), dogged (dogger), store (estor), strive (estriver), eschew (eschuer), entice (entioer), stale (estale), gravel (gavel), horrible (horibul), manner (maner), carcass (karkoys), moisture (moisture), oil (oille), power (poover), pocket (poket), riff-raff (riff-raf), ruby (rubie), save (saver), seal (seal), squeamish (ascoymous), tar (tariar), try (trier), trance (trancee), tittle (titel).

The introduction also contains a notice of the poems of Bozon, principally founded on the Cheltenham MS. The prayer of the Seven Joys of Our Lady (hitherto attributed to Rustebuef), the Car of Pride, of the Goodness of Woman (printed pp. xxxiii.-xli.), the comparison of Woman to a Magpie, a poem on the Passion, a treatise on Unkindness (denaturese), Sermons in Verse, the Annunciation, Prayer to the Virgin, the Ave Maria, Proverbs of Good Lore, Lives of Saints Agnes, Agatha, Christina, Elizabeth of Hungary, Juliana, Lucy, Margaret, Martha, and Mary Magdalene (of which the beginning of that on St. Agnes is printed, pp. xlviii.-lii.). It is to be hoped that the editors will some day publish these pieces together for the Société des anciens textes français. The tales have been carefully identified in every case (save some half-dozen which defy inquest), and traced to their sources—a work of no little toil, but of considerable usefulness to students.

The book is a thorough piece of good work—in fact, such work as one would expect from the well-known scholars who have collaborated to produce it. There is much in it which the philologist, the historian, and the folklore student will find of worth. It is by no means one of the least valuable of the excellent series to which it belongs.

F. Y. POWELL.

NEW NOVELS.

The Burnt Million. By James Payn. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

The Bishops' Bible. By D. Christie Murray and Henry Herman. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

The New Faith: a Romance of it. By Charles T. C. James. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

The Minor's Right. By Rolf Boldrewood. In 3 vols. (Macmillan.)

A Scarlet Sin. By Florence Marryat. In 2 vols. (Spencer Blackett.)

Miss Miles; or, a Tale of Yorkshire Life Sixty Years Ago. By Mary Taylor. (Remington.)

Tom's Wife. By Lady Margaret Majendie. (White.)

Hard Luck; or, a Murder at Monte Carlo. By Arthur W. A'Beckett. (Bristol: Arrow-smith.)

The Confessions of a Door Mat. By Alfred C. Calmour. (White.)

BRILLIANT and able as The Burnt Million is, it is not so well conceived a story as might have been expected from so practised a writer. The million was never burnt at all, and it was needlessly and altogether foolishly allowed to go in relief of the National Debt. Walter Sinclair supposed, when he put the letter from his father which disclosed his identity in the fire, that he was destroying his right as contingent legatee under Joseph Tremenhare's will to that testator's ill-gotten gains; but, when the letter had revealed to him who he was, its destruction was a thing of little moment. Tremenhare was a Jew usurer with three daughters, of the youngest of whom he was dotingly fond. To prevent each of them, but especially the youngest, from marrying his confidential clerk, he declared in his will that marriage with anyone but a Jew should disinherit the daughter so marrying, and that her share in his estate should then pass to the other daughters. If all three should marry Gentiles, his money was to go to a cousin or his heirs; and if the cousin or his heirs should not be forthcoming, the nation was to benefit by the pouring of his million into the bottomless pit of the National Debt. The Jew millionaire died unlamented by any one, except his youngest daughter Grace, who knew nothing of his real character, and believed him to have been the most generous of men. In spite of his Gentile blood, Sinclair is Grace's accepted lover; and it turns out—as such things do turn out in novels—that he is the son of Tremenhare's deceased cousin and ultimate legatee, Vernon. This is not known to Grace, who by this time is entitled to the whole of her father's million, though Roscoe, the villain of the story, has told her that Sinclair is the son of a man whom her father robbed and injured (which is true). If Sinclair, instead of concealing his true identity, and letting the million go to an ungrateful nation, had made Grace understand that her father had discharged his obligation to his (Sinclair's) father fifty times over, her confiding faith in her father would have been finally reassured. As it was, she was persuaded to believe that Roscoe had lied; but the disillusionment left its mark, and she and Sinclair lost the million. It need not be said that the story is cleverly told. The conversations are full of life, and lose nothing by the occasional interpolation of the author's reflections by the way. These latter either sparkle with humour or are grave with wisdom; but in no case should they be skipped. Every character in the book is vividly drawn, and there are one or two who are among the best creations of recent fiction.

What part Mr. Herman has had in the authorship of The Bishops' Bible it would be difficult to guess, for the whole tale bears the mark of Mr. Christie Murray's hand, and some of the rustic characters, Isaac Stringer especially, are among the best he has drawn. The reader may at first be inclined to think that Stringer is overdrawn, but if he knows anything of semi-rural life in the Midlands he will not remain of that opinion. Strong characters are to be found in those parts—and not exclusively there—whose intuitive powers give them a certain crude wisdom in spite of their ignorance, and with it a force of will which commands some respect. Their judgments are often right as to the things they understand, but they are hopelessly wrong about questions of sentiment, or when the imagination or the higher qualities of the mind should have something to say touching the matter in hand. These people are self-centred in their own small orbits, and neither know nor wish to know anything beyond them. Isaac Stringer was a man of this sort. He was shrewd, observant, and determined; but his standards of right were those he had set up for himself, and which for that reason he held to be infallible. What had sufficed him ought to be enough for others; and in his own church—where he exercised the authority of churchwarden—and in his own house, he would permit no will to supersede his own. His summary way of putting down the "papist" of a surpliced choir was the tearing of the surplices into shreds. When his son, a grown-up man, rebelled against his petty tyranny, he gave him the choice of submitting to be thrashed, or of quitting the paternal home and taking his own way in the world, renounced and penniless. The new rector offended him by introducing the surpliced choir, and he persecuted him thenceforward. Such a man is his own worst enemy. Stringer's pig-headed misjudgment of others, and the measures he took to give effect to his own notions, wrought misery all round, and heaped it upon himself. But he had a heart, and a tender one, when it could be reached; and the events by which it was reached, and the much-enduring rector's part in them, form the most touching episodes in the story. The rector was the personification of the virtues of charity, long-suffering, meekness, and forgiveness, and as such he seems almost "too good to be true." His saintly nature had scarcely enough human nature in it. If he had taken the tyrant of the village in hand at first, with tact and decision, instead of waiting till he could heap coals of fire on his head by returning good for evil, the personal calamity which befel himself and much of the unhappiness produced in the village might have been avoided. Habakkuk Wood, the old sexton, is another character to whom Mr. Christie Murray has given some very striking touches. He is the only match for Stringer in the parish. Even the Squire, who is a capital portrait, submits at a critical time to be led by the village tyrant, though he had his own reasons for so acting. The two experts, Mac-Wraith and Reinemann, who are brought down to restore the Bishops' Bible, are also people to be remembered. Indeed, the whole story—vivid, able, and remarkable as it is—will cling to the recollection of everyone who reads it.

The name of Mr. James's novel is almost suggestive of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's famous excursion into heterodoxy in Robert Elsmere. But the hero of The New Faith is an enthusiast of a very different stamp from Mrs. Ward's central character, nor are the lines of the two books in any way identical. Mr. James's romance has an object, a manner, and distinct merits of its own. Cecil Avernell, the preacher of "the new faith," does not concern himself about the historic evidences of Christianity. Doctrines and matters of belief are foreign to the scheme of his religion. He wants to regenerate the world by making it happier, by removing the causes of misery, by feeding the needy, raising the fallen, and giving hope to the hopeless. This sounds as though it were practical, though not perhaps easy. Avernell believed himself to be "super-practical"; but the world he lived in, the world he tried to evolve from the hard everyday conditions of life, was a dreamland nevertheless. He turned all he possessed into money, and devoted it to the furtherance of the new faith; he took a hall in a fashionable part of London, where he discoursed eloquently to growing crowds of people; he started cheap eating-houses, and in his restless, eager way began a war with all the old-fashioned, goody-goody charitable societies. But the fruits of his labours were less real than they seemed. He had not the creative intellect which alone can invest theories with the potency of fact, and make dreams possible. Yet he was a noble fellow, and he deserved the admiration he excited, and the brave unselfish love with which Edith Maudeley devoted her heart, and time, and possessions to himself and his aims. Edith was his cousin, and he loved her only as a cousin or a sister, unhappily for himself. The other love he gave with all the force of his passionate nature to an actress, in whom he thought he had discovered some of the "pure gold" he was fond of dilating upon, but who jilted him for a better match. Edith, in her way, is as fine a character as Avernell. He has more fire, she more patient hopefulness and endurance; and one regrets that the exigencies of the novel obliged the actress to be brought in as an interloper and marplot. Some of the other characters are equally life-like. The High Church clergyman, the Rev. Perren Hatt, who "preached himself into popularity by means of a musical voice and a pretty face," is a striking type. One hopes there are not many like him, but if his duplicate exists anywhere he would be easily recognisable after Mr. James's picture. Captain Turle and his wife have some remarkable points, which are well brought out. The literary quality of the story is exceptionally good. Mr. James writes with ease and brilliancy; and when to these merits of style is added that of thoughtfulness in the matter of the book, it is obvious that the result must be satisfactory.

A successful first book always secures attentive consideration for a second book by the same writer. This may be an advantage or the reverse, according to the quality of the later work. A writer cannot be allowed to fall short of a standard which he has himself set; and if he does so, the very excellence of his first performance is a condemnation of his second. Mr. Rolf Boldrewood made a fairly good mark with his Robbery under Arms, but he certainly does not maintain it by The Miner's Right. Though clever in parts, this second novel is wearisomely dull as a whole. The story in it is of the thinnest and most fragmentary description; and the bulky volumes are chiefly filled with detached accounts of gold-digging experiences, all of them well enough in their way, but unmitigated padding in their present place. Gold digging, even when it ends in a lucky finding of the precious metal, is a perilous and unpleasant business, and Mr. Boldrewood describes with a sufficiently graphic touch some scenes of Australian life connected with this pursuit. If the reader is in a mood for this kind of thing he will enjoy it, but if he wants to follow the story he will skip whole pages, and even chapters. Nor will the story satisfy him, for the people have very little actuality, and what romance there is in their relations to each other seems forced. It is evident, however, that Mr. Boldrewood could produce an effective story if he took the necessary pains, and did not waste his strength on incongruous and wearisome details.

It is unnecessary to say that Miss Florence Marryat writes brightly and well; but, for that reason, it is the more to be regretted that she should have produced such a book as A Scarlet Sin. One knows that stories with a taint in them are generally in demand at the circulating libraries. It is no prudery, however, to wish that the material were not in such abundant supply. Miss Marryat introduces a wretch of a woman—a supple, insinuating, bewitching harlot—into a happy and innocent, if somewhat dull, family circle. Here the new-comer sets to work to seduce the husband, and, in the hope of finally possessing him, murders his wife. What possibilities in the way of incident may occur in a story of which these are the main lines does not need to be told.

It is pleasant to get from the atmosphere of the last book into that of the homely Yorkshire life of sixty years ago, which Miss Taylor writes about in Miss Miles. Somehow the Yorkshire dialect—though it is barbarous enough in all conscience—suggests nothing that is not honest and homely; but perhaps this is the effect upon the uninitiated only. Miss Taylor's people are chiefly of the poorer sort. The conditions of their lives are hard; but they turn them to brave account. Sarah Miles herself is not remarkable for anything that she says or does. Miss Bell, the vicar's daughter, who works for her living after her father's death, is a much more interesting same time, much of Mr. Watson's volume is unequal. His chapters on Oave-Hunting, on Birds of Prey, and on Tree Myths are meagre and unsatisfactory; while those on our native Pigeons and on British Whales cannot but please both veteran and tiro in British natural history. Best of all are his chapters on the old "statesman" theory of life in the North. The powers of work and play possessed by the sturdy natives of Westmoreland and Cumberland, the sheep-farming, the domestic economy, the hard fare and thrift of all, are excellently described. Many an idyllic picture does he give us of sheep-shearing, of rescuing them from the snow, or dipping them in early summer. This northern sheep-farming is an epoch in the history of national farming that has now all but died out. Still, it is pleasant to be told that the "statesmen" of to-day have suffered less from agricultural depression than have farmers elsewhere. Mr. Watson notes that, when a fox is foraging, his exact situation is often made apparent by the carrion crows and other birds which noisily pursue him overhead until he links into covert. The Indian monkeys in like manner often betray the exact position of a tiger to its prey, and to the shikarri as well, by their screams and excited behaviour. Does the buzzard ever kill birds, or, indeed, anything? Our impression is that it lives only on carrion. Certainly we have kept one for four years, and it has never attempted to kill young rabbits brought up in the same cage with it. The breeding of the redwing in England is another questionable statement. But Mr. Watson's book contains much good work which may well outweigh a few contested points. Mr. Lodge's illustrations cannot be commended.

Bypaths and Cross-Roads. By J. E. Panton. (Ward & Downey.) These pleasant essays show a keen insight into nature, especially nature as seen round the suburbs of London. In one, Mrs. Panton watches with sympathetic eye the domestic economy of house sparrows. Next may come a visit to a hospital or a greenhouse, then a drive on a coach or a description of a quaint old-world village. The author has much kindly feeling for the poor, and for picturesque decay. She writes throughout in a low tone; and her landscapes are generally painted with the hues of autumn, forming quiet reflective pictures such as people with much leisure love to dwell on. Her book is an outcome from that careful study of the outer world which marks the present age, and which has been so diligently fostered by Mr. Ruskin. Here and there it is verbose; but her fondness for the commonest flowers and trees, her appreciation of the softer moods of nature, her powerful descriptions of woodland scenery and all the soft beauty of an English landscape, redeem it from the charge of prolixity. By-Paths and Cross-Roads is just the book to take up for a quarter of an hour during the summer holiday. All country-lovers will grant it a place in their shelves. It is another gratifying sign of the improvement in the tone of even educated people towards birds and rustic creatures generally.

Rough Shooting. By T. E. Kebbel. (Son-nenschein.) These half-dozen papers are put together by an old-fashioned sportsman, who enjoys a day with dogs in a wild country better than a battue or "big shoot" in the best of preserved woodlands. They are brightly written, and have appeared separately in different newspapers. Anyone travelling a few miles to his shooting grounds will find the minutes pleasantly beguiled if he picks up this little book before starting. Mr. Kebbel has an agreeable knack of bringing back the shooting-days of boyhood. But two at least of the cuts which illustrate these papers are old friends and somewhat the worse for wear.

The Horse and his Rider. An Anecdotic Medley. By Thormanby. (Chatto & Windus.) The above work is a compilation from all sources. The author has used his scissors skilfully, and his book is made up of extracts from Daumas's The Horses of the Sahara, the Old Shikarri, Nimrod, Harry Hieover, Lord William Lennox, and writers in magazines and Bell's Life. The result is a decidedly amusing medley, which might give an hour's pleasant reading to every one fond of horses and anecdotes about them and their riders. In turning the pages of the book he will find many old friends, and may not be ungrateful to the compiler for having collected so many well-known acquaintances in a well got-up book.

Sketches of British Sporting Fishes. By John Watson. (Chapman & Hall.) This volume is dedicated to certain initials "in commemoration of a glorious day's fishing in an old slimy punt," but it may be hoped that it will not tempt others, after a good day's fishing, to rush into print. For the book is absolutely useless, whether to the practical fisherman or to the ichthyologist, is of the airiest possible description, and quotes what is well known to every one interested in fish. There is nothing but what has been told a thousand times in the chapters on trout and salmon. That on grayling, though written by a friend, labours under the same objection. Walton's old stories of pike being sprung from pickerell weed, and even the large Mannheim pike are dressed up again. Kingsley's address to the alder fly is quoted once more. Three times in less than a hundred and fifty pages is the statement made that a swan will destroy nearly a gallon of ova in a day. Lady Colin Campbell's little book is drawn on for her excellent account of carp-culture in the highlands of Limousin. All though the book Mr. Watson talks of "avelins" when he means "alevins." The carp is not called in Latin carpis. "The Crucian or Prussian carp" are not identical but different species, and the latter is not scientifically gibelio, but gibelio or the Gibel carp. The best chapter of a poor book is one at the end on "The Fish Poacher"; but it is melancholy to see good print and paper filled with information already given by Walton, Cholmondeley Pennell, and a hundred other writers. Even sketches can be taken from a new point of view.

A Handy Guide to Dry-Fly Fishing. By Cotswold Isis. (Sampson Low.) The best part of this pamphlet consists of its two illustrations; and if the Itchin trout are anything like the size of that here depicted, the sooner anglers turn dry-fly fishers the better. The author, in the first place, follows the other ninety-nine fishing treatises in teaching how to cast the artificial fly, and then devotes half a dozen short chapters to fishing with the dry-fly. He avows that his guidance is merely a prelude to Mr. Halford's excellent work, and in truth the latter author has exhausted the subject. Here and there a few useful hints may be picked up, e.g., the remark that most tackle shops sell too large flies for trout, and that cheap flies are a great mistake. Oddly enough, the learner is never told that he must first find his trout rising (as Mrs. Glasse caught her hare first) before he can practice dry-fly fishing. Cotswold Isis writes in that curious would-be jocular style which fifty years ago was accounted humorous. It seems specially calculated to irritate any one who consults the book with an eager desire to learn the art of which it treats.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. J. R. TUTIN, of Hull, is the fortunate discoverer of an earlier form of Wordsworth's great "Ode to Duty." In a copy of Wordsworth's Poems, two volumes (1807), he has found a cancelled sheet of printed matter, which gives this earlier form of the Ode. We print the first stanza which, with various readings, corresponds to the second stanza of the Ode as finally written:

There are who tread a blameless way
In purity, and love, and truth,
Though resting on no better stay
Than on the genial sense of youth:
Glad hearts! without reproach or blot;
Who do the right, and know it not;
May joy be theirs while life shall last,
And may a genial sense remain, when youth is past.

SOCIAL reformers will be glad to hear that Mr. Charles Booth, the author of Life and Labour in East London is well on his way with the second volume of his great survey of industrial London which is to be completed in four volumes. The second instalment will probably be ready next March, and will be general, not local, in its scope, with special reference, however, to the southern and central districts. It will be illustrated by a "poverty-map for all London," carefully coloured to show the various grades of social misery described in the work on the East End. Another special feature will be a minute and elaborate examination of the social problems which the work of the Board schools has brought to light. The publishers are Messrs. Williams & Norgate.

The Verdict, by Prof. Dicey, will be published in a few days by Messrs. Cassell & Co. Its aim is to place before the public the political results of the Report of the Special Commission in a systematic manner.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS will publish next week the first two volumes of the new large paper edition of Mr. J. R. Lowell's Complete Works, which will be classified as follows:—Literary Essays, 4 volumes; Political Essays, 1 volume; Literary and Political Addresses, 1 volume; Poems, 4 volumes. The edition is limited to 300 copies, of which only twenty-five are for sale in England.

THE next volume of the "Camelot Series" will be Early Reviews of Great Writers, edited by E. Stevenson. It will contain reviews, dating from 1786 to 1832, from the Monthly Review, the Edinburgh, the Quarterly, Blackwood, and the Westminster. Among the "great writers" criticised by their contemporaries in this volume are Burns, Coleridge, Southey, Wordsworth, Keats, Shelley, Byron, and Tennyson.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will shortly publish Personal Creeds, by the Rev. Dr. Newman Smyth. The book is intended to show the value of an individual creed as contrasted with a doctrinal statement of faith. In eight chapters it will enlarge on the prospects of future retribution, on points of contact between this and the unseen world, and on other much discussed themes.

THE series of articles recently contributed to the Archæological Review by Mr. David MacRitchie, in which he supports the "realistic" interpretation of the traditions relating to dwarfs and fairies, will, with several additions, be published under the title of The Testimony of Tradition, by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner, & Co., in a few days.

THE Rev. J. C. Blomfield is continuing his History of the Deanery of Bicester. The fourth section is nearly ready for publication, and will very shortly be issued by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. have in the press and will publish very shortly a novel in two volumes, entitled Paul Nugent, Materialist, by Helen F. Hetherington ("Gullifer") and the Rev. H. Darwin Burton, intended as a rejoinder, from the orthodox point of view, to Robert Elsmere.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will shortly publish a new novel entitled A Plunge into Space, by Mr. Robert Cromie, somewhat in the style of M. Jules Verne.

THE third edition will be issued next week of Mr. Thomas Greenwood's Public Libraries, a History of the Movement, and a Manual for the Organisation and Management of Rate-supported Libraries.

MR EDMUND SEALE has ready for immediate publication a second and augmented edition of The Horse-Breeders' Handbook, by Mr. Joseph Osborne ("Beacon").

THE Sette of Odd Volumes will hold its annual conversation, given by Mr. Charles Holme, the president, at the Grosvenor Gallery, on Thursday, July 17, on which occasion a short play by Dr. Todhunter will be given, entitled "How Dreams come True," in which a romantic episode in the life of an early German typographer forms the main incident.

AT the meeting of the Victoria Institute on Monday next, June 23, which will be held in the hall of the Society of Arts, Mr. Hormuzd Rassam will read a paper on "The Sites in the East earliest mentioned in the Bible."

THE ninth annual meeting of the Browning Society will be held at University College, Gower-street, on Friday next, June 27. The president, Dr. F. J. Furnivall, will take the chair, and a paper will be read by Dr. Stanton Cott.

THE last meeting of the session of the Ethical Society will be held at Essex Hall, Strand, on Sunday next, June 22, when Mr. J. H. Muirhead is to lecture on "Ibsen's Plays and Problems."

ON Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week, Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the library of the late Lord Talbot de Malahide. As might be expected, antiquarian books relating to Ireland are particularly well represented; but the collection generally is such as might have been formed by any lover of books during the first half of the present century. Among the rarities are Grolier's own copy of the Life of Scanderbeg; Earlom's engravings after Claude's Liber Veritatis (1776); Owen Jones's Alhambra (1842); and a large paper presentation copy of Scott's Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.

DR. HENRY WOOD, associate-professor of Greek in the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, has reprinted from the American Journal of Philology a paper entitled "Beginnings of the 'Classical' Heroic Couplet in England." His object is to dispute the claim for the pre-eminence of Waller, maintained by Mr. Edmund Gosse. His chief arguments are (1) that Waller did not write any poetry at so early an age as is generally believed; and (2) that George Sandys preceded Waller in the adoption of the "classical" reform. This last position he supports by elaborate statistics, showing that Sandys has a smaller proportion than Waller both of unstopped lines and of unstopped couplets. He further urges the existence of French influence, not only upon Sandys, but also upon Sir John Beaumont and Drummond of Hawthornden. In the case of all three, he suggests that they gradually freed themselves from their early bondage to invariably stopt couplets.

FASCICULE XX., which has just appeared, of the Archives Historiques de la Gascogne is one of the most interesting volumes of this excellent series. It contains the first part of "Les Livres de Comptes des Frères Bonis," bankers and merchants at Montauban, 1339-1369. It consists of a valuable introduction, pp. i, cxxiii, by the editor, M. E. Forestié, giving full details of the life of the family Bonis, and of their varied business as bankers, pawnbrokers, jewellers, armourers, apothecaries, chemists, drapers, grocers, &c., of their legal proceedings with their customers, and the light thus thrown on the social condition of the age; of the language, and generally of all that is needed for the comprehension of the text, which follows pp. 1-243. The accounts are kept in the Gascon patois of Montauban, but a summary in French is given by the editor at the head of each folio, and there are besides explanatory notes. A glossary is promised on the completion of the work. Incidentally no little information may be extracted relative to the condition of the frontiers of Gascony during the English domination.

PUBLICATIONS OF SOCIETIES.

MISS FLORENCE MARY WILSON, of the Browning Society's committee, has, at Dr. Furnivall's request, undertaken to write the shilling Browning Primer to which we alluded last week.

MR. W. A. CLOUSTON's unavoidably delayed Introduction to John Lane's Continuation of Chaucer's "Squire's Tale" is now all in type, and will probably be issued to members of the Chaucer Society in the course of a few weeks. It is divided into two parts, of which the first comprises papers on Magic Horses, Chariots, &c.; Magic Mirrors and Images; Magic Rings and Gems; Language of Animals; Magic Swords and Spears. The second part, which is devoted to "Analogues," contains an English abstract of the old French prose romance of "Clémédès et Claremonde," with notes of variations as found in the original poem of Adenès le Roi (thirteenth century), which was for the first time printed from the MS. in the Bibliothèque de l' Arsenal, Paris, under the editorship of Dr. A. van Hasselt, in 1865; followed by two Arabian, two Persian, two Sanskrit, two Gipsy, Turkish, Modern Greek, Italian, and Latin versions, all fully annotated. One of the Sanskrit tales—that of "The Weaver who personated the god Vishnu"—which Benfey considered as by far the best in the Panchatantra, and which Mr. Clouston regards as the prototype of all stories of the Flying Horse, &c., has not hitherto been done into English.

DR. DEIMLING's new edition of the "Chester Plays or Mysteries" has gone to press for the Early English Text Society. After a very careful comparison of the texts and phonology of the MSS. of these Plays, Dr. Deimling has shown that the latest of them, Harleian 2124, copied in 1607, partly by James Miller, is the best, and he has therefore adopted it as his basis-text. He has fully collated the other three MSS.—Additional 10,305, in the British Museum (copied A.D. 1592), Harleian 2013 (copied A.D. 1600), both by George Bellin; and Bodley 175 (A.D. 1604), copied by W. Bedford.

THE Wyclif Society is late with its last year's books, and has only just delivered the first of them to its members, vol. iv. of his Latin Sermons, edited by Prof. Loserth of Czernowitz. But it has the text of two more volumes, all printed, De Dominio Divino, edited by Dr. Reginald Lane-Poole (with a long appendix of the first four books of the De Pauperie Salvatoris of Richard Fitzralph, Archbishop of Armagh, to whose doctrine of "Dominion" Wyclif owed much), and De Simonia, edited by Dr. Hertzbergfränkel.

De Ente Predicamentali and its allied treatise Quaestiones Logicae, edited by Dr. Rudolf Beer, are nearly all printed; half De Eucharistia, Tractatus major, edited by Prof. Loserth, is printed; and De Blasphemia, besides Logica and Logicae Continuatio, all edited by Mr. M. H. Dziewicki, have just gone to press. Book I. of De Ente is all copied; and Mr. T. Austin has lately completed the transcript of the unique Corpus MS. of De Actibus Animae, which even the late Henry Bradshaw could not read. Mr. Austin is now copying De Ente, Book II. M. Patera has copied De Potestate. In order to insure the speedy completion of its work, the Wyclif Society lately arranged with one of its editors, Mr. Dziewicki, to leave his retirement in Russian Poland, and go to Vienna, where he has been for some time working hard, and where he will probably remain till the whole of the Society's work is done, save what is in the hands of Mr. F. D. Matthew and Mr. Sayle in England and of Prof. Loserth and the Rev. Dr. Buddensieg and Mr. Schnabel in Germany.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MESSRS. T. & T. CLARK, of Edinburgh—the well-known publishers of theological and philosophical works translated from the German—announce a new quarterly review to deal specially with this class of literature, somewhat after the model of Harnack and Schürer's Theologische Literatur-Zeitung. It is proposed to give signed reviews, and a full chronicle of current publications and of the more important articles that appear both here and abroad. The editor is the Rev. Dr. S. D. F. Salmond, professor of systematic theology and New Testament exegesis in the Free Church College, Aberdeen.

THE forthcoming number of the Reliquary will contain an illustrated article by Canon Scott Robertson on Archbishop Hubert Walter and the discoveries made in opening his tomb last March; also "The Diary of a London Citizen, with Extracts from the Diary of members of the Lever Family," by Mr. Alfred Wallis; "The Guilds of Reading," by the Rev. P. F. Ditchfield; "Inventories of Church Goods, including that of St. Katherine's Collegiate Church," by Mr. T. M. Fallow.

AMONG the contributors to the forthcoming number of the United Service Magazine will be Sir Samuel Baker, who writes on the "East African Mania"; Lord Melgund, who contributes an article on mounted riflemen; General Sir Evelyn Wood, and Vice-Admiral Sir George Tryon.

THE Newbery House Magazine begins a new volume with the July number. Among the contents will be "The Missions of the Church of England to the Central African Lakes," by the Rev. F. Arnold; "The Practice of Medicine in the Ancient East," by Prof. Sayce, describing the medical school of On, and the drugs and prescriptions of the Babylonians; "A Confessor of the Seventeenth Century," being William Lane, rector of Ringmore in Devon, by Prebendary Randolph; "Pilgrimages to English Shrines in the Middle Ages," by Mr. A. G. Hill; the first of a series of popular scientific articles, on "Rivers of the Ocean," by Miss Agnes Giberne; and an illustrated paper on "Van Eyck," by Mr. Gilbert S. Macquoid.

MR. R. L. STEVENSON, writing from the "Schooner Equator, at sea," sends this note to prefix his poem on "The House of Tembinoka," in the July number of Scribner's:

"At my departure from the island of Apemama for which you will look in vain in most atlases, the king and I agreed, since we both set up to be in the poetical way, that we should celebrate our separation in verse. Whether or not his majesty has been true to his bargain, the laggard poets of the Pacific may perhaps inform me in six months, perhaps not before a year. The following lines represent my part of the contract, and it is hoped, by their pictures of strange manners, they may entertain a civilised audience. Nothing throughout has been invented or exaggerated; the lady herein referred to as the author's muse has confined herself to stringing into rhyme facts and legends that I saw or heard during two months' residence upon the island."

THE July Bookworm will contain articles on Mr. A. H. Huth as a bookworm, by Mr. W. Roberts, and "A Mediaeval Jewish Bookworm," by Mr. Michael Adler.

MR. EDWARD SALMON, joint author of Twice "Guilty!" is writing a story for Yarns to be called "The Bride of an Hour." Major Arthur Griffiths has written for the same paper, "The Convict's Yarn."

THE extra summer number of Cassell's Magazine will be published on June 26, under the title of "The Crown of the Year."

"Little Folks" Magazine for July will contain the opening chapters of a serial story of adventure, by Mr. Henry Frith, entitled "The Secret of the Silver Lake"; also of a serial story by the Author of "Claimed at Last," called "Her Wilful Way." The same number will include particulars of the "New Little Folks' Painting Book" competition, open to readers in all parts of the world, in connexion with which a large number of prizes in books and silver and bronze medals are offered. The number will have for a frontispiece a picture in several colours, entitled "Secrets."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Convocation at Oxford, on Tuesday, a statute admitting women to the examinations for the medical degree was carried by a majority of 75 votes to 58.

THE Green prize at Oxford, founded in memory of the late Prof. T. H. Green by his widow, and given every third year for a dissertation on some specified subject in moral philosophy, has been awarded to Mr. O. Wallack, of Balliol. On the last occasion it was gained by Mr. S. Alexander, who subsequently expanded his essay into the book entitled Moral Order and Progress. It seems a noteworthy sign of the times that the subject selected for 1893 is "The Ethics of Savage Races."

MR. ERNEST GARDNER, director of the British school at Athens, proposes to read with a class in classical archaeology at Cambridge during the long vacation.

THE subscriptions promised to the Aubrey Moore memorial already amount to more than £850. It is hoped that sufficient will be raised not only to place a portrait in the hall of Keble College, but also to found a scholarship for the study of philosophy and science in connexion with theology.

THE inaugural lecture delivered by Prof. Pelham, on succeeding to the Camden chair of ancient history at Oxford, has just been published by Mr. Henry Frowde. It is entitled "The Imperial Domains and the Colonate"; and the thesis maintained is both a novel and an important one—that the status of the coloni as described in the codes of the fourth century is derived from that which we know to have existed two centuries earlier on the domains of Caesar. The evidence is largely drawn from recently discovered inscriptions.

THE distribution of prizes at University College, London, in the faculties of arts, laws, and science, will take place on Friday, July 4, at noon. Mr. Leonard Courtney will preside.

The Constitutional Experiments of the Commonwealth. By E. Jenks (Cambridge: University Press). The reader of Mr. Jenks's essay, which gained the Thirlwall Prize at Cambridge in 1889, will probably learn with some regret that he is now Professor of Law at the University of Melbourne, and that he will therefore have for the future to use his powers in a land in which materials for extensive historical inquiry do not exist. His essay, though it has the faults often to be found in the work of a young writer, is full of promise. He has the gift of thinking for himself and bringing out in relief sides of history hitherto somewhat neglected. No other writer, for instance, has laid such stress on the financial difficulties of the Long Parliament and Commonwealth. His perception of the real political importance of the army, which in itself is no new discovery, is, moreover, unusually well brought out; and the same may be said of his remarks on the historical importance of the assumption of executive functions by the Long Parliament, as giving to Parliament an experience which it never allowed itself to forget. What Mr. Jenks needs to convert his sketch into a work of permanent importance is more extensive reading as well as riper thought. Ten years hence he certainly will not, if he should be again working in England, content himself, when details of Commonwealth history is concerned, with such contemporary pamphlets as he can find in the Middle Temple library, without referring even casually to the Thomasson Tracts in the British Museum. Nor, with wider reading, would he have accepted Mr. Hubert Hall's astonishing assertion that in 1610 the customs, by the addition of the impositions, had only grown from £112,000 a year to £136,000. The real figure in the latter case ought to be £247,000. There are other mistakes of the same kind which would require notice in a more mature production.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

DYING.

THEY are waiting on the shore
For the bark to take them home;
They will toil and grieve no more;
The hour for release hath come.

All their long life lies behind,
Like a dimly blending dream;
There is nothing left to bind
To the realms that only seem.

They are waiting for the boat,
There is nothing left to do;
What was near them grows remote,
Happy silence falls like dew;
Now the shadowy bark is come,
And the weary may go home.

By still water they would rest,
In the shadow of the tree;
After battle sleep is best,
After noise tranquillity.

RODEN NOEL.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- HIÖB. Ein oberengadin. Drama aus dem 17. Jahrh. Mit literar.-histor. Einleittg. u. etymolog. Glossar hrsg. v. E. O. Kofmel. Ohur: Rich. 2 M.
MAZZATINI, G. Inventari dei manoscritti delle Biblioteche d'Italia. Fasc. 1. Turin: Loescher. 1 fr. 50 c.
MWOB, J. Die Pflanzenwelt in der griechischen Mythologie. Innsbruck: Wagner. 8 M.
REULING, O. Die komische Figur in den wichtigsten deutschen Dramen bis zum Ende d. 17. Jahrh. Stuttgart: Göschen. 4 M.
SCHÖLL, R. Die Anfänge e. politischen Literatur bei den Griechen. München: Franz. 1 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BILLESHEIM, A. Geschichte der katholischen Kirche in Irland von der Einführung d. Christentums bis auf die Gegenwart. 1. Bd. Von 482 bis 1609. Mainz: Kirchheim. 15 M.
BLUMENSTOCK, A. Der päpstliche Schutz im Mittelalter. Innsbruck: Wagner. 8 M. 20 Pf.

- DIECKMEYER, A. Die Stadt Cambrai. Verfassungsgeschichtliche Untersuchgn. aus dem 10. bis gegen Ende d. 12. Jahrh. Bielefeld: Velhagen. 1 M. 50 Pf.
FESTGABEN der juristischen Facultät zu Marburg. Marburg: Elwert. 8 M.
GESCHICHTE der europäischen Staaten. 51. Lfg. 2. Abth. Geschichte v. England v. M. Brosch. 6 Bd. 13 M. 52. Lfg. 1. Abth. Geschichte von Spanien v. F. W. Schirrmacher. 5 Bd. 10 M. Göttingen: Perthes.
GLASER, E. Skizze der Geschichte u. Geographie Arabiens von den ältesten Zeiten bis zum Propheten Muhammad. 2. Bd. Berlin: Weidmann. 18 M.
HEYD, W. Beiträge zur Geschichte d. deutschen Handels. Die grosse Ravensburger Gesellschaft. Stuttgart: Cotta. 8 M.
KRONES, F. Ritter v. Tirol 1812–1816 u. Erzherzog Johann v. Oesterreich. Innsbruck: Wagner. 5 M. 60 Pf.
RHESTA episcoporum Constantiensium. Bearb. v. P. Ladewig. 1. Bd. 4. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 4 M.
RECHTEN der Pfalzgrafen am Rhein 1214–1400. Bearb. v. A. Koch u. J. Wille. 4. Lfg. Innsbruck: Wagner. 4 M.
SCHAUZ, G. Die Steuern der Schweiz in ihrer Entwicklung seit Beginn d. 19. Jahrh. Stuttgart: Cotta. 40 M.
SYBEL, H. v. Die Begründung d. Deutschen Reiches durch Wilhelm I. 5. Bd. München: Oldenbourg. 7 M. 50 Pf.
URKUNDBUCH der Stadt u. Landschaft Zürich. 1. Bd. 2. Hälfte. Zürich: Höhr. 7 M. 85 Pf.
URKUNDBUCH der Stadt Hildesheim. Hrsg. v. R. Doebner. 4. Thl. 1428–1450. Hildesheim: Gerstenberg. 20 M.
WESTERKAMP, J. B. Das Bundesrecht der Republik der Vereinigten Niederlande. (1679–1795.) Marburg: Elwert. 1 M. 50 Pf.
WOLF, O. Der Augsburger Religionsfriede. Stuttgart: Göschen. 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BILHARE, A. Metaphysik als Lehre vom Vorwissen. 1. Hälfte. Wiesbaden: Bergmann. 4 M.
BONHOEFFER, A. Epistole u. die Stoa. Stuttgart: Enke. 10 M.
BLANKENHORN, M. Beiträge zur Geologie Syriens. Berlin: Friedländer. 80 M.
GORTZ, H. Der Optimismus u. Pessimismus in der jüdischen Religionsphilosophie. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 2 M. 40 Pf.
GUMPFENBERG, C. Frh. v. Systema geometrarum sonae temperaturis septentrionalis. 3. Thl. Leipzig: Engelmann. 6 M.
HALLER, E. Aesthetik der Natur. Stuttgart: Enke. 10 M.
PREIFFER, L. Die Protozoen als Krankheitserreger. Jena: Fischer. 2 M. 50 Pf.
VOSS, A. Ueb. die cogredienten Transformationen e. bilinearen Form in sich selbst. München: Franz. 8 M. 60 Pf.
ZOFF, W. Die Pilze, in morpholog., physiolog., biolog. u. systemat. Beziehg. bearb. Breslau: Trewendt. 18 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- DISSERTATIONES philologiae Vindobonenses. Vol. II. Leipzig: Freytag. 8 M.
MARGUAT, H. Lexikon zu den Schriften Cicero's. 2. Th. 7. u. 8. Hft. Jena: Fischer. 8 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"COCKNEY."

Oxford: June 16, 1890.

May I return to this word to say that I have got evidence that the name "cocks' eggs" is at the present day applied in the southern counties of England to the small or misshapen eggs occasionally laid by fowls. The same is the case with the Ger. hahneneier (=cocks' eggs), according to Heyne in Grimm: "Hahnenei nennt das volk in Göttingischen und anderwärts die misgestalteten hühnerer; man glaubte solche eier hätte der hahn gelegt."

This appears to carry back the notion to some antiquity. And it seems to me, therefore, not improbable that these are the eggs referred to by Florio in his "eggs, as we say cockanegs"; and that this may have been actually the original sense in which "cocks' egg" was used in the M.E. form "coken-ay."

It would suit the passages from Heywood and the Tournament of Tottenham perhaps even better than the sense of "fowls' egg" generally, and would make fair sense also in that from Piers Plowman, if we understand him to mean "not even a poor egg" of this inferior kind. And it would obviously also account as well or better for the transferred sense of "a child that sucketh long," "nestle-cock," "milksoy," since it would be even more derisive. Of course, everyone knows the ancient fable of cocks' eggs producing serpents (with which I have already had to deal fully in investigating the long and curious history of the word "cockatrice"); but no trace of this notion appears to enter into the history of "cokenay," "cockney." Guesses that the London "cockney" is connected with this notion, or is to be explained immediately from the notion, "cocks' egg" proceed in ignorance of the known history of the appellation; and it is not desirable to begin guessing until one knows the history, so far as it goes.

I am told that the saying is in Surrey, "When the cock lays eggs, then the hens lay rashers of bacon," which appears to refer to the associated bacon and egg of the "collop."

Perhaps this further light upon "cocks' egg" will remove some of the difficulties of my esteemed friend, Prof. A. Cook, and render unnecessary any serious discussion of the flying suggestion that "cokenay" might in some way stand for œuf à coque. There is no reason to suppose that coque in the sense of "shell" was ever English; the "cogges" or "cocks" in which seamen fought in the fourteenth century, whence we have "cock-boat" and "cockswain," were certainly not shells.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

HANSELYN-ANSELIN.

Oxford: June 14, 1890.

Mr. Round suggests that the family name Hanselin "should be compared with 'Court-mantel,' a nickname of Henry I." But in the case of Hanselin there is no qualification such as "Court," which makes a considerable difference.

However, I need not press this objection, because the name Hanselin has certainly nothing to do with the garment called hanselin. The name is written, as Mr. Round notes, Anselin in the Domesday Survey. The excrescent h of Hanselin may be compared with Wace's Hasdane = As Dans; Herneis = Erneis (i.e., Ernegis); and Helies = Elias. Thus, then, we arrive at a simple form Anselin, which is represented by the Domesday Anselin. The confusion of l and n is not uncommon, and may be well illustrated by the Old-French alme from Lat. anima.

The name Anselin presents no difficulty; it is a personal name formed by the Germanic diminutive suffix -elin from a name beginning with Ans. The diminutive already occurs in Gregory of Tours in the forms -elenus, -olenus, -olinus, -ulinus, the first vowels representing the obscure vowel. In Gregory we have (ed. Arndt and Krusch): Burgolenus, 221, 10; Burgolinus, 398, 4; and Burgulinus, 348, 15; Wandelenus, Wendelenus, 245, 5; 340, 14; Beppolenus, 346, 19; 354, 1; 416, 7; Bobolenus, 345, 16 (cf. Bobo); Daccolenus (al. Dacco), 220, 11; and Dracolenus, 220, 13. Among Norman names we have Azelin, Buzelin, Drogolin, Gunzelin, Gozelin (whence Jocelyn and (?) Gosling), Hamelin, Hugolin, Lanzelin, Robelin, Rozelin, Teodelin, Tezelin, Walkelin, Wazelin.* This suffix -elin is a compound of the l-suffix and the suffix -in, both of which are used independently with diminutive force.† Instances of the * Gamelin (whence the Gamelyn of the tale ascribed to Chaucer) is not a compound of -elin, but of the simple suffix in with Old Norse Gamall. The Old Norse name exists in the family name Gamble, whilst the Norman diminutive form exists as Gamlen. Similarly Rawlin represents Raoul + in, and is not a compound of elin.

† There are some slight traces of the suffix -elin in Old English personal names, but the forms are not free from doubt. Thus Cæwlin appears to be a compound of caw* (chough? Cæwan-hlaw = Challow, Berks) and this suffix. A Wigelin is mentioned in the "Battle of name Anselin are not easy to find in Anglo-Norman records. This is partly owing to the ignorance of editors,* who have misread the name as Anselm, and partly to its confusion in later times, owing to the dropping of the nasal, with the distinct name Azelin. Thus there can be no doubt that many of the Anselms and Ascelins of our early records are really Anselins. The name Anselmus, A.D. 1120-1130, which occurs in the Ramsey Chronicle, p. 254, is obviously Anselinus, for the Norman scribes very generally represent the Frankish affricative (z) by sc. So that Anselinus represents Anzelinus not Anselm. This form can only be explained by the merging of Anselin and Azelin, the affricative coming from the latter.† The name Anselin occurs in 1199 in the Rotuli Curiae Regis (ii. 59), in the name "Ricardus, filius Anselin." He is referred to at p. 132 as "filius Ansell," which may represent Ansellinus or a shorter diminutive Ansel = O.E. Ēsla from Onsilo(n). This form, which exists in the surname Ansell, occurs in Domesday (i. 150b, col. 2), and, A.D. 1199, in the Rot. Curiae Regis (i. 233, 273, 287), and in Fines (i. 268). We meet with it in Ordric (iv. 288), A.D. 1118, in the person of "Ansellus de Guarlanda, princeps militie Francorum." This case is interesting, because we can recover the full name represented by the diminutive Ansel. He is called "Anselmus de Garlanda" in Hugh of Clères Scriptum de Maioratu et Senescalcia Francie (Chroniques D'Anjou, i., 390). Or is this another case of editors confusing Anselin and Anselm?

Thus, then, Anselin is a personal name used as a second name. I have given instances of this custom of using what I called "double names" in the ACADEMY, July, 1885, p. 29; August 1, p. 74; and, from Ordric, June 4, 1887, p. 398. The second name is frequently, as in the present case of Ralph Anselin, in a diminutive form, and has, in many cases, a patronymic meaning. This custom of using a father's or grandfather's name as a second name became very general in English in the thirteenth century, and in many cases the second name became a family surname. The Anselin or Hanselin family is a good example of this. The scores of modern English surnames derived from Teutonic personal names have all gone through the stages of patronymics borne first by the son, then by the grandson, and so on until they became real surnames. A "Hugh, son of Milo," might appear in early thirteenth-century records, as "Hugo filius Milonis," "Hugo Milonis," or "Hugo Miles," the latter representing an un-Latinised form with the French nom. s. Or he might appear as "Hugo Mile," owing to the supersession of the Fr. nom. form in Anglo-French by the accusative. Perhaps, as I have got so far, I may be allowed to protest against the foolish custom still prevalent among English genealogists of calling every filius a Fitz. Names in Fitz were very rare in England; and the odds are infinitely greater on "Hugo, filius Milonis" being "Hugh Miles" or "Hugh Mileassune." I have very little doubt that the Maldon," l. 500, and a Beccelinus occurs in the Life of St. Guthlac (Acta Sanctorum, April 11, p. 43a, 48b; Mabillon, A.S. Ord. S. Bened., iii., 272, 280). He is, however, called Beccel in the O.E. version, ed. Goodwin, pp. 44, 80.

* The publications of the Record Commission are full of blunders in personal names. Names embodying œa = O.E. gifu are generally read œa on the analogy of the Norman names in ina, which, in their turn, sometimes appear as œa, while a name like Leulet (O.E. Lēof-gēat) is disguised as Lenlet.

† The surnames Aslin, Ashlin, Ashli are derived from Azelin, or, in some cases, from Anselin. A John Asselyn occurs in 1354; 11 Report Hist. MSS., App. vii., p. 64.

first Mayor of London was known to his fellow-citizens as "Henry Ailwinessune." Henry, the son of Æthelwine, is, beyond all doubt, the son of an English father; but in his French disguise of "Henry Fitz-Aylwine," he is not likely to be recognised as an Englishman by the average reader. It is one of Mr. Freeman's many services that he has rejected this hybrid denomination.

W. H. STEVENSON.

THE VANDALS AND ANDALUSIA.

Oxford: June 7, 1890.

Prof. Freeman having raised some doubt, in a recent lecture given at Oxford, as to the original identity of "Vandali" and "Andalusia," the southern province of Baetica, first occupied by the Vandals after their invasion of Spain A.D. 411, I venture to suggest an explanation.

Let me, in the first place, quote two Spanish authorities who confirm the derivation of "Andalusia" from "Vandali": (1) Monlau, in his Diccionario Etimológico (Madrid, 1856), states:

"Vandalucia, Vandalicia, o Vandalia denominaciones que tuvo la actual Andalucía ocupada por los Vandalos."

(2) Roque Barcia, in his great Diccionario General (5 vols. fol., Madrid, 1883), likewise says:

"Los Vandalos con los Alanos y Suevos entraron en España (409). Una de sus tribus se estableció con los Suevos en Galicia, otra en la Bética (411), que de ellos tomó el nombre de Andalucía (Vandalucia, país de los Vandalos)."

Now the main difference between the two names—viz., the loss of the initial v—may be accounted for, it seems to me, by two causes: (1) By a confusion between the Vandali and Alani, who, according to Procopius (De Bello Vandalico, ed. Niebuhr, Bonn, 1833, Lib. i. cap. 3) had joined in occupying the Roman province of Spain; (2) by the phonetic rule that the analogous sound of initial Latin v was frequently replaced in Spanish by h, and afterwards entirely lost, e.g., hablar=fabulari, hacer=facere, hambre=fames, hijo=filius, hierro=ferrum, hoja=folium, &c. (cf. Diez., Grammatik der Roman. Sprachen, i., 284 and 375).

H. KREBS.

SHIPS' MASTS AND YARDS, AND THE SIGN OF THE CROSS.

The passage in Blair's translation of Bellesheim (vol. i. 105) which, I must confess, did provoke a smile, runs as follows:

"At one time the island (Iona) possessed not less than three hundred and sixty such crosses. Even the masts and yards of their ships were arranged in cruciform fashion."

Neither the passage in Adamnan cited by Prof. Cook, nor the statement of the accurate Reeves based upon it, is sufficient warrant for the very large inference of Dr. Bellesheim. Indeed, on the contrary, the passage in Adamnan shows that the cruciform arrangement was exceptional and not usual. I had in my mind, and hinted at, the passage in Justin Martyr (Apol. i. 55) where his devout imagination sees the sign of the cross in the sails of a ship, and in a man's nose and eyebrows, &c. Tertullian and Minucius Felix, as is well known, also see the cross in the arrangement of the mast and yards of a ship. One need not doubt the veneration paid by the Irish monks towards the symbol of the cross, while he discredits the statement that their ships were for that reason rigged in a particular fashion.

THE REVIEWER.

"FRANCE AND THE REPUBLIC."

Strood, Kent: June 14, 1890.

I saw to-day for the first time Mr. Hamerton's remarks on Mr. Hurlbert's work, France and the Republic, and my review of it. In the ACADEMY of May 17, Mr. Hamerton says:

"The reviewer, Mr. Markheim, appears to accept without question several of those misconceptions about the present condition of France which are current in other countries. First, as to the origin of the Republic, Mr. Markheim says: 'Proclaimed in Paris by a mob, it exists in the country by virtue of the control which its partisans have acquired of the central machinery of government.' May I remind your readers that this statement would have been perfectly accurate from the Fourth of September, 1870, to the election of the National Assembly, but that it is now nineteen years out of date."

I borrowed the words which Mr. Hamerton criticises from Mr. Hurlbert's book. They seem to me true. France as a nation is not republican from choice by an act of national will, but it is under a republican government because the partisans of the Republic acquired the control of the administrative machinery in the period beginning with the Fourth of September, 1870, and ending with the resignation of Marshal MacMahon in January, 1879.

Mr. Hamerton says:

"One reason for the existence of the Republic is the death of the monarchical sentiment."

May I call his attention to the statistics of the general elections of 1885 and 1889 in Mr. Hurlbert's book, p. xcv. of the Introduction. According to these statistics the republican majority, in a body of about eight millions of actual voters, amounted to more than seven hundred thousand votes in the year 1885, and fell below three hundred thousand votes in 1889. The main issue at both elections is generally admitted to have been between the Monarchy and the Republic. The substantial decrease of the republican majority in 1889 does not look like the death of monarchical opinions, and from the opinions I think we may infer the "sentiment."

WILLIAM MARKHEIM.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

SUNDAY, June 22, 7.30 p.m. Ethical: "Ibsen's Plays and Problems," by Mr. J. H. Muirhead.
MONDAY, June 23, 8 p.m. Victoria Institute: "The Sites in the East earliest mentioned in the Bible," by Mr. Hormuzd Rassam.
TUESDAY, June 24, 8.30 p.m. British Museum: "The Manners and Customs of the Babylonians," IV., by Mr. G. Bertin.
5 p.m. Statistical: General Annual Meeting.
8.30 p.m. Anthropological: "A Skeleton found at West Thurrock, Essex," and "Two Skulls recently exhumed within City Limits," by Mr. John E. Price; "The Ethnology of India," by Mr. H. H. Risley.
WEDNESDAY, June 25, 8 p.m. Gymnasion: Annual Conversazione.
FRIDAY, June 27, 8 p.m. Browning: Annual Meeting; a Paper by Dr. Stanton Coit.

SCIENCE.

MATHEMATICAL BOOKS.

The American Journal of Mathematics. Vol. XII., 3. (Baltimore.) A memoir by Poincaré, "Sur les Équations aux Dérivées partielles de la Physique Mathématique" (pp. 211-294), is thus introduced by the author:

"Quand on envisage les divers problèmes de Calcul Intégral qui se posent naturellement lorsqu'on veut approfondir les parties les plus différentes de la Physique, il est impossible de n'être pas frappé des analogies que tous ces problèmes présentent entre eux. Qu'il s'agisse de l'électricité statique ou dynamique, de la propagation de la chaleur, de l'optique, de l'élasticité, de l'hydrodynamique, on est toujours conduit à des équations différentielles de même famille et les conditions aux limites, quoique différentes, ne sont pas pourtant sans offrir quelques ressemblances. Nous ne citerons ici que quelques exemples."

The memoir, it goes without saying, will repay careful study. The only other paper is by Mr. H. B. Fine: "Singular Solutions of Ordinary Differential Equations" (pp. 295-322). The conditions of occurrence of singular solutions of differential equations and of the properties of these solutions are discussed on the lines introduced by Briot and Bouquet and developed by them in the "Propriétés des Fonctions Définies par des Équations Différentielles."

Elliptic Integrals. By F. W. Newman. (Cambridge: Macmillan & Bowes.) The light touch of the vanished hand of a Clifford is required in describing this treatise of the veteran Prof. Newman, and something in the style of Clifford's celebrated criticism of Booth's Elliptic Transcendents. At the outset the title "Elliptic Integrals" prepared us for a commentary on Legendre's Fonctions Elliptiques, the standard work on the subject at the time our author began his mathematical studies, and then marking the high-water level of analytical progress. But since that day no subject in analysis has made such gigantic strides, first under Abel and Jacobi; and now even their work is obsolete by the side of the recent developments of Weierstrass, Halphen, and Klein. Prof. Newman goes so far as to mention Jacobi, but without adopting the elegant notation which made the Fundamenta Nova at once adopted as the standard of mathematical elegance in the treatment of Elliptic Functions, as the subject is now called. His quotations appear as if derived from the slight sketch of Jacobi's work added in an appendix by Legendre, probably at a time when he was too fixed in the ideas of his life's work to properly appreciate their importance. So long as mathematicians followed Euler and Legendre, in looking at the subject as one of Elliptic Integrals, the progress was as slow as we might imagine that of Trigonometry would have been if approached from the point of view of the inverse circular functions. But Abel's single remark that it was the inverse function that had previously been studied was sufficient to revolutionise the subject; and this laid the foundation of the present magnificent edifice, which includes the elliptic functions as the simplest case of an unlimited class of Abelian functions. We do not find any mention of this modern treatment of elliptic functions in this book, the scope of which appears to be limited to the development and perfecting of certain details of Legendre's work—a labour in which the author has, doubtless, experienced considerable pleasure, and which sixty-five years ago would have made some stir in the mathematical world. But as it is, we fear that foreign mathematicians, who cannot appreciate the author's motives, will have more cause than ever to think the insularity of British mathematics very pronounced, although they may allow that the detailed treatment is elegant and refined.

The Theory of Determinants in the Historical Order of its Development. Part I.—Determinants in General: Leibnitz (1693) to Cayley (1841). By T. Muir. (Macmillan.) The origin of the work before us is very naturally accounted for by the author:

"During the writing of my Treatise on the Theory of Determinants (1882), it was repeatedly forced on my attention that the history of the subject had been very imperfectly looked into. Not only, as it appeared, had injustice been done by the attribution of isolated theorems and demonstrations to authors other than the first discoverers, but the labours of the great founders of the theory had been disproportionately represented, and a considerable amount of valuable work had actually been lost sight of altogether."

We know no one more fitted for the task of setting these matters right than our author, and we are glad that he has undertaken it and carried it so far to a successful issue. Dr. Muir has worthily followed in the path of Mr. Todhunter, and merits the encomium passed upon that writer by Henry Smith for producing a work "so suggestive of research and so full of its spirit." So many memoirs, even of the first importance, run the risk of being (to quote Prof. Smith again) misaid, a result which is "not only a loss to the history of science, but interferes seriously with the discovery of new knowledge." The first step taken was the compilation of a Bibliography, a step which entailed much labour, the fruits of which were given to mathematicians in the form of a List of Writings, and which occupied some forty-one pages of the Quarterly Journal of Mathematics. A natural consequence was the unearthing of many more papers bearing on the subject, and this involved a supplementary article of twenty-two pages in the same journal. We need only state here the author's object. This has been twofold:

"First, to provide a work of reference which should contain all that had been written on the subject, and which should be so indexed that anyone engaged in research might easily ascertain exactly what had been done on any particular topic, how it had been done, and what possible developments it preshadowed. Secondly, to show clearly to whom every step in advance had been due, doing this in such a way, also, that the reader might see the actual data on which any conclusion was based."

We cannot isolate any part, and so ask our readers "ex pede" to build up "Herculem"; but we have said enough to indicate what the author has set himself to do, and how he has attempted to do it. We can say, further, that we have read the text with interest, as it is put together with considerable graphical detail. Labour equal to that expended on its compilation could alone enable a reader to supply any lacunae, if such exist. We shall await the completion of this work and the issue of the promised "new and greatly enlarged edition" of the Treatise on Determinants with much interest.

Arithmetic. By C. Pendlebury. (Bell.) We briefly draw attention to the fact that this excellent text-book has now reached its fourth edition, an evident token of its having met with the approval of mathematical teachers. It appears to have been carefully revised since its first edition (which we duly noticed at the time) appeared. We may remark that there is now a short appendix, which treats of the G.C.M. and L.C.M. of two or more fractions, approximations, problems involving proportion, and a note on the conversion of consols. The book has been reduced in size by some 40 pages. For the use of masters who like examples only, the author has issued the numerous exercises, which accompany the present work, without the text.

Arithmetic for Beginners. By J. Brooksmith and E. J. Brooksmith. (Macmillan.) This little work in its method follows the lines of the well-known Arithmetic in Theory and Practice, the outline being, in the main, due to the late J. Brooksmith, the details being filled in by Mr. E. J. Brooksmith. It is quite elementary, and is a good and sufficient introduction to any more advanced text-book. The work is a handy one, the rules clearly laid down and amply illustrated by well-chosen exercises. It is written with a view to "army, university, professional, and local examinations," and is adapted and sufficient for ordinary school purposes. There are specimen examination papers and "answers" at the end.

SOME BOOKS ON CLASSICAL PHILOLOGY.

Formenlehre der Lateinischen Sprache. Von F. Neue. Band II.—Dritte Auflage von O. Wagener. (Berlin: Calvary.) Parts 6–10. We are glad to be able to record the rapid progress of this new edition of a most valuable work. It does not, indeed, seem likely to be finished so soon as the prospectus announced, for the work was to be completed in ten parts; and the tenth part, now before us, leaves the prepositions, conjunctions, and interjections as yet untouched. These may not, indeed, take much time or space, but Richter in the new volume of Studemund's Studien has succeeded in giving more than three hundred pages to the use of the interjections alone; and we may expect three more parts at least before the present work is complete. However, no scholar will grumble if the work is well done. And, so far as the present writer can judge, it is well done. There are, it is true, some things which require mending. Dr. Wagener, for instance, is very weak in his treatment of the glosses. He quotes Labbe's glosses under the title "Labbe," without any distinction between the sources of these glosses. One of his countrymen, writing in Wölflin's Archiv, recently fell very foul of Prof. Nettleship for doing—or, rather, seeming to do—the same; and now Dr. Wagener has shown us that German scholars are quite capable of committing the errors which German critics are only too eager to detect in foreigners. A more serious glossarial error appears in the references to Osborn's Panormia. Osborn was a Gloucester monk of the twelfth century who compiled a large glossary, a part of which one may charitably attribute to his desire to increase the Latin vocabulary. The value of the glossary has been accurately estimated by Lowe in his Prodromus (p. 243). But Dr. Wagener seems quite unconscious of all this. We say "seems," for we can hardly suppose he is really ignorant, but his references to the old nomenclature—"Thesaurus nov. Latin."—do not impress us very favourably. And from this work he quotes a number of adverbs in im, without adding any warning that the authority for these is very dubious. The case is worse, because he has not even succeeded in giving all of Osborn's adverbs, e.g. he has not noticed that Paucker's spissim (p. 575) is given by Osborn (Mai, p. 141, s.v. accumulativum). However, the glossarial words are not those which are of the greatest value for ordinary students, and in the ordinary ranges of scholarship we can testify to the general excellence of Dr. Wagener's work. We trust that he will go on successfully, and will append to his preface a list of authorities, in which some remarks about the glossaries may duly find a place.

Vorlesungen über lateinische Sprachwissenschaft. Von Oh. K. Reisig, neubearbeitet von F. Heerdegen, II. Semasiologie (Berlin: Calvary). Reisig's Vorlesungen is a book which attained considerable celebrity in its own day. Reisig died in 1829, and the book was published by Haase ten years later. But we very much doubt whether it is worth re-publishing to-day. The earlier part of it may deserve re-writing and re-editing; but it is neither possible nor desirable, so far as we can see, to construct a satisfactory work out of Reisig and Haase's rather unsystematic remarks on Semasiology. This criticism, however, only applies to the first quarter of the book before us; the other 120 pages are occupied by a new work of Dr. Heerdegen's own composing, entitled "Principles of Latin Semasiology." The same writer published a book on this subject some little while ago, and since has largely occupied himself with Latin lexicography, and in particular with its history. The present critic must confess that, as it seems to him, it is either too early to lay down the principles of this study, or else the study is one which does not require such foundations. For while Dr. Heerdegen makes several contributions in detail to lexicography, his principles—"translation" and "determination"—seem to us only old friends disguised under long and philosophical-sounding names. The new edition of Haase is not, as we hold, anything like so valuable as another new edition given us by the same publishers, that of Neue's Formenlehre, noticed above.

Lexikon der Lateinischen Wortformen. Von K. E. Georges (Leipzig: Hahn). We are glad to be able to record the progress of this excellent work, which had been delayed owing to the weak state of Prof. Georges's eyes. All Latin scholars will be glad to learn the danger is past, and the veteran Latinist has been able to resume work. The Lexicon has now reached the word quadri-farium. It would be presumption to praise the execution. The work should be in every library, and it will be found just as useful by those who possess Prof. Georges's Handwörterbuch as by those who do not.

Handbuch der Klassischen Altertumswissenschaft. Zweiter Band: griechische und lateinische Sprachwissenschaft. (München: Beck.) This series has received such general recognition that it is needless to praise it in detail. We may, however, call attention to the appearance of the new and enlarged edition of the second volume. The chief contents are the Greek and Latin Grammars of Brugmann, Stolz, and Schmalz, which are here revised and added to. Prof. Brugmann, in particular, has treated several subjects at greater length, particularly the nominal stem-formations and the syntax. The latter is, however, not even yet enough, though Prof. Brugmann may be right in saying that it is hardly possible to write a historical Greek Grammar. We regret that the two articles on lexicography, and particularly that on Latin lexicography, do not seem to come up to the high level of the rest of the volume. The subject, which is treated very briefly, is of course a difficult one to deal with satisfactorily; but the articles given us are confined almost exclusively to lexicography in Germany, and lack a sense of proportion and a clear idea of what is wanted. For instance, Wölflin's Archiv is a most important undertaking, but a detailed list of the "questions" set to Prof. Wölflin's contributors seems entirely uncalled for.

De Martiale verborum novatore. Scripsit A. Stephani. Breslauer Philologische Abhandlungen iv. 2. (Breslau: Koebner.) Several useful monographs have already issued from Breslau University in the series to which this pamphlet belongs, and it is itself likely to be no less useful than its predecessors. It is, of course, in reality only index work, but the compilation of such indices is one of the chief needs of classical scholarship at the present time. The work is done with much minuteness—e.g., the writer attempts to discover whether innovations appear in any one metre more than the others, and, in doing so, carefully takes into account the fact that a hexameter has more syllables than an iambic. We are not sure that the result quite justifies this elaborateness, for it does not appear that Martial "invented" many words. Such words as are known to us for the first time from his writings belong mainly to the iambics.

Das praesens der indogermanischen Grundsprache. Von O. Hoffmann. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck.) This book professes to sum up the results of recent criticism, so far as they concern the stems and inflexions of the present tense in Indogermanic languages. Unfortunately, the writer has got rather muddled between new and old. The "vocalic d" which he produces towards the end of his book is a specimen of his power to err. We regret that he has failed, for the idea of the book is excellent. A real summary of recent criticism would be valuable.

De locativi in prisca latinitate vi et usu. Von A. Bell. (Breslau.) Dr. Bell is a Canadian who has studied in Germany. His dissertation attempts, e.g., to assign a locative origin to many usages of the genitive; and, though not particularly original, it is scholarly, and contains a useful collection of instances. The connexion suggested between the locative and the accusative does not seem very helpful.

Zur Erklärung der Reden des Karthaginiensers Hanno. Von F. Soltau. (Berlin: Calvary.) This treatise forms part of the tenth volume of the "Berliner Studien," a series which is characterised throughout by a determined effort to produce valuable work. Indeed, the effort is so marked that some of the volumes are exceedingly dull. We cannot, then, put down the treatise before us as a practical joke. And yet it is difficult to know what else to make of it. Herr Soltau professes to explain the Punic fragments in the Poenulus of Plautus by the aid of Keltic. He supposes that in the fifteenth century B.C. Scythians came from the Caucasian Iberia, settled in Spain, and thence went to Ireland, where their language maintained itself in its purity, "vom Jahre 1006 bis 7 vor Chr." Accordingly, he adopts the theories of a certain O'Connor, who about 1822 published an explanation of Plautus' Punic based on the Erse language. Such views were barely pardonable in 1822: nowadays, criticism dissolves before them in Homeric laughter.

Die griechischen Dialekte. Von R. Meister. Band II. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck.) The work of Ahrens on the Greek dialects was a standard authority in its day, and is even still a book of much value, though recent discoveries have added to our knowledge and recent criticism has altered some of our views. One may then heartily welcome the treatise which Dr. Meister has based upon it, the second volume of which lies before us. It contains the dialects of Elis, Arkadia, and Cyprus, and an index to the first and second volumes. Pamphylian, too, would have fitly found a place here, but the slight knowledge we at present possess of Pamphylian inscriptions seems to have moved Dr. Meister to wait in the hope of better things. Even the Cyprian texts gave the editor great trouble. He complains bitterly in his preface that little has been done to edit them with accuracy, and he has apparently been unable to procure information as to the true readings of the inscriptions in the Ceonola collection at New York. This is much to be regretted, for the execution of the work is excellent, as indeed might have been expected from so high an authority as Dr. Meister. As a specimen, one may refer to the discussion (p. 115) of the dative οφελς on an Arkadian inscription. This had usually been taken as an accusative, but the syntax of the sentence requires a dative. Dr. Meister supposes a stem οφε- on the analogy of με-αμε, &c., whence came a locative οφει*, of which οφελς would be the plural.

Zum elischen arkadischen und kyprischen Dialekt. Von R. Meister. (Leipzig: Devrient.) Dr. Meister's Greek Dialects, reviewed above, was the object of a fierce attack in the Göttingen gelehrter Anzeiger at the hands of Mr. O. Hoffmann. Dr. Meister here replies. The conclusion of every reader must be, we think, that the reply is crushing, and that Mr.

Hoffman has been as unsuccessful in criticising the book of others as he was in compiling his own work on the present stem of the Indogermanic verb. The pamphlet has naturally little more than a controversial interest.

SCIENCE NOTES.

At the meeting of the Anthropological Institute on Tuesday next, June 24, which will be the last of the present session, Mr. H. H. Risley will read a paper on "The Ethnology of India," giving a summary of the results of the work upon which he has been engaged for some years past for the government of Bengal.

How to know Grasses by the Leaves. By A. N. M'Alpine. (Edinburgh: David Douglas.) It has long been wished that the grasses of our pastures could be identified at other times than when they are in flower. When the vegetation is not in flower (or in seed) it has hitherto been difficult to judge of the value of a pasture; and, even when the grasses are flowering, stock, by neglecting one sort of grass and eating down another, may leave the impression that the field contains a greater proportion of the former than is really the case. Mr. M'Alpine has devised a scheme of classification under which, with patience and a magnifying glass, nearly all our British grasses can be identified by their radical leaves at any season of the year. We have satisfied ourselves that his scheme is a workable one; but it does want patience. Fortunately, the five commonest pasture-grasses (ryegrass, fescue, dogstail, foxtail, and Yorkshire fog) can be discovered easily; but for the rest more time and care are required. We can suggest no improvement in Mr. M'Alpine's scheme, except by noticing that matgrass (Nardus stricta) is often so hairy that it deserves a mention among the author's group of hairy grasses.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

On Thursday and Friday of next week there will be sold at Dublin the valuable library of the late William M. Henessy, assistant deputy-keeper of the public records. Besides printed books, there are many rare old Irish MSS.; and not a few of both are enriched with notes in the handwriting of Henessy himself or of former owners.

The last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record contains several articles of interest. Prof. Ph. Colinet, of Louvain, in the opening paper, "Puramdhi as the Goddess of Abundance in the Rig-Veda," finally disposes of a question he had previously treated of in the same journal. His present proofs require to be taken in connexion with a criticism of the views of Prof. Pischel and Gelder which he published in the Muséon for April. M. Theo. G. Pinches gives the text, transcription, and translation, with a commentary, of "A Babylonian Tablet of the Reign of Aspasinc" (see also ACADEMY, May 17). The latter name is identified in the following article by Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie as Hyspaosines, Kharaecian king of Babylon in 127 B.C.

WE have recently received Part IV. of Epigraphia Indica—the official record of the inscriptions collected in the course of the Archaeological Survey of India (London: Trübner and W. H. Allen). Like former parts, it consists of texts and translations which have been prepared by German scholars from the impressions made by Dr. James Burgess and his assistants. Perhaps the most important paper is that by Prof. Kielhorn, of Göttingen, upon the Siyadoni inscription, which has enabled him to reconstruct the order of four kings of Kanauj in the ninth and tenth centuries. This inscription records the gifts of traders to Vishnu; and many of the gifts are valued in terms of drammas, which is evidently a coin or monetary denomination of some sort. Another inscription, from Peheva in the Karnal district of the Punjab—edited by Prof. Bühler, of Vienna—similarly records the voluntary taxation for religious purposes imposed upon themselves by certain horse-dealers. The tax was two dharms; upon which Prof. Bühler comments as follows:

"As far as is known at present, the word dharma is not used as the name of a coin or numerical quantity. It must, therefore, be understood to mean a religious gift, the amount of which was settled by custom."

But surely this dharma must have some connexion with the previous dramma.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ARISTOTELIAN SOCIETY.—(Monday, June 2.)

SHADWORTH H. HODGSON, Esq., president, in the chair.—Papers were read by Mr. G. F. Stout and Prof. Brough, entitled, "Is the Distinction of Feeling, Cognition, and Conation valid as an Ultimate Distinction of the Mental Functions?"—A paper by Dr. Bain on the same subject was read by the hon. secretary, and a discussion followed.

ELIZABETHAN SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, June 4.)

FREDERICK ROGERS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. James Ernest Baker read a paper on "The Plays of Philip Massinger." When Philip Massinger came to London to seek his livelihood, and finally found it as "one of those gentlemen who spend their wits in writing plays," the English romantic drama had already reached its pinnacle of excellence, had attained the highest point of its creative and productive power. The golden sun of poetry still shed its shining rays of dazzling brilliance, but the turn of the day had come, and unmistakable signs were not wanting that the night was gradually approaching. The wonderful outburst of genuine dramatic work that took place in the reign of Elizabeth dates from the production of Marlowe's "Tamburlaine the Great" in 1588, and lasted till the days of Massinger, Ford, and Shirley. Never was such prodigality of intellect, such universality of genius, that so easily and spontaneously found an outlet in the rapid production of exquisite and sensuous poetry, seen before. And this poetry in the hands of some of the dramatists became genuinely lifelike. In the words of Prof. Dowden, "Men were in a temper to think human life, with its action and its passions, a very important and interesting thing." All the sensations and vicissitudes that afflict and rend the hearts of men were painted in colours of peculiarly beautiful hues with firm but delicate touch. We may divide the Elizabethan dramatists into four periods. Proud Kit Marlowe with his thrilling and impassioned outbursts of song, and Marston, that keen and poignant satirist, may be picked out as representatives of the first period; myriad-minded William Shakspeare, with his manly and sympathetic heart and never-falling love for all that is true, natural, and steadfast in life and art, and honest Thomas Dekker take their place in the second period; John Webster, subtle questioner of human destiny, and rugged Ben Jonson, stern analyser of the vices and affectations of his age, and sweetest of all masque writers, fit easily into the third period; while Beaumont and Fletcher, skilful producers of romantic plays in style at once delightfully clear and limpid, and Philip Massinger, with his wide knowledge of "the worn and tortured human heart," are chief exponents of the fourth period. Mr. Baker remarked that though he placed Massinger in the fourth period, it must be strictly remembered that he stands at some considerable distance from the time when the Elizabethan drama became quite decadent. We may allow him to herald the secondary lights of the Elizabethan dramatists; but after Marlowe, Shakspeare, Ben Jonson, Beaumont, and Fletcher, no name is more particularly worthy of our fixed attention and careful regard. Massinger deserves this, not because he sends the blood pulsating through us with the fire and vigour of his verse, intoxicates our senses with the sweetness and purity of his poetry; but because his characteristic merits lie in his stately and flexible versification, his well-constructed plots, and the ethical interest that always permeates his plays. Massinger must have laboured under singular disadvantages. It seems impossible that, with his fine susceptibilities and keen apprehension of the influences of nature, he could not have been sorely tried by the oppressive and unceasing cares to which his destiny exposed him. His life in London must have been passed in a dreary atmosphere, seldom pierced by the soft and radiant lights of human felicity. His portrait is one of the most interesting and fascinating in the gallery of Elizabethan dramatists. It is a face refined and thoughtful, yet terribly sad and depressed. It appears as if the passions of the body had swept pitilessly across it, and left lightly yet ruthlessly the deep imprint of their marks—the face of a man who has grappled hard with the cruel experiences of the world, who has felt the fire of passion flaming at his heart, who is weary of the burden of the flesh, and is hungering for the fathomless rest to come. The first mention of Massinger as a dramatist is in 1621, when his comedy of "The Woman's Plot" (now known to us under the name of "A Very Woman") was performed at Court. As Massinger left Oxford in 1606, and apparently commenced writing plays at once, we have an interval of fifteen years which we are unable to fill up with any definite information respecting him. He must have produced many plays during this long period. No doubt many of them are now lost to us, owing to Mr. John Warburton's cook, that "Omar of our early drama," using them leaf by leaf as covers for pie-crust. We possess the titles of thirty-eight plays if we include "Sir John van Olden Barnaveldt" (discovered sometime ago by Mr. A. H. Bullen) either partially or entirely written by Massinger. These consist of tragedies, comedies, and romantic dramas. "The Virgin Martyr," in which Massinger was undoubtedly assisted by Thomas Dekker, contains some passages of remarkable beauty. But it is an imperfect production, and the careful and judicious critic will proceed cautiously in bestowing his praise upon the play. Dekker's hand may be clearly traced in it, and probably the more dainty and delicate passages which are its redeeming features are from the pen of this delightful dramatist. We especially appreciate the tender spirit of the scene between Dorothea and Angelo, Act ii., scene i., which seems to be written in Dekker's happiest strain. A passage of genuine and unmistakable poetry like this, full of an actual peaceful serenity, and coming in the midst of so much that is unquestionably coarse and conventional, affects our senses almost as deeply as the clear brilliant sun in the early spring. "The Duke of Milan" is written in beautiful and forcible language, slightly turbulent at times when Massinger allows the "hectic flush of passion" to run away with him, but frequently rising into true poetic utterance. Sforza is a type of character common enough in Massinger's plays. A human being firm and manly in many respects, but somewhat liable to lose the balance of his mind by sudden outbursts of ungovernable rage and hatred. Sforza is an almost coarse assertion of the force of nature, of the ironic preponderance of nature and circumstance over men's artificial arrangements. Mr. Leslie Stephen has described this play as a variation upon the theme of "Othello," but Mr. Baker considered Mr. Swinburne more critically exact when he says to do justice with it we should compare it not with "Othello" but with Ford's variation on the same theme of "Love's Sacrifice." Malefort in "The Unnatural Combat" is not a very acceptable personage to entertain; neither do the remaining characters in the play impress us very favourably. It is worthy of our attention as an early example of Massinger's style. His command of blank verse is always effective and masterly. He does not possess that exuberance of imaginative force as displayed in Marlowe, Fletcher, Webster and Ford; but he partially atones for this deficiency by his keenness of expression, his melodious cadences, his admirable way of rising to the dignity of an important situation, and by his singularly happy manner of working out the intricacies of his plots. "The Bondman" is one of the best of Massinger's romantic plays. He is always more at home in romantic drama than in pure tragedy; and in this play, with its novel and interesting plot, the poet turns his abilities to their best advantage. The tone throughout is dignified and bracing. In some of his plays Massinger makes the speeches of his chief characters the mere vehicle for a rhetorical use of words. The speeches of Paris in "The Roman Actor" are totally exempt from this fault. In them we have "the writhing and conflict, and the sublime colloquy of man's nature with itself." The scene in which Caesar kills Paris because his mistress Domitia conceives a guilty passion for him strikes the note of profound dramatic passion. "The Great Duke of Florence" is the most pleasing and delightful of Massinger's tragi-comedies, whether we praise it for the sweetness of its versification, its well-drawn dramatis personae, or its happily evolved plot. There is a rich vein of gentle playfulness of peculiar and susceptible charm running throughout the play. To use Lamb's expression, we read it "with composure and placid delight." "The Maid of Honour" has few distinguishing qualities. The passions depicted in this play are not the passions of real men and women. There is variety of character, but Massinger has manifested little skill in ably contrasting it. Camiola and her rejected lover Adorni are the only two people that attract our sympathies in any way, or for whom we have any respect. In this play Massinger evinces that keen and intense appreciation of beauty as manifested in the human body. This sense of physical beauty, this perception of the matchless loveliness of the perfect forms of men and women, he possessed in common with Marlowe and Shakespeare, and most of the other poets of the Elizabethan age. "The Fatal Dowry" is a fine specimen of Massinger's tragic work. The general tone of the play is decidedly satisfactory, and the interest of the reader is kept well alive from the first scene till the last. There is much pathos, and some wholesome invigorating passion. The character which obtains most of our admiration is Romont. He is one of nature's truest gentlemen. Truthful, upright in his dealings with the world, tender-hearted, courteous, and possessed of manly fortitude, he is one of the noblest characters ever created by the fine imagination of a poet's brain. Massinger is always more successful in his delineation of men than of women; and in the perception of the noble qualities of healthy manhood Shakespeare has scarcely excelled him.—Mr. Baker proceeded to criticise "Sir John van Olden Barnaveldt," "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," and "The City Madam."

PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—(Friday, June 6.)

HENRY BRADLEY, Esq., president, in the chair.—The paper read was on "The Linguistic Value of the Irish Annals," by Mr. Whitley Stokes. After briefly describing the MSS. and editions of the fifteen sets of Irish annals now extant, and explaining why they had not hitherto been used for philological purposes, Mr. Stokes stated that he had collected from these documents no less than 3,300 words which were not found in the published dictionaries, or, if so found, were wrongly explained or insufficiently belgt. He then dealt with his subject under the following heads: I. Irish words etymologically interesting, such, e.g., as the old names for "wolf," breeh, Skr. vrika, and fael = Arm. goil. II. Low-Latin words: (e.g., belliolum "skirmish," comitio "mêlée"), Irish loans from Low-Latin (e.g., calad "harbour," coite "boat," scriphta "crypt," cubidil or gubidil "confession"), and Irish loans from Norman-French (e.g., amhantur "good luck," crêt "house-ridge," gailor "mangonel," pirrêl "catapult," serênach "foot-soldier"). III. Old-Welsh names and Irish loans from Welsh and Breton (e.g., mael "lord," spôchad "castration"). IV. Pictish names and glosses, such as cartit .i. delg; eredi "credulitatis"; disper "dives"; mor "magnus"; muos-ros "nemus porcorum"; vig-monid "regius mona." V. Old-Norse names, nicknames, and other words, and Irish loans from Old-Norse (e.g., armand "officer," midling "villain"). VI. Anglo-Saxon names, Irish loans from Anglo-Saxon (e.g., bêd "boat," blede "goblet," boga "bow"), and Irish loans from Middle-English (e.g., brugen "conflict," giomanaah "yeoman," loard "lord," Uasanport "Oxford"). The Low-Latin words Mr. Stokes thought represented the lingua rustica spoken in Gaul and Britain; and under the fourth head he gave reasons for holding that Pictish was a Celtic language, distinct from Gaelic and from Welsh, but more nearly allied to the latter. Under head V. he identified the names of nearly all the Vikings who attacked Ireland in the ninth and tenth centuries, and showed how some of these names, as handed down by the Irish annalists, threw light on the prehistoric forms of Old-Norse. For example, Amlaib (Óláfr), Barith (Bárðr), In-fuit, In-seoa, On-phile (Átelli), Ruadhmand (Hrómundr), Tomrir (Þórir).

FINE ART.

Mythology and Monuments of Ancient Athens; being a Translation of a Portion of the "Attica" of Pausanias by Margaret de G. Verrall, with Introductory Essay and Archaeological Commentary by Jane E. Harrison. (Macmillan.)

THE numerous works of the Periegetae who treated of Athens and her monuments are now, with one exception, represented only by fragments. The exception is Pausanias, the least valuable because the latest. Yet, tiresome and disappointing as he is, he is indispensable to the student of ancient art and mythology. His value really consists, not so much in the confused, vague, and misleading description of what he saw or professed to have seen, as in the contributions which (for the most part without acknowledgment) he levied on older and more accurate observers. Chief among these was Polemon, to whom we probably owe the most valuable portions of Pausanias, such as the description of the chest of Kypselos. These borrowed plumes have formed an inexhaustible theme for German learning and German ingenuity, one professor lauding to the skies the "Goldkürner echter Ueberlieferung," scattered through the pages of Pausanias, while a younger colleague loses no opportunity of gibbeting that author's blunders, inconsistencies, and generally unsatisfactory performance. But a faint echo of the struggle has reached this happy island. Save a translation or two, and the valuable "Numismatic Commentary" by Dr. Imhoof-Blumer and Prof. Percy Gardner, little has been done for the Periegetes on this side of the North Sea. The article "Pausanias" in the new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, though from the pen of a great Cambridge scholar only recently deceased, contains no hint of the controversies that have raged round the subject of his memoir. For him the stores of German erudition have no charm. No question of plagiarism is raised. Polemon is not even mentioned.

The secret of this neglect of Pausanias lies doubtless in the fact that, belonging as he does to the age of the Antonines, he remains outside the narrow groove of classical study pursued at our universities. Less fortunate than some mathematical celebrities, he has not been "put into a form to be written out at examinations." It is not surprising, therefore, that even in the writings of those who might have been expected to take a wider view, the old-fashioned errors are dished up anew. The farrago of stilted compositioes compiled by the Syrian sophist is dubbed "the best of guide-books," though anyone who tried to find his way about Greece by its help would soon be glad to exchange it for a "Baedeker." As a matter of fact, only about a twentieth part of the work deals with monuments; the bulk is of an historical character. It seems, indeed, that the "Periegesis" of Pausanias is really a rhetorical work, intended to be read aloud in a large assembly. It is this rhetorical tendency that makes Pausanias so hard to unravel. Pliny seems to have taken what his servants picked out for him and jumbled it up crudely together with a few blunders of his own. Pausanias is more difficult to deal with, as he worked his material up in artistic shape. In the stagnant peace of the Antonine era almost every other form of intellectual activity was "played out" except prose composition, which was thought capable of representing everything.

As a rule Pausanias presents us in each book with lists of kings, "encomia," prodigies (θauμάσια), and then the Periegesis proper. The first book is exceptional, its arrangement not being so symmetrical. To this first book, or rather to the first thirty of its forty-four chapters, Miss Harrison and Mrs. Verrall have confined themselves, wisely eschewing the Herculean task of dealing with Pausanias as a whole. Is it, then, with Athens itself as distinguished from the rest of Attica and from Megara that we have to deal, though of course incidental light is thrown on various cults throughout the Attic demes.

The volume before us, then, contains Miss Harrison's preface and essay on "The Mythology of Athenian Local Cults," occupying 156 pages; and a translation by Mrs. Verrall of the first book of Pausanias, so far as it relates to the mythology and monuments of Athens, with a commentary and notes by Miss Harrison, forming the bulk of the volume, extending to 607 pages. These are followed by a translator's note on the text and a full index of twenty-three pages.

In the preface the object of the book is stated to be "to elucidate the Mythology of Athens," Pausanias being taken as a guide. As regards the essay, the author lays stress on three points—first, to deal with vase paintings as sources; secondly, in dealing with literary sources to distinguish early and late versions; thirdly, to explain legends by cults, her belief being that "ritual practice misunderstood explains the elaboration of myth."

In spite of critics from Scaliger to Kalkmann, Miss Harrison records her conviction that the narrative of Pausanias is the "original narrative of a bond fide traveller"—a phrase, by the way, painfully suggestive of mendacity. This question, however, as relating to the whole Periegesis she considers beside her province. Valuing her author for his descriptions of archaic work and early cults, and as enabling us to realise the art of ancient Athens, she declines to follow him in his historical digressions.

After some introductory remarks on Attic genealogies, Miss Harrison examines the two events connected with Cecrops—viz., the strife of Athena and Poseidon, and the birth of Erichthonios. The former was unknown to archaic art. As to the latter, taking δρόσος and ἔρση in the Aeschylean and Homeric sense of "young animals," and citing the analogy of the Theismophoria, she holds that the Hersephoria was a ceremonial having reference to human fertility, at which were carried youthful forms hidden in cistas. Maidens overcome by curiosity would find within the chest the figures of a child and snakes. With reference to the parentage of Erichthonios, the pinax (No. 2759) in the Berlin Museum might have been quoted as an illustration of the rejection of Hephaistos by Athena. On this pinax Athena, with outstretched Aegis, repels the advances of a lost figure, shown by the inscription to have been Hephaistos. The fragment of a wing, though assigned by Furtwängler to Niké, has been attributed by others to Eros. It is more strange that Miss Harrison has not cited the rhyton in form of a sphinx, from Capua, now in the British Museum*, which illustrates so strikingly the story of Erichthonios.

As with the Hersephoria, so also in the case of the reception of Dionysos by Ikaros, she remarks, "the occurrence is invented to account for the festival, not the festival because of the occurrence." Thus the Aiora or Swing festival connected with the song of Aletis (the guilty one) gave rise, by false etymology, to stories of Erigone's wandering. "Of all the circumstances attendant on the coming of Demeter," remarks Miss Harrison, "it is the sending out of Triptolemos, and this only, that has taken real live hold on Attic vase-paintings." To the Athenian of the fifth century Triptolemos is the corn-carrier, not the ploughman. "In Alexandrian times he becomes, by confusion with Osiris, the arch-plougher." In this connexion we hear of Eumolpos—first the sweet singer of the sanctuary; later, when Dionysos came from Thrace to Eleusis, a warlike Thracian. Eumolpos was son of Poseidon; Erechtheus was Poseidon himself. When Athena put Poseidon out of fashion at Athens, Erechtheus was born again as Erichthonios. Till Roman times the myths of Eos and Kephalos and of Prokris and Kephalos were kept distinct. Miss Harrison believes that the latter had its rise from the ritual custom of human sacrifice among the Leukadians in honour of Apollo. The myth of Boreas and Oreithyia, not indigenous to Attica, but found on the Corinthian chest of Kypselos, is traced back to "the north wind sporting among the breakers" with reference to Iliad xx., 222, and to the akroterion from Delos restored by Furtwängler. Butes is treated as priest and double of Poseidon. The story of his reputed sisters, Procne and Philomela, is "transparently a nature myth." Pandion, their father, "lived and died at Megara, and clearly he belongs there; he was only affiliated to the Athenian stock to give a link to his grandson Theseus."

With the legends of Theseus the mythological essay closes. To him some sixty pages are devoted, an amount not excessive considering the number of myths that have been more or less arbitrarily connected with his name. Miss Harrison believes that the types of adventures of Theseus appearing on red-figured vases had their source, not in works of art, plastic or pictorial, but in "mimetic representations of mythological scenes."

Besides reading the whole of Mrs. Verrall's translation, I have carefully compared with the original twenty-five sections, taking one from each of the portions into which the translation is divided. I feel, therefore, competent to say that the work (no easy one) is distinctly well done. I would venture, however, to suggest that Ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ νοτίου καλουμένου τείχους, ὃ τῆς ἀκροπόλεως ἐς τὸ θέατρον ἐστὶ τετραμμένον is not best translated "on the southern wall of the Acropolis, as it is called, which is towards the theatre" (p. 240).

The incidental translations interspersed in the commentary are not always so happy. Athena might not appreciate the invocation

"Worshipful maid, Ward of the City, valiant in war;

Tritogeneia, daughter of Zeus the Counsellor."

Making "valiant in war" rhyme with "the Counsellor" may be music of the future, but hardly of the present. Again, in place of the time-honoured "I'll wreath my sword in myrtle bough," we have

"In a myrtle bough shall my sword be hid,
So Harmodios and Aristogeiton did," a rhythm suggestive of a "breakdown." For these poetical translations, however, neither Mrs. Verrall nor Miss Harrison is responsible.

The bulk of the commentary is devoted either to questions connected with deities, as the worship of Amphiaraos akin to that of Asklepios—Asklepios and the dream-oracle—the Brauronian Artemis in the light of Prof. Robert's "Märchen"—Athena and Marsyas, &c.—or to topography. In this Dr. Dörpfeld has lent valuable aid, with the kindness and courtesy which he extends to all who have the good fortune to make his acquaintance. His views are for the most part not only new, but true, and his suggestions are always brilliant.

The following are some of the most interesting questions dealt with: the position and extent of the Agora; the recognition of the Enneakrounos at the south-west corner of the Areopagus; the identification of the so-called "Theseion" with the temple of Hephaistos; the identification of the Eridanos with the river flowing through Northern Athens and the so-called "Sacred Gate;" a clear distinction between the four stages successively erected in the Dionysiac Theatre during the five hundred years from Lycurgus to Phaedrus. Each stage absorbed more and more of the orchestra. This, however, was not the original orchestra, which lies more to the south. It is now shown that, as at Epidauros and elsewhere, this original Greek theatre was merely a circular dancing place. Miss Harrison has added a useful conspectus of honorary seats with inscriptions in the theatre; also a valuable plan of the Acropolis, showing the route of Pausanias. The original plan, too, for the Propylaea is clearly set forth, a plan never carried out in its full extent.

After reading through some hundreds of pages affording little matter for objection, it is positively refreshing to meet with views as to the pedimental sculptures of the Parthenon that are not likely to pass unchallenged. Miss Harrison admits that vase paintings cannot be held to be copies of the pediment composition, but contends that in the eastern pediment, as on some vases, Athena was represented as emerging from the head of Zeus. To my mind there would be something unavoidably ridiculous in the representation of Athena as a little doll jumping in Jack-in-the-box fashion from the split skull of Zeus. In Greek sculpture size varied in proportion to the importance of the respective figures, and it would seem incongruous for the figure of most interest to be the smallest of all the various beings represented in the pediment. We have two well-known pairs of pedimental groups—those of Aegina and Olympia. In both cases there were different artists for the east and the west pediments. At Aegina the centre was occupied by absolutely the same deity in the same position with regard to figures arranged in almost identical action in both pediments. At Olympia, though the subjects differ widely and action and repose are correspondingly contrasted, the central place is in both taken by the figure of a god standing in much the same quiet attitude. We might reasonably suppose therefore that two pediments entrusted to one and the same artist would show a closely similar arrangement of the central group; and Pheidias, who certainly divided the honours of the west pediment between Poseidon and Athena, may well have given her an equal share with her father on the principal façade of a temple appropriated to her worship. As to the west pediment it must surely be wrong to speak of charioteers as "seated." They are simply leaning back to pull in the fiery horses. In the contest between Athena and Poseidon, as represented on the vase from Kertsch, Miss Harrison follows Mr. Cecil Smith's view that the serpent is the symbol of the salt spring hitherto supposed to be denoted by the dolphin. She also adopts his ingenious restoration of the Selene in the east pediment as on horseback. She objects to the use of a column to support the right hand of the chryselephantine statue. It is hardly likely, however, that such a support would have been invented by the artist who depicted it on an Athenian coin.

It is in connexion with Athena, the goddess of invention, that most of the heterodox views in this volume are propounded. The chryselephantine statue by Pheidias is set up as "Athene Polias"; yet Hesychios, at any rate, calls it the Parthenos. And what became of the original Polias? A brand new statue by a famous sculptor often stood alongside a blacker old xoanon; but it was the old xoanon that always held the affections of the pious, not the parvenu. The type of the ancient defender of the city was aggressively warlike, while the creation of Pheidias had lowered her shield and spear, like her sister on the frieze peacefully watching the civic procession.

Miss Harrison holds that the temple of Athena Polias was the one discovered by Dr. Dörpfeld between the Parthenon and the Erechtheion, and that the last-named "belonged to Erechtheus and the cognate Poseidon." She maintains that, with the words, "In the temple of Athena Polias" (xxvii.), Pausanias passes from the Erechtheion into the temple discovered by Dr. Dörpfeld. Here she differs from the great

* Described by Mr. Murray in the Journal of Hellenic Studies, VIII., 1.

German architect, who is content to refer to the supposed lacuna in i. 24, 3, a lacuna the occurrence of which is described as "highly improbable" by the learned author of the "Translator's Note," and previously discarded by Konrad Wernicke, an excellent authority.* However this may be, we have, thanks to Dr. Dörpfeld, a clear knowledge of the plan of the temple destroyed by the Persians. Enough of it remained, or was restored, to house the treasure of the state. Miss Harrison, however, and Dr. Dörpfeld maintain that the temple was entirely rebuilt (more than once), without a colonnade. This view is not likely to meet with general assent. It would be strange that, while so many parts of the original building were forthcoming, so little could be assigned to its successors. But let it suffice here to refer to Strabo, 396, and Herodotus, v. 77.† As to the Erechtheion, it is difficult to believe that it could have belonged to Erechtheus and Poseidon alone, when the largest chamber was given up to Athena, and that too on the east or principal side.

Miss Harrison thinks that the total absence of distinguishing attributes proves that the archaic female statues of the Acropolis do not represent Athene. This absence of attributes is not conclusive. Athena appears unarmed on the François vase, and on the Berlin bowl from Aegina. Again, the office of priestess of Athena Polias was held for life. Lysimache enjoyed it for sixty-four years. So these numerous statues cannot all have represented holders of this special office. It will be best to leave it an open question whether they represent Athena herself or her ministrants.

We are told in the preface that some of the views, "owing to the unavoidable reduction in size . . . give but an inadequate notion of the clearness and detail of the originals." Some of the illustrations are indeed unfortunate, especially those from coins. Quantity, however, may atone for quality—there are 251 of them.

Though searching δελτογράφω φρενί, I have discovered only some five-and-forty misprints and similar slips—a very small number considering the nature and extent of the work. Throughout the volume there is abundant evidence of care and skill, as well as of wide reading. Miss Harrison has secured much valuable help, and has duly acknowledged it. She knows her subject thoroughly, and also knows how to place it before the reader clearly and well.

TALFOURD ELY.

THE BURLINGTON FINE ARTS CLUB.

THIS club is now holding a miscellaneous exhibition of a very interesting character. I am unable to discuss its contents in great detail; but many readers will in any case be glad to be informed of what are its principal features.

To the serious and devoted student of the earlier English art nothing is likely to be more attractive than the long series of designs—some of them in water-colour, and some of them in sepia—which come from the hand of Thomas Stothard. Very many of them bear upon the illustration of Roger's Poems; some, too, are among the ever graceful, yet ever simple, designs which this artist, whom competent critics have always rated more highly than the general public, prepared for "The Novelist's Magazine," in illustration of Samuel Richardson's novels, Sir Charles Grandison and Clarissa. No one who is in any degree aware of the characteristics of Stothard's art will require to be told how unpretentious these drawings are, or how full of varied and exquisite invention, or how uniformly elegant. They speak for themselves. We may be glad, however—more especially from the point of view of the public, which demands, always, "important" work—that these delightful designs, which appeal to the connoisseur so rightly, do not stand alone; for the connoisseur, and even the least instructed, may together agree to admire the glowing canvas which depicts "A Fête Champêtre." This is certainly one of the most admirable of Stothard's works in painting. In colour, it may be said to be founded somewhat upon the Venetians, and in design very much upon Watteau. But there is quite enough in it that is Stothard's own—entirely his own, for instance, is the type of person who, to right and left in this picture, is engaged in graceful movement, in gay and serene and almost rhythmic action. A singular contrast is afforded to the Stothards by the exhibition of a certain number of the portrait sketches of MacIise's illustrious contemporaries, which MacIise executed some sixty years ago. All are forcible, and some are subtle; and nowhere is there more cruelly displayed the ability of the artist to render ugly fact than in that pencil drawing of Talleyrand, which Dante Gabriel Rossetti, writing many years ago in the very journal in which these words are appearing to-day, described with the strength of his peculiar genius. A "Diagram of Damnation," he was so good as to call it.

Some elegant landscape drawings by the late Arthur Ditchfield share the interest which may be evoked by the display of only a few of his etchings. Ditchfield was an artist not enough appreciated and known by the large public. Some other etchings call for particular comment. There are a group by Daniell, of Norwich, which attest the proficiency of this tasteful amateur with the etching-needle at a time long before the period which is known as that of "the revival of etching." But two other artists, both of them of real repute, are shown by the present exhibition to have been among the earlier of modern etchers. These are Sir David Wilkie and Andrew Geddes. The student, if he is already acquainted with their etchings at all, is presumably acquainted with them only in their late state—the state, that is, in which they found their way into the book which the Scottish antiquary, David Laing, issued—if we remember rightly—about a dozen years ago. By Wilkie only three subjects are in Savile Row, or, rather, only two subjects, for of one of them—that of the elderly man searching in a bureau for a mislaid document—there are a couple of impressions. This, as Mr. Hamerton appears to have indicated a score of years since, is Wilkie's best etching. We should have been glad, on some accounts, to have seen beside it the print of the Pope swinging a censor; but the other etching by which Wilkie is here represented is more really characteristic of him, just because it is less free in method. Wilkie's etchings, which were done when he was in close companionship with Geddes, are not as a whole equal to those of the less popularly known master. We turn now to Geddes. About ten prints—which are, roughly speaking, half of his small but delightful "etched work"—are exhibited. These include every one of his best; and about two-thirds of them are portraits, and one-third landscape. The famous portrait of his mother—of whom there is an oil picture in the Edinburgh National Gallery—is seen in progressive stages. Here, too, is the vivacious portrait of Nasmyth. And here, too, are three of his rare landscapes, all of them in their way profoundly interesting—one, perhaps, for grace of composition; another for a certain elegant fidelity in the draughtsmanship of tree-form; and the last for that broad disposition of light and shade which recalls now the "Landscape with the Square Tower," and now the "Goldweigher's Field" of Rembrandt. And this reminds me that Rembrandt himself is not wholly unrepresented in the show. There is a most chosen impression of the portrait of Haaring the elder. Near it hang three Vandykes, in early and rare states. Elsewhere about the room are articles of ceramic ware, enamels, and silver plate—the latter including no less than three or four examples of the nef, a table ornament of singular interest and elaboration.

Among the principal contributors to this miscellaneous exhibition are Sir William Drake, Mr. Henry Vaughan, Mrs. Roget, Mr. Salting, Mr. J. M. Gray, of Edinburgh, and Mr. James Reeve, of Norwich.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

A COLLECTION OF BABYLONIAN TABLETS.

A VERY interesting collection of clay tablets found in the ruins of Sippera will be sold by Messrs. Sotheby and Co. on July 4.

The catalogue contains about 250 lots, the majority dating from the early period of the First Babylonian Empire. These are generally contracts for the sale of lands, fields, houses, grain, slaves, &c., and attest the great commercial activity of the metropolis of the rising empire. A marriage contract of the time of Khammurati (No. 217) claims special attention, as it is unique among the documents of this epoch.

The remainder of the collection consists of tablets of the Second Babylonian Empire, and of the Persian, Greek, and Parthian periods. Two are especially interesting from the social point of view. One is the summing up and judgment in a law suit of the thirteenth year of Nabonidus. A farmer named Iddin-Marduk had sent by boat to Babylon 480 measures of fruit. Kurgal-natan, who had undertaken the transport, lost part of his cargo on the way, and, having admitted that there had been neglect on his part, agreed to make restitution. When Iddin-Marduk came to claim the amount Kurgal-natan avoided him, so that the former was compelled to bring the case before the court. The boat-owner, when summoned, acknowledged the charge, and was condemned to pay the value of the lost fruit. The decision is attested by the seals of five judges. This curious case shows that in Babylonia carriage practically included insurance.

The other is a kind of remonstrance addressed to the crew of a boat bound for Shushan with provisions for the king. The crew, for reasons not explained, wanted to abandon the boat; and the writer of this tablet remonstrates with them, pointing out that to desert a boat laden with royal provisions would be tantamount to high treason. It is probable that, if the sailors had not given way after this remonstrance, it would have been followed by their arrest and formal accusation.

There are a great many contracts of sales and loans. An interesting one (No. 205) shows that slaves, as well as lands, houses, and personal property were mortgaged. It also comprises lists of various kinds of tithes due to the temple of Esagil, of animals brought to Babylon for sale, and of other personal property. No doubt it was an inventory made before a mortgage, or a bill of sale.

* In vol. xii. of the Athenian Mittheilungen.

† I have treated this question fully in the Antiquary for December, 1888.

The tablets of the Greek and Parthian periods are, as usual, mostly astronomical. The latest is of B.C. 91.

The collection also includes a few Akkadian texts. The most important (No. 215) consists of 216 lines, and appears to be agricultural.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. HUBERT HERKOMER has been elected a correspondent of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, in the room of the late J. R. Herbert.

MR. HENRY DOYLE has recently acquired for the National Gallery of Ireland a portrait of a young man by Rembrandt, of exceedingly fine character, and belonging, presumably, to the early middle period of Rembrandt's art. The picture has only once been exhibited—and then with great approval—at a public exhibition in Brussels. It comes to the Irish National Gallery straight from the family of the young burgher whom it depicts.

WE hear that the Norwich Society of Artists propose to hold next year an exhibition of the works of the late E. T. Daniell, for whom some of his living fellow-citizens claim a very high place.

THE Fine Art Society will have on view next week, in New Bond-street, a series of eighty water-colours by Mr. Henry B. Wimbush, entitled "From London to Land's End by way of the Thames."

MISS MINNA GRAY, a pupil of Chaplin and Munkacsy, is giving a series of six lectures on "The History of Architecture" at Bolton Studios, South Kensington. The lectures deal with the derivation, development, and distinctive features of the different kinds of architecture, with special reference to the influence on style of geographical and ethnical conditions.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. COMYNS CARR's adaptation of "Les Femmes Nerveuses"—which under the brief but sufficiently telling title of "Nerves" has just been produced at the Comedy Theatre, has the advantage of what is for a piece of this nature a very strong cast. Comic or character actors of the force and individuality of Mr. Kemble and Mr. Edward Righton are engaged in the performance; and with them is Miss Maud Millett—perhaps the most charming of our ingénues, though not here playing an ingénue's part—and actresses of comedy such as Miss Lottie Venne and Miss Sophie Larkin. In giving the piece such a cast—from which in any case it is impossible but that entertainment should result—Mr. Hawtrey, the manager, has been most wise in his day and generation. Of Mr. Carr's adaptation we may now briefly note that it is very well executed.

MME. FRANCESCHI—formerly known as that excellent actress, Mlle. Emma Fleury—will, we understand, be heard for the first time in London society at a matinée shortly to be given at the French Embassy by Mme. Waddington. Having retired from the stage since her marriage with Signor Franceschi, the well-known Italian sculptor, Mme. Franceschi has become a professor of elocution, and is sometimes, though rarely, heard in a few of the best Paris salons.

A matinée in aid of the Marlowe Memorial Fund will be given at the Shaftesbury Theatre on July 4. Perhaps rightly, it has been decided to produce no play, or portion of a play, by Marlowe himself. But the name of Marlowe will not be altogether unheard; for Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has promised to recite a poem specially written for the occasion by M. Richepin; and Mr. W. L. Courtney's little piece, entitled "Kit Marlowe"—which was published in one of the magazines a few months ago—is to be acted for the first time, with Mr. Bouchier in the principal part. The other attractions include a new comedy by Mr. H. A. Jones, a dialogue by Mr. Justin H. McCarthy, a performance by the members of the Daly Company, and a recitation of Rossetti's "Last Confession," by Mr. Willard.

THE North London branch of the English Goethe Society seems to be doing a useful service. Under the direction of Mrs. Coupland, the wife of the gentleman who has been chiefly instrumental in founding the branch, a series of Goethe's plays are being performed by amateur actors. On Saturday and Monday admirers of the poet will have an opportunity of seeing a representation of two of his plays, which, though but little known, are highly characteristic and interesting—viz., "Der Bürger-general," and the Singspiel, "Claudine von Villa Bella." The performances will take place at the Royal Park Lecture Hall, Park-street, N.W., at 8 o'clock.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

"LA FAVORITA" was given in French at Covent Garden last Friday week. Mlle. Renée Richard, well known on the French stage, took the part of Léonore. She has a powerful well-trained mezzo-soprano voice, and is an excellent and experienced actress. M. Montariol sang the "Fernando" music well, but he was sharp at times, especially in "Spirito gentil." M. Cabalet was not in his best voice, and the chorus was not altogether in tune. Last Thursday Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro" was presented for the first time this season. The music may be old, but it is not old-fashioned. Mme. Tavery, as the Countess, sang with great feeling and intelligence; and her acting, as one might expect, was extremely good. Mlle. Ella Russell was a sprightly Susanna, Mlle. Bauermeister an efficient Marcellina, and Mme. Scalchi rather a heavy Cherubino. The other principal parts were well personated by MMs. Dufrieche, Isnardon, and D'Andrade. The orchestra was somewhat rough.

Mr. Leopold Godowsky—who studied at Berlin, and afterwards put himself under the guidance of M. Saint-Saëns—gave a pianoforte recital at the Steinway Hall last Thursday week. In his reading of Beethoven's Variations in C minor he displayed gifts both natural and acquired. He is a neat player, and has a singularly light touch. The next piece on the programme was the Sonata Appassionata, but only the Andante and Finale were given. Why should Beethoven be thus mutilated? M. Godowsky's reading of the music was not sufficiently dignified. In Schumann's Kreisleriana and Etudes Symphoniques he was, on the whole, more satisfactory; but his style of interpretation was at times peculiar. He played, however, the Finale of the Etudes with great brilliancy. His Chopin performances again left something to desire. He made his chief success in some of his own pieces.

Señor Sarasate held his second concert—this time an orchestral one—at St. James's Hall last Saturday afternoon. Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole," Raff's "Liebesfee," and the concert-giver's "Zigeunerweisen" have been heard more than once at these concerts, so it is quite sufficient to say that they were given with all due skill and effect, that they were applauded vociferously, and that an encore for one of his dances was accepted. Señor Sarasate is playing as well, if not better than ever. The orchestra under Mr. Cousins's direction played Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite and the Tannhäuser Overture. The hall was crowded to overflowing.

Mr. Leonard Borwick, whose debut at the Philharmonic Society we lately chronicled, was pianist at the fifth Richter concert last Monday evening. Brahms's pianoforte Concerto in D minor has never been a popular work; and indeed since it was first performed at the Crystal Palace, in 1872, it has only been heard some half-dozen times. It contains some of Brahms's most intellectual and most earnest music, while the difficulties which it offers to the pianist are by no means inconsiderable. Mr. Borwick played throughout as if he thoroughly understood and felt the music. The orchestra seemed to us too loud at times in the first movement, so that the pianist had a hard fight. In the Finale Mr. Borwick did not, however, give out the leading theme with quite the requisite decision. The middle movement was admirably interpreted. The young artist was recalled more than once at the close, and the brilliant success which he achieved must be highly gratifying to him; it was, in any case, well deserved. The programme included the "Ruy Blas" Overture, the "Siegfried Idyll," the "Siegfried" March, and Beethoven's Symphony in A. The performances were all excellent, although the opening movement of the Symphony might perhaps have been given, especially in the Coda, with more vigour.

Mme. Teresa Carreño gave a third pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. Her reading of Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 27, No. 1) was good in parts, but not particularly interesting. Her fine technique was displayed to advantage in Schumann's Toccata. We did not care for her rendering of three small Chopin pieces; the Prelude was exaggerated, the A flat Etude rough, and the Valse (Op. 42) given in a hurried, sensational manner. Mme. Carreño was heard at her best in pieces by Godard, Vogrich, and Kullak. The change made in the programme from Mendelssohn's Prelude and Fugue in E minor to Gottschalk's Trémolo was no improvement; and this holds good whichever of the two Fugues written in that key by the composer was intended.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 0

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
This Evening, at 8, THE GREEN BUSHES.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Gratian, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lily Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30 by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. O. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9, NERVES.
Messrs. H. Kumble, Edward Righton, and Charles Hawtreay; Mesdames Maude Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venn.
Preceded, at 8, by A BAD PENNY.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLEIGH.
To-Night and Every Evening, at 8, will be acted an Original Farce, by Mr. A. W. PIERCE, called THE CABINET MINISTER.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.
Messrs. Charles Wyndham, G. Giddens, W. Blakely, W. Draycott, S. Valentini, F. Atherly; Mesdames M. A. Victor, E. Laydon, Frances, E. Pourcos, and Mary Moore.
Preceded, at 8.10, by LIVING TOO FAST.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, GEO. EDWARDS.
To-night, at 8, RUY BLAS AND THE BLAZE ROUE.
By A. C. Torr and Herbert F. Clark. Music by Herr Meyer Luis.
The dances by John D'Auban.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Manager, Mr. W. B. MOORE.
Every Evening at 8, Miss ADELAIDE MOORE as JULIET.
Mr. OTIS SKINNER as ROMEO.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BERNBOEM-TREK.
Every Evening, at 8.40, A VILLAGE PRIEST.
Mr. Tree, Mr. Fernandes, Mr. Fred Terry, Mr. Allan, Miss Rose Leclercq, Miss Norreys, Mrs. Gaston Murray, Mrs. Brooke, and Mrs. Tree.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8 (last night), THEODORA.
Messrs. W. H. Vernon, Charles Cartwright, Cecil Morton Yorke, George Barnage, George W. Cockburn, Alfred B. Cross, H. de Solla, H. Sturge, Charles Lander, G. L. Grange, and Leonard Boyce; Mesdames Dolores Drummond, Clarice Trevor, Marie Stuart, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
Every Evening, at 8.15, MARJORIE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashley, Wood, James, Shale, Heaton, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OTLY CARTER.
Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original comic opera by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, entitled THE GONDOLIERS; or, The King of Barataria.

SHAFESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Managers, Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LART.
This Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.
Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Mathews, C. Fulton, H. Cane, Harting, Thomas; Mesdames Beale Hutton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowring, and Olga Brandon.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Managers, Mrs. LANGTRY.
Under the management of Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER.
THURSDAY, June 26th, at 9, farcical comedy, in three acts, adapted from the French by Justin Haudy M'Carthy, YOUR WIFE.
Messrs. Bouchier, Everill, De Lange, Ernest Lawford; Mesdames Edith Chester, Annie Irish, and Adrienne Dairrolles.
Preceded, at 8.15, by OLD FRIENDS.
as play in one act, by Lady Violet Greville

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Managers, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, NEW LAMPS FOR OLD.
Preceded, at 8.15, by FOR HER CHILD'S SAKE.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Elythe, O. Yorks, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames Winifred Emery, Harbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

INVESTED FUNDS, £4,400,000.
PROFITS DIVIDED, £4,000,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS,
£7,700,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTD. 1835.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY LANE, S.W.

Established 1782.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MONDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MONDER

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 5lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11 LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

REDNESS, ROUGHNESS, AND CHAPPING PREVENTED.
FAIR, WHITE HANDS AND HEALTHFUL SKIN AND COMPLEXION SECURED.

PEARS' SOAP.

This world-renowned Toilet Soap has obtained 15 International Awards as a Complexion Soap. It is specially suitable for Ladies, Children, or delicate and sensitive skins generally. Its regular use cannot fail to benefit the worst complexion.

Recommended by Mrs. LANGTRY and Madame ADELINA PATTI.

FISHER'S GLADSTONE BAG.

CATALOGUES POST-FREE.

S. FISHER, 188, STRAND.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so well."

COCOA

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST OF BOOKS.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES.

NEW VOLUMES.

STANDARD LIBRARY.

JOHNSON'S LIVES of the POETS. Edited, with Notes, by Mrs. ALEXANDER NAPIER. And an Introduction by J. W. HALES, M.A., Professor of English Literature in King's College, London, and Clark Lecturer at Trinity College, Cambridge. In 8 vols., 8s. 6d. each.

THE WORKS of FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS. Whiston's Translation, thoroughly Revised, by the Rev. A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. With Topographical and Geographical Notes by Col. Sir O. W. WILSON, K.O.B. In 5 vols., each 8s. 6d.

WATERLOO.—THE DOWNFALL of the FIRST NAPOLEON: a History of the Campaign of 1815. By the late GEORGE HOOPER. New Edition, Revised. 8s. 6d.

"An able monograph on 'Waterloo.'"—Athenæum.

GOETHE'S WORKS. Vol. XIV. Reineke Fox, West-Eastern Divan, and Achilleid. Translated in the original metres by A. ROGERS. 8s. 6d.

THE DRAMATIC WORKS of JEAN RACINE. A Metrical English Version. By R. BRUCE BOWELL, M.A. Oxon. Vol. I., containing The Thebaid—Alexander the Great—Andromache—The Ligtants—Britannicus—Berence. 8s. 6d.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. A Literary Biography. By KARL ELZE, Ph.D., LL.D. Translated by L. DORA SCHMITZ. 8s.

REFERENCE LIBRARY.

A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY. Containing Concise Notices (upwards of 15,000) of Eminent Persons of all Ages and Countries. With Supplement to 1888. By THOMPSON COOPER, F.R.S., Editor of "Men of the Times," &c. 2 vols., each 8s.

CLASSICAL LIBRARY.

"THE ARGONAUTICA" of APOLLONIUS RHODIUS. Translated into English Prose from the Text of R. MERKEL by EDWARD P. COLERIDGE, Oriel Coll., Oxon. 5s.

NOVELISTS' LIBRARY.

BJÖRNSSON'S ARNE and the FISHER LASSIE. Translated from the Norse by W. H. LOW. 8s. 6d.

NEW BOOKS.

Small Edition, on hand-made paper, bound in brown boards, imperial 16mo, price 7s. 6d. net.

NOW READY.

THE TRAGIC MARY.

By MICHAEL FIELD,

Author of "Long Ago," "Callithoe," "Cenote the Great," &c.

Large-Paper Edition, on Whatman's hand-made paper, bound in vellum, with design in gold by Mr. Selwyn Image, 40 Copies only (numbered), fcap. 4to, 72s., net. [Immediately.]

Edition Quarta, large wide post 8vo, 10s. 6d.

SABRINÆ COROLLA In Hortulis Regiæ Scholæ Salopiensis Centenerunt Tres Viri Floribus Legendis.

Large post 8vo, 6s. 6d.

PASTOR PASTORUM; or, the Schooling of the Apostles by Our Lord. By the Rev. HENRY LATHAM, M.A., Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

Crown 8vo 7s. 6d.

PRUDENTIUS. Selected Passages, with Verse Translations on the Opposite Pages. By the Rev. F. ST. JOHN THACKERAY, late Assistant Master, Eton College.

SIXTH and POPULAR EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

MEMORIALS of the Hon. ION KEITH-FALCONER, late Lord Almoner's Professor of Arabic in the University of Cambridge, and Missionary to the Mohammedans of Southern Arabia. By the Rev. ROBERT SINKER, D.D., Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge. With new Portrait.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

A MEMOIR of EDWARD STEERE, D.D., LL.D., Third Missionary Bishop in Central Africa. By the Rev. R. M. HEANLEY, M.A. With Portrait, &c. Second Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 6s.

INDEX of BRITISH PLANTS, according to the London Catalogue (Eighth Edition), including the Synonyms used by the principal Authors, an Alphabetical List of English Names; also References to the Illustrations of Syme's "English Botany" and Bentham's "British Flora." By ROBERT TURNBULL. Paper, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 8s.

RECENT EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

MATHEMATICAL.

Immediately, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY ARITHMETIC.

By C. PENDLEBURY, M.A., F.R.S. Head Mathematical Master, St. Paul's School; and W. S. BEARD, F.R.G.S., Assistant Master at Christ's Hospital.

Fourth Edition. Stereotyped.

ARITHMETIC. By Charles Pendlebury, M.A., F.R.S., Senior Mathematical Master of St. Paul's School.

COMPLETE, with or without Answers, 4s. 6d.

IN TWO PARTS, with or without Answers, 2s. 6d. each.

THE EXAMPLES, without Answers, 3s.

EXAMINATION PAPERS in

ARITHMETIC. By the SAME AUTHOR. 8s. 6d. KEY (for Masters only), 5s.

NOTES on ROULETTES and GLISSETTES.

By W. H. BESANT, D.Sc., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Second Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 6s.

GRADUATED EXERCISES in ADDITION (Tots and Cross Tots, Simple and Compound). By W. S. BEARD, F.R.G.S., Assistant Master at Christ's Hospital. 1s.—ANSWERS, sent to Masters only, free of charge.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on

HEAT. By W. GARNETT, M.A., D.C.L., Principal of the College of Science, Newcastle-on-Tyne; Examiner in Physics in the Victoria University. Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 4s. 6d.

CLASSICAL.

CATULLUS: a New Text, with Critical Notes and an Introduction, by J. P. POSTGATE, M.A., Litt.D., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Professor of Comparative Philology at the University of London. Japanese vellum, wide fcap. 8vo, 6s.

"This elegant little book should be on every scholar's table."—Athenæum.

CÆSAR'S SEVENTH CAMPAIGN

in GAUL, B.C. 52.—DE BELLO GALLICO. Lib. VII. Edited, with Notes, Excursus, and Tables of Idiom, by the Rev. W. COOK-WORTHY COMPTON, M.A., Assistant Master in Uppingham School. With Illustrations, Drawings, Maps, and Plans. Crown 8vo, 4s.

"A really admirable class-book."—Spectator.

"The general character of the notes is excellent."—Guardian.

LOWER FORM SERIES.

CÆSAR: De Bello Gallico. Book I.

Book II. and Book III. With English Notes by GEORGE LONG, M.A., and Full Vocabulary by W. F. R. SHILLETO, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.

HORACE.—ODES. Book I. With

Notes by A. J. MACLEANE, M.A., and Full Vocabulary by A. H. DENNIS, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Wide fcap. 8vo., 2s.

LATIN PROSE for LONDON

STUDENTS. By ARTHUR BAKER, M.A., Classical Master, Independent College, Taunton.

This book covers systematically the whole ground of the Latin Sentences included in the Matriculation, Pass Intermediate, and Pass B.A. Course of the University of London.

MODERN LANGUAGES.

GASC'S CONCISE FRENCH

DICTIONARY. Fourth Edition, thoroughly Revised, with further Improvements and Additions and entirely New Supplements. 10s. 6d.

[In use at Harrow, Rugby, Shrewsbury, &c.]

By Dr. BUCHHEIM, Professor of German Language and Literature in King's College, and Examiner in German to the London University.

GERMAN PROSE COMPOSITION.

Consisting of Selections from Modern English Writers, with Grammatical Notes, Idiomatic Renderings, and General Introduction. Thirteenth Edition, Enlarged, with a List of Subjects for Original Composition. Fcap., 4s. 6d.

A KEY to the First and Second Parts, 8s.; to the Third and Fourth Parts, 4s.

By F. LANGE, Ph.D., Professor at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; Examiner in German at the Victoria University, Manchester; Examiner in German to the College of Preceptors.

ELEMENTARY GERMAN

READER. A Graded Collection of Readings in Prose and Poetry. With English Notes and a Vocabulary. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 1s. 6d.

ADVANCED GERMAN READER.

A Graded Collection of Reading in Prose and Poetry. With English Notes and a Vocabulary. By J. F. DAVIS, M.A., D.Litt. 8s.

CONCISE GERMAN GRAMMAR.

In Three Progressive Parts. With special reference to Pronunciation, Comparative Philology, English, and German Equivalents, and Idioms. Crown 8vo.

I. ELEMENTARY. 2s. II. INTERMEDIATE. 2s.

III. ADVANCED. 8s. 6d.

A NEW and COMPLETE CATALOGUE of WORKS published by Messrs. BELL sent post free on application.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET COVENT GARDEN.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHERD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published by HENRY VILLIERS, 37, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 947.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1890.

PRIME 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TRISCHLER & CO.'S LIST. AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

A RAILWAY FOUNDLING. 3 vols.

By NOMAD, Author of "The Milroya."
The Daily Telegraph says: "It is a story which from the outset is delightfully tantalizing. It is a story that must be read to be understood. There is vivacity and adventure in it, and good as the authoress's previous work. 'The Milroya' was, it is not too much to say this is better."
The Sunday Times says: "It is a novel of an agreeable kind, a graphic picture drawn by the hand of an expert, and the story is interesting and amusing."

The ROMANCE of a STATION. 2 vols.

By Mrs. CAMPBELL PRAED, Author of "Madame," "Affinities," "Policy and Power," "Austrian Heroine," &c.
The Spectator says: "This is a really able writer, but she has never done anything quite so good as 'Romance of a Station.' The fascinating, inscrutable Neeta Wilson, the veiled Princess, is a veritable creation, whose presence in any book would suffice to make it notable. We hope Mrs. Campbell Praed will give us other books that we can praise as heartily and unreservedly."

THE QUEEN of the BLACK HAND.

By HUGH COLEMAN DAVIDSON, Author of "The Old Adam," "Cast on the Waters," "The Green Hills by the Sea." Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.
The Glasgow Herald says: "The name of Hugh Coleman Davidson has become so well known to novel readers that they know what to expect when he gives them a new book."

DARELL BLAKE. By Lady Colin

CAMPBELL. 5th Thousand. Extra cloth, bevelled boards, 272 pp., 6s.
From the Saturday Review:—"The character of Lady Colin Campbell's hero is intensely interesting. It reveals uncommon acuteness and freshness of observation, and that reserve of power which the possession and artistic control of power can alone suggest. Lady Colin Campbell is certainly gifted in the art, so like intuition it may well be intuition, that impels the unflinching hand to stay at the moment in the process of characterisation to give the required accent of light or nuances of shade, with the simple and delicate touch that is most effective."

DOCTOR GREYSTONE. By Madame

VAN DE VELDE. Third Thousand. Bevelled boards, cloth extra, 392 pp. 3s. 6d.
The World says:—"Dr. Greystone is a clever and original book; and in these days of over-emphasis and exaggeration an author who can pass so quietly and simply over the scene in the prologue of the erring wife's death deserves high praise."

MIDGE. By May Crommelin, Author of "Brown Eyes," "Violet Vylian," "Cross Roads," &c. Cloth gilt and bevelled boards, 6s.

THE COPPER CRASH. By Frank

DANBY, Author of "Doctor Phillips," "A Bab in Bohemia." Seventh Thousand. Picture boards, 3s.

A NASTY CROPPER. By G. F.

UNDERHILL, Author of "In at the Death," &c. A Realistic and Sensational Sporting Story. Picture boards, 3s.

DINNA FORGET. By the Author of "Bootles' Baby" and "Harvest." 32,000 copies of "Dinna Forget" have been sold in fourteen days. Paper, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

The Scotsman says:—"With Sir George's tale is a love-story that is like nothing else in fiction except the former work of this pleasing author. It is sentimental without being spoony, and carries the interest lightly along without haste and without rest."

A SOCIETY SCANDAL. By Rita,

Author of "Sheba," "The Mystery of a Turkish Bath," &c. Eleventh Thousand. Paper, 1s.

AGATHA'S QUEST. With Preface by

JULES VERNE. By ROBERT SHERRARD, Author of "Rogue." Paper, 1s.

ENORMOUS SUCCESS OF MISS AMYE READE'S REALISTIC AND SENSATIONAL NOVEL.

RUBY! RUBY! RUBY! or, How

GIRLS ARE TRAINED FOR CIRCUS LIFE.
Among others the following well-known ladies and gentlemen have kindly allowed their names to be used as indicative of their desire to assist the author in her well-directed efforts to bring before the public the horrible cruelties practised by circus trainers on unoffending children who are committed to their care for the purpose of special instruction:—

Gainsford Bruce, Esq., Q.C., M.P.
H. H. Raphael, Esq., London School Board.
Jacob Bright, Esq., M.P.
John W. Rowntree, Esq.
Sir Richard Temple, M.P.
R. Maxwell Esq., M.A.
Joshua Rowntree, Esq., M.P.
Colonel D'Oyley Battley, High Sheriff, County Wicklow.
Walter McLaren, Esq., M.P.
Mrs. Annie Jarvis, School Board, Edinburgh.
Rev. Alfred Norris, M.A.
Mrs. F. A. Walker, M.A., D.D.
Mrs. S. Bennett, Richmond.
Mrs. F. Morrison, Farmwood, Assoc.

ROYAL COMMISSION.—Mr. Gainsford Bruce, Q.C., M.P., has promised that as soon as sufficient evidence can be obtained to justify such a step, he will call attention to the matter in the House of Commons, with a view of inducing the Government to advise her Majesty to appoint a Royal Commission to inquire into and report upon the treatment of children whilst being trained to the business of circus riders, acrobats, and contortionists.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.; picture boards, 2s.
The Daily Telegraph says:—"The motive actuating the authoress is a good one."

Manchester Guardian says:—"Ruby" by Amye Reade. This book is notable on account of the charges brought by the authoress against a manager or managers in general of circuses. It is an indictment so tremendous that, if it can be proved, the authoress should not be content with representing a picture to harrow novel readers. She should collect her proofs and lay them before the Public Prosecutor. Miss Reade asserts that in cases of contumacious girls of seventeen are stripped naked by the circus-master and flogged by him till they are sick and faint and bleeding."

18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, BLACKFRIARS, E.C.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S LIST

NOW READY, AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

THE PASSION PLAY at OBER-AMMERGAU. By F. W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S., Archdeacon and Dean of Westminster, &c., &c. In 1 vol., 4to, cloth, 3s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d.

OUR BOOKING-OFFICE.

"JAMES THE FIRST, of America, not to be confounded even by his enemies with the Old or Young Pretender, is bringing out his book entitled The Gentle Art of Making Enemies," which line represents only a third of the entire title. The celebrated Butterfly signature flutters and flutters from leaf to leaf throughout the book, which in itself, in its binding, print, and arrangement, is a work of Art of which the publisher, Mr. HEINEMANN, may be justly proud, and which must rejoice the soul of JAMES PRIMUS AMERICANUS, Ex-President, R.S.B.A. The Baron has great pleasure in drawing attention—(he is gifted in the Baron, 'drawing' as well as writing, you'll observe)—to a rare specimen of the Papilio Whistleriensis which adorns this paragraph, and hopes, on another occasion, to have a few remarks to offer on the many Jacobean epistles contained in this dainty volume which is issued, as the short preface informs us, under the Ex-P.R.B.A.'s 'immediate care and supervision,' and as a counterblast from LE SIFFLEUR against 'a spurious and garbled version' of his writings already put into circulation. It was about time for JACQUES LE SIFFLEUR to come out for a blow; which blow it is more blessed to give than to receive, dicit the BARON DE BOOK-WORMS."—Punch, June 21, 1890.

* The Gentle Art of Making Enemies. By J. McNeill Whistler. In one volume, 4to, 10s. 6d. London: Wm. Heinemann.

THREE NEW NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

THE MASTER of the MAGICIANS: a Story of Babylon and the Prophet

Daniel. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS and HERBERT D. WARD. In 1 vol., imperial 16mo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.

Athenaeum.—"A thrilling story.....The human interest grows with the story, and it is with regret that the reader takes leave of Daniel.....only heightened by the pathetically human touch of the last scene."

PASSION the PLAYTHING: a Novel. By R. Murray Gilchrist. In 1 vol.,

crown 8vo, 6s.

IN GOD'S WAY: a Novel. By Björnstjerne Björnson. With an Introduction by EDMUND GOSSE. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, sewed, 2s. 6d.; cloth, 3s. 6d.

[HEINEMANN'S INTERNATIONAL LIBRARY, Edited by EDMUND GOSSE, Vol. I.]

LONDON: WILLIAM HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

CLARENDON PRESS NEW BOOKS.

NEW EDITION, ENLARGED AND REVISED, OF MR. POSTE'S "GAIUS."

Just published, Third Edition, Enlarged and Revised, 8vo, cloth, 18s.

GAI INSTITUTIONUM JURIS CIVILIS COMMENTARI

QUATTUOR; or, Elements of Roman Law by Gaius. With a Translation and Commentary by E. POSTE, M.A.

Just published, 8vo, half-morocco, gilt top, 25s.

ANNALS of the BODLEIAN LIBRARY, OXFORD, with a Notice of the Earlier Library of the University. By Rev. W. D. MACRAY, M.A., Assistant in the Department of MSS.

..The present Edition exceeds the first by considerably more than one-third, the text in the latter volume running to 344 pages and in this to 431. The history has been continued from 1868 to 1890; its continuance to a later date being rendered unnecessary by the publication of the Librarian's recent Report covering the years since that date.

COMPLETION OF CHAMBERS'S "HANDBOOK OF ASTRONOMY."

Now ready, 3 vols., 8vo, cloth.—Vols. I. and II., 21s. each; Vol. III., 14s.

A HANDBOOK of DESCRIPTIVE and PRACTICAL ASTRONOMY.

By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With Illustrations and Index. Fourth Edition.

Vol. I. The Sun, Planets, and Comets.—Vol. II. Instruments and Practical Astronomy.—Vol. III. The Starry Heavens.

"A valuable mine of astronomical information.....The information is carefully brought up to date."—Athenaeum.

A NEW SERIES of SCHOOL HISTORIES on THE COLONIES.

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, with 18 Maps, 7s. 6d.

THE DOMINION of CANADA: an Historical and Geographical Study. By the Rev. WILLIAM PARR GRESWELL, M.A. Oxon., F.R.C.I., late Scholar of Brasenose College. Under the auspices of the Royal Colonial Institute.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues sent Free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, Clarendon Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

SANCTA RESPUBLICA ROMANA: a Handbook to the History of Rome and Italy from the division of the Roman World to the Breaking up of Charlemagne's Empire. By RICHARD HEBER WRIGHTSON, M.A.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
WHISTLER'S THE GENTLE ART OF MAKING ENEMIES, by OSWALD CRAWFORD	436
CLARK RUSSELL'S NELSON, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	435
COSMO MONKHOUSE'S CORN AND POPPES, by R. Le GALLIENNE	437
DR. BRANDER'S IMPRESSIONS OF RUSSIA, by W. R. MORFILL	438
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	438
HISTORICAL BOOKS	440
SOME VOLUMES OF SERMONS	441
CLASSICAL TEXTS	442
NOTES AND NEWS	443
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	444
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	444
ORIGINAL VERSE: "THE CHOICE OF A MAN," by F. P.	444
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	445
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	445
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Sixth Centenary of Dante's Beatrice at Florence, by Miss R. H. BUSK; "Cockney" by Dr. MURRAY; "Sardinia," by H. BRADLEY; "Ragman," by Sir James RAMSAY; "Survivals" in Negro Funeral Ceremonies, by W. G. BROWN.	445
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	446
SCHRADE'S PREHISTORIC ANTIQUITIES OF THE ARIANS, by Prof. WILKINS	446
PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS	447
CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE	447
OBITUARY: SIR WARRINGTON SMYTH, by F. W. RUDLER	447
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Yonissai Inscriptions, No. III., by R. BROWN, jun.	448
SCIENCE NOTES	448
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	448
SOME BOOKS ON ROMAN ARCHAEOLOGY	449
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	450
STAGE NOTES	450
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	451
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	451

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED (late of Birmingham), 3, GEORGE YARD, LOMBARD STREET, LONDON, E.C., act as AGENTS for the most distinguished Lecturers and Entertainers in Great Britain.

H. R. H. the PRINCE of WALES is the subject of the ESSAY for which prizes of TWENTY GUINEAS are offered by the LECTURE AGENCY, LIMITED, of 3, George-yard, Lombard-street, London, E.C. Conditions forwarded upon receipt of a stamp for postage.

TO PUBLISHERS.—The Advertiser is OPEN to an ENGAGEMENT as Manager or other responsible position. Thoroughly conversant with all the details of Paper, Printing, Binding, Advertising, &c. First-class references.—Address, C. S., 100 Mercer's-road, Tufnell Park, N.

The valuable Library of the late FRANK MARSHALL, Esq., and the Library of the late E. L. BLANCHARD, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C., on MONDAY, JUNE 30, and Five Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the Dramatic, Elizabethan, and Miscellaneous LIBRARY of the late FRANK A. MARSHALL, Esq., comprising an important Collection of Literature relating to the Stage—Works of the Dramatists and rare Old Plays—Shakespeare and Shakespeareana—First and Scarce Editions of Popular Authors—Privately Printed Works, including Club Publications—Books illustrated by the Cruikshanks, Leech, "Pitts," and others—Valuable Dictionaries and Bibliography—and Miscellaneous Standard Literature, to which is added the LIBRARY of the late E. L. BLANCHARD, Esq., consisting of Dramatic and General Works.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had; if by post, on receipt of twelve stamps.

A Collection of Antique Engraved Stones, Gold Ornaments, and Egyptian Antiquities, the Property of a Gentleman.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C., on MONDAY, JULY 1, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ANTIQUE ENGRAVED STONES, Gold Ornaments from Cyprus—Egyptian Antiquities, in Porcelain, Bronze, Glass, Stone, and Wood—fine Coptic Embroideries—Greek and Roman Antiquities, in Terra-Cotta, Glass, Bronze, and Marble—Bronze Weapons—Armour, &c.—a number of Japanese Netsukes, &c., the property of a GENTLEMAN.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Antique Painted Vases formed by the late Rev. Professor CHURCHILL BABINGTON, D.D.; and a Collection of Antiquities, the Property of the late ALEXANDER GRANT, Esq., C.I.E.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 13, WELLINGTON-STREET, STRAND, W.C., on TUESDAY, JULY 2, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of ANTIQUE PAINTED VASES, &c., including several from the Cadogan, Uselli, and Holland Collections, formed by the late Rev. Professor CHURCHILL BABINGTON, D.D.; also a COLLECTION of GREEK POTTERY. Antique Bronze Statuettes, Medallions, and Ecclesiastical Relics, the property of ALEXANDER GRANT, Esq., deceased; and a PORTION of the STOCK of the late Mr. RIETTI, consisting of Silver Snuff-boxes—Bijouterie—Coins and Medals.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

IVAN AIVASOVSKY.—A collection of 30 large and important MARINE PAINTINGS, by this well-known Russian artist now ON VIEW at the GUILD GALLERIES, BOUSSOD VALADON & CO., 117, NEW BOND STREET. Admission 1s.

STATISTICS treated in a LITERARY WAY.—Further WORK desired by Advertiser. Twenty years' varied experience with figures. Special knowledge in some branches. Fair originality and knowledge of current literary and art matters.—Address HUGH, care of J. W. Vickers, 5, Nicholas-lane, E.C.

THE GIRTON GOVERNESS and SCHOOL AGENCY.—MADAME AUBERT introduces English and Foreign Governesses, Governess Pupils, Visiting Teachers, Companions, &c., and recommends Schools and Educational Homes; Schools transferred, Partnerships arranged.—37, Regent-street, E.W.

SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, &c.

QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, 3 and 4, ELY PLACE, DUBLIN.—The oldest, and among the most successful in the United Kingdom: over 2,000 have passed.

I. All Army Examinations.
II. Civil Service of India, Universities, &c.
III. R. I. Constabulary Cadetships.
There is not a Corps in the Services or a Department under Government that does not owe some of its Officers to the QUEEN'S SERVICE ACADEMY, DUBLIN. No attempt at cramming: unsurpassed Staff of Specialists under personal direction of W. J. CRAWFORD CRAWLEY, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.G.S., F.G.S., F.R.Hist.Soc., &c.

MISS BRAHAM, late of INGLENOOK, DORKING, has REMOVED to PIXHOLME, DORKING, and has now space for an additional number of BOYS to train for the PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Miss Braham is assisted by a Graduate of Oxford University, and by other responsible Teachers, and pays especial attention to Physical Education. Her gymnasium is fitted with the latest apparatus, and the boys have daily practice. Inclusive terms 80 or 100 guineas a year according to age.

References permitted to:
Miss Buss, North London Collegiate School, N.W.
Rev. J. F. E. Fanning, M.A., King's College, Cambridge.

TO PARENTS AND GUARDIANS.
MR. W. S. LOGEMAN, Principal of Newton School, Roak Ferry, is FORMING a small PARTY of BOYS to spend the SUMMER HOLIDAYS at some healthy Seaside place for recreation and study. Instruction in Modern Languages, Classics, or Mathematics as required. References given and required. Inclusive terms, 23s. a week, or £10 10s. for four weeks.—Particulars on application.

PRELIMINARY NOTICE.
LIBRARY of the late Rev. WILLIAM NICHOLS, M.A., F.S.A., Woodlands, Somerset.—It is respectfully announced that the important and valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS of the above-named Gentleman will be DISPOSED OF in the City of BATH in the EARLY AUTUMN by Messrs. POWELL & POWELL, at their Auction Mart. Private buyers or members of the trade requiring information are requested to write to R. E. M. PEACH, 3, Bathwick Terrace, Bath, who will endeavour to answer all communications. June 10, 1890.

ROYAL SOCIETY of PAINTERS in WATER COLOURS.
The One Hundred and Thirtieth EXHIBITION is now open, 5, Pall Mall East, from 10 till 6. Admission 1s. Catalogue 1s.
ALFRED D. FRUIT, R.W.F., Secretary.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HAUFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO., have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

MR. BOWES' NEW WORK.

JAPANESE POTTERY.

By JAMES L. BOWES,

Honorary Consul for Japan at Liverpool,

Author of "Japanese Marks and Seals," "Japanese Enamels," and Joint Author of "Keramic Art of Japan."

A handsome volume, imperial 8vo, uniform with the above works, 600 pp., cloth.

* * A History of Japan Pottery from prehistoric times to the present day, with numerous illustrations in autotype, and a plate in colours and gold, representing the Undecorated and Decorated Wares. Throughout the work are scattered 300 illustrations appropriate to the subject rendered in facsimile, and 500 marks from over 1,000 examples of Pottery in the Bowes Collection. The work also contains Notes describing the Thoughts and Subjects, and Poetical Associations employed in the decoration of the wares.

The price of this edition (500 only printed—400 for sale—100 being reserved by the author) is £2 12s. 6d. net.

AN "EXTRA ILLUSTRATED" EDITION has also been printed on JAPANESE PAPER, and will be beautifully half-bound in polished morocco, with gilt top. This special edition will contain SIXTY-SEVEN PLATES, of which twenty-three are printed in colours and gold, and the remainder in autotype, &c. Of the former, some, necessary to illustrate the examples described, are printed from the stones used in "Keramic Art of Japan," whilst others requisite to complete the series have been specially produced by Mr. Spiegel and MM. Didot et Cie for this work, the whole illustrating sixty-two examples in colours, and 300 specimens in autotype.

This edition is limited to 150 copies, of which only 100 are for sale (the remaining fifty being reserved by the author), price Six Guineas net each copy.

Prospectuses and further information may be obtained from the publisher.

EDWARD HOWELL, 28, CHURCH STREET, LIVERPOOL.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

"A.I." The Monthly Part for July, Price 6d., contains:—
"NOT WANTED."
 SERIAL STORY BY ELIZA F. POLLARD.
 ROLENS VOLENS; or, The Adventures of Don Livingston. Serial Story. By GEORGE MARVILLE FENN.
 SOME OLD COATS. By CATHERINE C. HOPLBY.
 DEES and BEE CULTURE. By W. H. BARNES, B.A., B.Sc.
 THE SWEET SINGER OF NIGHT. By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS.
 A LIFE for a DOLLAR. By OSBERT HOWARTH.
 BURNHAM-ON-CROUCH. By MARY SIMMONS.
 A CHANGED MOTTO. The Story of James Naymyth. By W. J. LACEY.
 JOTTINGS from OLD JOURNALS. By FIDNEY CARSTONE.
 "PLANTS GROWN UP in their YOUTH." By IRVING DAVIDSON, D.D.
 GREENWICH ROYAL OBSERVATORY. By J. E. POWER, &c.
 Frontispiece—"A LIFE for a DOLLAR," and Forty-two other Illustrations.

London: S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co., 9, Paternoster-row, E.C.

THE NEWBURY HOUSE MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED, Price ONE SHILLING.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

MISSIONS to the CENTRAL AFRICAN LAKES. By Rev. F. ARNOLD M.A.
 THE PRACTICE OF MEDICINE in the ANCIENT EAST. By Rev. A. SATCHEL, M.A., LL.D.
 PILGRIMAGES to ENGLISH SHRINES in the MIDDLE AGES. By A. G. HILL, Esq.
 EMINENT CHURCHMEN.—II. GEORGE HERBERT. By W. H. DAVENPORT ADAMS.
 LEGEND of the BRIAR ROSE. (Poetry.) By Rev. A. GURNEY, M.A.
 A CONFESSOR of the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY. (Illustrated.) By Rev. F. C. RANDOLPH.
 A VISIT to LITTLE GIDDING. By E. WALFORD.
 FLEMISH PAINTERS.—II. VAN EYCK. (Illustrated.) By G. S. MACQUOID.
 RIVERS of the OCEAN. By AGNES GIBBERN.
 "THE VICOMTE'S BRIDE." Chapters I., II. By EDMUND STUART.
 "A GREAT SUCCESS." (A Fict. Story.) By E. FAIRFAX BYRNE.
 "CHANGED LOTS." Chapters I., II. (Illustrated.) By FRANCES ARMSTRONG.
 ART COMPETITION.
 Sermon Outlines—Instructions on the Creed—Lives of the Saints for Children—Biblical Questions—Reviews—"Useful Books" List—Correspondence, &c., &c.

GRIFFITH FARRAN OKEDEN & WELSH, London

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

WHAT NATIONALISM MEANS. By EDWARD BELLAMY.
 FRENCH AFFAIRS. By GABRIEL MONOD.
 CHILD-LIFE INSURANCE. By the Rev. BENJAMIN WAUGH.
 A JOURNEY to the CAPITAL of TIBET. By GRAHAM SANDBERG.
 M. PASTEUR and HYDROPHOBIA. By THOMAS M. DOLAN, M.D.
 THE REFORM of the POOR LAW. By SIDNEY WEBB.
 A NEW PROFESSION WANTING PROGRESSORS. By JOSEPH PENNELL.
 BETTERMENT: a Reply. By JOHN RAE.
 COMPENSATION for LICENCES?—
 I. By EDWARD NORTH BUXTON.
 II. By ANDREW JOHNSTON, Chairman of the Essex County Council.
 ISBISTER & Co., Limited, 15 & 16, Tavistock-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

NOW READY, PRICE SIXPENCE.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. XCIII.—JULY.

CONTENTS.

VIRGINIE: A Tale of One Hundred Years Ago. By VAL PRINSEP, A.R.A. Chaps. XXXVII-XLII.
 NERO and ST. BENEDICT. By the Ven. ARCHDEACON FARRAR.
 A VISIT to JEDDAH and SUAKIN. By HUGH E. M. STUTFIELD.
 A SONG in the NIGHT. By D. J. ROBERTSON.
 THE ACCURSED BELL. By C. PHILLIPS-WOLLEY.
 OXFORD: The UPPER RIVER. By AUBIN BATTIE.
 MY ISLANDS. By GRANT ALLEN.
 AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.
 London: LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.

Price One Shilling.

THE MONTHLY PACKET.

Edited by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

TWO PENNILESS PRINCESSES. By the EDITOR.
 CHRISTIAN'S NAME. By JOANNA HARRISON. Chapters I., II.
 THE NIGHT EXPRESS. By Mrs. ELIZABETH WORMLEY LATIMER.
 CAMEROS from ENGLISH HISTORY.—Philip V. and Charles III.
 SKETCHES of OLD NORSE LITERATURE. By Miss OSWALD.
 A VILLAGE of YESTERDAY.
 LOOSE LEAVES from the NOTE-BOOK of a CIVIL ENGINEER. Edited by Mrs. ELIZABETH WORMLEY LATIMER. Chapter I.
 WHAT SHALL WE DO to SAVE THIS? By CONSTANCE HOWARD.
 PAPERS on FRENCH LITERATURE.
 DEBATABLE GROUND.
 London: W. SMITH & LINES, 31 and 33, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART

Now ready, price 1s.

FOR JULY, CONTAINING—

"THE LAST OF ENGLAND." From the Painting by FORD MADDOX BROWN. Photographs.
 FORD MADDOX BROWN. By LUCY MADDOX ROSSETTI. With Five Illustrations of Works by FORD MADDOX BROWN.
 ILLUSTRATED JOURNALISM in ENGLAND: ITS DEVELOPMENT. By C. N. WILLIAMSON. With Five Illustrations.
 THE WIFE: MIDSUMMER. Poem by THOMAS WOOLSEY, R.A. With Two Illustrations by MARGARET I. DICKSON (engraved by JONKARD).
 CURRENT ART: THE NEW GALLERY. By M. H. SPIELMANN. With Five Illustrations from Pictures by W. B. NICHOLOD, A.R.A.; Sir EVERETT MILLAIS, Bart., R.A.; EDWIN HAYES, R.I.; DAVID MURRAY; and J. M. STUOW.CK.
 JOHN KAY and his P. R. TRAITS. By J. M. GRAY. With Ten Illustrations.
 ARMOUR and ARMS at the TUDOR EXHIBITION. By the BARON DE COSSON, F.S.A., F.R.G.S. With Seven Illustrations.
 THE CHRONICLE of ART: ART in JUNE.
 CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

Now ready, price 7d.

CASSELL'S MAGAZINE

FOR JULY, CONTAINING—

SERIAL STORIES.

WOMANLIKE. By the Author of "A Man of the Name of John," "King or Protector?" &c. Illustrated by W. L. FAGET.
 TO BE GIVEN UP. By KATE EYRE. Illustrated by ROBERT BARNES, R.W.S.
 THE MERCHANT PRINCE. By J. BERWICK HARWOOD, Author of "Paul Knox, Pittman," &c. Illustrated by EVERARD HOPKINS.
 COMPLETE STORIES.
 NELL'S NOBLEMAN. A Story in Three Chapters. With an Illustration by W. S. STACEY.
 THE SACRIFICE of MARY SOMERVILLE. (The Chronicles of Cardew Manor.) By LUCY FARMER. Illustrated by W. L. FAGET.
 MISCELLANEOUS PAPERS.
 SOME MYSTERIES of the PACIFIC. With Illustrations.
 POCKET-HANDKERCHIEF WORK. By JOSEPH CRANE.
 FRUIT as FOOD. By A FAMILY DOCTOR.
 ON the ART of ACCOMPANYING. By M. L. FREDERED. Illustrated by GORDON BROWN.
 THE LORD CHANCELLOR'S WORK. By EDWIN GOADBY. Illustrated.
 SOME SUMMER SAVOIRIES. By L. HERITAGE.
 THE GARDEN in JULY. Illustrated by FAIRFAX MUCKLEY.
 A SONG WITHOUT WORDS. By BENEDETTO PALMIERI.
 WHAT to WEAR in JULY: Chat on Dress. From OUR LONDON AND PARIS CORRESPONDENTS. With Illustrations.
 THE GATHERER: An Illustrated Record of Invention, Discovery, Literature, and Science.
 FRONTISPICE—"TWO ARE COMPANY." Drawn by ALICE HAYES.
 CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, Ludgate-hill, London.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 897.—JULY, 1890.—2s. 6d.

CONTENTS.

THE HOLY LAND.
 A SECRET MISSION. CHAPS. VIII.-X.
 A COUNTRY MEMBER'S MOAN.
 BY SIR HERBERT EUSTACE MAXWELL, BART, M.P.
 ARTHUR HELPS. By H. PRESTON-THOMAS.
 "IN SICKNESS AND IN HEALTH." BY MARTIN ROSS.
 COMEDY IN FICTION.
 THE VALE OF IDAR: A SERMON IN STONES.
 BY SOPHIE WEISER.
 CAN A MOTHER FORGET? BY GARTH GIBSON.
 TWO SAGAS FROM ICELAND.—I. GUNNAR'S DEATH. II. THE BURNING OF NJAL. BY REV. W. C. GREEN.
 THE RUSSIAN JOURNALISTIC PRESS.
 BY MAJOR-GENERAL F. CHEKOVIX TRENCH.
 EXCHANGE WITH INDIA—
 I. BY LIEUT.-GENERAL W. I. GRAY, R.A., Retired.
 II. BY CLERMONT DANIELL.
 WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

TALES FROM "BLACKWOOD."

THIRD SERIES.—No. IX.

CONTENTS:—SUCH PITY as a FATHER HATH, by Mrs. W. G. SCOTT-MONCRIEFF.—COINCIDENCES?? by COLONEL RUSSELL.—A DEAD MAN'S VENGEANCE, by CAPTAIN BIRD.—THE STORY of JAMES BARKER: A Tale of the Congo Coast, by J. LANDERS.
 WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, Edinburgh and London.

FOR CONTENTS OF—

TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

See Messrs. BENTLEY & SON'S Advertisement, page iv.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,

See Messrs. SAMFSON LOW & CO.'S Advertisement, page iv.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

AND

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

See Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO.'S Advertisement on Back Page.

JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

No. 252, for JULY.

1. A DAY of MY LIFE at SCHOOL (Prize Essay). By A. M. BALSAM.
2. THE PUBLICATION of SCHOOL BOOKS in FRANCE. By W. J. GREENSTREET.
3. LONDON MATRICULATION. By JOHN GERARD.
4. AN ASSISTANT'S LAMENT.
5. DR. LEONHARD SCHMITZ. By H. BAUMANN.
6. LEIPZIG v. NAARS.
7. OCCASIONAL NOTES—CORRESPONDENCE.
8. FOREIGN NOTES: Prussia, France, Italy, Norway.
9. SCHOOLS and UNIVERSITIES.
10. THE TEACHERS' GUILD—FROBEL SOCIETY.
11. MISCELLANEA.
12. OUR TRANSLATION PRIZE.

Price 6d., per post 7d.

Offices: 86, FLEET-STREET, LONDON, E.C.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR JULY.

S. MARINA. By LEWIS MORRIS.
 SCOTLAND YARD. By J. HALL RICHARDSON.
 MARCIA. Chaps. 25-28. By W. E. NORRIS.
 A STUDIO in PROVENCE. By A. M. WAKEFIELD.
 TECHNICAL EDUCATION—
 BOYS and MEN. By P. E. MATTHESON.
 GIRLS. By SELINA HADLAND.
 LONDON RIVER. By MORLEY ROBERTS.
 THE EMPTY COMPARTMENT.
 WHY NOT ICELAND? By JON STEFANSSON.
 THAT FIDDLER FELLOW. Chap. 7. By HORACE HUTCHINSON.
 TRADE UNIONISM: Replies to Mr. SHRYTON—
 1. By J. L. MAHON, Postmen's Union.
 2. By FRED. HAMMILL, London Trades Council.
 THE HOME of ADELINA PATTI.
 NOTES of the MONTH. OUR LIBRARY LIST, &c.
 London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

JULY.—2s. 6d.

A SCANDALOUS SESSION. By Q.
 OUR FARMERS in CHAINS: a Sequel. By Rev. HARRY JONES.
 DACOITY in UPPER BURMA. By Captain H. D. KEARY.
 COUNT MATTEI: a Reply. By HERBERT SNOW, M.D.
 HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR. By Ex-GOVERNOR.
 THE RECORDS of a SCOTCH FAMILY. By Mrs. ANDREW LANG.
 CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS. By BERNARD H. HOLLAND.
 PASTEUR'S PROPHYLACTIC. By C. BELL TAYLOR, M.D., F.R.C.S.
 COMPENSATION for LICENCES. By A. RADICAL THEOTALLER.
 THE BEGINNINGS of PERSIAN LITERATURE. By C. J. PICKERING.
 ANGELIC IMMORTALITY. By FREDERIC H. BALFOUR.
 CURIOSITIES of IRISH FARMING. By Miss COOPER.
 CORRESPONDENCE.

London: W. H. ALLEN & Co., 13, Waterloo-place.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Holman Hunt, of Portraits by Holl. R.A.; Oulens, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects and from Nature can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. Send for the new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," per post at any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free, per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

Now ready, price One Shilling.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

No. 255.

Contents for JULY, 1890.

- I. ALAS! Part I. Chaps. XXIV.-XXVI.
- II. TO A NIGHTINGALE.
- III. THE ROMANCE of HISTORY—X. Vidocq.
- IV. THE MEMOIRS of PRINCE TALLEYRAND.
- V. THE WATERPROOF.
- VI. A MANY-SIDED MAN.
- VII. NAPOLEON DESCRIBED by his VALET.
- VIII. AN IDYL of CLODS.
- IX. SOME FLORENTINE MOSAICS.
- X. CHRISTMASTIDE at TANGIER.
- XI. TO ANNETTE.
- XII. PEARL-POWDER. Chaps. XXIX.-XXXIII.

PEARL POWDER. By ANNIE EDWARDES, Author of "Archie Lovell," "Ought we to Visit Her?" &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

THE STORIES of ANNIE EDWARDES.

Each to be obtained separately in crown 8vo., price 6s.

OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
A BALL ROOM REPENTANCE.
LEAH: a WOMAN of FASHION.
A GIRTON GIRL.

Also in small crown, price 2s. 6d. each.

A VAGABOND HEROINE.
A BLUE STOCKING.

ACTE. By Hugh Westbury, Author of "Frederick Hazleden," &c. The SECOND EDITION is now ready. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

MADAME LEROUX. By FRANCES ELEANOR TROLLOPE, Author of "That Unfortunate Marriage," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

MR. BRYANT'S MISTAKE. By KATHARINE WYLDE, Author of "A Dreamer," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

The FAILURE of ELIZABETH. By E. FRANCES POYNTER, Author of "My Little Lady," &c. In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

Now ready, the NEW and CHEAPER EDITION of ARDATH: the Story of a Dead Self. By MARIE CORELLI. In crown 8vo, 6s.

Also uniform with "Ardath," each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

VENDETTA: or the Story of One Forgotten.

THELMA: a Romance of Two Worlds.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

Tastefully printed on antique paper, and bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d.; hand-made paper, Roxburgh, 10s. 6d. net; Large Paper (60 only), 21s. net. The Roxburgh and Large-Paper Editions of this work are only sold in sets.

Architectural Antiquities. Part I.

Being the tenth volume of "THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE LIBRARY." A classified collection of the chief contents of "The Gentleman's Magazine" from 1781 to 1889. Edited by GEORGE LAURENCE GOMME, F.S.A.

The following are the Volumes which have been already published in the Series:—

Manners and Customs—Dialect, Proverbs, and Word-lore—Popular Superstitions and Traditions—Foreign Customs—Geological and Prehistoric Archaeology—Anglo-Saxon and Scandinavian Archaeology—Roman-British Remains, in 2 vols.—Literary History and Curiosities—Bibliographical Notes.

THE BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY.

NEW VOLUME JUST READY.

On antique paper, cloth, 4s. 6d.; hand-made paper, Roxburgh, 7s. 6d. net; Large Paper, 21s. net.

Newspaper Reporting in Olden Time and To-day.

By JOHN PENDLETON,

Author of "A History of Derbyshire," &c.

CONTENTS:—

Reporting in Olden Time. A Gossip about Shorthand.
The Reporter in Parliament. The Reporter's Work.
Incidents and Traditions of Some Experiences and Ad-
"The Gallery." ventures of Reporters.
Reporting To-day in the Writings on Newspapers and House. Reporters.

"A pleasant, lively book."—Leeds Mercury.
"Will be found both informing and readable. The notes on the bibliography of reporting will be found useful for purposes of reference."—The Globe.

"Whilst bringing together an array of facts of undoubted interest and value, the work is also full of entertainment."—Forkshire Post.

"Mr. Pendleton has produced a bright and pleasant book of information and gossip on matters journalistic. It is so readable, and combines so much instruction with amusement, that the only fault to be found with the book is that there is not more of it."—Sheffield and Rotherham Independent.

In fcap. 8vo, olive cloth, price 4s. 6d. post-free.

Passing Thoughts of a Working Man.

By HUBERT CLOUDESLLEY,

Author of "Sketches from Real Life."

CONTENTS:—

THE WRONGS of WOMAN. THE POETRY of NATURE.
THE BEAUTIFUL in WOMAN. THE PHILOSOPHY of LAUGHTER.
THE RIGHTS of WOMAN. MIRRORS in the COUNTERTEANCE.
FOES in the FAMILY. LONG FELLOW'S "EVANGELINE."
IS LIFE WORTH LIVING? CAIN; or Manliness and Personal Influence.
THE POETRY of TRUE LOVE. PERSEVERANCE.
THE POETRY of CHIVALRY.

Mr. Cloudeley has evidently devoted much time to the study of his fellow-men, and has succeeded in presenting his researches in a charmingly readable manner to the literary world."—Dublin Mail.

"The style is homely, with a vein of sound common sense, not to say religious sentiment, running through it. The volume will be found interesting as well as instructive and amusing, and would form an appropriate gift for young persons of either sex."—Aberdeen Journal.

"It should have a place in the home and the Sunday school library, where its teachings and tendencies would be valued and useful."—Brighouse Gazette.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

READY ON THE 28th INST.

Henry M. Stanley's Great Book. IN DARKEST AFRICA

Being the Official Publication recording the QUEST, RESCUE, and RETREAT of EMIN, Governor of Equatoria.

The Illustrations, numbering over 150, have all been made from Mr. Stanley's own Notes, Sketches, and Photographs. There are three large Maps and fourteen smaller ones.

ORDINARY EDITION, 2 vols., demy 8vo, of over 500 pp. each, in handsome cloth binding, price TWO GUINEAS.

EDITION DE LUXE of 250 Copies all sold.

New Novels at all the Libraries.

JACK ABBOTT'S LOG: a Yarn of the Merchant Service. By ROBERT BROWN, Author of "Spun yarn and Spindrift," "Jack's Yarn," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

THE WAY of TRANSGRESSORS. By E. RENTOUL ESLEER. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d.

"A pleasant, casual story, sufficiently moral in its aim, full of gossip and detail.... A decidedly good novel, marked by much quiet power and grace."—Athenaeum.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count PAUL P.—. Edited by FRANK HARKUT. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"The book is vividly written and abounds in excitement of various kinds."—Athenaeum.

NEW SPORTING WORK.

THE SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION of DOGS for the GUN. By H. H. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CONTENTS: "The Rationale"—Kennel Management—Retrievers, Pointers, and Setters—Spaniels.

Low's Standard Library of Travel.

THE HEART of AFRICA: being Three Years' Travels and Adventures in the Unexplored Regions of Central Africa. By Dr. GEORG SCHWEINFURTH. New Edition. With Map and numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. per volume.

TWO KINGS of UGANDA; or, Life by the Shores of the Victoria Nyanza. Being an account of a Residence of Six Years in Eastern Equatorial Africa. By ROBERT P. ASHE, M.A., F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S., &c. New and Cheaper Edition. With Map and Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Now ready, price ONE SHILLING.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

JULY NUMBER.

CONTENTS.

THALIA: a Poem. THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH.
PORT TARASCON: the Last Adventures of the illustrious Tartarin II. ALPHONSE DAUDET. With 24 Illustrations, drawn by Luigi Rossi, F. de Myrbach, &c.

A FAMOUS CHAPBOOK VILLAIN. (Illustrated.) HOWARD PYLE.

A POETESS: a Story. MARY E. WILKINS.
SOME COLONIAL and REVOLUTIONARY LETTERS. FREDERICK DANIEL.

THE MOONLIGHTER of COUNTY CLARE: a Story. JONATHAN STURGEON.

ARCHITECTURE and DEMOCRACY. ROBERT S. PEABODY.

TEXAN TYPES and CONTRASTS. LEE C. HADBY.

SOCIAL LIFE in OXFORD. ETHEL M. ARNOLD.

8 Illustrations, from Drawings by Joseph Pennell, &c.

TREASURY NOTES and NOTES on the TREASURY L. E. CHITTENDEN.

TWO LETTERS: a Story. BRANDER MATTHEWS.

BALTIC RUSSIA. HENRY LANSDELL, D.D. 9 Illustrations, &c., &c.; 70 Illustrations in all.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, AND RIVINGTON (LIMITED), St. Dunstan's House, Fetter-lane, Fleet-street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JUNE 28, 1890.

No. 947, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Gentle Art of Making Enemies. By James McNeil Whistler. (Heinemann.)

THOUGH this work consists of 286 pages, admirably printed, though the cover is a most dainty "arrangement" in brown, gold, and buff, and though its contents are particularly interesting, Mr. Whistler's volume cannot by any stretch of language be called a book. It is of the order that Charles Lamb classed as "biblia abiblia," books that are no books at all, like dictionaries and catalogues; and Mr. Whistler himself would probably be justly offended if it were spoken of as literature, or he himself as a littérateur. He is only an artist of genius and a rare wit. In this volume, Mr. Whistler has collected the records of his controversies with the various more or less eminent persons with whom during an eventful life he has come into collision. Into the merits of his or their arguments I do not propose to enter. Speaking broadly, it may be said that for the last twenty or thirty years there has been contention in the realms of art, and in certain domains of literature contiguous thereto, betwixt the old order and the new, and that Mr. Whistler has been foremost on the side of the new artistic departures. In his own view, no doubt, he is a hearty and loyal fighter against the Philistines, too hearty, perhaps, some may think, always to distinguish nicely between friends of his cause and foes; and he smites with equal blade, along with certain giants of the hostile ranks, such loyal soldiers of right art as Messrs. Ruskin, Swinburne, and Oscar Wilde. It is unfortunate perhaps, but it all makes for wit; and it is from the point of view of this quality in it that I propose to notice the volume.

The list of controversies opens with a report of the well-known action Whistler v. Ruskin, wherein the artist sought for damages, and obtained a farthing, for a ruthless and regrettable critique of his work by Mr. Ruskin. Comedy, in the course of a still proceeding controversy upon the London stage, has been spoken of as an art dead and done with. It is a dead thing indeed, but only on the boards of the London theatres. It lives wherever men and women meet in the street, the market, or the drawing-room. Notably is it often to be found, and at its brightest, in our law courts. If Mr. Whistler happens to be plaintiff or defendant and is "on the scene," the comedy is pretty sure to be of a high quality. On such occasions we have all the necessary setting for true comedy. The solemn judge for auditor to represent by his single presence and wisdom the rare, educated playgoer, the body of the court to stand for pit and stalls and galleries, while the jury may represent, in the ancient Greek fashion, a chorus of plain-judging citizens—Philistia personified, as no doubt Mr. Whistler, considering the verdict in his own case, would maintain. Throwing the report into something of dramatic form, though without altering a word, its claim to be right comedy may be tested by these samples:

Dramatis Personæ.—A Judge; an Attorney-General; Mr. Whistler.

Mr. Whistler (upon cross-examination by the Attorney-General).—Yes, the nocturne in black and gold is a night piece, and represents the fireworks at Cremorne.

Att. Gen.—Not a view of Cremorne?

Mr. W.—If it were called a view of Cremorne it would certainly bring about nothing but disappointment on the part of beholders. (Laughter.) It is an artistic arrangement. It was marked 200 guineas.

Att. Gen.—Is not that what we who are not artists would call a stiffish price?

Mr. W.—I think it very likely that may be so.

Att. Gen.—But artists always give good value for their money, don't they?

Mr. W.—I am glad to hear that so well established. (A laugh.)

Att. Gen.—Now, Mr. Whistler, can you tell me how long it took you to knock off that nocturne?

Mr. W.—I beg your pardon? (Laughter.)

Att. Gen.—Oh, I am afraid that I am using a term that applies rather perhaps to my own work. I should have said, How long did you take to paint that picture?

Mr. W.—Oh, no! permit me, I am too greatly flattered to think that you apply to work of mine any term that you are in the habit of using with reference to your own.

Att. Gen.—The labour of two days then, is that for which you ask 200 guineas?

Mr. W.—No; I ask it for the knowledge of a lifetime. (Applause.)

Att. Gen.—You have been told that your pictures exhibit some eccentricities?

Mr. W.—Yes, often. (Laughter.)

Att. Gen.—You send them to the galleries to incite the admiration of the public?

Mr. W.—That would be such vast absurdity on my part that I don't think I could. (Laughter.)

Att. Gen.—You know that many critics entirely disagree with your views as to these pictures?

Mr. W.—It would be beyond me to agree with the critics.

Att. Gen.—What is the subject of your nocturne in blue and silver?

Mr. W.—A moonlight effect on the river near old Battersea Bridge. It represents Battersea Bridge by moonlight.

The Judge.—Which part of the picture is the bridge? (His lordship earnestly rebuked those who laughed.)

Att. Gen.—The prevailing colour is blue?

Mr. W.—Perhaps.

Att. Gen.—Are those figures on the top of the bridge intended for people?

Mr. W.—They are just what you like.

Att. Gen.—Is that a barge beneath?

Mr. W.—Yes; I am very much encouraged at your perceiving that. . . . My whole scheme was to bring about a certain harmony of colour.

Att. Gen.—Now, Mr. Whistler, do you think you could make me see the beauty of this picture? (The witness paused to examine the Att. Gen.'s face and the picture alternately, while the Court waited in silence for his answer.)

Mr. W.—No! Do you know, I fear it would be hopeless.

Never, perhaps, were the tables so turned upon a cross-examining counsel, or an unfortunate gentleman of the law so brow-beaten by his natural victim; but, if the painter had his jest and his triumph, the lawyer had his verdict. This smart dialogue has, over and above its merits as good comedy, that of putting the controversy between what may be called "Whistlerism" and its opponents into a nutshell.

Mr. Whistler, a true fighter for fighting's sake, never hits harder than when the odds are against him, and probably cares most to use his sword when the enemy thinks he has won, and is beginning to put up his. I shall not deal in this column with the short controversial letters which recall many a passing fray of recent years further than to remark that Mr. Whistler is not only a wit himself, but the cause of wit in others. Mr. Whistler may claim many rare merits as a writer on art and a critic of contemporary artists; but charity and tolerance are not among these merits. He is certainly neither "fearless in praising" nor "faltering in blame"; and, perhaps, in the actual medley in which these cuts and thrusts with the pen were delivered, a man does well not to encumber himself with the aforesaid virtues. The records of such ephemeral polemics may well be passed by; but Mr. Whistler's famous "Ten O'clock" lecture, likewise contained in this volume, is of a different structure and genesis. Here the man of real artistic genius speaks with a calmer utterance and a strong enthusiasm, and herein are many sentences wisely considered and wittily said, which the world will, I think, do well to ponder.

Through the pages of this volume, Mr. Whistler's well-known device and sign-manual—the so-called "Butterfly"—disports itself in various shapes and attitudes. A strange fly, that belongs to no known order of Lepidoptera, and that can assume attitudes and express emotions unknown to entomology. It has a sting, too, contrary to all the teachings of science; and, indeed, it should not be without this appendage if it is in any degree to represent the genius of its owner and inventor.

The book is altogether so curious, so dainty in all externals, so absolutely unlike anything that ever before has proceeded from a printing press, that probably the bibliophile of the future who is without a copy of the first edition on his shelves will be as unhappy as those Flemish amateurs of etchings and tulips in the seventeenth century are represented to have been when their collections lacked a first state of Rembrandt's "Little Juno with the Crown," or a bulb of the famous Semper Augustus tulip.

OSWALD CRAWFORD.

"HEROES OF THE NATIONS."—Horatio Nelson and the Naval Supremacy of England. By W. Clark Russell. (Putnam's.)

THIS is the first volume of the "Heroes Series," published under the auspices of Mr. Evelyn Abbott; we wish we could say it was a good biography of the most illustrious of English seamen. The "get up" of the book is, indeed, excellent; the illustrations and vignettes are graphic; and Mr. Clark Russell has collected details respecting the life and career of Nelson which have not been noticed by previous writers. But he has not given us a portrait of Nelson, one of the most striking of historical figures, in anything like complete relief; he has not formed a thoughtful estimate of his splendid and almost marvellous exploits; he has not even described, in an adequate way, the peculiar circumstances which made the great war with France the most glorious passage in our naval history. His account of what we may call the campaigns of Nelson by sea is by no means sufficient; and his battle pieces want clearness and force, and are overlaid with much "fine writing." The work will not displace the sketch of Southey—a masterpiece, with all its faults and shortcomings.

If we except Napoleon, who stands alone, Nelson possessed genius in a higher degree than any warrior of the famous era which extends from 1793 to 1815. Like Napoleon, he distinctly perceived that the naval, like the military, art had passed into an age of new conditions; and as Napoleon routed the continental armies by manoeuvres scarcely attempted before, Nelson did the same for the effete navies of France and Spain, fallen into decay through revolution and corrupt despotism. This was the pre-eminent excellence of this great man; it is this which marks him off from the Howes, the Hoods, the Duncans, and other seamen of his time. But it must be borne in mind that this peculiar state of circumstances will hardly occur again. Nelson, too, had in supreme perfection the faculty of influencing the hearts of men and of fashioning them to his own heroic nature; this was the marked superiority he had over Wellington. His captains, his crews, and the fleets he led were animated by a spirit that defied obstacles and that made them invincible whatever the odds. For the rest, Nelson had the intrepid courage and the audacity of the Elizabethan mariners. It was one of his characteristics that he never shunned responsibility however weighty; and it is significant that, even from early youth, good judges predicted that he would achieve greatness, though he had none of the advantages of birth and station so decisive in an age of aristocratic privilege. The gifts, however, which nature lavished on Nelson were made complete only by assiduous toil and by a long course of professional training. The hero of the Nile, who steered his squadron where Brueys believed it could not pass, was one of the most skilful and apt of pilots; the pursuer of Villeneuve across the Atlantic was a seaman of unsurpassed experience; the great captain who planned Trafalgar knew thoroughly what his own fleet could do, and what the weakness was of his cowed adversaries. In the case of Nelson, as in that of other warriors, hard work, attention to details, and knowledge were exhibited in no less a measure than the combination of faculties which we call genius.

The first years of the career of Nelson were not marked by any great exploits; but they indicate the character of the future warrior. He saw service in most parts of the world, and became thoroughly versed in all the details of seamanship. When he obtained a ship at an early age he distinguished himself by many deeds of daring; and he at once gained that power over his officers and crew which was one of his most precious and special gifts. It may be added that in those days he showed a weakness common to many heroes. He was ever falling in love, and was easily led by women. His transcendent qualities were first seen when he obtained command of the Agamemnon, and made the sight of a weak third-rate as terrible to the French cruisers as was the flag of Drake to the Spanish chiefs at Cadiz. The great war with France was now at its height. Nelson perceived more thoroughly than any British seaman how great was the superiority of our marine over the French marred by the Revolution; and this conviction became the master-thought which inspired him through his career of glory. His action with the Ca Ira strikingly illustrates this. In fact, his success would not have been possible had not the Agamemnon been able to sail and manoeuvre much better than her ill-handled foe; and we see his future exploits in his passionate remark that "the French fleet would be ours if Lord Hotham would close." The same purpose appears in Nelson's conduct in the memorable battle of St. Vincent—one of the most brilliant of his feats of arms, and not sufficiently noticed in this book. The Spanish navy, like the French, had declined. Nelson mastered the fact with the force of genius; and he flung himself into the midst of the enemy's fleet, undauntedly braving enormous odds, in order to prevent the Spanish admiral from coming to the aid of a part of his squadron. His contest single-handed with three hostile first-rates reads like Sir Richard's fight in the Revenge, or one of the episodes of the Armada. But, in truth, the disparity of forces was less than it appeared, so great was the superiority of British seamanship, of gunnery, of power in naval war; and the issue was only for a time doubtful. It was genius, however, that grasped the fact; and on this occasion, as on several others, Nelson boldly took the initiative himself, even at the risk of disregarding the orders of his chief.

If Jarvis did not commend the valour of Nelson in this most remarkable passage of arms, he did not lose sight of his great lieutenant. Nelson was selected to pursue the French fleet in its descent on Egypt in 1798. The long and arduous cruise of the famous seaman through the Mediterranean is well known; but the star of Napoleon prevailed for a time, and the French army made its way to the Pyramids. Nelson ultimately reached the hostile fleet, and the "crowning mercy" of the Nile followed, the most scientific of Nelson's victories, and the one that deserves most attentive study. Mr. Clark Russell's account of this great action is by no means what it ought to be; and the battle should be read in Nelson's despatches and in Napoleon's most able commentaries. The French fleet was largely superior in force—the Orient, in fact, was, in weight of metal, almost a match for two British ships; the new French 80's were far more powerful than the well-worn 74's of England, and Brueys thought his line secure from the westward, though in this Napoleon did not concur with him. Yet the triumph—a grand display of genius and perfect professional skill combined—was, like Jena and Austerlitz, assured from the first. Nelson, penetrating between the enemy's fleet and the land by a channel believed to be not passable, brought twelve ships to bear against eight, placing half the French line between two fires; and the action was decided by this fine master-stroke. No doubt the superiority of British gunnery told on this as on other occasions; no doubt the catastrophe of the Orient had a terrible effect; no doubt Villeneuve did nothing to second his chief; the conduct of several French captains was, no doubt, bad. But Nelson and Napoleon both agree that it was Nelson's manoeuvre that won the day; and it was a most striking example of capacity in war. Of the results of the Nile it is needless to speak; the battle shut up the French in Egypt, and brought France to the very verge of ruin.

The relations of Nelson with the court of Naples after this great victory form a blot on his fame. History would not judge him harshly because he fell a victim to the wiles of a siren, though his infatuation for Emma Hamilton, and his desertion of an excellent wife, mark a flaw in his character. But he identified himself with the evil deeds and passions of the worst of continental governments. His approval of the death of Carraccioli cannot be justified; and he associated the flag and the honour of England with discreditable acts she even then condemned. Mr. Clark Russell throws no fresh light on these unhappy transactions of the past; he does not allude to the mythical rumour that Horatia was a child of Maria Caroline. But this episode in the life of Nelson shows, not only that a vein of recklessness and conceit ran through that heroic nature, but that in all that relates to what may be called politics he was deficient in moderation and wisdom. Nelson, in fact, unlike more than one of our admirals, had none of the parts or gifts of a statesman; his was the genius of war, not of civil affairs—in this respect far behind Wellington. His temperament, passionate, quick, and vehement, and with a full share of narrow English prejudice, was unfitted to deal with international questions which naval commanders often have to settle; and this injured him with his superiors at home, who never estimated him at his real value. The great seaman was once more in his element in the attack on Copenhagen in 1801. In this we see again the coup d'œil of genius, the consummate skill, the mastery of detail characteristic of the conqueror of the Nile, and significantly called "the Nelson touch"; and his disregard of the signal of recall made by his respectable chief, Parker, is another striking instance of his audacious nature. Nelson failed in an attempt to destroy the flotilla at Boulogne; and it is remarkable that he seems to have never thought the project of a French descent on our coasts as formidable as it really was, so supreme was his scorn of French seamanship. On the renewal of the war in 1803, he was in command of the Mediterranean fleet; and he held the fleets of France for many months imprisoned, within Toulon, by a protracted blockade. Nelson, however, had not the slightest conception of Napoleon's profound design for invading England; he underrated the emperor's power; the combination of bringing an immense fleet into the Channel in order to cover the descent at no moment occurred to him, and was only guessed at, in part, by the more thoughtful Collingwood. His power and skill, nevertheless, shone out conspicuously in his pursuit of Villeneuve. He chased eighteen sail of the line with eleven, in perfect assurance that he could destroy his enemy; and though he did not come up with the French admiral, and he was, in fact, led astray by a false report, he drove him in terror from the West Indies. If Nelson, too, did not fathom Napoleon's purpose, he despatched the Curieux in time to warn the Admiralty that Villeneuve was on his way to Europe; and this precaution told powerfully on the events that followed.

Calder's action sent the combined fleet to Ferrol; and Nelson soon afterwards had reached the Spanish coast, and was ere long on his way to England. He had not penetrated Napoleon's plan; and had Villeneuve been a great chief, or his fleet been nearly equal to our own in all that constitutes worth at sea, he might have reached Brest, have relieved Ganteaume, and have appeared in irresistible force in the Channel. We can only conjecture what the result might have been. But England was exposed to tremendous peril; and, bad as the French and Spanish marine was, the strategy of Napoleon well-nigh triumphed, and accident only prevented the descent. If the insight of Nelson was in default here, his great capacity in naval war was soon illustrated by the most splendid victory which Europe has witnessed since Lepanto. His plan of attack at Trafalgar was against common rules, and would have probably failed had the enemy's fleet been in any respect to be compared with his own; the Royal Sovereign was in action long before her consorts, and Nelson's squadron had not reached the foe until nearly half-an-hour after that of Collingwood. But the advance in double column against the combined fleets was a stroke of genius as affairs stood; it enabled Nelson to close on Villeneuve decisively, rapidly, and to prevent his escape; the very negligence of the assailant appalled the Frenchman, and Villeneuve exclaimed that "all was over" when he beheld his adversary bearing down upon him. The victory has scarcely a parallel in war. It put an end to all schemes of invading England; it all but annihilated her foes at sea; and it launched Napoleon on that path of continental conquest, in the hope of destroying English commerce, which ultimately led to his complete overthrow. It was dearly bought, no doubt, by the death of Nelson; yet the great seaman, it may be truly said, had done his work when he won Trafalgar. Though he had unquestionable faults of judgment and temper, Nelson is far the first of modern naval worthies; his place is beside Van Tromp and Blake; his genius for war at sea and his professional skill were unequalled among the men of his time.

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

Corn and Poppies. By Cosmo Monkhouse. (Elkin Mathews.)

THAT an edition of four hundred copies will suffice to satisfy the demand of the public for good poetry is no longer accounted a marvel with us. We have grown used to the dishonour, and bear it with much equanimity. Should a volume so good as this of Mr. Monkhouse's be suffered still to linger in a first edition, it will be but another mark of that dishonour, and certainly could in no way shake one's opinion that Corn and Poppies is very good poetry indeed. It would rather, one is disposed to think, be confirmatory; for some recent mushroom reputations have so completed the vulgarisation of "popularity" that, if a scanty sale has other obvious drawbacks, it has one still more desirable attribute, that of distinction. One "could quite forgive the blame," one "could not forgive the praise."

Two or three of the poems included in this volume are already old friends—that charming book-song, "De Libris," full of witty points—

"There rest, preserved from dust accurst,
The first editions—and the worst"— and one of the best rondeaus ever written, namely, this "Violet":

"Violet, delicate, sweet,
Down in the deep of the wood,
Hid in thy still retreat,
Far from the sound of the street,
Man and his merciless mood:—
Safe from the storm and the heat,
Breathing of beauty and good,
Fragrantly under thy hood,
Violet."

"Beautiful maid, discreet,
Where is the mate that is meet,
Meet for thee—strive as he could!
Yet will I kneel at thy feet,
Fearing another one should,
Violet!"

The fine sonnet to the sea will be especially familiar to readers of the ACADEMY, for it was in these pages that it first appeared some months ago. Otherwise one would be compelled to quote it, for it is not only Mr. Monkhouse's finest sonnet, but one of the strongest to be found in modern verse—worthy to stand side by side with Hood's sonnet to Silence and Leigh Hunt's to the Nile, by virtue of a similar massiveness of thought, and a certain generic relationship of mood and manner. As a rule, Mr. Monkhouse is not at his best in the sonnet. His natural inspiration is towards measures of freer movement. Indeed, the central quality of this volume is its robust lyric note. Song so spontaneous, so individual, so fresh in melody, and so masculine in conception, is, I make bold to say, to be found in the work of but two or three other modern poets outside the greatest. Take these three stanzas of "A Dead March":

"Why do we mourn the days that go—for the same sun shines each day,
Ever a spring her primrose hath, and ever a May her may—
Sweet as the rose that died last year, is the rose that is born to-day."

"Do we not too return, we men, as ever the round earth whirls?
Never a head is dimmed with grey but another is sunned with curls,
She was a girl and he was a boy, but yet there are boys and girls."

"Ah, but alas for the smile of smiles that never but one face wore.
Ah for the voice that has flown away like a bird to an unseen shore.
Ah for the face—the flower of flowers—that blossoms on earth no more."

There is something of the great simplicity in these verses, in such lines as the second and third of the middle stanza—that simplicity which comes of brain. This lyric gift is put to the severest possible test in what is, I suppose, the most ambitious poem in the volume, "Love: a Sonata," the various movements of which it follows with surprising flexibility, while the still more difficult unity of the whole is unbroken. The Andante is a charming example of those lyrics in tiny lines, such as Herrick loved to write, and the execution of it would not shame even that master:

"O Faith
And Hope
On earth
Had birth,
But Love
From above
Came down."

"A sword
Hath Faith
To wield
At foes,
A shield
Hath Hope
To ward
Their blows,
But a crown
From above
Hath Love."

But probably Mr. Monkhouse's most perfect thing is the poem "Her Face," in which a painter laments that he can never by all his effort paint his lady's face aright, and questions why. The delicate imagination and passionate tenderness of it is unsurpassed in his verses.

"Ever some secret missed,
Some swift-escaping glow,
Some one look in the eyes,
Some strange smile never kissed,
Would melt as melting snow;
That even were my pencil quicker
Than wind or wing,
Or could it rise
And fall as shadows to the leaves' least flicker,
It were a useless thing."

'Tis ever strange to me,
When she is sad at heart,
Where her deep dimples go,
And a like mystery
When back again they start.
How can my hand move quicker than my eyes,
Which are too slow
To disentwine
The least of all the sweet intricacies
Of her face which is mine?

She is beyond all art
Of any sweetest word,
Of brush however fine;
And yet I wrong my heart
Who hath a chamber stored
With many a face of her and perfect all.
Ah, joy divine,
When quite alone,
To steal and turn them slowly from the wall,
Tenderly, one by one."

Mr. Monkhouse must forgive me for thus tearing out a petal or two from his exquisite rose, for though one may not know a building by a stone thereof, we may a rose by its petal; and seeing such strewn upon the way it is strange if we seek not the garden.

There is, of course, much else among these verses that I must leave unnoticed, for the one other striking feature of the volume is its "infinite variety," a quality of greater significance than we are accustomed to allow. Mr. Monkhouse by no means harps on one string, but adventures on many instruments. "A Drawn Bet," appropriately inscribed to "A. D." is certainly "gentle cousin" to an "Old-World Idyll," and each, I am sure, will felicitate the other on the relationship; while another master of vers de société, for all his laurels, must wish he had written that most charming baby-poem "To a New-born Child." And then there is the first poem in the volume, which I should certainly have mentioned before but that I must have quoted it, in spite of length, whereas here at the end I am safe from such indulgence—"Any Soul to any Body." Though this latter in its title, but in that alone, suggests the inevitable Browning period, it is reassuring to find from some rippling rhymes towards the close of his volume that Mr. Monkhouse ends a good Tennysonian. Is not that inevitable too?

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

Impressions of Russia. By Dr. Georg Brandes. Translated from the Danish by Samuel C. Eastman. (Walter Scott.)

DR. GEORG BRANDES, the author of Moderne Geister and other well-known books, here gives us his impressions of a three months' stay in Russia. As he writes a good deal about the literature and art of the country, and does not record his own experiences merely, we have abundance of extracts from MM. Rambaud, Reinholdt, de Vogüé, Obrist, Violet-le-Duc, and other writers on the subject. Thus the book partakes in a great measure of the characteristics of a compilation.

The sketch of the country is naturally a hurried one, and contains, in the midst of some smart writing, many really eloquent passages. Unfortunately our author's great desire to say something startling and epigrammatic leads him into occasional inaccuracies. The native name for St. Petersburg is not the Dutch form "Pieterburg" (p. 8), but "Sanktpeterburg." The only reminiscences of any Dutch word are to be found in the slang name sometimes applied to it, "Pieter"; "Schlüsselburg" and "Kronstadt" given at the same time are certainly not Dutch names. The title of Dostoevski's novel cited on p. 26 is not "Recollections of a Dead-House in Siberia." Has Dr. Brandes seen it in the original? The Winter-Palace, which our author imagines (p. 32) to have been built by the Italian architect Rastrelli, was really erected by the order of the Emperor Nicholas in 1838, and only stands on the site of the former building, which was burnt to the ground in 1837. A Slavonic scholar would hardly accept the derivation (p. 180) of the name of the deity dazhbog as from dazh "day," and bog "god." There is no word like dazh for "day." The title is confessedly a difficult one to explain; but nothing better has been given than that of Jagić, viz., "the god who gives [favours], i.e., the beneficent." It is not exactly true to say (p. 253) that in 1875 an ukase was issued forbidding the printing or publishing in the Russian empire of any kind of a book or newspaper in the Malo-Russian language. No new works may be issued; but the old may be reprinted. Thus, on our own shelves we find an edition of the Malo-Russian tales of G. Osmovianenko published at Kharkov in 1887, and M. Gomolineki of Kiev has in his Catalogue a large collection of Malo-Russian books for sale published during the last ten years. It is incorrect to say (p. 261) that the name of Bielinski has not been allowed to be mentioned in any Russian book or newspaper for the last eighteen years, since there is a long article upon him, with a portrait, in Polevoi's History of Russian Literature in Sketches and Biographies. Nor is it a fact that no one dares to print the name of Toher-nichevski (p. 270) in Russia, for a late number of the Starina (December 1889) contained an obituary notice of him.

We cannot always see the point of the criticisms of Dr. Brandes and of the stories which he introduces. If Mme. de Staël really called Moscow the Rome of the Tatars, it is difficult to perceive the appropriateness of the supposed witticism. The chief thing the Tatars had to do with Moscow was to burn it. Too much stress seems to us to be laid upon Peter the Great's work being mostly of a material and practical nature. He did labour for the intellectual welfare of his subjects. He purchased libraries and objects of art, and caused valuable foreign works to be translated; but he knew very well that material progress must come first. American and Australian pioneers appear to have been of the same opinion. The account given by Dr. Brandes of the literary men whom he met at the celebration of the jubilee of the poet Polonski is very interesting; but we cannot see why it was such an act of gross servility (p. 71) to sing the Russian national hymn on that occasion. People in England, at all events, are in the habit of singing "God Save the Queen" under similar circumstances. Dr. Brandes says some harsh things about the Russian national character, but is hardly less severe upon the Poles:

"He [the Russian] is not like the Polish landed proprietors, who, in Galicia (until in more recent times it was prohibited) tortured their Little Russian peasants, and prevented their going to church by locking the doors of the Greek Church to them, and giving the keys to the Jews, so that the peasants must buy them back in order to worship the Lord on their festivals; he has himself no kind of religion, and he is willing that all men should have theirs. Nor is he like the Polish landed proprietor in Galicia of the present day, who lives by the manufacture of spirits, and by forcing as much as possible of it into his peasants."

We quite agree with Dr. Brandes in the remarks he makes on the disastrous effects of the assassination of the late Tsar (p. 129). "Nothing has set Russia farther backward than this occurrence, which was pregnant with misfortune." It prevented the formation of a sort of parliamentary constitution, which had just been promised. It frightened the successor to the crown back from the paths his father had entered upon at the beginning of his reign; and it seemed to justify the rulers in reprisals and measures of prevention of every kind. It is singular how little the position of the late Emperor in Russian history is understood in England. His murder, besides being a great crime, was a great blunder.

Dr. Brandes writes throughout with the facile pen of a practised littérateur (some of his expressions, by the way, are translated into rather quaint English), and his accounts of the writings of Pushkin, Shevchenko (where he appears to have mainly used Obrist), Tolstoi, and Dostoevski are very pleasant reading. But we never feel quite sure whether he has made use of original sources, so much is identical with the pages of Rambaud, as in the account of the bilini, the expedition of Igor, &c. The introduction of the long episode about the poet Ovid, because he happened to be banished to Tomi, is rather out of place—his exile was too far south for his lamentations to assist us to explain Russian usages of the time. Some classical scholars, we take it, would challenge Dr. Brandes's statement that no "author in the Roman literature had a more original or bolder talent." No writers on Slavonic antiquities, Schafarik included, have thought of adding Ovid to their authorities, because he sent home hyperbolically lachrymose verses about his wretched place of exile. Still, it is to be regretted that some of the lines which he wrote in the Getic language, and which caused him to be reputed a poet among these barbarians, have not come down to us.

We do not think our author can be familiar with the real facts of the history which forms the subject of Shevchenko's "Haidamaks." He speaks of Gonta as a sort of hero; whereas he must be considered one of the greatest monsters the world ever saw. The cruel death which he afterwards met with was a just retribution for his massacre at Human of many Jewish children in 1768.

Dr. Brandes seems to think Pushkin guilty of plagiarism in not having stated (or, at all events, the fact is not stated in the ordinary editions of the poet) that the ballads of "The Three Sons of Budrys" and the "Voievode" were translated from Mickiewicz. But it would have been impossible to practise any fraud in the case of two poems which, it may be said, most Slavs know by heart. The theft would have been too transparent. Among the reviews and literary journals cited we see no mention of the admirable periodicals, Russkaya Starina (the Russian Antiquary), and Istoricheski Vestnik (the Russian Messenger).

Finally, there are some strange misspellings in the book, but these are probably due to the printer. Thus, "Nev-Petrovsk" for "Nov-Petrovsk," "Nal" and "Damasjanti" for "Nala" and "Damay-anti"; and is not "Bogdan Zabaski," on p. 249, "Bogdan Zaleski," the poet of the Ukraine, who wrote "Duch od Stepu" and other pieces, and died a little while ago in Paris?

W. R. MORFILL.

NEW NOVELS.

Beatrice. By H. Rider Haggard. (Longmans.)

A Marriage de Convenance. By C. F. Keary. In 2 vols. (Fisher Unwin.)

Little Miss Colwyn. By Adeline Sergeant. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

A New Othello. By Iza Duffus Hardy. In 3 vols. (White.)

Her Three Lovers. By Alice M. Diehl. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

The Man from Manchester. By Dick Donovan. (Chatto & Windus.)

Will o' the Wisp. By Mrs. Hugh Bell. (Longmans.)

Sentenced. By Somerville Gibney. (Chatto & Windus.)

It is a considerable, though perhaps rather an unsportsmanlike, satisfaction to the critic now and then to have to criticise a book after a certain number of critical verdicts have already been pronounced on it. He is not likely to find in them much which either determines his own judgment or surprises him. For instance, it was quite certain beforehand that critics of a certain stamp on reading (or, perhaps, before reading) Beatrice would request Mr. Haggard, in one tone or another, to go back to his African gallipots; but it is none the less agreeable to see that they have done it. It was equally certain that others, or the same, would unconsciously exemplify an immortal sentence of Mr. Thackeray's and ask him why he is not like Mr. This, Mr. That, and Mr. The Other. They were sure to do it; and they have done it. So, reasoning no more of them, let us say what Beatrice really is. It is an unequal but extremely powerful book, not exactly showing new powers in Mr. Haggard, but showing that, as is generally the case with men of considerable faculty, he can turn that faculty in new directions. It is much the most successful non-African thing he has done; and the best parts of it are better than all but the very best parts of his African stories in execution and higher than even these in attempt. More than all this, he has done what he has hardly succeeded in doing before (unless it be in the case of Umaloopogass), he has created a distinct personality, has added one to the men and women that we live with—to the choses réelles, as a great creator of such called them. Beatrice is of the race and lineage of Argemone Lavington; and if, with all the flaws and faults which always marred the genius of the author of Yeast, there has been a better heroine of the passionate kind than Argemone in the last forty years of English fiction, this deponent knoweth not the girl. So much of the argument of the story as need to be told can be told in half a dozen lines. Geoffrey Bingham, a barrister of more brains than means and of disappointed expectations, has married a cold-hearted wife, Lady Honoria. He falls in, at a Welsh watering place which looks very like Pwllheli, with a parson's daughter, Beatrice Granger; and to fall in with her is to fall in love with her, and also to be beloved by her. But Geoffrey is a moral man and does nothing to hurt her, even in exceedingly trying circumstances. Fame, wealth, opportunity, and even deliverance (which Mr. Haggard has made rather savage) from his detestable wife, come to him, but too late. Lying tongues, set wagging by Beatrice's envious sister, Elizabeth, have poisoned her life; and she sets out on a death voyage in the canoe in which we and her lover have first met her. There are many good things in the book and some not so good. The Welsh squire—a squire not to the manner born—whose half insane passion for Beatrice works in with Elizabeth's selfish designs on himself, is a very difficult character well sketched, but perhaps not quite so well carried out. We do not think Elizabeth's treachery unnatural (or rather untrue to nature), but it is a little unrelieved; and while Lady Honoria is, if not a study from life, a possible study of a living thing, she is almost too purely unpleasant. The farmer-parson, Beatrice's father, with his not wholly unkindly egotism, is very good; and we are not certain that Geoffrey Bingham's rather matter of fact personality is not more successful, as a contrast to Beatrice, than any other conception of a lover for her would have been. His arguments with his beloved on her scepticism, which is extreme and makes an important part of her character, may be a stone of stumbling on different sides to different people; and it is undeniable that, while it has been necessary for Mr. Haggard to pitch a good deal of his writing in a rather high key, the key may not always seem sustained. Let criticism, therefore, in the fault-finding sense have its due. But it is undeniable, in our judgment, by anyone who criticises fiction according to its own laws and not according to his liking for Mr. This or Mr. That and his indignation with anyone who dares to be Mr. Somebody Else, that the book distinctly places Mr. Haggard higher as a novelist. His attempt is at tragedy, not at comedy or melodrama, at force or proverb; and your tragedy is a stubborn thing, sir. But if the three crucial scenes be taken—the scene of exposition where Beatrice saves Geoffrey's life, the scene of conclusion where in the same surroundings she loses her own, and the central scene where, walking in her sleep, she enters Geoffrey's room and innocently launches the calumny which kills her—we must pronounce the first and last wholly successful, and the middle an exceedingly good attempt at a desperately difficult matter. And here we may take occasion to point out that a certain little longing which Mr. Haggard himself has avowed in print would, if it had been granted, have spoilt the scene altogether. To have treated it as any French novelist (except perhaps M. de Maupassant in his wiser moods) would have treated it, would have been to make the thing banal to the dreariest depths of banality. As it is, the difficulty may not be entirely vanquished, for it is a huge one; but the match between it and the novelist is at worst drawn. And after all we may come back to what we have said before, that to know Beatrice is not to forget her, not to add one (as somebody, we think, has said before) to

"The memories all outworn
Of many a treble-volumed morn" that fail to haunt or disturb the critic.

Well met, too, is Mr. Keary's Marriage de Convenance, though in a very different way of literature. The literary faculty of the author of A Wanderer was unmistakable in that ingenious work; but it did not follow that he could tell a story, still less that he could tell it in the difficult and now unpopular form of letters. He has told the story, has told it well, and has told it in letters after a fashion which perhaps would have been impossible in narrative. The picture drawn is not a very exalted one; but it is exceedingly clever, and, what is more, it is uncomfortably true to fact—true, that is to say, as art requires truth, and not as the realists do vainly daub. Arthur Norris, the hero, who goes to the devil for a woman in a way which would not have satisfied Miss Crawley at all, is a curiously happy study of a certain kind of modern man. He is neither exactly a bad fellow (though perhaps the brutality of his actual desertion of his wife is a very little out of character even for so light and selfish a person), nor exactly a fool, nor exactly a cad, nor exactly a commonplace man. But his culture, and his good nature, and his feelings of a gentleman, and his ability, are all skin deep, and there is nothing under the skin but merely puerile passion, appetite, and temper. Worst of all, such being the fashion of the day, he must try to be very clever, to have great passions, to look down protectingly on morality and religion and all the rest of it. The end of which things is clear. Heir to a baronetcy, but not to the property, he is persuaded, without much difficulty or much real inclination, to marry the heiress, a girl pretty enough and amiable enough, but likewise with "no depth of earth," though of a kindlier earth than his. A fit—which might have been merely a passing one—of weariness of his wife coincides unhappily with a piece of mischief made by her discarded maid about a harmless flirtation of her girlish days, and with the reappearance of a singing woman with whom Norris has believed himself to be in love before. Infidelity, elopement, disenchantment, murder, all follow. The two great merits of the book—which, in respect of complete achievement of the purpose at which it aims, is the best we have seen for some long time—are first of all the extremely clever adaptation of means to ends; and, secondly, the skill with which the character of the hero is bodied forth and helped by contrast. It is just possible that some people may find him too little sympathetic, may say "What is the good of portraying, however cleverly, a very nearly worthless character?" But this is an illegitimate criticism even in itself, and a short-sighted one to boot. For Mr. Keary might retort that Arthur Norris is emphatically the homme moyen of our day of a certain type, who may turn out a rather estimable character and a rather respectable talent, or else go to pieces altogether, according to the fall of the dice. But, indeed, there is no need to suggest defences to him, for as long as he can do such remarkable work as this he may let the dogs bark and go and do more.

Miss Adeline Sergeant's work is almost always competent in its way; and so it is in Little Miss Colwyn, though there is perhaps rather less interest in the book as a whole than in some others of hers. The kind of brass and earthen pot affection between Margaret Adair and Janetta Colwyn, in which the former, a young heiress, champions her penniless friend in a manner extremely damaging to that friend's future, and then almost casts her off, is well imagined, but not quite strong enough for a main interest. And the Rochesterian character of the hero, Wyvis Brand (Miss Sergeant wisely as well as bravely puts an acknowledgment of the suggestion in the mouth of one of her personages) is not only an old trick, but was never particularly good. Wyvis's brother, Cuthbert, is much better. However, the punishment of Margaret for her selfishness is excellent poetical justice, and Janetta is very agreeable. If she has not the great passions of the young woman whose name she has diminutived, and whose fortunes hers a little resemble, she seems to have been much prettier (which is always something) and considerably more amiable. It is a pleasant and readable book.

In A New Othello, Miss Hardy has taken up the fashionable craze for the new hypnotism (old mesmerism, without even the advantage of being writ large), and has made a sufficiently sensational story out of it. With the extraordinary ruthlessness which belongs but to the fairest of sexes, she has made the victim of the murder on which her story turns out of the most harmless character in it, a very good fellow, who does not deserve his fate at all. Such things, however, it may be admitted, do happen in real life as well as in fiction. Neither his nephew and supposed murderer, nor the wicked hypnotiser, is very interesting. Nor are we greatly disposed to envy either the new Desdemona, who (the parts being reversed for the good of the story) survives, while Othello succumbs. The story has a certain amount of "go," and the opening scenes are brightly enough sketched.

Miss Alice Diehl has a string of works appended to her name on the title-page of Her Three Lovers; but we own that, a priori, we should have been disposed to consider the book not merely a first attempt, but a very early first attempt indeed, such as is written what time the truant pen deserts the grave allotted tasks of youth for furtive fiction and forbidden joys. A more hopelessly boyish hero than Arthur Lonsdale or Burger we have rarely met. The Australian uncle looks like a copy of that impossible American whom Miss Ferrier, for reasons only known to herself and the muses, chose to admit to her gallery of masterpieces; and the heroines, Nell and Julia, are as little like anything but school-girls as their lover is like anything but a schoolboy. There is, however, absolutely no harm in the book, which carries high morality to such a pitch as, apparently, to lay it down that it is wrong, when you have kissed one young lady in the afternoon, to take a rose from another's bouquet in the evening.

An italic prefatory note at the beginning of The Man from Manchester bids "those who are loudest in their condemnation pause lest in their own armour of respectability there be a flaw." Perhaps there are flaws in our armour; but all we can say is, that whether there be or not, we cannot give loud approbation to Mr. Dick Donovan's book except as a work of comedy. Its illustrations, regarded as serious efforts, will scarcely rank high; but for unconscious humour the highly accomplished Mr. Vecqueray calling (at p. 18) on two ladies whom he met casually in a train, and who gave him an address at the Quadrant, Regent's Park, the same erring man when with a rashness of gesture never to be sufficiently deprecated he quite by accident struck his wife on the forehead (p. 121), and an embracing scene—family doctor present for the sake of the proprieties—(p. 172), very nearly break any record with which we are acquainted. We should very much like to be able to give the whole of this article to the letterpress, which is quite worthy of the cuts.

The illustrations of Mrs. Hugh Bell's pretty little story are nearly—not quite—as bad as those of The Man from Manchester; but the text is a pleasant tale of the rose-pink and sky-blue kind. There are uglier colours.

The interest of Sentenced turns entirely on a murder which seems to be a murder and is not. In such cases it is our invariable rule to say nothing about the story. The solution of the enigma is at least unusual.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SOME HISTORICAL BOOKS.

"THE STORY OF THE NATIONS."—The Jews under Roman Rule. By W. D. Morrison. (Fisher Unwin.) We have here a very sober and judicious account of a difficult and somewhat irritating portion of history. The period (B.C. 164—A.D. 135) exhibits to our gaze a nation, conquered it is true, but tolerably well off, treated with exceptional consideration by its conquerors, enjoying perfect freedom of speech, of religion, of commerce, and of local self-government, yet restless and discontented with a fever which at times prompts it to bloody outrages, and more than once leads it into great but hopeless national outbreaks. The explanation of a state of things so contrary to the teachings of self-interest and to all the ordinary generalisations of political philosophy is to be found in religion. Religious freedom was not enough to content the Jews. The presence of the armed foreigner as a master upon the sacred soil of Judaea was a constant annoyance; and the sense of profanation took a practical form in fanaticism. The Romans gave order, security, and peace; but the development of Jewish theology which had taken place since the wars of emancipation from Syria had convinced the population that it was impious to pay taxes to Rome in recognition of these advantages. Herod the Great offered much the same benefits to his subjects as the Romans did afterwards. But he, too, was a foreigner, a base Idumæan, and infected with Roman and Greek ideas. He might encourage trade; he might found or restore cities; he might take care of the national revenues, and try to gratify the national prejudices; but the love or respect of the people he should never have. "Cursed is the man who feeds swine, and cursed is the man who instructs his son in Greek wisdom"; and neither Herod nor his Roman employers and successors ever gained more than lip-service and unwilling obedience from the Jew. The result was abundant and useless bloodshed, national destruction, and severer treatment of the Jews who survived. All these calamities, as Mr. Morrison says, "were almost entirely of the Jew's own choosing"; but we must add to the list of mournful consequences the alienation of all that was most thoughtful in Greece and Rome from Jewish ideas and Jewish literature. Mr. Morrison has given us also an interesting account of the Jews outside Palestine, their enterprise, their life, and their religious institutions; and indeed the whole of his work deserves high commendation. The illustrations, which are very numerous, are not always quite relevant to the text; one or two of them are printed twice over. In the text and in the index a celebrated Roman appears as Scylla—an amazing confusion between "the mulberry-faced dictator" and the daughter of a purple-haired father.

Dublin Castle. By M. O'Connor Morris. (Harrison.)

"To tell the story of Dublin Castle," says one of the foremost of Irish men of letters, "we should need a volume, and that volume would contain strange and tragic records, splendours and gloom, secrets dark and cruel, with touches of comedy enlivening the long historical drama."

Mr. O'Connor Morris, a genial sportsman well-known by his prowess in the hunting-field and by the racy descriptions of good runs which he has contributed to sporting papers, has essayed the task of producing a volume on "the Castle," in which he has chiefly dwelt upon the "touches of comedy enlivening the long historical drama." Dublin Castle presents two very different aspects to Irishmen. To some the "fortress of the foreigner" is a badge of servitude with memories of cruel wrongs, ignorant blundering which has cost the lives of thousands, judicial murders, brutal tortures often inflicted upon innocent persons. It is hated as the Turris Antonia was hated by the Jews, who saw in it the visible symbol of the detested Roman rule. To others the same building has an entirely different story to tell. Those who belong to the official class look back with regret to the period when Castledom was in its prime. They think of the easy duties, the snug berths carefully preserved for the members of a dominant ascendancy, the brilliant social gatherings, "balls and parties, races and gambling tables, eating, drinking, and duel fighting among the Phoenix thorn-trees." Mr. O'Connor Morris has succeeded in compiling a book which will doubtless be acceptable to lovers of the Castle, and which is in many respects interesting and amusing. In a handsome, well-printed volume, containing some fair photographs of the Castle and of Castle celebrities, he has traced down to the present day the fortunes of the citadel of Dublin and its uses as "fortress, forum, mint, and prison." He expressly disclaims originality of research, and has been content with a historical sketch drawn from well-known sources. A large number of anecdotes of the Irish metropolis are given, and we have also a number of political reflections, which will be valued according to the party bias of the reader. But, as one might expect from the author of Trivittata and Hibernia Venatica, it is chiefly from the sporting point of view that he regards Irish affairs; and it would be a bold man who would dare to differ from so eminent an authority on matters connected with sport. To begin with, he has a distinct and not unpractical grievance, which he airs in his preface. "Ireland as a theatre for hunting is miles in front of England, yet Melton was ever an irresistible magnet to hunting Irishmen"; and very severe is his condemnation of those foolish and unpatriotic fox-hunters who "despise their own country and countrymen to their own sore hurt and impoverishment." The ancient Irish, we are told, were, above all things, remarkable for what our author calls their "philippic" tendencies. They "were a race of cattle-rearers and horse-dealers"; their kings were "merely glorified graziers who had more stock of all kinds than their clansmen." The only State paper which is quoted (and that at very great length, pp. 151-157) is a scheme of Sir William [not Sir Richard] Temple's for the improvement of Irish trade by the setting-up of horse-fairs and races. This is, says our author, a "counsel which has a true statesman-like ring about it." Indeed, in proportion as Irish rulers approach or fall short of this counsel of perfection, so, as a general rule, do they fare at the hands of Mr. O'Connor Morris. It is by their exploits in the field and their habits of convivial hospitality that he appears to judge the various viceroys. Lord Eglinton is the one who seems most after his own heart. "Horsemen by nature and bred up among horses, the Irish could not but feel a leaning towards a nobleman who owned the best horse of the century." But this was not Lord Eglinton's only claim to the admiration of Irishmen: "Champagne flowed freely under his auspices, and was discovered to be a capital solvent of political and polemical acerbities." Good horsemanship, we discover, is to a great extent dependent upon sound political principles. Conservatives ride well to hounds, just as they hold firmly the reins of government; Liberals have not a sure seat in office, and are indifferent horsemen in the hunting-field. So invariably is this the case that when Lord Spencer began to show leanings towards Home Rule "the pursuing Pro-Rex . . . no longer rode over the peerless pastures of Meath and Dublin in his old form, and learnt the depths of several ditches by personal plumbing." As may be supposed, Mr. O'Connor Morris is a strong Unionist, and devotes a large portion of his work to political discussions, into which there is happily no need to follow him. But surely he goes beyond his brief when, in his endeavours to prove that the Union is not a failure, he draws a most unfavourable picture of the social condition of Dublin ninety years ago (p. 118), and leads us to suppose that it has vastly improved since that time. Mr. O'Connor Morris can never have read the striking words of Mr. Froude:

"Socially and internally the Union worked only mischief. In the last century Ireland had an intellectual life. Besides her popular orators, she produced artists, men of letters, statesmen, soldiers the best of which the Empire had to boast. Society was never anywhere, perhaps, more brilliant than in Dublin in the years which succeeded 1782. The great peers and commoners had cast their lot with the national life. They had their castles in the country and their town houses in the Irish metropolis. Their lives had a public purpose. They were conscious of high responsibilities; and if they were not always wise they had force and dignity of character. With the Union all was changed."

The Civilization of the Renaissance in Italy. By Jacob Burckhardt. Translated by J. G. C. Middlemore. (Sonnenschein.) Although not described as a new edition on the title-page, this volume is reprinted from a work which first appeared twelve years ago. The date of the translator's preface, 1878, which would have revealed this fact, has been carelessly (or carefully) omitted. Possibly Mr. Middlemore did not live long enough to prepare the work for republication or to correct the sheets while they were passing through the press. Yet surely some competent person might have been found to undertake that not very laborious office. The translation, as it originally appeared, was a creditable performance, but it contained some serious misrenderings, and was disfigured by numerous misprints. Some of the latter have been corrected, but more have been added, so that the last state of the book is worse than the first. By the insertion of some most gratuitous commas, a very learned German is made to write as if he thought that Valerius and Flaccus, Asconius and Peditanus, Aulus and Gellius, were so many distinct authors (p. 189). Elsewhere a passage correctly translated by Mr. Middlemore as follows: "A citizen who, when abroad in Venice, had spoken ill of Borsio in public, was informed against on his return home," is wantonly changed into "A citizen who when abroad from Venice... was informed [sic] on his return home" (p. 49). Naturally Mr. Middlemore's own blunders have been allowed to stand. We still hear with surprise about "the simultaneous death by poison" of Alexander VI. and Caesar Borgia (p. 110), whereas the son survived the father some years. We still wonder at the portentous ignorance of architectural things displayed by the statement that "the Florentines of the fourteenth century laboured to make their cathedral a Pantheon long before the building of Santa Croce" (p. 142), and at the evident confusion of Michael Angelo's "David" with Donatello's "Judith" betrayed on p. 59. No kind hand has elucidated an enigmatical sentence about "the greatest dilettante [read amateur] who has ever treated in that character of military affairs" (p. 100), by restoring the name of Machiavelli from the German text; nor ascertained by a reference to the original what foundation there was for describing Vespasiano Bisticci, who "confessed that he knew little of Latin" as "a Latin writer" (p. 252). "Dilettantismus" is on one occasion most unkindly translated by "impudence" (p. 275). "Confessions" are attributed to Marcus Aurelius (p. 334). "A naked female statue" is left in the rather onerous position assigned to it by Mr. Middlemore of "guarding a live lion" (p. 410); whereas, as one might expect in an allegorical representation of Constantine and the Duke of Burgundy, the lion was guarding the lady. Altogether, with the exception of the binder, nobody who is responsible for the appearance of this volume can be particularly congratulated on his share in the work.

SOME VOLUMES OF SERMONS.

From Strength to Strength. In Memoriam J. B. D. (Macmillan.) These three sermons were preached respectively—on the occasion of Bishop Lightfoot's consecration to the See of Durham in 1879; at the consecration of the church of St. Ignatius, Sunderland, in 1889, when the bishop's recovery from illness was confidently looked for; and in Westminster Abbey again in 1889, after the illness had ended in death. The preacher in each case was Dr. Lightfoot's friend and successor, Dr. Westcott. The sermons display all Dr. Westcott's excellencies; they are full of matter, and more than usually eloquent and earnest. They contain, moreover, many biographical details of great interest; but most readers will read them with the thought in their minds that the preacher is now himself in the place of the man he preaches about. The magnificent sketch of a bishop's work and opportunities which the first sermon sets before us has now, by the man who conceived it, to be realised in practice. From this point of view, the sermon will appeal powerfully to all Dr. Westcott's friends, to all English churchmen; and many hearts will pray that the ideal he was not afraid to set before his friend may by himself also be as gloriously and adequately realised.

The Light of Life. By W. J. Knox Little. (Rivingtons.) Canon Knox Little says bluntly of these fifteen sermons that "there is, of course, nothing original about them," by which he means that they state no new truths, but rather deal by preference with old ones. He might also contend that there is nothing original in the force, picturesqueness, and clearness of his style; it has been the style of all preachers who have moved large audiences. Now-a-days, the culture of our divines too often interferes with their inspiration; they fail to convince their hearers of the reality and simplicity of their own faith. Preachers are rare who make vivid and real the simpler emotions and instincts of the religious life. Canon Knox Little aims at arousing and stimulating the fundamental religious intuitions of the soul, and is, therefore, careful to avoid confusing or taxing the understanding. His sermons are passionate and eloquent, but always simple and clear. They are obviously better suited to the pulpit than the study. We may note as specially fine the first sermon on "The Light of Life," and the two entitled "The Vision of Eternity."

The Spiritual Life and Other Sermons. Rev. J. E. C. Weldon. (Macmillan.) The style of Mr. Weldon's sermons has character in it. We are aware as we read them that an earnest-minded, clear-headed scholar is addressing us. He is impressive because he avoids instinctively padding and obscurity, and never strains after florid eloquence. Occasionally we are jarred by the tone adopted towards agnostics, as when he speaks of the "scanty audience" of the positivist; and his argument is apt to rely too much upon the doubtful psychology which divides the man into body, mind, and spirit. The want of charity towards opponents is, we believe, quite unconscious; for the preacher more than once makes it clear that he sym-thesises with the sincere doubter, and even appreciates the services he has rendered to men. We care most for Sermon V. on "The Promise of the Comforter, and VIII. on "The Blessing of Death"; but none of the ten included in the volume falls below the average.

Sermons preached in the Chapel of Keble College, Oxford, 1877-88. (W. H. Allen.) The College Chapel would occupy a larger place in the memory than it does if sermons of the stamp of those included in this volume were habitually delivered in it. The sermon preached to the congregation of a university college chapel ought to have certain distinguishing characteristics. It ought to have a distinct and definite bearing on the life of combined study and recreation pursued by the average undergraduate, and assist him to find in both study and recreation some real and adequate spiritual food. The four discourses of Mr. Lock in this volume are exactly what they ought to be. They are scholarly and even learned, but they are also interesting and thoughtful. Sermon IX., on "Sunday," may be recommended to readers of all sorts and conditions; Sermon VI., on "Friendship," with its fine quotations from Seneca and its allusions to Aristotle, will specially please the classical student; while number VII., on the Psalter, must delight all religious people who have any liking for scholarship, and all scholars who feel the necessity of religion. Mr. Lock's sermons, more than the others in the book, are obviously "preached in the chapel" of a college, and, therefore, they are the best; but all the twenty-five are touched with the same spirit of combined earnestness and culture. Dr. Talbot, the Bishop of Chester, the Rev. W. J. Richmond, the Hon. A. T. Lytton, and the late Canon Aubrey Moore, are among the contributors.

Manliness, and other Sermons. By H. S. Brown. (Edinburgh: Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) Dr. Maclaren insists in his preface on the "unique personality" of the late Hugh Stowell Brown, and goes on to speak of the unusual care he gave to the preparation of his sermons. We find in the present volume much of the "homely sagacity, humour, sarcasm, boldness of rebuke," and "abhorrence of oratorical and all other affectation" which Dr. Maclaren claims for them. They are always original and terse; but we fail to observe any signs of specially careful preparation. The originality is that of the preacher who states old truths in his own words, not of the discoverer of anything new. The sermons doubtless lose much by being read: they are intended first of all for the pulpit.

Sermons Preached in St. Thomas's Cathedral, Bombay. By the Right Rev. L. G. Mylne, Bishop of Bombay. (Macmillan.) The admirable rule of Bishop Mylne's preface that a preacher is to aim at four things—sympathy, directness, reality, and brevity—has been carefully followed in the sermons he includes in his selection. They have a double interest, as the utterances of a mind at once vigorous and devout, and as preached to Anglo-Indian congregations. A manly directness and clearness of purpose are the distinguishing characteristics of Dr. Mylne's style, but his powers of thought are considerable, and his literary faculty trained. His position as a bishop of Anglo-Indians has had two very marked effects upon his mind and views; it has made him a man of the world in the only good sense, so that he can preach "on gamblers and gambling" sensibly and charitably; and it has made him bold and uncompromising in his insistence on an unworldly morality and life. The most original sermon in the selection is that on "the Anger which is a Virtue and the Anger which is a Sin"; it is followed by "the Cross of the Christian Missionary in India," which contains some exceedingly wise words on the proper spirit in which the missionary should approach native religions.

Sermons Preached in the East. By C. H. Butcher. (Elliot Stock.) The author of these thirty sermons was formerly Dean of Shanghai, and is now chaplain of All Saints, Cairo. His ministry in these two places has extended over twenty-six years. We are consequently much surprised and somewhat disappointed to find no local colouring in the discourses—nothing which transports us to the remote regions in which they were delivered. The sermons of a preacher whose stay in his charge has been as long as Dean Butcher's ought to contain some sort of a picture of the mental and moral peculiarities of his flock. But this is the only fault we can find with the sermons; they are easily and naturally written, without any straining after eloquence or effort to display learning, and yet they are eloquent and scholarly. The author's wide and genuine culture is as remarkable as his candid and liberal good sense. It is pleasant to think that such discourses have been preached in places so out of the way. The five sermons on "Faith" are perhaps the best in the series.

The Philanthropy of God. By the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. (Hodder & Stoughton.) Mr. Hughes's volume affords a good illustration of the Nonconformist as contrasted with the Anglican style of preaching. Its merits should be pondered by Anglican divines. The titles of the sermons—"The Secret of John Bright's Career," "The Deadly Militarism of Lord Wolsley," "International Arbitration," "Woman's Wrongs," "The Problem of London Pauperism"—will at once attract the ordinary citizen. Mr. Hughes deliberately and without apology treats of political and social matters which Anglican preachers usually shun in the pulpit; and he treats of them, on the whole, successfully, without giving just cause of offence to party men on either side. The sermon on John Bright, which gives an account of Jonathan Dymond's essays, is excellent, as are the discourses on Father Damien and Giordano Bruno. They combine information and exhortation with unusual skill. The series on War, in answer to a speech by Lord Wolsley, might be more rigorous in their logic. They do not state clearly how far the preacher thinks war justifiable; but their earnestness and vigour are striking, and they are perfectly courteous. The sermons as a series endeavour to describe and illustrate the mutual consideration and sympathy which should mark the relations with one another of Christian citizens and Christian countries. They insist that there is a political and international Christianity which must be constantly striven after by men, and define national welfare as the attainment of it. Mr. Hughes has not any new theories to put forward, but he expounds old ones in a thoroughly fresh and original manner, with unusual force and eloquence. His readers will thank him for the striking quotations prefixed to many of the sermons.

SOME CLASSICAL TEXTS.

The Speech of Demosthenes against the Law of Leptines: a Revised Text with Introduction and Notes, by J. E. Sandys. (Cambridge: University Press.) The hope that we have not yet exhausted the refined secrets which lie hidden in Greek composition or in Greek art may well be strengthened by such discoveries as that of Blass, that Demosthenes generally avoids the collocation of more than two short syllables in consecutive words. Sympathetic minds and trained ears have always felt the music and the majesty of Demosthenes's style; but the admiration was often only instinctive, and the means by which the effect was produced were imperfectly known. So too the curve of the steps of the Parthenon was only discovered by a man who is still living; and we may hope to find our way yet further into the technique of the literary and fine arts of the Greeks. Blass's law, however, may be ridden too hard, and Mr. Sandys wisely declines to follow him into all the changes of text which his law makes him think necessary. It is curious that, in a work of art so polished in little points as the law indicates, the weightier matters should be comparatively neglected. There is a want of compactness in the Leptines speech. Successive arguments are loosely strung together. Eight consecutive paragraphs are introduced by the same particle. The logical divisions are not precise. Now, to dwell on these points, and to illustrate them, seems to us quite as valuable as to explain the syntax or to insist on the terseness and simplicity of the diction. Few students can read Demosthenes quickly or in masses, so as unconsciously to imbibe his merits or shrink from his unfinished or overloaded passages. All the more reason why his beauties of style should be explicitly pointed out, his unsparing labour illustrated, his occasional faults held up to view. In this particular kind of teaching, recent English works on ancient oratory and orators seem to us distinctly in advance of recent studies of other classical subjects. Mr. Sandys's present volume, like his previous writings, is a solid gain to English scholarship and English taste.

Platonis Euthyphro, with Introduction and Notes. By J. Adam. (Pitt Press Series.) There are many signs that scholarship is about to enter upon a period of subordination to statistics. Valuable work has been done on statistical methods by German investigators. The task of collecting, classifying, and discussing all examples of important Greek constructions is going on actively. Similar inquiries have been made or are making into the occurrence of special words, even common ones; and the tables of results thus obtained will soon modify many established ideas and settle many disputed questions. Following Constantin Ritter's tables about the uses of particles, given in his Untersuchungen über Plato, Mr. Adam is led to place the Euthyphro (whose genuineness he defends) among Plato's early works. It is a scholarly little edition which he has produced—graceful, complete, and with no noticeable fault unless it be a little over-subtlety. But over-subtlety is no bad quality after all in the editor of a classic; for no one who does not try to force more meaning out of his author than is actually there will succeed in wringing out the last drop of real meaning. There is great probability in Mr. Adam's view that the dialogue is not, as it seems, really devoid of positive result, and that the question in P 13 E (τί ποτε ἐστὶν ἐκεῖνο τὸ πᾶν καλὸν ἔργον, ὃ οἱ θεοὶ ἀπεργάζονται ἡμῖν ὑπὲρ πάντων χρημάτων) contains the germ of a conclusion. It is the only question left unanswered in our dialogue, and Bonitz has well argued in his Platonische Studien that "whatever remains unresolved in a Platonic dialogue contains the key to its positive teaching." But the Euthyphro gives no hint of what the ἔργον is. Mr. Adam has a curious note on P. 10 C to the effect that "the τι after γινόμενον is to be repeated with πᾶν"; curious, because the τι actually is repeated in the text.

Livy, Book IV. Edited by H. M. Stephenson. (Pitt Press Series.) Mr. Stephenson has turned out a very serviceable edition of the fourth book of Livy. That book is not one of the most interesting which have come down to us; but Mr. Stephenson's judicious explanations do much to make it interesting by making it plain, and his notes step in with help at the right places. If they have a fault, it is that they are somewhat few in number; but, if the commentary were not good, we should not wish for more of it. We believe that a really intelligent schoolboy might be puzzled to find the nominatives to the verbs praeferebant in C. 1 and respondit in C. 6; while on the words Ahala Servilius in C. 57 might have been hung a useful note on the name-system of the Romans, and the inversion of the nomen and cognomen which we find appearing in Cicero and Livy. Mr. Stephenson's explanation of revolutus ad dispensationem inoptiae in C. 12 seems to us very ingenious, but unnecessary. "Falling back," he says, "on the plan of distributing the pressure of want." But why not make inoptiae simply "their scanty supply"?

Herodotus. Book V. With Introduction, Notes, and Map. By E. S. Shuckburgh. (Pitt Press Series.) Mr. Shuckburgh's new volume falls in no way below the high point of excellence which his edition of Book VI. (already noticed in the ACADEMY) attained. It is complete in every way. The historical and geographical index will be found very useful, and the note on the early alphabet should help to make an obscure subject clear. In fact, the whole commentary is instructive and suggestive, and carries on pari passu the education of the young reader in Greek and in Greek history. It is very full in proportion to its size. A note might perhaps be added on the abnormal sense of προσφερόμενον in C. 111. We do not quite understand Mr. Shuckburgh's note on C. 51, ἔσω ἂν ἴκετόν—"having made his way into the interior"; surely ἔσω goes with ἐσελθόν, not with ἴκετόν.

Demosthenes, Orations against Philip. Vol. II. By Evelyn Abbott and P. E. Matheson. (Clarendon Press.) We are glad to see the completion of the edition of Demosthenes' speeches against Philip, by Messrs. Abbott and Matheson, of which the earlier instalment has already been noticed in the ACADEMY. The second volume keeps up the high character of the first, and the whole may be pronounced an excellent piece of work. It hits exactly what is required for the upper forms of schools. The commentary is neither too elementary nor too deep; and working boys who use it will find that their difficulties are met without their curiosity being stifled.

Homeri Ilias. Scholarum in Usum edidit P. Cauer. (Leipzig: Freytag.) This book, though nominally intended for schools, may fitly take rank as an edition for scholars. Its main feature is the uncompromising acceptance of the newer views. Thus we have ἀντίδουσα, not ἀντίσωσα, in accordance with Wackernagel's theory; diphthongs in words like Ἄρπιδης are sundered; ῥῆος appears instead of ῥείος, and so forth. For school purposes this is a great advantage, because the substituted forms are at least intelligible, which is more than can be said of the traditional readings. How far it is right thus to alter the text conjecturally is a matter of some doubt; but Dr. Cauer has done his work well, neither rejecting views which are really probable, nor accepting others which, like Fick's, are quite uncertain. His book is, therefore, a good illustration of the best results of philology as applied of late years to the Homeric poems. The book has an interesting preface, in which, among other things, B.C. 750 is given as the (approximate) date when the composition of the Iliad ended. Dr. Cauer, like most other enquirers, believes in an original unit which has been increased and added to, and he thinks that this adding ceased about the date mentioned. So far as we can see, this amounts only to saying that all the Iliad—excluding a few obviously spurious lines—dates from a period before the beginnings of Greek history.

Homeri Ilias. Edidit A. Rzach. (Cassell.)—Horati Opera. Ediderunt O. Keller et I. Haussner. (Cassell.) These two editions of classical texts are apparently reprints of volumes in the series now being published by Messrs. Tempsey of Vienna, under the superintendence (we believe) of Prof. Schenkl. This series has been frequently alluded to in the ACADEMY; and we need now only say that we heartily welcome its appearance in England, printed on decent paper, with a large margin and a substantial cloth binding. We have, perhaps, sufficiently adequate texts of Horace, but it so happens that there is no good plain text of Homer published in England. Those who want one will find in Mr. Rzach's edition a work of admitted excellence. We hope Messrs. Cassell will give us more of this series; if cheap, the volumes will be very useful. Only we would suggest that their Austrian origin ought to be distinctly indicated, if only to prevent confusion.

NOTES AND NEWS.

PROF. DILLMAN and Prof. Kuenen, representing the committee appointed at Christiania to make arrangements for the next international congress of Orientalists, have addressed a formal letter to Sir Henry Rawlinson, in which they accept the proposal to hold the congress in England in September, 1891, leaving it to Sir Henry to decide whether the meetings shall take place in London, or partly also at Oxford. It seems, therefore, that the differences which at one time threatened to cause a serious schism among Oriental scholars are now on the way to a harmonious settlement; and that the congresses will continue to be held under the same conditions as formerly.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will publish immediately a volume of English Lyrics, by Mr. Alfred Austin, with an introduction by Mr. William Watson, author of "At Wordsworth's Grave," recently reviewed in the ACADEMY.

MR. EDWARD STANFORD announces for publication early in July a book that suggests novel experiences to the jaded tourist. It is entitled Camping Voyages on German Rivers. The author is an Oxford man, who here gives an account of his adventures, with two companions, during many holidays spent in boating on the Weser, Neckar, Moselle, Main, Moldau, &c., some of which had not previously been navigated in this way. The volume will be illustrated with numerous maps.

MESSRS. TRISCHLER & Co. will publish in about a week's time, a burlesque on In Darkest Africa, by Mr. F. C. Burnand, to whom Messrs. Sampson Low supplied proof sheets of Mr. Stanley's work. The narrative will include a farcical description of the manner in which Emin Pasha was discovered.

THE life of Admiral Collingwood, on which Mr. Clarke Russell is engaged, and which Messrs. Methuen will publish next year, will contain a number of hitherto unpublished letters addressed to Lord Howe and the First of June are of great historic interest.

THE committee of the Selden Society have decided that the fourth volume of the society's publications shall contain a hitherto unpublished collection of precedents in French for proceedings in manorial courts. The date of the collection is doubtful, but is certainly not later than 1350. The rest of the volume will consist of actual cases from court rolls. The volume will be edited by Prof. Maitland, of Cambridge, and Mr. W. Paley Baildon, of Lincoln's Inn.

The fifth volume will consist of the well-known Mirror, edited from the only MS. in existence, with a translation and a commentary. The third volume is nearly ready and will, it is expected, be issued before the long vacation.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish next week The Gain of Life and Other Essays, by Dr. W. C. Coupland. The principal object of the book is to inquire into the reason and intrinsic value of existence in the bodily state. The author is not a pessimist, and dissents from Von Hartmann's theory, that pain is more appreciable than pleasure because it leaves behind it a longer consciousness.

A NEW theological work, to be issued shortly by the same publisher, is The Nature and Method of Revelation, by the Rev. Dr. G. P. Fisher. For the satisfaction of sceptics, nine essays treat of the proofs, internal and matter-of-fact, which are afforded by study with regard to the genuineness of the Gospel narrative.

A NEW book by Mr. F. M. Allen will be published next week by Messrs. Ward & Downey. It will be entitled Brayhard: the Strange Adventures of One Ass and Seven Champions. Mr. Harry Furness has illustrated it liberally.

THE next volume in the "Story of the Nations" series will be Scotland, by Dr. James Mackintosh, of Aberdeen.

MESSRS. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS will publish next week A Son of Issachar; a Romance of the Days of Messias, by E. S. Brooks. The scene is laid chiefly in Palestine, during the closing days of Christ's ministry; and it is in reality the story of the son of the widow of Nain, and the daughter of Jairus.

A NOVEL by Miss Sarah Tytler, the title of which is Sapphira, will be published in July by Messrs. Ward & Downey, who also have in the press a novel by Mr. W. Outram Tristram, entitled Locusta.

A NEW and revised edition of Canon Eden's Churchman's Theological Dictionary, with a preface by the Rev. H. O. G. Moule, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

OWING to changes that have taken place in the constitution of the publishing firm of Remington & Co., the title will, from July 1, be changed to Messrs. Eden, Remington & Co. The business will be carried on, as before, in Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

IN a letter of recent date, Mr. George Kennan writes: "I have just learned that my articles in the Century have been translated into Bulgarian and published at Rustchuk. They are now out in German, Dutch, Polish, Russian, and Bulgarian." It has been stated, on excellent authority, that Mr. Kennan's articles have been read by the Czar of Russia, though in general the numbers of the Century which contain the Siberian papers continue to be refused admission to Russia until the obnoxious articles have been expunged by the press censor.

ALL will be glad to know that the series of "Bibliographical Miscellanies," begun by the late William Blades with The Development of Signatures, is not to be terminated by his death. He had himself put into type, to form four more numbers of the series, an expansion of the paper on "Chained Libraries," which he read before the Library Association last October, and which was then printed in the Library (vol. i., pp. 411-416). The first of these has just appeared, dealing with the well-known chained library at Wimborne, which, indeed, suggested the subject to the author. It is illustrated with a wood-cut of the library (from a photograph) and of the chains. The other parts, it is stated, will describe other chained libraries in the United Kingdom and elsewhere—particularly that at Hereford Cathedral and the Laurentian at Florence; and will be illustrated with seven photo-collotype plates. In this connexion we may mention that there is a small collection of some half-dozen chained books in the parish church at Minehead; and also a similar collection at Basingstoke, which the churchwardens' accounts show to have been chained as late as 1723. We trust that Mr. Blades's third paper in the Library, on "Paper and Paper-marks" (pp. 217-223) was also prepared by him for independent publication in this series, which—it should be added—can be obtained from Messrs. Blades, East, & Blades.

MR. J. H. LUPTON contributes to the Pauline an account of a catalogue of the library of St. Paul's School in 1697, which happens to be preserved among the MSS. of Trinity College, Cambridge. The total number of volumes was then 454, including Oaxton's Chronicles, Colet's Grammar of 1534, and the Paris folio of Vegetius (1532), with its curious plates, "which young Churchill may have turned over." It appears that the school library now contains no less than 5,200 volumes. Among the recent additions is a copy of the Latin Prayers used in the school in 1644, of which Mr. Lupton has issued a reprint.

THE last issue of Caslon's Circular prints the paper recently read before the Society of Arts by Mr. Talbot B. Reed upon "Old and New Fashions in Typography," which is illustrated with a sheet of specimens of the original founts engraved by the first Caslon in the early part of the last century. "It is not a little remarkable that the modern demand for these old founts not only continues but increases."

THE appeal issued by Mr. Stopford Brooke (ACADEMY, May 24), for subscriptions to purchase Dove Cottage as a national memorial to Wordsworth has already been answered by promises to the aggregate amount of nearly £300. The total asked for is £1,000; and the treasurer is Mr. George L. Craik, 29, Bedford-street, Covent Garden.

AT the annual meeting of the Swedenborg Society, held last week, the committee reported that 3354 volumes of the society's publications have been issued during the year. Of these 1428 have been sold, 425 returned to subscribers, and 1501 presented, including 3217 volumes of the theological works in English, 1 in German, 6 in Russian, 3 in French, 86 in Latin, 11 philosophical, and 30 miscellaneous. An agent has been appointed for the Australian colonies and New Zealand, with a central depot in Sydney. An Italian professor, residing in Rome, is preparing for publication a work on Swedenborg, expository of the doctrines in his works.

Rondalística: estudi de Literatura popular. Por Pau Bertran y Bros. (Barcelona.) To this little work on folklore, with its twenty-five inedited Catalan tales, was awarded an extraordinary prize in the Floral Games of Barcelona, 1888. The Rondalles are the tales told round the fire, or in turn, in round, by the company assembled for any evening task in the Catalan farmhouses. In the preliminary chapters Señor Bertran discusses the current theories of the origin of folklore tales—the mythological, or atmospheric, the historical, and the anthropological; but he does not definitely adopt any. In classification he departs more widely from his authorities, and proposes one of his own, which at least has the merit of clearness, though the divisions may sometimes overlap. These are, according to the elements of the story, (1) sub-human animal tales, &c., (2) superhuman, (3) purely human. Of the first he gives seven specimens, seven of the second, eleven of the third. All are brief, some very short, all are reported in the narrator's words. The most peculiar belong to the second class, wherein our Lord and St. Peter are the chief actors. Like some of the third class, in which priests figure, they show a satirical and irreverent vein, which differs in a marked degree from that of the same class of tales in the rest of the peninsula. No. 8, "Little Peter," is a curious blending of fuller Asturian and Basque forms of a well-known tale. Others recall Basque and Gascon versions. "Bouquet Boquill" is one of the hundred forms of "the House that Jack built." We must dissent, however, from the distinction drawn between folklore and legend; that the people did not believe the former, and do believe the latter. We have only to go low enough, or to go back far enough, to find that folklore and myth were, and are, as fully believed in as any legend. A truer distinction we believe to be this. Legend implies the germ or birth of a literature, oral or written. Genuine folklore is simply a creed, or the debris of worn-out creeds. We are glad to see that our author has in the press three volumes of Catalan Rondalles, and works on Catalan prayers and superstitions in preparation.

THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER contributes to the forthcoming number of Mind an article on "Space Consciousness," in reply to the Neo-Kantians.

THE new number of the Contemporary Review will contain a vigorous reply by Mr. Edward Bellamy, author of "Looking Backward," to the criticisms of M. de Laveleye on his system of Nationalism. Mr. Sidney Webb also contributes an important article on "Reform of the Poor Law."

A DEBATE on the Land Tax, whether it should be imposed on the soil or on the produce, will be carried on in the July Century by Mr. Henry George (for the latter thesis) and Mr. Edward Atkinson (for the former).

THE Pioneer—a magazine of a special character, which "aims to deal in a helpful way with the complex problems of individual and social life"—will enter upon a new series with the July number. It will henceforth be printed on hand-made paper, in the finest manner, and will be published quarterly. A new feature will be the periodical survey of contemporary thought and action, by Mr. Walter Lewin. The Pioneer is published at Egremont, in Cheshire; and the London agent is Mr. Elkin Matthews.

WITH the July part, Igdrasil will be permanently enlarged from 40 to 48 pages. While acting as the organ of the Ruskin Reading Guild and kindred societies, the aim of the magazine is to look at literature, art, and social philosophy for the sake of the humanity that these influence and illustrate. The July number will contain "Ruskiniana" (Letters on Railways, &c.); The Hon. Roden Noel's "House of Ravensburg," a Study by Miss E. H. Hickey; a poem, entitled "A Sunset," by D. J. A. Langford; "Conventionality," by Margaret Hunter; "Pippa and Pompilia: Art and Simplicity of Life;" "Pictures of 1890," by Mr. Kington Parkes.

THE first number of the Annals of the American Academy of Social and Political Science—a new quarterly review of politics and economics—will shortly appear in Philadelphia. It will contain, among other articles, one on "Politics in Canada and the United States," by Dr. Bourinot; another on "Decay of Local Government in America," by Prof. Patten; and a third on "Cheaper Railroad Fares," by Mr. J. Wetherell.

THE Antiquary for July will contain articles on "The Recent Discovery at Grantham," by Precentor Venables; "The New Museum for Rome," by the Rev. Dr. J. Hirst; "The Canvas Coat of Sir Hugh Willoughby," by the Hon. Harold Dillon; and "The Coronation of James I.," by Mr. W. Branshley Rye.

A NEW adventure story, entitled "The Merchant Prince," by Mr. John Berwick Harwood, will be commenced in the July number of Cassell's Magazine.

THE Gentleman's Magazine for July will contain a second article by Mr. Alexander Gordon illustrative of peasant life and character in a northern parish, entitled "In a Scotch Smiddy."

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN Convocation at Durham on Tuesday last, the following degrees were conferred: D.D. by diploma on Bishop Westcott; honorary D.D. on Bishop Smythies and Prof. Hort, of Cambridge; and honorary D.C.L. on Dr. Jeune, chancellor of the diocese. The university of Oxford also conferred the honorary degree of D.D. upon Bishop Smythies on Thursday.

THE programme has just been issued of the third summer meeting of University Extension students, to be held at Oxford during the month of August. Prof. Max Müller will deliver the inaugural address on Friday, August 1. Among the other arrangements we may mention the following: three lectures on "The History of the English Language," by Dr. J. A. H. Murray, illustrated by visits to the scriptorium; three lectures on "The History of Oxford," by Mr. Falconer Madan; three lectures on "Ancient British Antiquities," by Mr. Arthur J. Evans; "Oliver Cromwell," by Mr. S. R. Gardiner; "Virgil," by Mr. Arthur Sidgwick; "Sophocles and Shakspeare," by Mr. J. Churton Collins; a special course on "The Poems of Robert Browning"; "The Principles and Practice of Etching," by Mr. F. Seymour Haden; "The Influence of Courtship on Colour," by Mr. E. B. Poulton; "Problems of Evolution, Organic and Social," by Prof. Patrick Geddes; six lectures on "Geology," by Prof. A. H. Green, illustrated by excursions in the neighbourhood of Oxford; "Three Chapters of Economic History—Trades Unions, Co-operation, Socialism," by Mr. L. L. Price. During the last three weeks of the meeting, the lectures will deal with their subjects in greater detail, and more time will be devoted to quiet study.

THE Rolleston Memorial prize—for original research in animal and vegetable morphology, physiology, and pathology, or in anthropology, open to graduates of either Oxford or Cambridge—has been awarded to Mr. J. R. Green, of Trinity College, Cambridge, who submitted a series of dissertations on "The Chemical Process of Germination"; proxime accessit, Mr. H. Balfour, of Trinity College, Oxford, the subject of whose dissertation was "The Evolution of Decorative Art." Though the prize was founded in 1883, and was intended to be biennial, this is, we believe, the first time that it has been awarded.

MR. OLIVER ELTON, late scholar of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, has been elected lecturer in English literature at Owens College, Manchester. He will undertake a portion of the duties performed by Dr. Ward before his appointment as principal.

MR. JAMES W. SLATTERY, former university student in classics at Trinity College, Dublin, has been appointed president of Queen's College, Cork, in the room of the late Dr. William Kirby Sullivan.

FORMER pupils of King's College, London, will regret to learn that the connexion with that institution of Mr. Lamb, who for upwards of thirty years has filled the office of librarian, will end with the present term.

AT the meeting of Convocation of the University of London, held on Tuesday, the following resolutions were adopted with reference to the proposed new charter for a teaching university of London:

"That this House, though extremely desirous not to embarrass the Senate in its efforts to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the problem of reconstruction, hereby expresses its strong opinion that it ought to be consulted as to the scheme of reconstruction before that scheme is finally embodied in the draft of the new charter."

"That the purpose of the founders of this university—that its powers and privileges should eventually be the same as those of the universities of Oxford and Cambridge—requires to be kept steadily in view in arranging any scheme of reform or reconstruction; and that, in conformity with this purpose, there should be an avoidance of any provisions which may place great or predominant power in the hands of persons who are not graduates of this university."

THE Rev. William Dunn Macray has celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his connexion with the Bodleian Library by the issue of a second edition of his admirable Annals of the Bodleian Library (Oxford Press), of which the first edition appeared in 1868. Many of Bodley's librarians have been long-lived, and none of them can have failed to be touched by the genius of the place; but not one of those who have held a higher position has laboured more continuously for the honour of the library, or associated his name more closely with it for the benefit of future generations. Mr. Macray first entered the Bodleian as a supernumerary in July 1840, when he was only fourteen years of age; and he was appointed assistant in December 1845. His labours in cataloguing and editing MSS. are known to historical students. But these Annals of the Bodleian form one of those familiar volumes which all lovers of literature keep on a handy shelf, as being redolent of bookish associations. The present edition is not only carried down from 1868 to 1881—the Report of the librarian has covered the subsequent period—but is augmented, out of the abundance of the author's traditional lore, to more than one-third of its original bulk. Instead of a facsimile of the Shakspeare autograph (to the authenticity of which Mr. Macray still adheres), it is illustrated with portraits of Thomas Bodley and Dr. Richard Rawlinson, and with a view of the old reading-room.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE CHOICE OF A MAN.

"I REGRET little, I would change still less.
Since there my past life lies, why alter it?"

"And I have laboured somewhat in my time
And not been paid profusely."

Andrea Del Sarto.—R. BROWNING.

"I mind how love repaired all ill,
Cured wrong, soothed grief, made earth amends."
Christmas Eve and Easter Day.—

R. BROWNING.

You had your choice, and you took your stand—
Wealth and fame might be won; in your hand
The world would have laid its richest prize,
But you turned from the world. Do you now despise

What it could have given? You are not great,
But poor and unknown; it is now too late.

Ah! but I know what you might have done—
Have stained your soul ere the stake was won,
Have lied, and cheated, and felt no shame,
In the eager race for riches and fame.
Though none may know it save she and I,
You let the world and its pomp go by.

I hold, my friend, you are greater now,
Unknown, unnoticed, than if your brow
Were bound with laurel and bay, for you
Have fought the fight, and tried, and true,
You smile as you weigh the gain and the cost,
Her love you have kept, and the world that you lost.

F. P.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

A GOOD deal of space in the June Livre moderne is naturally occupied by the index necessitated by the completion of the first half-yearly volume—an index truly "modern" in its exact fulness. But, besides this, and the usual reviews of new books, &c., room is made for a notice, with extracts, of certain letters between Alfred Delvau, a somewhat Bohemian but laborious and really literary man of letters, and Joséphin Soulayr, the Lyonnese sonneteer, for whose elegant work Gautier and others have found such pretty descriptions. We wish M. Uzanne good luck for his new venture, which may be said now to have turned the corner.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CLARATIE, Jules. La cigarette. Paris: Dentu. 3 fr. 50 c.
DREIER, W. The Anglo-Saxon Poets on the Judgment Day. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M.
HAUSMANN, Mémoires du Baron. T. 2. Préface de la Seine. Paris: Victor Havard. 7 fr. 50 c.
LIARD, L. Universités et facultés. Paris: Colin. 3 fr. 50 c.
LITZMANN, B. Friedrich Ludwig Schröder. Ein Beitrag zur deutschen Literatur- u. Theatergeschichte. 1. Th. Hamburg: Voos. 8 M.
ROUZAUD, H. Les Fêtes du 6^e centenaire de l'université Montpellier, 1829. Paris: Ouleit. 12 fr.
SEBACH, H. Baudekmüller d. alten Rom, nach photograph. Orig.-Aufnahmen hrg. Berlin: Wasmuth. 10 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- CORPUS Iuris ALESSANDRINI. Ed. J. Bachmann. Pars I. Ius conubii. Berlin: Schneider. 16 M.
DU BOIS DE LA VILLEFARE, A. Les procès de Jeanne la Pucelle. Manuscrit inédit légué par Benoît XIV. à la Bibliothèque de l'Université de Bologne. Saint-Benoît: Prud'homme. 8 fr. 50 c.
HEIDENHAIN, A. Die Unionspolitik Landgraf Philipps v. Hessen 1557—1563. Halle: Niemeyer. 16 M.
HEBEFELDER, F. Gewalt u. Recht. München: Ackermann. 8 M. 60 Pf.
KROTZER, F. Die Beziehungen der Hanse zu England im letzten Drittel d. 14. Jahrh. Gießen: Ricker. 2 M.
KÜHLER, G. Die Entwicklung d. Kriegswesens u. der Kriegführung in der Ritterszeit von Mitte d. 11. Jahrh. bis zu den Hussitenkriegen. Register nebst Berichtigungen. Breslau: Koebner. 5 M.
KOPPECK, J. Die attischen Trieren. Leipzig: Veit. 5 M. 60 Pf.
KUBOPATSKY. Kritische Rückblicke auf den russisch-türkischen Krieg 1877—78. 4. Bd. Berlin: Mittler. 4 M. 50 Pf.
PÉREY, L. Un petit-neveu de Mazarin: L. J. B. Mancini-Mazarini, Duc de Nivernais. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 2 fr. 50 c.
WALCKEN, K. Politik der konstitutionellen Staaten Kaiserliche: Macklot. 8 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- FATTO, V. Faune des vertébrés. Vol. 5. Histoire naturelle des poissons. 1^{re} partie. Basel: Georg. 16 M.
GAUDRY, A. Les enchainements du monde animal dans les temps géologiques: fossiles secondaires. Paris: Savvy. 15 fr.
GROHM, E. Herbert Spencer's Lehre v. dem Unerkennbaren. Leipzig: Veit. 8 M. 20 Pf.
GÜNTHER, S. Handbuch der mathematischen Geographie. Stuttgart: Engelhorn. 16 M.
NATHORST, A. G. Beiträge zur mesozoischen Flora Japan's. Leipzig: Freytag. 5 M. 40 Pf.
OPPENHEIM, P. Die Land- u. Süßwasserschnecken der Vindobener Beckenbildungen. Leipzig: Freytag. 4 M.
ETZENBERGER, E. Lichenæ africana. Fasc. I. St. Gallen: Kopp. 8 M.
TURBETINI, Th. Utilisation des forces motrices du Rhône et régularisation du lac Léman. Basel: Georg. 24 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- BREWER, H. C. Die Vocale der Mundart v. Meisen. Jena: Pöhl. 2 M.
FISCH, S. P. de verborum significatu quæ supersunt cum Pauli epitome. Ed. A. E. Thewissen de Ponor. Pars I. Textum continens. Berlin: Calvary. 7 M. 50 Pf.

- GREHMANN, B. Demosthenis Thracis μεταβολαὶ Ὀδυσσεύς. Königsberg: Koch. 1 M.
MARGARETHAN-LEONDE. e altombardische. Kritischer Text, hrg. v. B. Wiese. Halle: Niemeyer. 4 M. 50 Pf.
SPRENGEL, J. G. De ratione quæ in historia plantarum inter Plinium et Theophrastum intercedit. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
STENGEL, E. Verzeichnis französischer Grammatiken vom Ende d. 14. bis zum Ausgange d. 18. Jahrh. Oppeln: Franck. 4 M. 60 Pf.
STRASSMAYER, J. N. Babylonische Texte. 8. Hft. Leipzig: Pfeiffer. 12 M.
ZANDER, C. M. De lege versificationis latinæ summa et antiquissima. Lund: Möllers. 60 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SIXTH CENTENARY OF DANTE'S BEATRICE AT FLORENCE.

16 Montagu-street, Portman-square:
June 24, 1890.

I should be glad to bring to the notice of those who may have followed with interest the communications you have allowed me to make from time to time concerning the Sixth Centenary of Beatrice, and especially of those eminent writers who have kindly acceded to my invitation to write in her honour on the occasion, that the Queen also has been pleased to testify her sympathy by contributing to the collection a copy of her works with her autograph on the first page.

[MISS] R. H. BUSK.

"COCKNEY."

Oxford: June 24, 1890.

The facts adduced in my letter of last week as to the existing senses of "cocks' eggs," in England and Germany, may have seemed, on the face of them, somewhat to disturb the parallelism between the senses of "cockney" and those of French coco, to which I referred in my first letter, inasmuch as it was not alleged that coco had actually ever meant "cocks' egg," but only that it is "terme enfantin pour un œuf." But further investigation shows that the parallelism does not fail. In Italian, Florio (1599) has "cocco . . . also cocking, sport, dandling, delight, or glee"; and (ed. 1611) has "cocco . . . also cocking or dandling sport; also, a cocks' egg." Baret (1624) has "cocco, an egg (a word of children); cocco, a darling." The new Vocabolario Della Crusca calls it "voce fanciullesca che significa uovo," i.e. a childish word signifying egg, and gives examples going back to 1550.

It is evident that this Italian cocco is the same as French coco; and we find that while modern dictionaries explain it (as Littré does coco) as "a child's name for an egg" and "a darling," it actually meant in the seventeenth century "cocks' egg." The explanation, "cocking or dandling," given by Florio, is also of interest, because it is precisely that of French coqueliner, derivative of coco, "to cocker, dandle, make a cockney of." "Cocker" and its sixteenth-century synonym "cockle" are, in form, frequentatives or derivatives of "cock," used in sixteenth century in the sense of "make a pullus of, pet, pamper, bring up delicately." Tussler has several instances: e.g. "Some cockneies with cooking are made verie fooles, fit neither for prentice, for plough, nor for schooles"; and elsewhere, "Where cocking dads make sawsie lads, In youth to rage, to beg in age."

We may, I think, infer that in English cocken-ay = "cocks' egg," was not merely a name for the small eggs sometimes laid by hens, but also a childish and hence humorous name for a fowl's egg, generally, according to the way in which nursery diminutives like Dicky, Dicky-bird, are apt to pass into somewhat humorous general use.

As to "cocks' egg" in the primary sense, Bodley's Librarian has pointed out to me that such a curiosity was once possessed by the University of Oxford. In a MS. catalogue by Thos. Hearne, of "Curiosities in the Anatomy School at Oxford, anno. 1721," now in the Bodleian Library, we find, among similar objects, No. 102, cock's egg; No. 103, egg found in another egg.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

"SCADINAVIA."

London: June 23, 1890.

It is well known that Scadinavia (agreeing with the O.E. Seoden-ig) is the true form of the name which appears in the current text of Pliny as Scandinavia. The etymology of this name, or rather of its first element, has been sought by Müllenhoff in Lappish; but the evidence on which he relied was regarded by Dr. Wilhelm Thomsen as insecure. I would suggest that the name may be explained plausibly from Germanic sources. Skadino-* is the exact phonological equivalent of σκῆνός (of. shade), so that skadina a(h)wja may possibly have meant "the dark island." The alternative form Skadnja*—apparently implied in the Scandia, Scandza, of Ptolemy and Jordanis, and in the O.N. Skáni—may be a parallel derivative from the same root. There seems to be some reason for thinking that Scadinavia was originally the name of an imaginary island in the extreme north, the mythical primitive seat of the Germanic race. The notion that the regions of the far north were wrapped in perpetual darkness prevailed widely in antiquity, and is easily accounted for. Reports of the long nights of northern lands would naturally give rise to the inference that in countries still more remote from the sun the night would be perpetual. The hypothesis of an original mythical reference in the name is not, however, absolutely necessary to justify the derivation which I have proposed; the Scadinavia of historical geography might very naturally have been called "the ale of darkness" by those who dwelt farther south.

HENRY BRADLEY.

"RAGMAN."

Wimbledon: June 23, 1890.

I find that I must withdraw the suggestion made by me in THE ACADEMY of January 18 that the word "ragman" might mean a deed poll as distinguished from an indenture.

I had in my hands at the Record Office a few days ago a bundle of Richard II.'s "Blank Charters," or "Ragmans," and found that, in fact, the obligations in question were made in the shape of indentures, being all cut at the top with an indented see-saw edge.

I would therefore fall back on Mr. Bradley's alternative suggestion that the word simply meant a formal document, perhaps a sealed obligation or grant.

J. H. RAMSAY.

"SURVIVALS" IN NEGRO FUNERAL CEREMONIES.

Washington and Lee University, Lexington,
Virginia: June 4, 1890.

In the ACADEMY for December 28, 1889, p. 422, there is an extract from the Cleveland Leader regarding some negro funeral ceremonies in the United States. It is there said that the custom of placing statuettes, vases, cups, saucers, broken crockery, children's toys and playthings, and other articles upon newly-made graves was almost universal among the coloured people of the South, and, by implication, that the placing of partially emptied medicine bottles upon graves was equally common.

Since reading that letter, repeated inquiry with regard to the latter custom, and that of placing children's toys and playthings over the dead, has resulted only in finding that, so far as the persons questioned (both white and coloured) knew, no such customs had ever been heard of or seen in these parts, the Valley of Virginia. While there are statuettes, broken crockery-ware and glass and vases upon the graves in the coloured burial ground of this town—Lexington—there are no medicine bottles or playthings. The more intelligent coloured people showed as much surprise about such customs as the white. But during a recent visit to Petersburg, Virginia, a town twenty-two miles south of Richmond, in passing through the coloured burial ground there was noticed upon the children's graves many of the articles mentioned in the Cleveland Leader—medicine bottles, three or four sometimes upon a grave, partially filled with the medicine last taken by the deceased, dolls and portions of dolls, children's china tea sets, a psalter, pottery ornaments of various kinds, more or less damaged, vases and glass vessels, the latter frequently containing flowers. Nothing could be satisfactorily learned as the reason for putting those articles upon the graves beyond that it was a custom which had been long followed. One old coloured woman said, after much coaxing and pressing for a reason, that the medicine, she had been told, was placed upon the graves that the dead might see what they had taken, at the same time expressing her dislike to and non-conformity with the custom, saying she had buried her "old man" and had put nothing of the kind on his grave. Another woman seemed to think it was done to mark the position of the grave. A coloured man present pooh-poohed all of it, and said it was nothing but "foolishness."

In connexion with these customs there is another which seems to be widely prevalent among the coloured people—that of leaving the pick and shovel which have been used alongside the grave until again needed. Why this is done no one appears to know.

W. G. BROWN.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, June 30, 8.30 p.m. Geographical: "Explorations in Offida Trachets, Asia Minor," by Mr. J. Theodore Bent.

WEDNESDAY, July 3, 8 p.m. Elizabethan: "James Harrington's Commonwealth of Oceana," by Mr. W. H. Cowham.

THURSDAY, July 3, 4 p.m. Archaeological Institute: "Roman Antiquities of Augsburg and Batisbon," by Prof. B. Lewis; "The Keys of St. Peter at Liège and Maestricht," by Mr. E. W. Beck.

FRIDAY, July 4, 8 p.m. Geologists' Association: "Notes on the Geology of the Long Excursion to the Mendip Hills," by the Rev. H. H. Winwood.

SCIENCE.

Prehistoric Antiquities of the Aryan Peoples. By Dr. O. Schrader. Translated by F. B. Jevons from the Second Edition of the German. (Charles Griffin & Co.)

DR. SCHRADER'S Sprachvergleichung und Urgeschichte is so well known to students of comparative philology and of primitive history that it is needless to dwell on the general character of the work. Its astonishing range of learning is accompanied and guided by a hardly less astonishing sobriety and scientific self-restraint. In a field where the temptation to press unduly into the service of a reconstruction evidence just a little, or often more than a little, doubtful has proved too much for almost all his predecessors, Dr. Schrader has steadily applied the canons of a strict phonetic equivalence. His own etymologies, always ingenious, are sometimes, by the nature of the case, uncertain, but I do not think that they are ever impossible. If he often abstains from drawing a positive conclusion, when he does make a statement, it can rarely be refuted. His work deserves richly the rank, which has been so generally accorded to it, of a first-rate authority.

This second edition is described by the author himself as "an almost entirely new work." But this language is not to be taken too literally, and is correct at most only of the fourth part. This part, which deals with "The Primeval Period," has been expanded, so that instead of being little more than a quarter of the whole work (pp. 333-454) it is now nearly one-half (pp. 240-443 E. T.). Part i., "The History of Linguistic Palaeontology," has been compressed, rather than expanded, for the most part by excising the illustrations and criticisms of the errors of earlier scholars. Half-a-dozen pages, dealing with the most recent researches of Brugmann, Windisch, Pöschke, and Penka, do not in bulk make up for the omission of much that may have seemed of merely historic interest. Part ii. has also lost a chapter, though a brief one, on the difficulty of reconstructing the primitive language; but it has received a few important additions. I may notice that Dr. Schrader has not always been skilful in his numerous transpositions. On p. 109 we read, "If we pause for a moment on the last-named, the Celtic languages," and are bewildered to know what "last-named" means here, until we notice that in the earlier edition a passage preceded this which made it clear, whereas now it is replaced by a quite different discussion. Part iii., one of the most thorough sections of the earlier edition, dealing with the first appearance of metals, has been brought up to date, without any important expansion. Dr. Schrader has failed to notice that on p. 234 he describes the cateia as a club, while on p. 235 it reappears as a spear. But, in Part iv., the recasting has been very extensive. The introductory chapter is rewritten and much expanded, the most important addition being the following:

"In the first edition of this book we still hesitated to give a decided answer to the question as to the original home of the Indo-Europeans. Now, after nearly twelve years' work on matters relating to the primeval history of our race, we will venture on an attempt to solve this important problem."

Of the fourteen chapters in this Part seven are quite new: on "The Animal Kingdom," "The Plant World," "Computation of Time," "Clothing," "Dwellings," "Traffic and Trade," and "The Culture of the Indo-Europeans," although the material was to some small extent to be found under other heads. The chapter on language has been omitted, doubtless from the feeling that it was too compressed to be of much value; and that on religion has been completely rewritten. It now contains a short sketch of the history of comparative mythology, and a careful revision of the most frequently asserted etymological equations touching the belief in the gods. The conclusion to which Dr. Schrader comes is that there were in the primitive Indo-European period predicates expressing the divine, and that these were applied to the sky, the sun, the fire, the dawn, the storm, and the thunder; but that at present there is no evidence that the worship of ancestors was usual. The closing chapter accumulates the evidence that the earliest home of the Indo-Europeans is to be sought in the South Russian steppes. Without entering on further details, it is enough to say that the second edition practically supersedes the first; and Mr. Jevons was fortunate in being able to use the advance-sheets of the revised work, so as to be able to publish it at the first in its greatly improved form.

As to the translation, it is what was to be expected from a scholar of Mr. Jevons's reputation. On the whole, it is easy and fluent; and so far as I have compared it closely with the original—for about one-fourth of the book—it is usually very accurate. No critic, least of all one who has had experience of the possibilities of error in so heavy a piece of work, will be hard upon a few oversights; but it may be worth while pointing some of them out, with a view to their removal. Mr. Jevons fluctuates curiously between "Indo-European" and "Indo-German" as a translation for Indo-germanisch. There is something to be said for either version, but nothing for the employment of both promiscuously. There are half a dozen instances where (by a misprint or a slip) there is a plural put for a singular (e.g., stories, p. 6, ravens, p. 383, &c.) On p. 2, "east to west" is written for "west to east"; on p. 22, l. 11 up, "did" should be "does"; on p. 27, "this includes" should be "followed by"; on p. 34, noch is rendered "not," to the ruin of the sense; on p. 37, read "much more interest"; on p. 46, "strength and power" should be "strength and wealth"; on p. 63, "modern times" should be "recent years." On p. 77, the Romans are spoken of as "driven from the stage of history" by the Germans, which is nonsense, not due to Schrader. Dr. Benfey is not now living, as is implied in a loose translation on p. 87. No single equation can be "the corner-stone" on which to build a history—it may be, as Dr. Schrader calls it (p. 138), a stone in the building. Mr. Gladstone has said that "among" the axes and hatchets of the Greeks may have been some of stone, but not "by" them (p. 228). "The Transylvanian of Saxony" should surely be "the Saxon of Transylvania" (p. 119). There is a rather funny use of the word "tremendous," which is made to do duty for a considerable variety of German words. But the most comical touch is on p. 101, where we have a reference to Ecker's suspicion of the "plicated, cockroach race of Indo-Europeans." The utter bewilderment which these "cockroaches" cause is somewhat relieved when one finds that Ecker is talking of a "kakerlakengeschlecht"; for "kakerlaken" is nothing more harmful than an albino! The translator might, perhaps, have taken on himself some of the functions of an editor, at least so far as to have given references to English books in their original edition, and to German books—such, for instance, as Kiepert's Ancient Geography—in the trustworthy English versions. It would also have been convenient to have inserted in the margin the pages of the original. But, on the whole, little but thanks is due to him for the competence and the promptitude with which he has put this important book within the reach of the English reader.

A. S. WILKINS.

PHILOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Northern 'Ajlân. By G. Schumacher. (Palestine Exploration Fund.) Small as it is, this volume is one of the most valuable issued by the Palestine Exploration Fund. Mr. Schumacher is a careful explorer and a good surveyor, whose thorough knowledge of Arabic and acquaintance with the manners of the natives of Palestine give him exceptional advantages for acquiring information. His memoir contains an exhaustive account of the ancient Decapolis of Perea as well as of the numerous Greek and Roman remains that still exist in it. Plans and drawings are given of the important ruins of Gadara, Capitolias, and Arbela, none of which had previously been surveyed; and the book is provided with an excellent map. No one who is interested in Palestine can afford to be without it. We must not omit to say that the volume has been edited for the press by Mr. Guy le Strange, who has done his work well. The list of Arabic local names at the end, with their significations in the Arabic of the fellahin, will be welcomed by both the geographer and the philologist.

The Pilgrim's Handbook to Jerusalem. By L. de Hamme. (Burns & Oates.) This is intended for Catholic pilgrims who visit Jerusalem believing in the authenticity of the various holy places that are shown there. As such it is exempt from criticism. It seems to contain all the information, both religious and practical, which a "pilgrim" would desire.

The Asaph Psalms in their connexion with the Early Religion of Babylonia. The Hulsean Lectures for 1889. By E. G. King. (Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co.) Dr. King is a good Hebrew scholar, and his suggestions are always ingenious and free from conventionality. His lectures will be found interesting and instructive even by those who would be most inclined to dispute his conclusions. He endeavours to show that the "Asaph Psalms" are connected with the seventh month of the Jewish year and with the name of Elohim; that the three "covenant-names," El, Elohim, and Jehovah, are severally associated with the three seasons; and that the word Asaph was not the name of an individual, but of an order of priests whose office was connected with the Asaph or Feast of "Ingathering" in the seventh month. It is thus identical with the Babylonian asip or "prophet," with which the name of Joseph has been compared. Among other suggestive remarks in the lectures is one on the relation between the work of the first three days in the first chapter of Genesis and that of the last three days, the creation of the heavenly bodies corresponding to the creation of light, the creation of the birds to that of the firmament, and the creation of animals to that of the earth. This threefold division of time Dr. King connects with the three seasons and the great festivals which marked them.

Schabbâth. Der Mischnatraktat "Schabbâth." Herausgeg. und erklärt. von Hermann L. Strack. (Leipzig: Hinrichs.) The increased attention to Hebrew in England leads one to hope that Prof. Strack's useful series of Mishna treatises will find friends in our colleges. Dr. Taylor's edition of the "Sayings of the Jewish Fathers" is, in most respects, an ideal one; but smaller and cheaper editions of Mishna books are a necessity, if the study is to be carried beyond the Pirgê Abôth. Prof. Strack's former publications have been vocalised; the Schabbâth is his first unpunctuated edition. The type is a luxury to the eyes; the paragraphs are numbered in our Western way; and the footnotes often tell the reader how two of the chief MSS. vocalise the text. There is also a summary of the contents and a vocabulary. Several MSS. have been compared, some of them completely, for the correction of the text; among these, of course, is that edited by Mr. Lowe, of Cambridge, in 1883.

Die Agada der Tannaiten. Von Wilhelm Bacher. Band II. (Strassburg: Karl Trübner.) We have already called attention to the first volume of this most industrious compilation, full of first-hand notices respecting the teachers of the later Jewish Church, down to the completion of the Mishna. The present volume, which begins with R. Meir, the most distinguished of the disciples of Akiba, concludes the work. The order is mostly etymological, though chapter xi. brings together a number of sayings and comments proceeding not merely from a single teacher but from his school (that of Ishmael), and chapter xix. tells all that is known about a number of Tannaïtes of somewhat uncertain age. Dr. Bacher points out that it is a mistake to distinguish the doctors of Palestine as early as M. Renan does (Les Evangiles, p. 66) into Halakists and Agadists. It is not till the third century A.D. that we find popular exegetes or Agadists who have given little or no evidence of their study of the legal tradition. We cannot say that in the year 74 "the Halakists treated the Agadists (and for them the Christians were Agadists) as frivolous people, strangers to the one serious study—that of the Tora." The arbitrary and yet sometimes most ingenious Agadistic exegesis was reconcilable with the passionate study of the precepts of the Law. The Agadists of this volume are mostly well known as Halakists.

CURRENT SCIENTIFIC LITERATURE.

Science in Plain Language—"Evolution," "Antiquity of Man," "Bacteria," &c. By W. Durham. (Edinburgh: A. & C. Black.) These articles, which have been reprinted from the Scotman newspaper, form a meritorious attempt to state in plain language without any controversial bias the leading subjects of modern philosophical investigation. Thus they are eminently fitted for mechanics' institutes, village libraries, and the like. Being suggestive, they point out problems in natural history calculated to interest thoughtful students and provoke them to consult further authorities. Mr. Durham writes excellently on natural selection, protoplasm, colour in nature, and the movements and sleep of plants, stating what is known already on these and kindred points, but avoiding anything that might lead to heartburnings and disputation. His little book is nothing if not dispassionate. In his chapter on ancient lake dwellings, the author might have instanced the account of the lake-dwellers on the piles driven into Lake Prasias, as related by Herodotus, in support of the view that the practice of living in such aquatic communities survived to historic times. It is a pleasure to commend this carefully written little book.

Glimpses into Nature's Secrets. By E. A. Martin. (Elliot Stock.) Another of the endless series of little books on nature which have been so common of late years. The author takes his readers to the seaside, and then to the downs. The first gives an opportunity to describe a good many sea creatures more or less familiar to most people; the latter reveals Mr. Martin as a geologist. Two chapters are of considerable interest—on the old Roman wall of London, and on the geological position of London. We quite agree with him that nowhere can the geology of London be better studied than in the well-exposed beds at Charlton. The Thanet sands and Woolwich series are there especially prominent. Anyone desirous of knowing something of the geology of London and its environs might do worse than read this book. It should be added that most of its chapters have already seen the light in divers periodicals.

Studies in Evolution and Biology. By Alice Bodington. (Elliot Stock.) These ten essays reflect in clever language and clear arrangement the most extreme doctrines of evolution. From the mammalia and flora of a long distant past the authoress passes lightly to the leucocytes and bacilli of the latest microscopic researches. It is as well not to ask demonstrative proof in her narrative (from Semper) of the onchidia and their ninety-eight dorsal eyes ready to shoot "globules of secretion" at enemies, or of the supposed luminous organs on the exterior of many deep sea-fishes. The old accounts of life and man are little to the mind of this advanced lady. Life, it seems "as an entity has no more existence than the phlogiston of the earlier chemists." Again, "in the earlier stages of the cooling of our globe this complex molecule was, perhaps, one of the latest to combine its atoms; when, we are never likely to know, but the how is neither more nor less mysterious than the coming together of any other combination of atoms." As for man, he "inherits rudiments in common with other mammals from hermaphrodite ancestors"; but it is allowed that his brain was remarkable "even in its lemuroid form." He has developed into what we were wont to deem a lord of the creation, and yet he is poorly fashioned for the part he has to play in the world, not "fearfully and wonderfully made" as an earlier authority fancied. "Valves in the veins have not been developed where they are most essentially needed by a creature standing erect, the most vital parts of the body are absolutely unprotected, and the abdominal organs are too heavy for their position, and many painful diseases and displacements are the direct results of this state of things." Of course, "the argument from design is wholly put out of court by the awkwardness of the whole plan." After this terrible indolence it may be hoped for the sake of poor human nature that development will henceforth proceed at a faster rate than of old. At present matters are in a sad coil; "in short, a state of things we might expect from a blind struggle in the ascent from a worm-like organism to a human being; but neither creditable nor credible on the hypothesis of special creation." We have allowed the authoress to speak for herself; but Lucretius held much of her belief a good many centuries ago.

OBITUARY.

SIR WARINGTON SMYTH.

BRITISH mining, in its scientific as distinguished from its commercial aspect, has suffered a loss little less than irreparable by the sudden death of Sir Warington W. Smyth, F.R.S.

Accomplished as a linguist, and singularly gifted as a lecturer, possessing an intimate acquaintance with the mines not only of this country but of the Continent, a man of remarkably genial disposition, and, above all, of unimpeachable integrity, Sir Warington stood between the scientific world and the mining community in a position absolutely unique. On the formation of the Government School of Mines in Jermyn Street in 1851, Mr. Smyth was appointed, on the nomination of Sir Henry De la Beche, as lecturer on mining and mineralogy; and although he resigned the mineralogical lectureship after having held it for thirty years, he remained professor of mining until the day of his death, having thus guided the scientific teaching of the principles of mining in this country for well nigh forty years. Previously to his connexion with the school, he had been attached for several years to the Geological Survey, and had written valuable descriptions of various minin.

ROBERT BROWN, JUN.

tions to be the centre for the revivification of ideas, which in its unnatural actions is accompanied by a difficulty in distinguishing revived impressions from real impressions. The localisation is the same as Dr. Ferrier's centre (12), the excitation of which causes such movements of eye-balls and head as are "essential to the revivification of ideas." (3) Excitation of the third and fourth external convolution in jackals and cats is accompanied by retraction of the ear, a sudden spring or bound forward, opening of the mouth, with vocalisation and other signs of emotional expression such as spitting and lashing the tail as if in rage. Dr. Gall located in the same area the carnivorous instinct, termed "destructiveness" by his followers, and considered by Prof. Bain to be merely another name for the irascible emotion. Though the investigations are by no means finished, Mr. Hollander expressed the hope that an examination of his two communications may induce scientists to reconsider the antiquated system of phrenology, which has hitherto failed to recommend itself to the scientific world.

SHELLEY SOCIETY.—(Wednesday, June 11)

W. M. ROBERTS, Esq., in the chair.—Mr. W. B. Tegetmeier gave a lecture on "Shelley as a Scientific Poet." A knowledge of natural history, remarked the lecturer, is invaluable to artists and poets, for there can be no really successful artistic work without a close and accurate observation of natural phenomena. The term "creation," as applied to poetical writing, is a misnomer; poets do not create, but combine things already created. Shakspeare having been instanced as one of the most faithful observers of open-air life, the lecturer proceeded to point out that Shelley had naturally an observant mind, and had given evidence of his scientific proclivities in his youth at Eton and Oxford, the effect of which studies is seen in the extreme accuracy of his descriptions of nature. The "Sensitive Plant" was quoted as illustrative of the truthfulness with which Shelley could depict the growth and decay of plants and the changes of the seasons; while the contest between the eagle and the serpent in "Laon and Cythna" was pronounced to be a masterpiece of description in a style which is not usually well-handled by artists—the motions of snakes being rarely drawn with fidelity. The rest of the lecture was devoted to a careful and exceedingly interesting analysis of Shelley's well-known lyric, "The Cloud," which Mr. Tegetmeier declared to be one of the most scientific of poems—a mass of meteorological facts expressed in poetical language.—A discussion followed, in which the chairman, Mr. H. Buxton Forman, Dr. Furnival, Mr. H. S. Salt, and others took part.

HELLENIC SOCIETY.—(Annual Meeting, Monday, June 23.)

SIR CHARLES NEWTON, in the chair.—Prof. Jebb was elected president in the place of the late Bishop Lightfoot. Messrs. J. B. Bury, A. E. Haigh, F. Haverfield, H. Babington Smith, and R. Elsey Smith were elected to vacancies on the council. The hon. secretary (Mr. George Macmillan) read the council's report. After reference to the loss of prominent members in the past year, and to the contents of the last volume of the Journal of Hellenic Studies, allusion was made to various schemes for rendering accessible to members photographs of scenes and monuments in Greece and Sicily. The grant of £100 to the British School at Athens had been renewed for one year only, not with any intention of withdrawing further support from the school, but in order that the case might be considered on its merits year by year. The school had had in the past session an abundant supply of students, and had done excellent work. On the financial side the position of the society was so far satisfactory that, after meeting all the ordinary expenses, an effective balance of £150 was shown to the good. Fifty new members had been elected in the course of the year; but, unfortunately, an equal number had been lost by death or resignation. Members were accordingly urged to do their utmost to bring in new candidates, so that the society might grow steadily in numbers and influence, and year by year become better able to carry out the various objects which it had in view. On the motion of the chairman, seconded by Mr. F. W. Percival, the report was unanimously adopted. Mr. Ernest Gardner, the director of the British School at Athens, read a paper on "The Chief Archaeological Discoveries of the Year in Greece." The proceedings were closed with the usual votes of thanks to the auditors and to the chairman. In acknowledging the vote, Sir Charles Newton congratulated the society upon securing for its president so accomplished a scholar as Prof. Jebb, and dwelt particularly upon his power of stating the results of research in clear and graceful language.

FINE ART.

SOME BOOKS ON ROMAN ARCHAEOLOGY.

Römische Herrschaft in West Europa. Von E. Hübner. (Berlin: Hertz; London: Williams & Norgate.) The time is probably come at which a series of monographs on Roman provinces might be usefully and successfully written. The literary evidences, given by historians or satirists or moralists, upon the condition of the countries which the Roman government was called on to administer, have been carefully worked up and are probably exhausted. The inscriptions are not all known to us, nor are those which are known completely utilised. They are arranged and indexed by the labour of learned men, but all their matter is not yet extracted. Nevertheless, so much has been already achieved that it would now be quite possible to depict the inner life and the external history of each province more fully, accurately, and vividly than could ever have been done before. The fifth volume of Mommsen's Römische Geschichte has drawn an outline of the kind of thing we want; but we should like to see something fuller, especially on the social and religious sides. On the other hand, Finlay's History of Greece under the Romans is larger and comes lower down than is needful. Finlay, too, had not control of the curious matter given us by the inscriptions for the life of provincials. Waddington's Fastes of Asia and De Lessert's Fastes de la Numidie are over-dry and disjointed. They do not give us the life of the place, but little more than a list of officials. Of course, some Englishman should set the example by writing an account of Roman Britain. The field is clear. Wright's Celt, Roman, and Saxon is out of date. Mr. Scarth's little book is too slight. The material is in some ways very scanty; but such dry work as the explorations of Mr. Gomme and Mr. Haverfield in the old columns of the Gentleman's Magazine tends to increase it, while from time to time new finds are made, chiefly in the North of England. Thus the Mars Thingus to whom Dr. Hübner devotes one of his essays has been brought forward by two altars, dedicated to him, found at Housesteads in 1883; and the Romano-British pantheon was enlarged in 1876 by the newly-discovered deity Coventina. Dr. Hübner's collection of essays, chiefly reprinted from the Deutsche Rundschau and Hermes, comes very near to realising our wish for a general view of Roman provinces. It deals with Britain, Germany, and Spain, which countries it handles with remarkable sureness of touch and fulness of knowledge; and readers of the German periodicals will be glad to find brought together the essays which they admired when published separately.

Inscriptions Antiques de la Côte-d'Or. Par Paul le Jay. (Paris: Bouillon.) The "Bibliothèque de l'École pratique des hautes Etudes" is a collection in which several valuable works have been published; for instance, Havet's treatise on the Saturnian metre, Graux's account of the Greek manuscripts in the Escurial, and Cler-mont-Ganneau's "Studies in Oriental Archaeology." The book before us, which forms the eightieth volume of the series, can hardly be rated as high as those just named, but it is a useful and valuable publication. It contains all the Roman inscriptions known to have been discovered in the department of the Côte d'Or, the district, that is, of Dijon, Beaune, and Châtillon. The author has searched all the literature of the subject, and has personally examined afresh a good many of the inscriptions. Such a book must needs be useful. The epigraphy of Gallia Narbonensis has recently been dealt with in the twelfth volume of the Corpus; but the volumes that are to deal with Gallia Comata seem still far off in the future, and the texts are meanwhile only to be found in scattered periodicals and local publications. How far the author has exhausted the latter we cannot say, but he seems to have paid attention to the minutest fragments. The editing is apparently well done. The explanations are occasionally a trifle verbose; occasionally one thinks that more might have been made out in the way of reading or interpretation. One would like to know if Nos. 5 and 139 are really genuine; one would be inclined in No. 59 to read the last line Sacrovir v(otum) s(olvit), and so forth. But this notice is not the place for such criticisms, and they would give a very unfair idea of the book. There is a general absence of irrational guesses, and the whole treatment seems sober and careful. The texts themselves are, it is to be feared, not very valuable. Many are brief sepulchral records, and one is rather reminded of the criticism passed by Hirschfeld on the Narbonense inscriptions, "numero magis quam rerum copia insignes." As compared with these latter, they naturally show a far less intense Roman civilisation, though the contrast is perhaps heightened by the fact that there are in the Côte d'Or few sites of considerable towns. However, English readers will perhaps be inclined to draw a parallel rather between the Côte d'Or and Christian Britain as revealed to us by (say) the Welsh inscriptions which have been edited by Hübner and Westwood. The laconic gravestones monimeth(m) Sacuria Mutaci, Antan(us) Cant(s) and the rest, the Celtic names, the "pyramidal stelae" all strike a Latin scholar as unfamiliar; but they have their parallels in Wales. The only Roman inscriptions which are really common in the Côte d'Or are oculists' stamps, and how little those prove is shown by the fact that one turned up in 1842 in Tipperary. English readers will also be interested by the account of the walls of Dijon. From these walls, which are of Roman date, a number of inscriptions have been extracted, mostly though not entirely of sepulchral character. We have thus a parallel to the walls of Chester and Chichester, and another proof, if proof be needed, that the Romans used their inscribed stones for building purposes. The account of the Dijon walls is very full and deserves the attention of those who are interested in the still vexed question as to the date of the north wall at Chester. In conclusion, we would express a hope that some English writer will imitate M. le Jay. The inscriptions of York or Chester would furnish a suitable subject; and, if the work were well done, the interest of scholars and of our universities might at last be attracted. Oxford and Cambridge have, as yet, done sadly little for Romano-British remains.

L'Année Epigraphique, 1889. Par R. Cagnat. (Paris: Leroux.) This is a continuation for the year 1889 of Prof. Cagnat's admirable epigraphic summaries, reprinted—with index added—from his quarterly notices in the Revue Archéologique. It contains altogether 188 selected inscriptions, with brief notices of epigraphic publications. It is notable that about a third of the inscriptions quoted come from the Notizie degli Scavi, and another third are due to various French publications; and that, though M. Cagnat seems to have overlooked very few periodicals which contain epigraphical notices, he is, perhaps, a trifle deficient in dealing with English publications. The Classical Review and the Journal of Philology are cited duly, but neither in the summary before us nor in that for 1888 is there mention of any discoveries made in England. It is true that during the last year or two we have had few important finds, except at Chester; and the Chester inscriptions have been so badly edited that Mr. Haverfield may fairly claim to consider his recent article in the Ephemera as giving the first even approximately accurate publication of them. In all other cases, certainly, M. Cagnat seems to have exercised a wise discretion. One may, perhaps, just suggest for his consideration the question whether it would be worth while to consult the Croatian Viestnik, and one or two Hungarian journals. Their contents—so far as they are epigraphically important—usually re-appear in the Archäologisch-Epigraphische Mittheilungen, but it is possible that there may be sometimes an aftermath. And perhaps an index of journals would be useful. Two of the inscriptions quoted may have an interest for English readers. One (No. 44) is a circular brick from Boulogne, mentioning apparently the Classis Britannica, memorials of which have also been found at Lymne. Another, from Pfünz in Germany, is erected to Iuppiter optimus maximus dulcicus, ubi ferum (sic) [exoritur]. Here there seems to be no doubt as to the mention of iron.

Das römische Lager in Bonn. (Bonn.) This is a Festschrift published by the Rhenish Society of Antiquaries (if one may so English their title), in which two Rhenish antiquaries, General von Veith and Prof. Klein, deal with recent excavations and discoveries at Bonn. Every one, of course, knows that there was an important Roman station at Bonn, and indeed a bridge over the Rhine. The question has arisen whether the actual foundations of the station have been discovered. General von Veith maintains that they have been found, and sets forth his view in the present publication. It is a little difficult for a foreigner to judge of a question which is complicated by minute details of local topography; but we must confess to an impression that General von Veith "has a theory" and is inclined to over-rate the evidence for it, or, at any rate, for some parts of it. The movable objects found—inscriptions, pottery, and the like—are fully and adequately described by Prof. Klein. One of the most interesting objects is the (supposed) military decoration, figured on p. 27, which, if it really be what the Bonn antiquaries think, is the first thing of the kind discovered. But it may quite easily be an ornament of some other kind, though it appears to have been meant for personal use, and not for a horse-trapping or house-decoration.

Archäologisch - epigraphische Mittheilungen, XXI. 1. (Wien: Tempky.) The last number of this periodical contains a quantity of articles devoted almost entirely to the classical archaeology of Eastern Europe. The longest is one by two Austrian scholars, detailing the results of a journey in the "valleys" of the Save and Drave, including Sirmium and Belgrade. A good many unpublished inscriptions are given; and, so far as the present writer can judge from hurried copies which he made two years ago at Belgrade, the Austrian scholars have copied correctly. A suggestion may be made about one of these inscriptions, a very late one—to judge by the lettering—found near Dubravica. In this a Municipium Aur. is mentioned, supposed by the editors to be a municipium Aurelium Augustum Margum. It is possible, as was suggested in the Journal of Philology (xvii., 282), that the municipium Aurelium is meant, which Mr. A. J. Evans has with great probability placed in the district of the Sponistæ. At the end of l. 5, in this same inscription, the present writer read ETL and not ETI, and this suits the context better. Another interesting article in this number deals with the Roman statuary in the museum at Pest, a museum which attracts all the best antiquities discovered in Hungary, and is therefore well stocked with treasures, and, be it added, well worth a visit.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

READERS of the articles which Mr. W. H. James Weale has contributed to the ACADEMY on bibliographical and art subjects will be interested to know that he is a candidate for the keepership of the art library at South Kensington, vacant by the death of Mr. Soden Smith.

OWING to Lord Carnarvon's regretted illness, Lord Jersey has been asked to take his place as president of the annual meeting of the British Archaeological Association, which is to be held at Oxford during the week beginning on Monday, July 7.

THE Burlington Fine Arts Club will hold, before the end of the year, a special exhibition of ornamental book-binding.

MORE than one art sale of considerable interest is on the point of coming off at Christie's. Indeed, we shall next week be able to inform our readers of the destination of and of some of the prices fetched by that very important selection from the famous Farnley Hall assemblage of Turners, which comes into the market when these lines are in their hands. Mr. Aysoough Fawkes—grandson, if we remember rightly, of that friend and patron of our greatest landscape painter who stored up in his house in Lower Wharfedale such abounding evidence of the range and charm of Turner's art—is selling but a portion (though we admit that it is a considerable portion) of the Turners he has inherited. This portion includes, but does not, for the major part, consist of, the series of rapid sketches made by Turner on the Rhine during a single short visit. The greatest attraction among that which is to come under the hammer must be found in one or other of the finished and delicate water-colours which, as it would appear, have hung quite long enough already on the walls of the country house where, half a century ago, they took up their abode. As interesting perhaps as the Farnley sale, and really more extensive, is the promised dispersion of the collection formed during many years by Mr. Burton, of Charlotte-street, out of Bedford-square. This consists, in part, of drawings by the accepted English classics—men like Turner, Barrett, Cotman, and Dewint—but it comprises likewise singularly well-chosen examples of several of our water-colour painters who can hardly fail to be among the classics of another generation; we would instance particularly Sir James Linton, Mr. Hine, and Mr. Thomas Collier. Some remarkable Rounseys and Gremzes are to be disposed of some time before this Burton sale of which we have last been speaking.

THE exhibitions to open next week include a summer exhibition of sketches, studies, and decorative designs at the Royal Society of British Artists, in Suffolk-street; and a collection of "Studies of Light," by Mr. A. Ludovici, at Messrs. Buck & Reid's, in New Bond-street.

THE annual general meeting of the Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt will be held on Wednesday, July 9, under the presidency of Lord Wharncliffe.

THERE will be an "at home" at the New Studio for Ladies in Great Ormond-street, on Monday next, June 30, at 4.30 p.m., when Mr. G. A. Storey will read a paper on the choice of a subject for a picture, entitled, "Is it Worth Doing?"

THE local newspapers inform us that Mr. Pyke Thompson has lately placed in his semi-public gallery "The Turner House," near Cardiff, a few drawings which have either been drawn from his private collection, or are recent acquisitions intended for one of the few galleries in England which are carefully opened every Sunday afternoon. A fine Albert Goodwin, one of Sir J. D. Linton's female figures from his "Mary Queen of Scots" series, one of the many "Whitbys," by Mr. Alfred Hunt, a George Barrett in remarkable condition and of very fine quality, an unusually good Varley, and two or three of the finest pencil drawings by Prout (these latter from the Quilter collection) are perhaps the principal additions to the collection which was first opened to the public some two years ago in the charming little building designed for Mr. Pyke Thompson by Mr. Edwin Seward, a very distinguished local architect.

M. PERRIN has been successful in the competition for a bronze statue of Condorcet, to be placed on the left of the Institut, in Paris, as a companion to the statue of Voltaire.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THIS week Mme. Sarah Bernhardt has again been with us; her health, we rejoice to say, having permitted her on Monday evening to appear in "Jeanne d'Arc," in the dreary vastness of Her Majesty's Theatre. Mme. Bernhardt's art is so extremely varied—flexibility is so great a portion of her genius—that even the studious frequenter of her performances discovers their limitations but tardily. Yet he does discover them. The different phases of her power it takes long to exhaust; yet sooner or later the personality of the actress—which has given charm to so much that she has done—betrays itself, and, by its very nature, sets a boundary to her achievement. Thus it is with her in "Jeanne d'Arc." The present physique of the lady tells, to some extent, against the performance. While the great French artist is still fortunately far from being in Hamlet's plight—still, fortunately, far from being "fat, and scant of breath"—she is, in truth, less fitted to-day than she was ten years ago for parts that are wholly romantic. And "Jeanne d'Arc" has not a very interesting story! Mme. Bernhardt uses all her available resources—of consummate knowledge and of splendid voice; but the result, it may be felt, is not quite equal to the endeavour. Nevertheless, we cannot withhold from this justly eminent actress our tribute of gratitude for having left on one side the horrors of "La Tosca," the mere pageantry of "Théodora." Yet would we fain see Mme. Bernhardt in some other rôle—as Adrienne Lecouvreur, say, or as the heroine of M. de Bornier's "La Fille de Roland."

JULY 15 is the day appointed for the first performance of "As You Like It" by the Daly Company at the Lyceum. Meantime "Nancy & Co." has taken the place of "Casting the Boomerang." As this piece is so well known there can be no need to say anything more about it than that, as in the case of "Casting the Boomerang," atonement is made by the perfection of the performance for the literary sins of the work itself. It will suffice to draw the town until such time as Miss Ada Behan—whom the London public have quite accepted as the best-equipped actress of comedy now on the English stage—shall disclose the quality of her Rosalind. "The Taming of the Shrew" is, however, to be performed for a single week before "As You Like It."

MR. WILSON BARRETT is due to arrive on this side of the water in the course of next month, his latest experience of America having been the conclusion of his long tour by an engagement in California. After a short holiday, Mr. Barrett will undertake a brief provincial tour, which will fittingly be brought to an end at his own theatre in Leeds in September. He will immediately afterwards open the New Olympic—a playhouse now rising on the site of one that was long historic and latterly unfortunate. In recognition of the fact—not that it was unfortunate but that it was historic, Mr. Barrett may rightly be begged to retain the old name. His prestige and popularity are sufficient, we may be sure, to drive away from the new house all the less happy associations of the old; while, as our contemporary the Daily News has reminded us, it is interesting to retain some association with the successes of the long line of managers and artists who have given distinction to the Olympic in times past. We are able to add that Mr. Barrett has not yet definitely fixed upon the piece with which he will open the new theatre.

A VERY attractive programme has been finally arranged for the Marlowe Memorial benefit at the Shaftesbury Theatre next Friday afternoon; and the changes made in consequence of the withdrawal of the new comedy by Mr. Henry Arthur Jones do not err on the side of frugality. It has been already announced that Mme. Sarah Bernhardt will recite; that Mr. Courtney's dramatic sketch, "Kit Marlowe," will be given for the first time, together with Mr. J. Huntly McCarthy's duologue, "Vanity of Vanities"; and Mr. Daly's adaptation of Sheridan's "Trip to Scarborough," entitled "Miss Hoyden's Husband," to be played by Miss Ada Behan and other members of the Daly Company. In addition, it is now settled that Miss Letty Lind will dance; Mr. Ben Davis will sing; Miss Maud Millet and Mr. George Giddens will recite; Mr. George Alexander will give the second act of "Dr. Bill," and Mr. Willard will recite in costume Rossetti's "A Last Confession." The funds of the Marlowe Memorial should benefit largely by this wealth of attractions.

DURING the whole of next week Messrs. Sotheby will be engaged in selling the valuable library formed by the late Frank A. Marshall, which is particularly rich in literature relating to the stage, from Shakspeare downward. The last day of the sale will also include the books of the late E. L. Blanchard.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

MENDELSSOHN began working at "St. Paul" in March 1834, but it was not completed until nearly two years later. Indeed, after its production at the Düsseldorf Festival of 1836, he made so many alterations and excisions that the parts already engraved had to be cancelled.

No less than fourteen numbers were thus rejected. In spite of all the labour bestowed on it, this Oratorio has enjoyed nothing like the popularity of "Elijah." Yet musicians are pretty well agreed that it contains some of the master's best writing. The grand performance at the Crystal Palace last Saturday afternoon, under Mr. Manns's direction, with a body of singers and players numbering three thousand, will probably bring it into more prominent notice. It is possible to underrate as well as overrate the Oratorio; but so long as Mendelssohn's name figures at festivals, we do not see why "St. Paul" should not share honours with "Elijah." A finer or better-balanced body of singers was, perhaps, never heard at the Crystal Palace. The tone was full and rich, and the attack splendid; both in the loud and the soft passages the effect was most impressive. The soloists were Mesdames Albani and Patey and Messrs. Lloyd and Watkin Mills. They all sang exceedingly well, although Mme. Albani's high notes were not quite so pleasant in tone as usual. The boys' voices in the chorales were most effective. Mr. Manns conducted with his wonted vigour and intelligence, and he fully maintained the reputation achieved last year in "Elijah."

On Monday evening another work by a Jewish composer, though very different in kind, was admirably performed. We refer to Meyerbeer's "Le Prophète," given at Covent Garden to a crowded house. This is not the composer's masterpiece; it is, in fact, a most unequal work. It is difficult to understand how a man could write so much that is beautiful, and even grand, side by side with so much that is dull and trivial. Meyerbeer was evidently writing at times for himself, at times for the public. Mme. Richard, in the rôle of Fides, was admirable, especially in the third and fourth acts. It may be stated that a good deal of the duet between Jean and his mother in the fourth act, usually omitted, was restored. M. Jean de Reske, as the Prophet, achieved one of his greatest successes this season. He was in splendid voice. The great hymn at the close of the second act was delivered with extraordinary fervour, while in the "Cathedral" scene M. de Reske acted with all possible dignity. The three Westphalian leaders were MM. Montariol, Miranda, and E. de Reske, a first-rate trio. The piece was admirably mounted, but the "seating" scene could scarcely be called effective. For this the composer must be held partly responsible. The orchestra, under Sig. Mancinelli's direction, was excellent.

Señor Albeniz gave a second recital at the Steinway Hall on Tuesday afternoon. He commenced with a Sonata in G flat major. The Menuet is the best of the four movements. The music generally is graceful and pleasing, but the pianist-composer's style is scarcely suited to this serious form of composition. In his Concerto in A minor, again, there is much life and brilliancy; but the subject-matter lacks character, while of development, in the proper sense, there is but little trace. The Scherzo pleased us best. There was a good orchestra, under the direction of Mr. E. Gillet. Señor Albeniz played some of his light, tasteful pieces in his best manner.

On the same afternoon M. Sapellnikoff was holding his second recital at St. James's Hall. We were there in time to hear him play solos by Tchaikowski and Liszt, and an Etude and Polonaise of his own. In the matter both of tone and technique they were wonderful performances; the pianist was in his very best form. The programme concluded with Liszt's Concerto Pathétique for two pianos, in which the concert-giver was assisted by Mme. Menter. This combination of virtuosity was remarkable; the playing was indeed astonishing. But with the exception of one or two pleasing themes the composition is terribly commonplace, and in places positively ugly.

Mr. B. Schönberger gave a recital at the Steinway Hall, on Wednesday afternoon. This pianist, with his beautiful singing tone, his finished technique and intelligent playing, continues to maintain his well-deserved reputation. His programme opened with the Bach-Liszt Prelude and Fugue in A minor, of which he gave a masterful though at times somewhat loud rendering. His readings of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 81a) and Schumann's Sonata in G minor, were both interesting. In a number of short pieces, including four graceful miniatures of his own, Mr. Schönberger played with great effect.

Herr Ernst Denhof, a pupil of Leschetizki, is the latest of the many foreign pianists who have visited London this season. He gave a concert on Wednesday evening at the Princes' Hall. He plays well, but is not a star of the first magnitude. His reading of Beethoven's Sonata in D minor (Op. 31, No. 2), one of the master's most poetical creations, was really rough; he seemed as if he were trying to knock all the poetry out of it. Afterwards, in pieces by Schumann and Schubert, he was heard to better advantage. He gave a tasteful rendering of No. 6 of Schumann's Intermezzi (Op. 4), charming pieces but too seldom heard; and there were good points about the Chopin A flat Ballade, a piece too often heard. Mr. Denhof's touch appears somewhat hard, and he is not note-perfect. The programme included a Sonata for pianoforte and violin by A. Reichel, interpreted by the concert-giver and Mr. M. Reichel—a work which imitates well Beethoven's early style; the violinist played fairly well. Mr. C. Copland, who has a good voice, sang songs by Mercadante and M. V. White.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

The Musical Notation of the Middle Ages. (Masters.)

THIS handsome volume, issued by the Plain Song and Mediæval Music Society, contains facsimiles of MSS. written between the tenth and sixteenth centuries. We are thus able to trace various phases in the development of musical notation.

While admiring the works of the great masters of music, few probably think sufficiently of the system by which they have been able to convey their thoughts to us. That system, like the art of music itself, has been gradually evolved. According to Mr. Rowbotham, it sprang from a few simple signs, invented by the grammarians of Alexandria to express the rise and fall of the voice. "Pneums," or signs to remind singers of the chant already learned by ear, are ascribed to Gregory the Great. It is, however, safer to say that he used them than that he invented them. Some early MSS. containing musical notation are said to go back to the eighth century; but the earliest whose age is beyond dispute belong to the tenth century. Of this date is the MS. (of which a facsimile is shown in pl. ii.) written at Winchester by Benedictine monks, brought thither by St. Æthelwold from Abingdon. The "pneums" were general guides to the singer, but expressed no fixed tonal intervals. And besides this uncertainty of interval, which renders the deciphering of ancient music so intricate, there is the further difficulty of knowing the meaning of certain dashes and thick strokes. There are, indeed, several matters which await investigation.

In the ninth century, the monk Hucbald adopted a singular method for music in several parts. The notes, indicated by ordinary letters, were placed in a vertical column, and each word or syllable was written in a line with the letter, thus marking the note required. To be still clearer, he put between these letters a T or an S, according as the interval was a tone or a semitone. All this is shown in plate xvii., a facsimile from the oft-mentioned "Enchiridion vel Musica Enchiridiadis." This system would seem to contain the germ of our staff notation, yet apparently it was used by Hucbald alone.

Plate v. shows, perhaps, the real origin of the stave. Here the notation is in "superposed points," placed at regular intervals from a line scratched on the vellum. Plates xi. to xiii. show us either "pneums" or points on a staff. In the first there are four lines, those marked C and F being coloured yellow and red. (It may be noted that the colours do not show in the facsimile.) Points represented only vaguely the ancient "pneums"; the pitch became clearer, but many delicacies of accent and ornament were lost. The writer of the Preface surmises that over-confidence in the traditional rendering may account for the neglect in marking the finer accentual distinctions of the note-groups. This reminds one of the figured basses of Bach and Handel. The intentions of those composers were only roughly indicated, and the outward signs represented to them the inward meaning; so they neglected "to mark the finer accentual distinctions of the note-groups" for the benefit of posterity.

At length certain lines of the stave were marked C, G, and F (even other letters of the alphabet were used). By various metamorphoses some of these letters became the clefs which we use in modern music. Measured music, bars, dots, rests, came gradually into use. Plate xx. gives a song in three parts composed by King Henry VIII. from a MS. in the British Museum.

It is impossible now to enter into fuller details, but we have surely said enough to show how valuable and interesting these facsimiles will be to students of the music of bygone ages. Each plate is briefly but clearly described by Mr. A. Hughes-Hughes, of the British Museum. The writer of the Preface giving account of the development of musical notation, acknowledges the assistance rendered to him by the Rev. C. J. Black, and Messrs. W. J. Birkbeck and T. L. Southgate.

TO AUTHORS. MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG, PUBLISHERS,

18, BOUVERIE STREET, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.
Are prepared to receive and give careful consideration to all MSS. and arrange terms for their PUBLICATION. Messrs. DIGBY & LONG have also every convenience and ample facilities for the Publication of Magazines and Editorial offices if required. Newest Catalogue post free.

CATALOGUES. BAEDEKER'S & BADDELEY'S GUIDE-BOOKS.

New Detailed CATALOGUE, now ready, sent post free on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, Soho-square, London.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S NEW CATALOGUES.

THEOLOGICAL CATALOGUE.—Theology and Philosophy, chiefly Foreign. 1890.
ORIENTAL CATALOGUE.—Language, Literature, Antiquities, &c., of the East. 1890.
FRENCH CATALOGUE. 1890.
GERMAN CATALOGUE. 1890.
14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden, and 20, S. Frederick-street, Edinburgh.

NOW READY (free)—worthy of careful preservation: send for splendidly illustrated four-page quarto prospectus of "LONDON CITY," a choice Art book of unusually important size which will have at least 250 beautiful and original illustrations teeming with London's life and bustle. To subscribers, 21s.; to non-subscribers, 42s.; subscription List will shortly close.—THE LEADENHALL PRESS, 50, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

HOLIDAYS in NORMANDY—M. BAR-

BIER, French Master, Glasgow Athenaeum, Examiner to the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, RECEIVES at his Country Residence in Normandy, from JULY and AUGUST, a few GENTLEMEN desirous of improving their FRENCH by a stay in France. Beautiful country. Every comfort. Tennis. Backward Candidates Coached for Examinations. Highest references.—Particulars, M. BARBIER, Ecroville, par Louviers, Eure, France.

NEW RELIGIOUS NOVEL BY EUGÈNE STRACEY.

Picture boards, 2s.; cloth extra, 3s. 6d., at all Bookstalls and Libraries.

HIDDEN in the LIGHT.

By EUGÈNE STRACEY.

DIGBY & LONG, Publishers, 18, Bouverie Street, Fleet Street, E.C.

F. V. WHITE & CO'S RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I. FERGUS HUME'S NEW NOVEL.

THE MAN WITH A SECRET

By the Author of
"The Mystery of a Hansom Cab,"
"Miss Mephistopheles,"
"The Picaresque Puzzle," &c.
(At all Libraries.)
3 vols.
By B. L. Farjeon.—THE MYSTERY of
M. FELIX.

By the Author of "Great Porter Square," "Toilers of Babylon," &c.
In 3 vols. At all Libraries.

"...A novel of great interest and power—one that can scarcely fail to enhance his already high reputation and extend his popularity as a writer of fiction.... It bubbles over with humour of the raciest and richest character.... The author unravels with much dramatic effect as sensational, singular, and striking a story as could well be conceived. The air of mystery pervading the novel is successfully maintained till towards the closing chapters.... In conception and character, indeed, this work is quite distinct from the general run of modern novels—a circumstance which in itself lends value to Mr. Farjeon's latest literary effort, apart from other merits always readily recognisable in the writings of this accomplished author."—Scotsman.

"The reader in search of an exciting mystery is sure to find it in Mr. Farjeon's pages. From the opening incident of three cries for help breaking on the midnight air to the unparalleled 'scene in court' at the conclusion of the story, we are enticed on by fresh complications and by the solution of the puzzle always eluding our grasp."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. B. L. Farjeon is a wonderful man at handling a secret in a novel. He keeps a mystery dancing in the air as a jet of water does a ball of cork, and you never can catch it.... The Mystery of M. Felix is an extraordinary story.... No reader will unravel the secret until the author reveals it.... This curious and clever novel will have a large circle of readers."—Court Circular.

"It is not only full of 'go,' but the author has made large use of his special faculty for infusing even his subordinate characters with living interest. The story is sure to have a run at the libraries, being just the sort that nine people out of ten want to get hold of. It is very nearly, if not quite, equal to Mr. Farjeon's 'Great Porter Square.'"—People.

III. By Col. Rowan Hamilton.—THE LAST of the CORNETS.

2 vols, 12s. (At all Libraries and Booksellers.)
"A bright and pleasing novel.... Allan MacDonald is chief and leader in all sports, a gay, gallant, generous fellow.... The book is thoroughly fresh and original, and much above the average, both in the treatment and the writing. The closing scenes are powerful and pathetic. 'The Last of the Cornets' is well worth reading."—Life.

"Colonel Hamilton writes in a delightfully breezy and natural fashion of past days in the army, and his story 'The Last of the Cornets' is likely to be vastly appreciated by men in the service, and perhaps even more by those who were in the service a quarter of a century or so ago. Nor are army men likely to be the only appreciative readers of Col. Hamilton's story, for not only does he paint barracks life with a fidelity and verve which only practical experience and a love of his profession could ensure, but he has also introduced a sufficiently strong element of purely human interest to make his book acceptable to all lovers of honest, wholesome fiction. The story is well written, full of animation, and of special interest to the large class of readers who were in the service when cornets flourished, or are still interested in army life as it was and is. Colonel Hamilton must give us another service story ere long."—Court Journal.

"'The Last of the Cornets' is a novel one can take in hand to while away a pleasant hour. Colonel Hamilton gives a happy description of military social life."—World.

IV. By Florence Marryat.—BLINDFOLD.

By the Author of
"My Sister the Actress," &c. 3 vols.
(At all Libraries.)

"The story is well conceived and skilfully told... May be read with considerable pleasure."—Scotsman.

V. By Mrs. Frank Penny.—CASTE and CREED.

2 vols. (Will be published immediately.)

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS AND BOOKSTALLS.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S NEW AND ORIGINAL TALE.

FERRERS COURT. By the Author of "Bootsie's Baby." In paper cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

MRS. EDWARD KENNARD'S POPULAR NOVEL. MATRON or MAID? (Second Edition.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

By F. C. PHILIPS and O. J. WILLS.
SYBIL ROSS'S MARRIAGE: the Romance of an Inexperienced Girl. (Second Edition.) Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"RITA'S" NEW NOVEL.
THE DOCTOR'S SECRET. By the Author of "Dame Durden," "Sheba," "Miss Kate,"
"A Vagabond Lover," &c. In paper cover, 1s.;
cloth, 1s. 6d. [Shortly.]

F. V. WHITE & CO., 31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET,
STRAND, W.C.

Ready immediately, at all the Libraries, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, crown 8vo, price 6s.

BISMARCK INTIME.

BY A FELLOW STUDENT.

This attractive and well-illustrated volume bristles with most interesting and characteristic anecdotes of the private life of the great Ex-Chancellor.

Just ready, at all the Libraries, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, cloth 10s. 6d.

INTIMATE RECOLLECTIONS OF THE COURT OF THE TUILERIES.

THE EVE OF AN EMPIRE'S FALL.

Before the Franco-German War. By Madame CARETTE,
Authoress of "My Mistress, the Empress Eugénie."

Third Edition, crown 8vo, handsomely bound, 6s. Authorised Translation.

MY MISTRESS, THE EMPRESS

EUGÉNIE; or, Court Life at the Tuileries. By her
Private Reader, Madame CARETTE (née BOUVET).

"We recommend every one who admires good work to buy and read it."—Morning Post.

Cloth gilt, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.; post free, 2s. 8d.

STANLEY; AND HIS HEROIC

RELIEF OF EMIN PACHA. By E. P. SCOTT.

With Map, 14 Portraits, and other Illustrations.

"Mr. E. P. Scott, himself an African traveller, gives a clear, readable, and interesting narrative of the rescue Expedition, to which he has prefixed an account of Stanley's early career."—Vanity Fair.

London: DEAN & SON, 160a, Fleet Street, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED. "WHAT CHEER, O!"

OR, THE STORY OF THE MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

By ALEXANDER GORDON.

Beautifully Illustrated by Gordon Browne, W. S. Stacey,
C. J. Staniland, and J. R. Wells.

JAMES NISBET & CO., 21, BERNERS-STREET, W.
May be obtained from the Offices of the Mission, 131, Queen
Victoria-street, E.C., price 1s., or post-free, 1s. 3d.

1890.—SECOND EDITION.—Price 12s. 6d., cloth.

SUMMARY OF THE CONSTITUTION AND PROCEDURE

OF FOREIGN PARLIAMENTS

Compiled by REGINALD DICKINSON,
Barrister-at-Law,

One of the Committee Clerks of the House of Commons.

London: VACHER & SONS, 29, Parliament-street, S.W., and SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & CO., Limited.

A NEW MANUAL of BOOK-KEEPING

for Wholesale and Retail Traders. By PHILIP CRELLIN, Chartered
Accountant. Price 3s. 6d.

G. BELL & SONS, York-street, W.C. and the AUTHOR, 33, Chancery-
lane, W.C.

PHENIX FIRE OFFICE,

19, LOMBARD STREET, E.C., and 57, CHANCERY CROSS, S.W.

Established 1792.

Moderate Rates. Absolute Security.

Liberal Loss Settlements.

Prompt Payment of Claims.

Joint Secretaries—W. C. MACDONALD and F. B. MACDONALD.

LOSSES PAID OVER £17,000,000.

TO STOUT PEOPLE.

Sunday Times says: "Mr. Russell's aim is to eradicate, to cure the disease, and that his treatment is the true one seems beyond all doubt. The medicine he prescribes does not lower, but builds up and tones the system." Book (128 pages), with Recipe and Notes how to pleasantly and rapidly cure obesity (average reduction in first week is 3lb.), post free, Eight Stamps.

F. C. RUSSELL, Woburn House,
Store-street, Bedford-square, London, W.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

ON MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM

The original best, and most liberal. Suits all.

FOUNDED A.D. 1868.

Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000

Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.

Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.

F. MOEDER

248, 249, 250, Tottenham-court-road, W. Also for HIRE ONLY.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK

Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. INTEREST on CURRENT ACCOUNTS calculated on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

The Bank undertakes for its Customers, free of Charge the Custody of Deeds, Writings, and other Securities and Valuable; the collection of Bills of Exchange, Dividends, and Coupons; and the purchase and sale of Stocks

Shares and Annuities. Letters of Credit and Circular Notes issued.

THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application.

FRANCIS BAKERDOCK, Manager.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

A. & S. GATTI, Sole Proprietors and Managers.
This Evening, at 8, THE GREEN BUSSES.
Preceded, at 7.15, by THE MARRIED BACHELOR.

AVENUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, DR. BILL.
Messrs. George Alexander, Benjamin Webster, G. Capel, H. Grattan, and Albert Chevalier; Mesdames Elizabeth Robins, Carlotta Leclercq, Leston, Marie Linden, Laura Graves, Edith Kenward, Lily Young, and Fanny Brough.
Preceded, at 8.30 by MISS CINDERELLA.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. C. H. HAWTREY.
Every Evening, at 9, NERVES.
Messrs. H. Kemble, Edward Wright, and Charles Hawtrev; Mesdames Maude Millett, Sophie Larkin, Lydia Cowell, Ethel Matthews, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8, by A BAD PENNY.

COURT THEATRE.

Proprietors, Mrs. JOHN WOOD and Mr. ARTHUR CHUDLIGH.
To-Night and Every Evening, at 8, will be acted an Original Farce, by Mr. A. W. Pinero, called THE CABINET MINISTER.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER.
Messrs. Charles Wyndham, G. Giddens, W. Blakeley, W. Draycott, S. Valentine, F. Atherly; Mesdames M. A. Victor, E. Laydon, Frances, E. Penrose, and Mary Moore.
Preceded, at 8.10, by LIVING TOO FAST.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, GEO. EDWARDS.
To-night, at 8, RUY BLAS and THE BLAZE ROUE.
By A. C. Torr and Herbert F. Clark. Music by Herr Meyer Lutz.
The dances by John D'Auban.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Every Evening at 8, ROMEO AND JULIET.
Miss ADELAIDE MOORE as JULIET.
Mr. OTIS SKINNER as ROMEO.
Messrs. J. Nesbitt, G. F. Black, J. F. Graham, E. Wilde, J. Humphries, J. H. Manley, S. C. Henry, F. Wells, G. B. Phillips, M. Baker, E. Boddy, and Mark Quinton; Mesdames M. Prothero, N. Duncan, and Chas. Calvert.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. H. BERNBORN-THOM.
Every Evening, at 8.40, A VILLAGE PRIEST.
Preceded, at 7.50, by COMEDY AND TRAGEDY.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15, Augustin Daly's Company of Comedians in NANCY AND CO.
Messrs. Lewis and Drew; Mesdames Ada Rohan and Gilbert.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.30, THE BRIDE OF LOVE.
Messrs. T. B. Thalhfer, Leonard Outram, Bassett Roe, E. Hendrie, A. Brydson, C. M. Hallard, and H. Bayntun; Mesdames Harriett Jay, L. Linden, E. Ferrar, M. Fraser, E. Bowman, A. Somerset, Luna, Ivor, Kingsley, and Ada Cavendish.
Preceded, at 8, by BY THE SEA.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SPENCE.
Every Evening, at 8.15, MAJORIE.
Messrs. C. Hayden Coffin, Joseph Tapley, H. Ashby, Wood, James, Shale, Hendon, and H. Monkhouse; Mesdames Phyllis Broughton, Amadi, and Camille D'Arville.
Preceded, at 7.30, by ALL ABROAD.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, the entirely original comic opera by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, entitled THE GONDOLIERS; or, The King of Barataria.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Lessee and Managers, Messrs. E. S. WILLARD and JOHN LANT.
This Evening, at 8.30, JUDAH.
Messrs. Willard, Royce Carleton, F. Kerr, Sant Mathews, C. Fulton, H. Cane, Harting, Thomas; Mesdames Bessie Hutton, Gertrude Warden, A. Bowring, and Olga Brandon.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee, Mrs. LANGTRY.
Under the management of Mr. ARTHUR BOURCHIER.
Every Evening, at 9, YOUR WIFE.
Messrs. Bouchier, Everill, De Lange, Ernest Lawford; Mesdames Edith Chester, Annie Irish, and Adrienne Dattolles.
Preceded, at 8.15, by OLD FRIENDS.
Messrs. Laurence Cantlay and Gilbert Farquhar; Mesdames Marie Hillington and Annie Irish.

STRAND THEATRE.

This day, at 2 and 8.40, OUR FLAT.
Messrs. Edouin, Fawcett, Dawson, Hawtrev, Randolph, Nainby, and Sims; Mesdames Whitty, Raymond, Goward, Vicat, Sedgwick, and Graves.
Preceded, at 8, by BOYS WILL BE BOYS.
Messrs. Randolph, Dawson, Nainby, and Miss Esmond.

TERRYS THEATRE.

Manageress, Miss GRAHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, NEW LAMPS FOR OLD.
Preceded, at 8.15, by FOR HER CHILD'S SAKE.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. THOMAS THORNE.
Every Evening, at 9, MISS TOMBOY.
Messrs. Thomas Thorne, Cyril Maude, Frank Gilmore, J. S. Blythe, O. York, F. Grove, Harbury, and Fred Thorne; Mesdames Winifred Emery, Harbury, Collette, and Sylvia Hodson.
Preceded, at 8, by MEADOW SWEET.

NATIONAL

FOR MUTUAL

PROVIDENT

LIFE ASSURANCE.

48, GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON.

INVESTED FUNDS, £24,400,000.

PROFITS DIVIDED, £24,000,000.

PAID IN CLAIMS,
£7,700,000.

INSTITUTION.

ESTD. 1835.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.

Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS.—CASES OF THE WEEK.—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.—SOLICITORS' CASES.
—REVIEWS.—NEW ORDERS.—GENERAL CORRE-SPONDENCE.—COURTS.—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLA-TION.—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 28s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER.
£2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free.
Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.

Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.O.

Books produced at a fixed price for Printing, Paper, and Binding, and Terms arranged
for Publishing.

Authors advised with as to Printing and Publishing. Estimates of Cost of Printing and Binding.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
Publishers, Printers, and Binders,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN, and 27, CHANCERY
LANE, LONDON.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS & YORK & GAME PIES.

Also
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALTIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11 LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

Third Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d., post free
LESSONS from the RISE and FALL of
the ENGLISH COMMONWEALTH. By J.
ALLANSON PIOTON, M.A., M.P.

CONTENTS: Introductory.—Treason and Loyalty.—
The Limits of Moral Force.—The Limits of Physical Force.—The Sources of Popular Enthusiasm.—"Republicanism: Form and Substance."

PEOPLE'S EDITION.—Price 6d., with PORTRAIT.
(Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.,
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21, FURNIVAL STREET, HOLBORN.

GOLD PEN,

WITH DIAMOND POINT.

Anti-corrosive—Flexible—Durable—Adapting itself
to any Handwriting.

Price 6d. each; post-free, 7d.

With White Metal Pocket Holder, complete . . . 1s

Or, with Mordan's Best Silver Pocket-Holders—

Fluted Pattern, complete 5s. 6d

Engine-turned Pattern, complete 6s. 6d

Fluted Pattern, Telescopic 10s. 6d

Other Patterns in great variety.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

COCOA

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa
that I like so
well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

Paris Exhibition, 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

EDWARD STANFORD'S TOURIST'S GUIDES.

(TOURIST'S CATALOGUE, 56 pp., sent by post for Penny Stamp.)

STANFORD'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES of TOURIST'S GUIDES JUST PUBLISHED.

DERBYSHIRE.—TOURIST'S GUIDE to the COUNTY. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S., Author of the Guides to Devon, Somerset, Gloucester, Wiltshire, Worcestershire, &c. Includes the Peak District, Matlock, Buxton, &c. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Map of the County, 2s.

The other Guides in Stanford's Two-Shilling Series are—REDFORDSHIRE. By A. J. FOSTER, M.A.

BERKSHIRE. By E. WALFORD, M.A. (Reprinting.)
CAMBRIDGE. By A. G. HILL, B.A., F.S.A. (Reprinting.)
CHANNEL ISLANDS. By G. P. BAYAN, F.S.S.
CORNWALL. By W. H. TREVELLANS.
DEVON, North. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.
DEVON, South. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.
DORSETSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.
ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT. By H. I. JENKINSON.
ESSEX. By E. WALFORD, M.A.
GLOUCESTERSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.
HAMPSHIRE. By G. P. BAYAN, F.S.S.
KENT. By G. P. BAYAN, F.S.S.
LONDON (THROUGH). By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE, B.A., F.S.A.
LONDON (ROUND ABOUT). By the Rev. W. J. LOFTIE, B.A., F.S.A.
NORFOLK. By WALTER RYE.
SOMERSETSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.
SUFFOLK. By Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., F.G.S.
SURREY. By G. P. BAYAN, F.S.S.
SUSSEX. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.S.
WARWICKSHIRE. By G. P. BAYAN, F.S.S.
WILTSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.
WORCESTERSHIRE. By R. N. WORTH, F.G.S.
WYE (The) and its NEIGHBOURHOOD. By G. P. BAYAN, F.S.S.
YORKSHIRE, NORTH and EAST RIDING. By G. P. BAYAN, F.S.S.
YORKSHIRE, WEST RIDING. By G. P. BAYAN.

JENKINSON'S SMALLER PRACTICAL GUIDES.

NEW EDITIONS, JUST PUBLISHED.

ISLE of WIGHT.—SMALLER PRACTICAL GUIDE to the ISLE of WIGHT. By HENRY IRWIN JENKINSON, F.R.G.S., Author of Practical Guides to the English Lakes, North Wales, the Isle of Man, Carlisle, &c. Fifth Edition, Revised, with 3 Maps, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

NORTH WALES.—SMALLER PRACTICAL GUIDE to NORTH WALES. By HENRY IRWIN JENKINSON, F.R.G.S., Author of the "Practical Guide to the Isle of Wight," &c. Third Edition, Revised, with 3 Maps, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

JENKINSON'S COMPLETE PRACTICAL GUIDES.

ENGLISH LAKES. Eighth Edition. With 9 Maps and 3 Panoramic Views. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 7s.

THE ISLE of WIGHT. Third Edition. With Frontispiece and 6 Maps, fcap. 8vo, cloth, 5s.

NORTH WALES. Fourth Edition. With 2 Maps. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

Also, in Five Sections, separately—

Okester; Llanudno, Bettws-y-Coed and Snowdon; Dolgelly and Bala; Aberystwith and Llangollen. With Maps, each 6d.

THE ISLE of MAN. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo, with Map, cloth, 5s.

CARLISLE, GILSLAND, THE ROMAN WALL, and NEIGHBOURHOOD. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, with Map, 6s.

STANFORD'S COMBINED MAPS AND GUIDES.

ISLE of WIGHT.—TOURIST'S MAP, on the scale of 1 inch to a mile; size, 17 inches by 21 inches; and descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. (Corrected, 1890.) Folded in case, plain, 1s.; folded in case, coloured price 1s. 6d.; mounted, in case, coloured, 2s. 6d.

NORTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP, on the scale of 3 miles to an inch; size, 31 inches by 37 inches; and descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. (Corrected, 1890.) Folded in case, plain, 1s. 6d.; folded in case, coloured, 2s.; mounted, in case, coloured, 5s.

SOUTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP, on the scale of 3½ miles to an inch; size, 31 inches by 37 inches; and descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. (Corrected, 1890.) Folded in case, plain, 1s. 6d.; folded in case, coloured, 2s.; mounted, in case, coloured, 5s.

LONDON.—COLLINS'S STANDARD MAP of LONDON, on the scale of 4 in. to a mile; size, 3½ inches by 37 inches. With an Illustrated Guide to the Principal Places of Interest, Tables of Cab Fares, an Alphabetical List of nearly 4,000 Street References, &c. (Corrected, 1890.) Coloured, in case, 1s.; Extended (size, 3½ inches by 31½ inches) and full coloured, in case, 1s. 6d.; mounted on cloth, in case, 3s. 6d.

Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with Corrections and Additions for 1890.

THE HANDY GUIDE to NORWAY. By Thomas B. Willson, M.A. With Maps and Appendices on the Flora and History of Norway, Fishing Notes, and Photography. Small post 8vo, limp cloth, 5s.

THE BATHS and WELLS of EUROPE. With a Sketch of Hydrotherapy, and Hints on Climate, Sea-Bathing, and Popular Cures. By JOHN CAMPBELL, M.D. Third Edition, Revised, with a Map. Post 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 6d.

London: EDWARD STANFORD, 26 & 27, Cockspur Street, Charing Cross, S.W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. MONTAGU WILLIAMS'S REMINISCENCES.—POPULAR EDITION.
LEAVES of a LIFE. Being the Reminiscences of Montagu Williams, Q.O. Fifth Thousand. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 2s. 6d.; cloth with Portrait, 3s. 6d. [Next week.]

NEW NOVELS.

THE TRAGIC MUSE. By Henry James, Author of "The Europeans," "Daisy Miller," "A London Life," &c. 3 vols. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [In a few days.]

PLAIN TALES from the HILLS. By Rudyard Kipling. Third Edition. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HERIOTS. By Sir Henry S. Cunningham, K.O.I.E., Author of "The Oeruleans." 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

THE MINER'S RIGHT. By Rolf Boldrewood, Author of "Robbery under Arms," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, 31s. 6d.

MACMILLAN'S 3s. 6d. NOVELS.—New Volumes.

WHEAT and TARES. By Sir Henry Cunningham, K.O.I.E. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Next week.]

THE SQUATTER'S DREAM. By Rolf Boldrewood. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [In a few days.]

ENGLISH MEN of ACTION. New Volumes. With Portraits. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each

CLIVE. By Colonel Sir Charles Wilson. | HAVLOCK. By Mr. Archibald Forbes.

THE GOLDEN BOUGH: a Study in Comparative Religion. By J. G. FRAZER, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2 vols., 8vo, 28s.

THIRD EDITION REVISED AND ENLARGED.

A POPULAR HANDBOOK to the NATIONAL GALLERY.

Including, by special permission, Notes collected from the Works of Mr. Ruskin, compiled by EDWARD T. OOOK, with a Preface by Mr. BUSKIN. Third Edition Revised, Rearranged and Enlarged. Crown 8vo, half-morocco, 14s.

AN INDEX to SIR GEORGE GROVE'S "DICTIONARY of MUSIC."

A DICTIONARY of MUSIC: an Index and Catalogue of Articles contributed by each Writer to Sir GEORGE GROVE'S "Dictionary of Music." By Mrs. EDMUND WODHOUSE. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE: Occasional Essays and Addresses. By E. RAY LANKESTER, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

FIFTY YEARS of SCIENCE: being the Address delivered at York to the British Association, August, 1881. By the Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., D.O.L., LL.D., President of the Association. Fifth Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SEVENTH SERIES NOW READY.

CAMEOS from ENGLISH HISTORY. By Charlotte M.

YONGE Author of "The Heir of Redclyffe." Extra fcap. 8vo, 5s. each.

Vol. I. From Rollo to Edward II.—Vol. II. The Wars in France.—Vol. III. The Wars of the Roses.—Vol. IV. Reformation Times.—Vol. V. England and Spain.—Vol. VI. Forty Years of Stuart Rule (1603-1643).—Vol. VII. The Rebellion and Restoration (1647-78).

PHYSIOLOGICAL BOTANY. I.—OUTLINES of the HISTORY of PHENOGAMOUS PLANTS. II.—VEGETABLE PHYSIOLOGY. By GEORGE LINCOLN GOODALE, A.M., M.D., Professor of Botany in Harvard University. Being Gray's "Botanical Text-Book." Fifth Edition. Vol. II. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE on TRILINEAR COORDINATES, the METHOD of RECIPROCAL POLARS, and the THEORY of PROJECTIONS. By the Rev. N. M. FERRERS, D.D., F.R.S., Master of Gonville and Caius College, Hcn. LL.D. (Glasgow). Fourth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By Charles Smith, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College; Author of "Conic Sections," "A Treatise on Algebra," &c. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, 4to, 4s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE.—JULIUS CÆSAR. With an Introduction and Notes. By K. DEIGHTON. Globe 8vo, 2s.

Macmillan's Magazine,

Price 1s. No. 369, for JULY, contains:—

1. KIRSTEN. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Chapters XXXIX.-XLII.
2. LESSING'S "FAUST." By T. BAILEY SAUNDERS.
3. CHAPTERS from an UNWRITTEN MEMOIR. I.—My Post.
4. FARM-PUPILS in the COLONIES.
5. A FORTY-POUND SALMON. By G. W. HARTLEY.
6. THE SMOKE-PLAGUE and its REMEDY. By EDWARD CARPENTER.
7. VALENCIA DEL CID. By STANLEY J. WYMAN.
8. A WALTZ of CHOPIN. By the Author of "Aut Diabolas, aut Nihil," &c.

The English Illustrated Magazine

For JULY, profusely illustrated, price 6d., by post 9d., contains:—

1. H.R.H. PRINCESS MARY, DUCHESS of TECK. Frontispiece.
2. THE NEEDLEWORK GUILD. H.R.H. PRINCESS MARY, DUCHESS of TECK, and LADY WOLVERTON.
3. ETON COLLEGE. 1.—Historical and Descriptive. H. C. MAXWELL LYTE. 2.—Athletic. Rev. SYDNEY R. JAMES. 3.—As a School. Hon. ALFRED LYTTELTON.
4. S. CECILIA. L. WIS MORRIS.
5. ADARE MANOR. Belonging to the Right Hon. the Earl of Denbigh, K.P. LADY ERIC WYNDHAM QUIX.
6. OVERLAND from INDIA. Sir DONALD MACKENZIE WALLACE, K.C.I.E.
7. THE ART of SILHOUETTING. ANDREW W. FEE.
8. JULY. A Decorated Page. HAYWOOD BURNER.
9. THE GLITTERING PLAIN; or the Land of Living Men. Chaps. VII.-XII. WILLIAM MORRIS.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

BOUND

JUN 19 1950

UNIV. OF MICH.
LIBRARY

